Which is considerable of an improvement over the usual method of attempting to frighten politicians by hurriedly placed assessments on the National Association members and futile junketing parties to Albany.
Country Cheers Up as Theatres Open

Influenza Ban Reported Being Raised in Various Sections of Country—Washington Among First to Dispel the Gloom—Normal Conditions Soon Expected

THE scourge of influenza which has been sweeping the country, dragging in its wake closed theatres and a tied-up motion picture industry, was reported this week and last as being rapidly put under control. This brought with it permits from various health boards to open the motion picture theatres, and in all parts of the country the houses are again getting under way.

October 30 marked the beginning of resumed business in Chicago, and Buffalo, N. Y., followed by opening up on November 3. Pennsylvania is reported as very optimistic. Latest wires also add Des Moines and other Iowa towns to the "open" list. Nebraska has also lifted the closing order, precisely four weeks after it went into effect in that state.

Chicago Opening on Sectional Plan

CHICAGO, ILL. (Special).—Wednesday, October 30, saw the theatres and other public places in Chicago north of the Diversey Parkway once more throwing their doors open. The local authorities are opening the houses on a sectional plan, the ban being lifted in different territories as conditions warrant.

On Thursday the open zone was extended to include everything south of Twelfth street; on Friday it is expected that the entire city will be open with the possible exception of South Chicago.

The Health Department is making close inspection of all theatres before they are allowed to open. They must be in sanitary condition and have satisfactory ventilation.

Buffalo Health Order Sets November 3rd

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special).—Local exhibitors have been instructed by Health Commissioner Dr. Irving Gram to go ahead and prepare for reopening their houses, Sunday, November 3. This order, however, may be rescinded, if conditions in the fight against the "flu" epidemic should show that the disease has not disappeared from the city.

A meeting was held in the Health Commissioner's office this week at which exhibitors were told that from present indications all theatres could safely open Sunday. During the closing period managers have been putting their houses in tip-top shape and all will be scintillating for "Der Tag."

Pennsylvania Rapidly Opening Up

HARRISBURGH, PA. (Special).—The influenza ban will be lifted November 5 by State Health Commissioner Royer in twelve counties out of sixty-four, with more being added to the list almost hourly. Philadelphia theatres have been operating since Wednesday. Pittsburgh is expected to follow suit within a few days.

After a few days of strained relations with the municipal authorities the State Commissioner issued his order allowing Philadelphia to open on Wednesday, October 30, last Saturday. This was followed on Monday with orders allowing theatres to open on Election Day, November 5, in the counties of Chester, Montgomery and Delaware, with the exception of five towns where conditions are not yet clear.

Then on Tuesday night the Health Board announced that the ban would also be lifted on Election Day in Lancaster, Pike, Monroe, Adams, Cumberland, York, and Perry Counties. Part of Dauphin County, including the city of Harrisburgh, was included in the order.

Mayor Babcock, of Pittsburgh, is putting up a strenuous fight to have the ban lifted in that section. At first, when he sought immediate relief, he met with a cold turn-down from Commissioner Royer who stated that he was not satisfied with the epidemic's progress.

Following an exchange of letters Mayor Babcock journeyed to Harrisburgh on Tuesday and talked with the State officials. Later he announced that the ban would probably be lifted in a few days.

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Dauphin County met in Harrisburgh Monday and appointed a committee, including Peter Magaro, Regent theatre; James George, Victoria, and John Lenney, Grand, to call on Dr. Royer and plead for the reopening of the theatres of the Harrisburgh zone. Later in the day this committee presented to the Health Commissioner the argument that health conditions in Harrisburgh are better today than they are in Philadelphia, where the ban was lifted.

Capitol Houses Reopen on Monday

WASHINGTON, D. C. (Special).—Health Commissioner Brownlow on Wednesday gladdened the hearts of local motion picture men with the announcement that the ban on theatres would be lifted next Monday, November 4.

Earlier in the week the prospect was that the ban would remain in force for a much longer period but the local theatre men kept plugging away and finally secured permission to operate Monday.

Washington has been hard hit by the influenza epidemic and the theatres were just as well satisfied to be closed. With conditions clear now, however, they look forward to boom times starting next week.

Virginia Theatres Will Follow District

RICHMOND, Va. (Special).—The Richmond health authorities have declared that local theatres may reopen next Monday, November 4. It is expected that theatres throughout the State will follow Richmond's lead as the epidemic is on the wane in every section.

Richmond theatre managers previously showing first runs are planning to run pictures one week behind release dates.

Indiana Open by End of the Week

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. (Special).—Unless there is a decided reaction in the influenza situation within the next forty-eight hours (Continued on page 2832)

all the theatres of Indiana will probably be open by the end of the week. Indianapolis expects that the ban will be lifted Thursday by the Board of Health. This is the attitude of the city health officials. The state officials will allow many sections to reopen on Thursday, and others to follow on Friday.

The State Board of Health expects to lift the ban county by county as conditions warrant such action. After Thursday night it is believed that but a few cities will be closed, while it is confidently hoped that Saturday will find all theatres open.

Wisconsin Expects Action by November 3rd

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (Special)—Indications here point to the reopening of Milwaukee theatres in the very near future, most certainly by November 3. Health Commissioner Ruhland declines to make any definite prediction but is holding meetings this week to consider the question and allow the lifting of the ban at the earliest opportunity.

FOND DU LAC, Wis. (Special)—With the third week of the ban on motion picture houses nearing, there is hope here now that orders permitting the theatres to reopen November 3 will soon be forthcoming.

MADISON, Wis. (Special)—While the closing order is still in effect in Wisconsin, the plague is well under control. State Health Officer Harper is taking extraordinary precautions to prevent a recurrence of the epidemic, which accounts for the slowness in reopening. It is now expected that the lifting of the ban will happen on Sunday, November 3. Local managers were prepared to reopen last Tuesday but all cities are awaiting Doctor Harper's word.

GREEN BAY, Wis. (Special)—Picture houses will probably be permitted to reopen next Sunday, November 3, if conditions continue to improve during the balance of the week, it was announced today by local Health Commissioner Chloupck.

Many Towns in Ohio Have Reopened

CLEVELAND (Special)—While Cleveland and Cincinnati are still "dark" towns in so far as motion picture theatres are concerned, reports are beginning to arrive at the Cleveland exchanges which indicate that the rest of the state is gradually opening again.

Hicksville, Bryan, Cambridge, Holgate, Kenmore, Laferty, and upper Sandusky annouced their reopening on Sunday, November 3. Martin's Ferry opened on Tuesday but was again closed on Wednesday.

There is an unconfirmed rumor here that Cumore, Toledo and Mansfield will open also on Sunday.

Florida Looks for Relief Next Week

TAMPA, Fla. (Special)—The epidemic of Spanish influenza seems to be on the decrease throughout Florida, according to reports received here, among the native residents. But in sections having large Latin populations it is reported that the plague is still raging among the latter.

There are no hopes of the theatres opening during the present week but the prospects are fifty-fifty for reopening early next week.

LATE BULLETINS

BUTTE, Mont. (Special)—Early reopening of theatres is expected at Anaconda where no new cases of influenza were reported today and no deaths for a week. Conditions in rest of State continue unchanged.

ATLANTA, Ga. (Special)—The theatre closing order effecting Atlanta has been rescinded. All picture theatres were operating at full speed Saturday, October 26.

MUNCIE, Ind. (Special)—Present indications are that theatres here will reopen on Thursday, October 31.

FLINT, Mich. (Special)—Rumors here are to the effect that there is a possibility of the theatres reopening on Sunday, November 3. The situation is improving greatly. It is certain that the theatres will reopen by Election Day.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (Special)—The influenza epidemic here is on the decline and the theatres are already making efforts to reopen. The prospects, however, point to Sunday or Monday as being the earliest possible date for the reopening of theatre.

SAN DIEGO, Cal. (Special)—The influenza situation here is reported as more favorable. No deaths have been reported in the past three days. There have been only twenty-five deaths here since the epidemic started.

Cleveland Patiently Awaits Reopenings

In Cleveland it was reported that the different branches of the industry have been taking the situation philosophically. The exchanges have for the most part retained their full office forces and taking advantage of the condition by inspecting films, repainting film cases, and otherwise overhauling their systems of operating. In some instances, members of the sales forces have been temporarily retired. Others are retaining their salesmen on half pay, while still others have their men out on the road. So far as can be learned, Paramount is the only local exchange which has its men out right now. The Standard Film Service of Cleveland, transferred its sales force to Detroit, to work out of the Detroit office of the company, but as Detroit closed late in the week, they have been recalled. The Pathé Cleveland exchange kept its sales force intact, on condition that the men devote all of their time to the sale of Liberty Bonds.

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers has held several meetings in regard to handling the releases, once the theatres are again doing business, and they have agreed to continue their releases just where they were terminated last week. The difficulty lies with the towns outside of Cleveland, which will not be opening at the same time. In all probability, these towns will wild cat until all of the theatres are running, and a regular booking sheet can be resumed.

The exhibitors, in many instances are cleaning up their houses, redecorating and preparing for lively business when normal conditions again prevail. The Mam theatre is putting in its new Euclid avenue front, and expects to have it all ready some time next week. The Alhambra is completing some of the improvements which were started last summer. The Standard theatre is having its entire lobby done over with a new coat of paint, and several of the neighborhood houses have followed suit.

Films Division Names New Series

A new series of twelve two-reel pictures, under the general title "For Life and Liberty," is announced by Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information.

Three of these two-reelers are now in the laboratory and more are in the hands of the directors and camera men.

The stories for the new series were prepared by Rufus Steele, scenario editor for the Division of Films, and the entire work of preparing the pictures is being done under Governmental supervision. Each picture takes up some vital war activity and illustrates how successful results are being obtained.

Following the date of the initial release, which will shortly be announced by Denis J. Sullivan, Manager of Domestic Distribution, it is expected that one of these two-reel pictures will be issued every two weeks.

The direct title of the first of the new series is "When Your Soldier's Hit."

Ruppert Engages Hall

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, who is still strongly interested in motion pictures, on October 31 engaged Frank Hall as general manager of his recently announced Film Clearing House.

Frank Hall has had active experience in independent producing and distributing.
Some Sections Remain Undetermined

Michigan Expects to Remain in Clutches of Gloom Until November 10—Denver Reports New Cases—No Promises in Rochester

To offset the many cheerful reports that have been received from various sections of the country in regard to the influenza situation and its attendant hurtful effect on the motion picture theatres, several cities announced at a late hour that the ban was still in effect in their territory. Some held out no hopes of an early "armistice," while others expressed the opinion that things would be open and going smoothly by November 10. Denver is classed in the latter list, and Michigan is practically in the same boat.

Seattle, Wash., reports indicate that influenza conditions have neither improved nor abated, and that masks are still in vogue. Butte, Mont., reported a slight improvement in the situation. Spokane is classed as still "serious."

Michigan Expects Nov. 10 to Decide the Question

Late in the evening of Oct. 31 it was reported from Detroit that Governor Sleeper and the State Board of Health may not remove the ban on theatres and churches until Nov. 10, which would make a three weeks' closing for that state. The epidemic is said to be rapidly subsiding in Detroit, in view of which fact it is said accurate information makes it the Governor is playing politics by not allowing the theatres to reopen earlier. The state election falls on Tuesday, Nov. 5. It is said the exhibitors of Detroit and Michigan lack an efficient organization to bring sufficient pressure to bear to get an earlier opening. The Detroit health officer has strongly opposed the closing order, but is powerless.

Denver, while almost as bad, entertains hopes of being able to open Nov. 4, it was announced by wire Oct. 29. Four hundred and eighty-seven cases of influenza were reported in Denver for that day alone, breaking the record. In stating that the ban would probably be lifted Nov. 4, the State Health Department made it plain that exhibitors need not be surprised if they were told to remain "dark" longer than that.

A wire from Seattle, Wash., Oct. 30, read: "No shows can open here this week. Influenza conditions are the same, and everyone wears a mask in the stores, cars, elevators and even on the street. Some small towns are opening."

The fact that some of the smaller towns around Seattle are opening has led to the belief that the West will not remain under the ban many days longer.

Rochester Authorities Make No Promises

A total of 10,519 cases of influenza had been reported in Rochester, N. Y., up to Oct. 29, with the deaths placed at 475. The epidemic was reported as showing a slight abatement, but authorities would make no promises regarding reopening.

Spokane reported its situation as serious. State Health Officer Tuttle asked that the closing ban remain in effect at least ten days from Oct. 29. A total of 207 new cases were reported in Butte every day.

Exhibitors of Tampa, Fla., Carry On

With the "flu" raging, theatres closed tight for over two weeks, stores open only from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., people wearing masks and draping a bag of asafetida around their necks in place of the lavender, with new cases and a long list of (Continued on page 2834).

Exhibitors Carry On

Theatrical men who have co-operated with the city and state health authorities to the fullest extent, some against their own wishes, but with the desire to do everything possible to aid in checking the epidemic though it has meant a great financial loss, are hoping for a cancellation of the closing order within the next few days.

C. Edgar Momand, manager of the Gar- den Theatre, says that he believes that business will reopen with a rush after the closing order is revoked. People will be shown "hungry" and mighty glad to see performances in the theatres again and business will be very good, is his view. Mr. Garfield of the Arpheum also holds this view and points to the fuel closing order last winter to substantiate his belief. He says business was better with him immediately after the theatres were reopened last winter than it had been just before they were closed.

It is understood by the local theatre men that there will be no confusion in getting pictures through the Detroit film exchanges after the theatres are opened. It is understood the Detroit film men have agreed that the bookings of theatres will be carried out by the various exchanges just as if there had been no closing, the films being sent out in the order in which they had been contracted for the period during which the theatres have been closed.

St. Paul Profits By It

The St. Anthony and Merriam Park districts of St. Paul which adjoin Eastern and Southern Minneapolis, the few theatres of the district are enjoying good business due to the coming of eager movie fans from Minneapolis to St. Paul to see the shows. Managers of several of these suburban houses state that they have heard the fear of St. Paulites that Minneapolis might bring "influenza" germs over to the theatre with them, often expressed but seemingly this has not affected business to any great extent.

Northwest Becomes Restless Over Ban

The ban on the exhibition of motion pictures in the Northwest seemed to be no nearer being raised October 27 than it did a week before, for although conditions are evidently better health officers will not admit that the time is yet ripe for amusements to be reopened. In St. Paul, despite the fact that a few new cases of influenza have been reported, the theatres are remaining open, though not playing to anywhere near normal capacity.

Conditions in Minneapolis were so much better last Saturday that the Department of Schools ordered school work to be taken up again the next Monday, but after the first period Monday the school doors were once again locked. The University of Minnesota was allowed to begin its fall semester October 21 however.

Toronto Exhibitors Not Kicking at Closing Order

The closing of Toronto's theatres for an indefinite period starting with Monday, Oct. 21, by the local health officer was welcomed by the exhibitors, according to Thomas Scott, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. Speaking for the exhibitors, Mr. Scott said: "It is a fine idea. The moving picture men are always ready and willing to co-operate with the authorities when the general public is benefited."

Toronto was almost the last city in Canada to close its doors and local exhibitors became just a little anxious, according to the opinions offered, lest the people would blame the theatres for the spread of the disease locally. The people and the papers were more inclined to rap the street cars, however, as the menace. The exhibitors were quite ready to close down because attendance had fallen away off, except in a few instances, during the latter part of the week of Oct. 14.

On the day that Toronto theatres closed all Canadian houses should have started in the great drive with the Victory Loan pictures to boost the Fifth Canadian loan.

The epidemic took one of Toronto's best known exhibitors on Oct. 20, when M. I. Thooney, proprietor of the College Playhouse, 344 College street, Toronto, died at his residence, 347 Brunswick avenue, after a brief illness.

"Open Houses" Not Much Better Than Closed Ones

Manager Bert Goldman, of the New Princess and New Majestic theatres, St. Paul, had the following to say to a News representative when questioned about business conditions in the only large city of the entire West where theatres remain open during the influenza epidemic:

"Though conditions are perhaps not so bad in St. Paul with theatres open, as they might be if the theatres were closed tight, nevertheless, it seems to me "dark houses" could not be much worse than the present situation. We are playing normal pictures at normal rentals and our overhead is not reduced, yet our patronage has taken a drop of easily fifty per cent. There are a few people who are not worrying about the influenza but a majority are deathly afraid of catching it despite, statements published here daily that conditions here are not bad."

"It seems," added Mr. Goldman, "that many people are afraid that if they come to the theatres in St. Paul that they might meet people coming from Minneapolis who might possibly bring influenza germs with them. To me this seems ridiculous, but I have heard people debating about this subject in the lobby."

Epidemic on Wane in Flint, Michigan

The influenza epidemic which has had Flint in its grasp for the last two weeks and has been responsible for several score deaths and illness of from 5,000 to 10,000 (estimated) is believed to be on the wane.

The closing of Toronto's theatres for an indefinite period starting with Monday,
Kleine Shifts Exchanges to General

Aims to Economize on Distribution by Circulating His Pictures Through Latter's Offices—Only Change to Exhibitor in Booking 1s Street Address

GEORGE KLEINE, whose system of distribution has withstood the ever-changing moods of the motion picture industry since it was organized several years ago, has decided upon a step which is considered consistent with principles of economy recommended to the War Industries Board. The plan is, according to an announcement this week, to pick the George Kleine exchanges up bodily and set them down within the walls of the present General Film Exchange offices throughout the country. This will mean, it is shown, that a new service co-operation will have been brought about without a change of control of the Kleine program.

Practically the only change, in so far as the exhibitor is concerned in booking the Kleine productions, is the physical routing of the films through General Exchanges.

One of the first pictures to be affected by the new arrangement is "The Wall Invisible," in which Shirley Mason is presented as star.

Practices His Preachings

Close upon his outspoken recommendations to the motion picture industry to practice a course of specific economies in the interest of conservation, as outlined in a letter written by him to the War Industries Board and as far as he is concerned as a great deal of thoughtful comment in the trade, George Kleine made an announcement this week which presents him as following his own advice in regard to distribution. He states that he will issue his pictures to exhibitors henceforth through General Film Company exchanges.

The statement which comes from Mr. Kleine makes it clear that duplication of exchange facilities by his organization is not warranted if a satisfactory system is available to provide physical service for the product distributed by him. This system has found in General Film Company with its wide circuit of exchanges that are already handling the product of several large distributors. It means that the George Kleine product no longer will be issued from Kleine System exchanges but will reach the market through the established General Film exchanges.

In proclaiming the change Mr. Kleine emphasizes that he has given up no individual responsibility, and that the arrangement relates to such service as the machinery of General Film Company can provide for his pictures, this including as far as may be practical and economical the movement of film, booking, routine accounting and ordinary transactions involved in circulating the product. All the feature pictures and short length subjects marketed by Mr. Kleine through his own exchange system will now be diverted without any break in service through the General branches.

No Contract Changes

To represent the Kleine organization and to keep its method of doing business with his clientele, special representatives will be found at the General exchanges. The effect will be, as far as the trade is concerned, simply a change in street address where the Kleine program may be secured. Existing contracts will be filled and there will be no change in the Kleine business relations with exhibitors.

Several months ago a similar co-operative arrangement was made with General Film Company by Mr. Kleine in Canada, where the number of exchanges was lessened through use of one set of offices for both concerns, with a notable saving of overhead expense for all concerned. This deal whereby the plan is carried out more completely in the United States is a result of the benefits demonstrated in Canada.

The long list of successful Kleine releases will be available, besides which several new groups of product are ready for distribution when the reopening of theatres justifies their release. A big feature, "The Wall Invisible," with Shirley Mason is one of the first of the important productions, to be followed with "The Girl—Alaska." The latter is the first picture ever staged actually in Alaska, and it promises some revelations in atmosphere. Some short comedies are scheduled featuring Leon Errol, famous in New York musical comedy shows. There are also a number of O. Henry stories. The first of these will be "In the Fog," a masterfully produced three-reel subject fit to lead any program.

Exhibitors Hold Ball at Hunt's Point

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County, N. Y., of which Henry Cole is chairman, has completed all arrangements for its sixth annual entertainment and ball to be held November 4 at Hunt's Point Palace, Bronx.

Among the entertainers who are expected to contribute to the evening's merriment are Harry Houdini, Mabel Juleene Scott, McCarthy and Fisher and Billy Gleason. The all-star photo players' grand march will probably be led by George Walsh and Marion Davies, and stars expected to be present include Virginia Pearson, Alice Joyce, Ruth Stonehouse, Rose Tapley, Margaret Marsh, Leah Baird, Sheldon Lewis, Mrs. Mr. Sidney Drew, Hobart Henley, Jack Dunn, Grace Valentine and others. City and county officials have been invited, as well as friends in the F. L. M. Club and the trade in general.

Boston Starts Good, But Falls Down

Saturday night, October 20, saw the theaters of Boston breaking all attendance records, following receipt of a permit to open from the Board of Health. The first night's business, however, appeared to be a failure, being able to be an unreliable gauge, as Sunday brought noticeable changes in the situation.

Many first-run picture houses that were usually filled to capacity at every performance, barely half filled their theatre. Reports from every source told of poor business, and many exhibitors believe it will be only two weeks before the influenza scare is over. The majority of the theaters up to Thursday were barely paying expenses and many were losing money.

Theaters in Lowell and vicinity will remain closed, as the epidemic is not sufficiently under control.
Record Made Despite Influenza

Film Distributing Record Despite Influenza Is Reported by Committee in Charge of United War Work Campaign

A NEW record in film distribution, it is believed, in spite of influenza complications, has been set by the motion picture committee of the United War Work Campaign. Once again every branch of the industry has responded to the "win the war" appeal, plans have been made for 150,000 exhibitions of pictures showing the activities of the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association, War Camp Community Service and Salvation Army.

To carry on the programme of war service which has been intrusted to these organizations the American people are asked to contribute $170,500,000. Efforts will be made, however, to raise at least a quarter of a billion dollars.

Early in the fall a motion picture committee with E. A. MacManus as chairman, and S. L. Rothapfel, William A. Johnston as the other members, was formed to co-operate with the United War Work Campaign. This committee began operations with an attempt to obtain more motion picture circulation than had even been obtained by similar means for any single idea. How successful has been this attempt is shown by the following statement from Mr. MacManus:

"We decided to concentrate upon news reels and at once obtained the hearty co-operation of the Universal, Pathé, Mutual and Gaumont companies. The Bray Photog ather has incorporated several subjects along lines suggested by us for distribution by Paramount. This corporation is also releasing much United War Work material which was brought from Europe by Burton Holmes and incorporated in his Travelogues.

"Special material taken abroad by Newman is being distributed by the Educational Film Corporation. At the same time H. E. Hancock has been making his 'Around the Clock' series in American camps.

"The committee arranged all this material with a view to providing seven hundred prints a week. In spite of unusual and unexpected obstacles we have been able to reach this goal over a space of nine weeks. More than 6000 prints, therefore, are available for distribution in as many of the 14,000 motion picture theatres as are not closed by epidemic conditions. The response of the exhibitors' associations has been unanimous in following the lead of Mr. Rothapfel.

"One of the special features initiated by the committee has been in the production and use of trailers. I believe that we hit upon an absolutely new idea by hooking up the outdoor poster campaign with the campaign going on in the theatres. This has been accomplished by "shooting" the posters, animating them with living pictures and then fading back to the original posters.

Cleveland Exchanges Manage to Keep Active

Announcements of activities on the part of exchanges these days are so rare, as to be very conspicuous. One such was made last week by Charles F. MacManus, general manager of the Success Film Productions, of Cleveland. Mr. Scherwin, while in New York, recently acquired the releasing rights in Ohio and Kentucky, for seven Norma Talmadge and nine Frank Keenan pictures, to be released early in November. The Waldorf, Akron, and the Strand, Canton, both of them first-run houses, have already signed up for the series, commencing with Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty," and Keenan in "The Coward."

A. C. Leebensberger has been named assistant manager of the Cleveland office of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., succeeding G. H. Penn, who recently resigned to become affiliated with the Cleveland Goldwyn.

The Cleveland Paramount exchange has put out two new road men, both of them well known to exhibitors in this territory. They are W. W. Kulp, former exchange manager, and J. B. Reilly, who used to be connected with the Metro office.

Baltimore Profits by Closing Order

The old adage that "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good" is borne out by the Baltimore theatre owners, who have turned the Health Department order closing their houses during the influenza epidemic to an advantage. All of them have turned in and given their theatres a thorough cleaning and renovating, and are preparing for the increased patronage.

Most of the theatre managers are glad that the closing order, which has been in effect for nearly two weeks, has lasted as long as it has. They say that during normal years it is next to impossible to give their theatres the cleaning which they need, unless they close their doors for a week or two.

Strand Books New Brady Film

By an arrangement effected between Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, and William A. Brady, Mr. Brady's production of "Little Women" will be presented for the first time on any screen at the Strand theatre the week beginning Sunday, November 10.

Harley Knoles directed "Little Women." The four "Little Women," Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy, are played, respectively by Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flynn. Henry Hull is John Brooke and Conrad Nagel plays Laurie.

Dayton Redecorates

While all Dayton, Ohio, houses are closed all of the theatres are taking advantage and are redecorating their house to some extent.
New York Candidates Go on Record

Systematic Work by State Exhibitors' League in Present Campaign—Response to Questionnaire on Sunday Opening and Censorship Proves Gratifying

WHAT is declared to be the first extensive pre-election survey of candidates by the motion picture industry has just been completed in New York State by the Laws and Legislation Committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

The committee has succeeded in placing practically all candidates from the gubernatorial nominees, Whitman and Smith, down to the Senate and Assembly aspirants on record in black and white as to their views on such questions as Sunday opening and State censorship. It is said that the response has been so gratifying as to make the exhibitors most optimistic concerning the prospects for fair treatment at the hands of the next Legislature.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League; Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly, constitute the committee which has been laboring strenuously on the survey for over a month.

A Typical Letter

The following letter to Governor Whitman, who is a candidate for re-election, is typical of the communications sent the politicians. In cases where an immediate reply was not forthcoming follow-up work was done. With the views all compiled the State Committee was then in position to take whatever steps were deemed necessary before election.

The letter follows:

His Excellency, Charles S. Whitman,
Governor of the State of New York,
Capitol, Albany, N. Y.

Sir:

We respectfully invite your attention to the fact that the United States Government has declared the Motion Picture Industry an essential in the successful prosecution of the war. The motion picture houses are awakening and keeping afire and afresh the spirit of patriotism throughout the country, and as much, if not more, than any other one force in the land, welding the diversified interests and races composing our citizenship into one invincible, unconquerable, loyal and liberty loving people. Sixty seconds after war was declared, our great Government found sixteen thousand motion picture theatres throughout the land fully equipped for service, on the working line. From then until now, the motion picture houses have been daily instructing, encouraging and inspiring eighty million citizens of our Republic. They are the sacred school houses within which are taught in the most effective manner the duties of citizenship, and where devotion to country is inspired.

As propaganda, the motion picture screen is recognized as a great and powerful agency by the Washington authorities. The admission tax paid by patrons of the motion picture theatre is a source of enormous revenue to pay the cost of a successful conclusion of the great war.

THE MOTION PICTURE HOUSES IN THIS STATE ARE RECRUITING STATIONS OF AMERICAN PATRIOTISM.

We, the undersigned, representing the motion picture theatres of the State of New York, are desirous of ascertaining first hand by word of reply from you your views and proposed attitude with reference to the Motion Picture Industry.

In the fifty hundred places of amusement operating in the State of New York, the combined attendance, conservatively estimated, is in excess of one million persons daily. We, therefore, at this time deem it our duty to inform the patrons of our places of amusement throughout the State how motion picture slides are projected on the screen, and in our house programs, and in some localities by public speakers at each performance, your views with reference to the motion picture.

May we ask that we receive your reply a letter expressing your views and proposed attitude on the following:

1. Are you against the creation by act of Legislature of a Motion Picture Censor Board in the State of New York?

2. Are you in favor of enactment by the next Legislature of such laws as will tend to clarify so as to permit the exhibition of motion pictures throughout New York State on Sunday?

Your further views with reference to the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday is respectfully requested.

Your early reply will be appreciated.

Very respectfully,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, New York State.

SYDNEY S. COHEN,
President.
SAMUEL I. Berman,
Executive Secretary.
CHARS. L. O'REILLY,
Secretary to Committee on Laws and Legislation.

National Association at Work

Following some weeks after the exhibition and within a short time before the election the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry sent a letter to all candidates for Congress requesting their views on the motion picture industry.

The National Association letter declared:

"The motion picture has outgrown its original sphere as a popular amusement and has become a necessity for the dissemination of all kinds of Government propaganda. Today it is looked upon as the most powerful force in existence for the molding of public opinion.

"Its work as a direct force in aid of the war program has been enormous in both scope and magnitude. Its work after the war in the reconstruction period that is to follow will be still greater. In the industrial Americanization of the world it is the greatest medium that can be utilized."

"At the present time the motion picture industry is going through a precarious period of its evolution. It is not in a position to stand any additional burdens such as would be inflicted by adverse legislation or would tend to cramp its natural growth and expansion.

"The motion picture industry is now a solidified body with an organization covering the entire country. May we have an expression of opinion from you relative to your attitude on any form of legislation that may come up that would prove detrimental to the motion picture."

"We wish to do all we can through our representatives throughout the country to assist in the election of candidates for legislative office who are favorable to the motion picture."

Will you favor us with an expression of your views on the subject?

"Your very truly,

EDITOR'S NOTE—The fact that Motion Picture News never accepts a subscription without actual assurance that the subscriber has a valid connection with the motion picture field is responsible for the slugging letter—and for some of the cheeriest moments we have spent in any a week.

Pastor Fruhling's letter should be read by every exhibitor—and filed for future reference. It shows how, in one town, the local exhibitor and church are working together harmoniously and to mutual benefit. It shows how the feelings of prejudice on both sides are disappearing rapidly—and soon will disappear entirely through the repetition in every section of the country of incidents like that treated below.

The letter follows:

Vacaville, Cal., Oct. 17, 1918.

Motion Picture News, Inc.,
729 Seventh Ave., N. Y.

Dear Sir:

In reply to yours of the 10th inst., I might say that I am an exhibitor, but I will let you know that I, too, am a churchman! My church exhibits moving pictures every Sunday night, and we put on big features recently released. Since I am responsible for the bookings, I desire to have a magazine such as yours to keep me well posted. There is but one little motion picture theatre in this town, and it is owner and I co-operate very nicely. My screen prevents my people from going to the movies on Sunday nights, and consequently it hurts the theatre on that night. But it also is educating lots of people to enjoy the motion pictures, who before never went to the movies, and consequently the little theatre does a better business during the week. I advocate the inclusion of special features on our screen, and Mr. Godfrey helps me in many ways.

It might interest you to know that where-as about 40 used to be our average attendance Sunday nights, since putting on pictures we average 454 in attendance, sometimes going as high as 600—and in this little town of 1,200 population. We put on "Hearts of the World," and showed that wonderful picture to 950 in the one day.

Our equipment is, I think, a good one. The operating room is a regulation steel cage built in accordance with the underwriters' requirements; the machinery is a latest model Simplex Type "S." We change the indirect current to direct by means of a rectifier. Our hall is the largest in town.

I believe in the motion picture business as well as in the use of the motion picture by the church, and churchmen's use of the screen will not only increase the volume of business for the film trade, but will do much to create a desire for clean and wholesome pictures, thus helping greatly to maintain high standards of production. If it isn't asking too much of you, will you let me know, candidly, what you think of our enterprise and my attitude? At least please let us remain a subscriber to your valuable magazine.

Yours sincerely,

FRUHLING, Pastor First Presbyterian Church,

Jersey Republican Brings Industry Into Litigation with Complaints

About Slides—An Exhibitor's Letter

SLIDES supplied to motion picture theatres in every section of the country within the past two weeks through the instrumentality of the Democratic National Committee resulted in bringing the industry into front page prominence when a Jersey candidate used them as the subject of a heated statement Tuesday.

The slides called for the election of candidates "in harmony with President Wilson." Senator Baird, the Republican seeking re-election in New Jersey, alleged that the text of the slides showed they had been prepared almost simultaneously with the President's famous statement of last week, and proved the latter to be a carefully premeditated political move.

Fred Hawley, of 80 Fifth Avenue, who supplied the picture lists and directories, furnishing the slides to theatres. Following is an exhibitor's protest against the slides received by Motion Picture News during the week:

IRIS THEATRE

Mr. Wh., A. J. John, publisher,
Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

I am including a copy of letter I wrote to Mr. Hawley, who appears to be one of the Democratic campaign leaders, also inclosed the letter from him. I do not know your politics, but I do believe that your trade journal is free enough to take up this matter. I have explained in my letter to Mr. Hawley what I thought of his method of trying to enlist the picture screens in a campaign which I nor any other theatre manager wishes to take sides. Am I to understand that Hawley is to be a Republican, Democrat, Socialist or have any other connection with the political parties? I am not afraid of square deal. Mr. Hawley is attempting (so it appears to me) to enlist the aid of picture screens in politics under the guise of getting business for war equipment, and a duty for theatres to show. I personally call this one of the rankest pieces of such work I have met with. There is no doubt but what hundreds of theatre managers will show these slides thinking they are helping to win the war. Why didn't Mr. Hawley write and ask what our advertising rates were, and if we could make room for showing his slides? We get paid for advertising on our screen the same as newspapers get paid for space. We play no favorites in the line of politics. I would like to see your journal take up this matter through its columns, and you can print both letters. Yours, a booster for the NEWS, LEO PETERSON.

The Hawley letter, against which Exhibitor Peterson protested, follows:

Ir
c Theatre,
Bellev Foureche, S. Dak.

Dear Mr. Manager:

At this critical period of our history supporters of the President are needed in Congress.

I am sending you a set of slides, which, if shown in your theatre at repeated intervals from October 20 to November 5, will aid in electing men who are in harmony with President Wilson. These slides which are being supplied by the Democratic National Committee contain messages pointing out the necessity of unity of action in Washington. They should help in crystallizing a sentiment for the support of President Wilson as the candidate for the American Navy.

I trust that you are in accord with this sentiment, and that you will aid as in this patriotic work.

Thanking you for your cooperation, I remain,

Cordially yours,

FRED HAWLEY.
In and Out of Town

John Cecil Graham, General Foreign Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed for England and will remain abroad some three months, during which time he will consult with representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization in England and France.

Lieu. N. W. Davidson of the Royal Flying Corps, formerly Vancouver manager for Pathe Film Imports Ltd., a holder of the Pathe franchise in Canada, was a visitor in New York this last week with L. E. Quimet, the president of the Specialty Film Import.

Cleveland Gets First Films by Airplane

The first motion picture film to arrive in Cleveland by aerial post was delivered last Wednesday morning to the local Pathé exchange in the Belmont building, of which Mr. A. M. Holah is manager.

C. C. Palmer of Hicksville, Ohio, was the manager who consigned the film to this city. It was a news film which was needed for immediate delivery in another town. Manager Holah notified Mr. Palmer to send it to Cleveland by the quickest route. As much as Hicksville is in the direct line of communication of the airplane route from Chicago to Cleveland, he arranged to have the package taken up by the aerial messenger when he made his next stop in that city. That happened to be Tuesday evening. The package arrived in Cleveland Wednesday morning, and was delivered to the Pathé exchange before ten o’clock of the same day. Ordinarily we allowed two days each way for a package for Hicksville,” Mr. Holah said. “This trial delivery shows the possibilities which the aerial service will open up to the motion picture industry. The saving of time and expense, to both exhibitor and exchange will be tremendous. Allowing such a short time for delivery, we shall not require half so many prints of a film to cover the territory, as we now use. At the present time, prints are working about half the time. The other half of the time they are on their way to and from the exchanges.”

This was the first film delivered into Cleveland by the air route. It is also said to be the first delivery of film made in this manner anywhere in the United States.

Influenza Claims More Picture People

Additional deaths and cases of influenza were reported this week from the scourge that has been sweeping the country.

One of the first deaths reported was that of D. L. Cornelius, former manager of the Strand theatre in New Orleans. He died at the naval camp near the southern city. Mr. Cornelius was among the best known southern showmen.

Jack Woods was another New Orleans man reported among the victims. He was manager of the Strand in New Orleans. Foster Oloyd, present manager of the Strand in that city, was said to be recovering last week from an attack. E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, has fully recovered, it is reported.

James Cary, owner of the motion picture theatre at Lee, Mass., died at Glens Falls, N. Y., of pneumonia last week. He had gone to his home in Glens Falls and had succeeded in nursing his mother a sister through attacks when he was stricken.

Charles Franklin Oldt, manager of the Third Street theatre in Easton, Pa., died last week following an attack of influenza.

It was learned in Cleveland, with regret, last week that Allen Schnitzer, brother of J. I. Schnitzer, Universal district manager, died a victim of influenza. He was connected with the Universal exchange in Pittsburgh, where he lived with his mother.

It has already been published in the trade press that Harry Reichenbach lost his father, Charles Reichenbach, and his brother, Irving Reichenbach.

John Wellman, for five years with General Film Company as a bookkeeper, died last Wednesday in Washington after a short but sharp illness from pneumonia. District Manager Elder and Branch Manager J. E. Flax arranged the funeral details, as Mr. Wellman had no family in this city.

Merrill Takes Another Milwaukee Theatre

It was reported from Milwaukee this week that the Merrill Theatre Company of Milwaukee, Wis., which operates the Merrill theatre, has leased the Strand, a downtown house, having a seating capacity of 2,000. Both houses will be managed under the personal direction of E. C. Bostick, it is said.

Manager Bostick has been at the Merrill for the past two years, and it has been his policy to operate on the open booking plan. This idea will be continued at both the Strand and Merrill theatres.

Baby Daughter to Binneys

Harold J. Binney, whose production of "Velvet and Rags," with Vangie Valentino, was interrupted by an attack of pneumonia, is now convalescing and expects to resume operation in a week or so. Mrs. Binney gave birth to a girl since Mr. Binney’s illness, and the father and daughter have never met, for Mr. Binney’s condition has been so serious that a few days ago his life was despaired of.

Lang Compiles Films for Industrial Section

A striking demonstration of the value of the motion picture in war activities is found in the films which Philip B. Lang is now compiling and editing for the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department.

Mr. Lang, who is widely known as an author and producer, entered upon his governmental duties last August. The films which he prepares from selected material are shown exclusively in war plants. They depict the activities of our armies overseas, the work of the “industrial front” at home and the vital necessity of continuous productive effort on the part of those who supply the military forces.

Two pictures edited by Mr. Lang, "America’s Defenders" and "Freedom Forever," each in one reel, are now being circulated in the plants and he is present engaged in the preparation of others.

Mr. Lang has requested the Motion Picture News to bring his highly important work to the attention of producers who have scenes, either topical or dramatic, which deal with different phases of the war. These, he states, can be incorporated in his films to good advantage, as producers who already have patriotically co-operated with the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department have found to their gratification. He emphasizes the fact that the films are not shown in theatres or any place where an admission fee is charged.

Mr. Lang’s address is District Ordinance Office, Industrial Education Section, 1107 Broadway.

Universal Loses Theatre in Havana, Cuba

Universal’s theatre, the Campsomer, and its exchange, containing thousands of reels of films, were destroyed by fire October 24 in Havana, Cuba. Dispatches that reached the company’s headquarters in New York this week report that its property in the Cuban city was a total loss, and that the manager, B. Lichtig, and his wife, barely escaped with their lives.

Mr. and Mrs. Lichtig occupied an apartment on the second floor above the exchange offices. They were rescued from the front window by firemen.

The blaze occurred at about 7 o’clock in the morning. Mr. and Mrs. Lichtig were still asleep at the time, and became aware of the fire only when the fire apparatus arrived. The pair were helped down a ladder garbed in their nightgowns.

It is understood that the Universal will take immediate steps to establish a new exchange and resume the business in Cuba.

Cohen Buys Another

Sydney S. Cohen has purchased from Messrs. Heyne and Scharf the North Star theatre, occupying the entire block on Fifth avenue between 106th and 107th streets, with an orchestral seating capacity of 1,500.

The theatre is being extensively renovated and will be operated along similar lines to his other theatres.

Spoor-Thompson Open New York Office

It was announced this week that the New York sales office and service bureau of the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories has been opened in rooms 1403 and 1404 at 110 West Forty third street. Charles F. Stark, recently appointed sales manager of the company, is in charge, assisted by M. P. Fitzpatrick.
Making the Most of It
There Are Things Wrong With the Material You Get, But Are You Doing Your Part to the Utmost?

We believe that the readers of this department will bear us out in the statement that this bureau has conducted a strong fight for better material to be supplied to the smaller exhibitor for use in exploitation. We have singled out the smaller exhibitor because the man in the larger city, who has the advantage of reproducing trade-paper advertising, of making attractive cut-outs from the stills and who can go the limit on hand designing, doesn’t need these aids as do the smaller men.

In the past year, and since the time that this department was started, there has been a remarkable improvement in the material that is being supplied. We know that it has come, in a considerable measure, from the efforts of the exhibitors who have recorded themselves here—because the producers and the distributors of the pictures know that this is the forum of the showmen of the country and because they know that this department speaks for and by them. But there is still a long way to go.

We are not minimizing the shortcomings of some of the producers when we say that there is a big part of the fault that lies with the exhibitors themselves. We are not referring to those cases where the exhibitor gets no material at all with which to work—and there have been many such complaints recorded—but where the exhibitor himself fails to do his best with the material that is at hand. We are referring to those cases in which the exhibitor says: “Oh, well, the exchange hasn’t sent me hardly anything and I guess I’ll just slap this in.” And he goes ahead, with the result that the public knows that the display has just been slapped in, and concludes in the same manner of thinking that all the theatre manager wants is to get the price of his ticket.

Now here is a thought that is well worth taking home: Don’t you imagine that if ninety per cent of the exhibitors of the country showed an inclination to try to do this with the material supplied them—even granting that it is poor—that the producer would strive to do a great deal more for the exhibitors as a whole in the future? Lack of demand for cut matter that is prepared at great expense is largely responsible for failure of the producer to produce more and better of this matter.

You are familiar with the town loafer in your community who is always complaining “I never had a chance.” And you will listen to him who will give you a reason why every one of the other fellows has succeeded, but he will never grant them brains and industry. The man who is kicking never had a chance because he never tried to get out in the middle of the road and grab one off. And you exhibitors who are complaining about the material that you get will never “get a chance” to get better material until you begin trying to do things with the matter that you do get.

On the opposite page we reproduce three of the VERY BEST advertisements that we have seen, considering the size of the city. They are the work of J. H. Heath, who owns the Grand Photoplay theatre in West Liberty, Iowa. No, West Liberty is not a suburb of Liberty, Iowa, or anything of that sort. It is merely a metropolis with the census population of 1,600.

Yes, if this man had the facilities of the advertising manager in Portland or Cleveland or Los Angeles he could have done better. We might suggest here a dozen things in each of the displays that could have been improved had he the facilities at his hand—engraving plants, hand lettering, and the like. But, for taking advantage of the opportunities that he has, Mr. Heath is a hundred per cent perfect advertiser, and he deserves as much credit for what he has accomplished as do those who are known to you through the Motion Picture News as the best advertisers of the country.

HE USED HIS OPPORTUNITIES AND HE MADE THE MOST OF THEM.

Let’s see what he has done. He has a weekly paper at his command for his advertising. It is one of the kind with the “patent inside.” Most small-town exhibitors think that advertising doesn’t count because they haven’t a big metropolitan paper available, and there that because it happens to be a country weekly that most anything you do is all right with the idea that you might not as well do anything because you haven’t everything in the world to do with it.

Mr. Heath used 8½ inches across three columns in advertising “Dodging a Million,” and we want to say right here that it takes a country exhibitor with enterprise to use this amount of space in a country weekly in a town of 1,600. He used one of the single-column stock scene cuts supplied by Goldwyn and he used the selling lines from that company. It is a splendidly written advertisement, and that Mr. Heath is thinking and writing for himself is proven by the fact that he has grasped the idea on displaying the Hearst-Pathe Weekly as well as the feature. As we have said, there are improvements that could have been made. For instance, we would have brought out the line “You Remember Her” and the name of the star in larger type, but it’s a mighty good selling argument as it is.

Two columns 7 inches has been employed in exploiting “Our Little Wife.” Do you get the atmosphere of this display? “It is all right, but how? Again the manager has read the advertisements carefully and has adopted the best of it. He has a display here that has not been beaten on any advertisement on this picture that we have seen anywhere, except for the failure to bring out the name of the star as strongly as should have been done. The argument of some exhibitors is in cases like this that the dong is too sufficiently well known in their territory. But isn’t that partly your fault and isn’t it up to you to make them well known?

But the air of daintiness, in keeping with the picture, has been carried out even to the border. The line cut that is used here is much more effective in this case than would have been a half tone. The “You’re Here, etc.” matter is effectively disposed.

On the Jack Pickford production there is used one of the stock cuts that was provided by Famous Players-Lasky. The matter is largely taken from the plan book. The name of the star and the title are a little too small, and the boxed effect that makes “On the Same Bill” stand out ahead of anything else, is bad, but still the selling appeal of this border could be even better.

These are improvements that could have been made by running the borders into the cuts and that sort of thing, but the manager who has to deal with the printer on the country weekly is wise in trying not to get too involved. He generally gets messed-up effects.

We want to repeat that Mr. Heath is a hundred per cent advertiser. He had avoided himself of his material—splendidly.

Madera, Cal., has 2,404, according to Uncle Sam’s figures, but it has two daily papers. A. C. H. Chamberlin, manager of the Opera House, is a firm believer in advertising, and he does not let the sun set on a day when he fails to use the papers. Mr. Chamberlin is another man who knows about his pictures before he starts to advertise them, and he has used good sense in making the display on the Theda Bara picture. We must admit that we do not like these heavy black borders and that the display would have been much more effective had the same rule been followed all the way around, because the mourning effect diminished the appeal of the cut, but still he has put the picture over mighty well in the 5 inches double that he has used. Best of all, he has the selling talk and all of the chief ideas.

Majestic, Jackson, Mich., is a city of 34,097, is another house that runs to heavy border effects, but in this case he used (Continued on page 2849)

What's Your Best Work of the Year?

By Sam W. B. Cohn
Manager Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash.

THIS is indeed an opportune time to review one's activities during the past season. With theatres closed everywhere, on account of the influenza epidemic, exhibitors now have time to scratch their heads and reflect.

"What have I done or accomplished during the past months which has made my theatre stand out from the other fellows?"

"Is my house more popular with the town folks than my competitor's theatre and, if so, why." While in this retrospective mood it will do no harm to seek flaws in your system of catering to the public. While you are cleaning house physically, it is a good time to do the same mentally.

While the janitors and painters were engaged in rejuvenating our theatre, here in Spokane, during the epidemic, I, personally supervised the job and from so doing was awakened and amazed to learn that so much dust and dirt could gather in a house which we so thoroughly cleaned each night by two able janitors. It seemed impossible that there could be a particle of dust remaining, but the general house cleaning we gave the theatre proved to the contrary. This fact set me to thinking and I wondered whether I, in the past, as manager of the Liberty, had overlooked any bets for the betterment of our programs, service and publicity. Until this time I was absolutely confident that I was giving my patrons the best of everything; that I was doing all in my power to bring to their attention the fact that we were offering them the best possible amusement and entertainment and that our service was par excellence. In retrospect I found that I had overlooked many bets along these lines. I have just mentioned and I concluded that the reason that I had not discovered this fact before was that we were moving in such a fast cycle—day in and day out—that I had never stopped to reflect or diagnose my past.

I just took it for granted "that there was no dust in my house." Do you get my point?

Then too, I learned in retrospect that we had accomplished some things of which I am very proud but which I did not consider exceptionally brilliant at the time I accomplished them.

For instance, there was the "Liberty Night" which we staged during the Third Loan campaign. At that time we were not furnished trailers made by the various movie stars boosting the loan. I had anticipated this, however, and a couple of months prior to the campaign, I wired to several of the favorite stars asking them to make a special trailer advertising the Loan for my "Liberty Night." From these wires I got one hundred per cent returns. "Doug" Fairbanks, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Charlie Ray, Tom Ince and others of equal prominence in the movie field complied with my request and my Liberty Night went over with a bang. We had singing, short talks, and everything necessary to bring the need of the loan home to the audience and when the last trailer was run we gathered up a mighty fine showing of pledge cards. You will bear in mind that this was all done during the Third loan, before the industry was so finely organized for the purpose of boosting the drives.

I could go on and name a dozen things which we accomplished during the past twelve months of which I am proud. It is also true that there are some instances of which I am not so proud. Not because I fell down on anything which I had started, but because I did not start some things which would have been of great benefit to the prestige of our theatre.

In closing this article I want to call attention to one other thing of which we of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, are proud. It is the fact that this house has gotten squarely behind every patriotic and war movement or measure. We have not waited to be solicited; we went out soliciting war work to do. Our screen carries every message that the administration sends out; we are the advertising agency for the Red Cross Shop in our town and if there is a war charity that is pulled off within a radius of one hundred miles of Spokane and we haven't got a hand in the advertising of it, well, there's something wrong somewhere.

Advertising Biggest Thing, Says Horater

By H. C. Horater
Manager Alhambra, Toledo, O.

THE best thing I have done for the Alhambra theatre is, to get nation wide publicity through the Motion Picture News.
With S. Barret McCormick

"AT THE ZERO HOUR"

This is the first of a new series of articles on advertising by Mr. McCormick, whose past articles in the Motion Picture News have attracted so much attention. You all know that "The Zero Hour" is the name given by our soldier boys in France to the time just before they are to go "over the top." And so the title applies to the moment just before the motion picture theatre manager is preparing to put his picture over.

By S. Barret McCormick
Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

The last strains of the orchestra had died away and we were supplanting by the unmelodious bang of upturning seats. In the projection booth the operator was eagerly putting the dead show back in its can and gumming on the caution label. The advertising man of the Mastodon theatre, seated at his desk, reluctantly put his final O.K. on the revised proof of the Sunday ad, and settled back into that state of nervous expectancy that inevitably precedes the opening of a new attraction.

Very, very carefully during the week he had laid his barrage fire of advance advertising and timed his shots and calculated the resisting power of his eternal "enemy," the public. Up in the big newspaper plant amid the stench of scorched matrix and hot metal they were putting the amusement section to "bed." Tomorrow the Mastodon had to go over the top again and the line in front of the box office when the doors opened would tell the story.

It was "The Zero Hour" in advertising, when the bubble of confidence feels the pin prick of doubt.

That eternity between "one minute to go" and the first step on the ladder never held more dubious seconds than this Zero Hour, and no gallant trooper ready to climb over the parapet imagined wilder dreams of what might have been than the phantas-magoria that flickered before the mental eye of the advertising man.

The Zero Hour is always a good time to meet the advertising man, it always opens up new channels of thought and brings out a logical analysis of the problems that confront him—particularly so if you are the advertising man and can meet yourself in this dual communion.

On the Subject of Democracy in Advertising

An opened copy of Printers' Ink lay on the advertising man's desk and he quoted from an article that seemed to interest him: "A great deal of advertising has either too little democracy in its manner or too much." "Now," commented the advertising man, "democracy as a word is being rather overworked of late; we are inclined to requisition it on the least provocation. Before the war we were likely to use it only in describing some individual who had achieved success and could still eat at the Automat or who could sit beside a frowsy individual in a day coach and not squirm at the thought of the invisible cookies. But now when we apply the word 'democracy' to advertising we are very likely to become so absorbed in 'calling a spade a spade' that we forget that a spade can have a very sharp edge and a very attractive handle and can dig much faster than the bare hand or a cedar shingle."

The Unvarnished Truth is a nice old copy-book maxim, but when we take the Truth and marcelle it and sprinkle on a little of the essence of attractiveness and send it out on the highways and byways of commerce we soon find out which one brings home the bacon.

"It is the business of advertising to find the hidden charms of Truth; we've got to hang on our faith in that," for Truth is the (Continued on page 2848)
Your Idea and Ours

L. C. BARNES, manager of the Elite theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., has originated one of the best ideas yet in aid of the Government war work, and at the same time boosting his theatre. It is designed to encourage the women and children in the purchase of War Savings Stamps and at the same time to increase his matinee business.

Mr. Barnes has issued cards, which are reproduced here, which are to be presented with the paid admissions at matinee performances. As this card is presented for the first time space No. 1 is punched, and then similarly with different visits to the theatre until the entire ten numbers have been punched. When the card is full the owner is given a War Savings Stamp. The cards are not good on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

There is one condition listed on the back of the cards which we do not consider wise, and that is that these will be punched for children only when paying the full admission prices. Of course, we understand that Mr. Barnes could not afford to give a twenty-five-cent stamp with ten five-cent admissions, but it would be wise for the exhibitor to extend the time further and call for, say, twenty admissions for the children. You can readily see that a wrong impression is left if you ask the children to pay a higher price to get the thrill reward. On the surface it is going to appear to many that the patriotic motive is being used to boost the revenue of the theatre, and this is something that wants to be carefully avoided ALWAYS.

Attractive advertising, such as is reproduced here, was used in making the announcements of the offer. It’s a mighty good stunt and one that every exhibitor can use, by making the modifications necessary to his theatre and his admission prices. It helps to wipe out the idea prevalent in some communities that attending motion pictures is wasting money that is needed for war work.

Sometimes when your “goat” is gone, it pays to sweep out the “stall.”

FOX’S Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J., used an entire page in advertising "Why America Will Win.” Our only objection to this display is the fact that the name of the picture was sacrificed. Especially when the name itself has a selling talk it is mighty bad business to play it down for any reason. Another line that ought to have been made far more prominent is that telling that the film is the story of the life of Gen. Pershing.

Now it was fine business to use a number of cuts showing scenes in the life of the American commander and evidently the effect that the designer sought to bring out was to make the drawing of the general stand out and give the selling punch to the whole display. But as good as the drawing is the figure of the mother results in confusion. We would have rather reduced the size of the illustrations and have played the title and the Pershing end much stronger.

Yet, with these faults it is an advertisement that will be read and that will convince.

T HIS is a cracking good idea for a “combination” advertisement from the Strand theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. At first glance the thing that impresses you is that there is far too much reading matter and you get the idea that the theatre is advertising the bill for the various days of the week. That would have been avoided if the line “A Series of Smiles” had been used in sufficiently large type to make it stand out. The idea of the ad writer was splendid, but it was poorly carried out.

Practically every picture on the bill had a smile in it and the manager had the right idea in making that idea stand out, yet the typographical effect was so bad that the opposite result was accomplished—the patron had to read SMALLER type to get the MAIN idea. Needless to say that the lines across the advertisement are unnecessary. A dash would have given the same meaning and would have avoided the “slashed up” appearance of the whole display.

Let the escort of every one leaving your theatre be Satisfaction. Advertising will bring them there.

MAX STEARN, manager of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., did good work when he took advantage of the layoff and the fact that the other theatres were not advertising to make his announcement that Geraldine Farrar had been added to the list of stars which would be seen regularly at the Majestic. The names of the first two of her new pictures in which she would appear at the Majestic were given, an announcement of the coming of "The Romance of Tarzan" as well as various other of the coming attractions.

We venture the assertion that the Majestic theatre has never before used an advertisement that will pay better. Most managers are unable to see why it pays to advertise when their theatres are closed and they cannot do business. But it is a fact that when you have something to say "Not one Loew employee had been affected" by the epidemic though the ushers and others mingled with thousands all day long. The theatre even distributed copies of the official health bulletin on the cause, effect and treatment of influenza to patrons.

On October 15, the management announced that 8,000 people had paid admissions to the theatre on the previous day.

Get in Victory Punch in your business.

BECAUSE they have been employed so successfully the use of the newspaper extra form of advertising appears to be becoming popular. The latest to employ this was Theo. L. Hays, who has taken over the management of the Liberty Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., in addition to the New Garage's. "Carmen of the Klondyke" offered an excellent opportunity for this most sensational style of display and the reason that this was adopted was because Mr. Hays wanted to get the name of the new Liberty theatre on every tongue. It doublecast and your competitors are not appealing to the public, that is the very time to say it. Columbus people were all soon talking about the coming of Miss Farrar to the city when the fact would not have made ten per cent as great an impression had the normal amount of motion picture advertising been appearing in the papers. Space used is nine inches across three columns.

"Pop, goes the weasel." And the weasel slinks away; he is not one of the advertising sort.

LOEW'S THEATRE, Hamilton, Ontario, made a ready effort to offset the idea that theatres were ill-ventilated and disease-spreaders, which was often suggested before the local theatres were closed down on account of the epidemic, by a series of interesting advertisements.

In one advertisement the Loew house was referred to as "The House of Perfect Ventilation" and the reasons for this statement were given as follows: The air is changed every three minutes; five fans either eject or suck air for ventilation and there are twenty-one double-door exists and one hundred windows in the theatre which was only recently built. Announcement was made in this advertisement that we are using a different advertisement to illustrate the same conclusions.

Boylo theatre had an excellent bill here, but it made the mistake of trying to play up the two attractions equally. The space between them was divided with utmost precision and the advertising matter that was used came from the Universal exchange. It was good matter, if one or the other pictures had been featured, but the effect of trying to feature both has been distinctly "messy."

If you have the double bill idea firm in your head you had better use simply the names of the stars and the titles. You may be able to get over the idea of quantity then. But when you try to say a lot about each of two productions you dare the man to read them both. Sell him one or the other; alternate the selling arguments if necessary. But if you were a merchant and a man came into your store for shoes and a pair of socks you'd try to sell him one or the other first.

TIME? NOW!

If You Want Your Advertising Criticised Send It Now

While so many of the theatres are not advertising, you who are still awake and thinking of the future have an unusual opportunity to have your advertising given the careful attention of our advertising expert. In normal times we are not always able to give this matter as prompt attention as we wish, but with the demand on our services somewhat curtailed by the lay-out, there is all the more reason for you to act.

If you are in doubt why any newspaper matter that you used failed to get you results, send us in the specimens and we will do our best to tell you why. Cut them out, each plenty of space, so that the borders will show and make no marks on the face of them. Either write the name of the town on the back in pencil or enclose a card or letterhead. Better still, if you can give us any facts about the peculiarities of your community.

ACT NOW FOR PROMPT RESULTS.
Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

IF you had gone into the music room of the Rialto theatre at two o'clock on Friday afternoon, you would have found the musical staff of the Rialto and Rivoli working over the musical score of "Woman" which is being presented at the Rivoli this week. And if you had gone in at the same time Saturday morning you would have found their still busier. If you had dropped into the Rivoli theatre Sunday morning you would have found the full musical rehearsal in full swing.

And, now wonder then, if you went into the Rialto at the first presentation of "Woman" on Sunday you would have heard the people in the audience commenting on the wonder of the score and you would have heard a buzz of applause at the end of the picture and you would have had your ears full in listening to the delighted comments of the people as they left the theatre. Mr. Rothapfel has never done more in the presentation of a picture than he has in this case, and it has been a long time since Broadway has talked as long about anything.

The most interesting thing that the presentation of this picture shows—and that is New York has its faith in Rothapfel. It is mighty, mighty rare that he advertises his personal guarantee on a production, but he did so in this case and the result was that when the picture began at the Rivoli the lobby was not only packed with people that could not gain admission, but there was a line a block long still waiting, though the announcement was made that no further tickets would be sold for a time. We couldn't even get close to entrance and so we had to slip in the back way. And all this with the influenza in our midst.

The meaning of this is that it pays to build confidence in your theatre and in your name and to use your guarantees sparingly. "Woman" had not been advertised even in the motion picture trade press and the general public knew absolutely nothing about it, but when Rothapfel told them that it was worth while they came by hundreds and thousands. It is simply another evidence that it pays to make your theatre THE THING.

"Capriccio Italiano" is the brilliant overture at the Rivoli and then comes the Animated which consists only of the Allies Official War Review. For the first time in the history of the Rothapfel houses the whole of the music for this is carried on the organ. This is caused by the fact that the orchestra has a heavy task on its hands with the playing of the music for the feature. From the first to the last the orchestra begins to play "Macbeth" as the prelude. The curtains part, furnishing a setting by John Wenger that baffles description. As the advertisements say, "It has to be seen to be appreciated." The audience breaks into applause at the sight which represents the donkey figure of woman with a background of weirdly tall trees, a single star in the blue sky. The curtains come to again and the applause recurs. Immediately afterwards the feature is started.

We have already told you that the music for this is wonderful. We cannot even attempt to give the score here, but one may appreciate the character of it when you are told that among the composers represented are Mendelssohn, Rimsky-Korsakov, Fanni, Eithelbert Nevin, Boito, Rehbokoff, Goldmark, Delibes, Charpentier, Noyes, Burgmann (Titi Ricordi), Masenat and Bucolossi.

At one portion, where the angel appears to warn Adam and Eve we have a fanfare of trumpets, like the call of Gabriel and at another place where the monk is represented "Hozanna" is sung from off the stage. There is an effective pause between the two verses.

Now "Woman" consists of a prologue, five separate episodes and an epilogue. Mr. Rothapfel has made this more effective by having a gauze curtain, tinted with lights, fall between each of the episodes, the picture of course passing while the orchestra plays. It adds wonderfully to the impressiveness of the presentation.

At the end there are some striking patriotic scenes and here we get the advantage of stirring music that spurs the audience on to more applause.

There are things so artistic that they have been left out. The presentation of "Woman" is one of them. But it is certain that there has never been a picture presented anywhere that has called forth more comment and has aroused more enthusiasm than this one at the Rivoli.

Let's Second Rhapsody" at the Rivoli this week. With Dr. Reisenfeld leading the orchestra at the Rialto this week Erno Rapee is transferred to the Rialto. And this serves to show how "regular" the Rialto audience are. It was no reflection on Mr. Rapee that the audience did not applaud him when he appeared (at the performance we saw). It was simply because those people who have been coming to the Rialto every week know their Rialto and they expected to see Hugo Reisenfeld and they did not know Mr. Rapee. It is still another argument about making THE theatre and everything about it appeal.

"Heroes of the Coast Guard" is the scenic this week, a Ford production showing the way these heroes operate in their saving of lives from the oceans' storms.

"Scene de Ballet" is the first selection and then "Fingal's Cave Overture" is played up to the scenes that show the breeches buoy in operation where the second "Peer Gynt" suite No. 8 is used up to the point where the last survivor is landed and then the music reverts to "Fingal's Cave Overture."

With the lights all blue and a red spot on the "cellist Gaston Dubois then plays Faure's "Elegie."

"Rialto March" is used for the opening of the Animated and then with Gaumont pictures of college boys becoming soldiers at New York University it changes to "College Life." Screen Telegram pictures

LIKE OLD DAYS

Only a News Weekly and a Feature on the Bill at the Rivoli

FTER we had enjoyed the presentation at the Rivoli this week, we turned to ourselves that this was something like the bills that prevailed a couple of years ago—only the feature, and then a news reel or a one-act comedy. For, except for the overture and the prelude to the feature, these are the only items on the bill.

But you remember the old joke when the end-man said: "This reminds me of So-and-so—it's so different."

If you are persuaded that you are going to make your motion picture house the same old thing every day and day out, you'll be the wisest to find some one with an ambition to be a "mag- nate." And if you are content to run along with the stereotyped policy, you will last for a certain length of time—till some one who does things invades your territory.

You don't have to do big things to do things different. You don't have to have a symphony orchestra or specially built stage settings. You can make your theatre "different" week after week. Don't let the only novelty in your theatre be the unexpected ending that the producer gives the feature or the twist the author puts in the plot. Think for yourself a little.

them effectively, if the cut of Miss Tal-range had printed properly. Unfortunately the result has been a mere smudge. But here is a case where it is very evident that W. S. McLaren, the highly successful manager of the Majestic, did not have a great deal of material for use and went to the opposite extreme in attempting to call attention to the picture. He did that successfully, because the display stands out on the page of the newspaper "like a sore thumb." He realized the drawing power of the name of the star and he played this especially strong and in the box effect, because he knew that the cut that he had to use was poor.

He has dominated with the name of the theatre the name of the star and his own endorsement of the picture. We believe that the artistic appearance of the display could have been improved a great deal, but for the "hit you in the eye" stuff with poor material available, apparently, it is mighty hard to beat.

Every one of these displays proves that the exhibitor can get better displays if he will do the work on his part.

But there is another thing that suggests itself at least in the case of the advertisements at the Grand. This manager has evidently had the cooperation of the com-positor on his local weekly. It is a mighty important point to keep in touch with the people who have charge of your typeset-ting. They have it in their power to make your advertising draw or to make it "mire advertising." And if you will arouse their pride in their work and show your appreci-ation you will get results.

One exhibitor wrote us recently: "I got more results out of your criticism of my advertising than I had been able to get from my printer in a year. I took the criticism to him and he agreed that everything that was said there was right. Then he asked me to bring the copy of the News to him each week so that he could study the advertising. 'Motion picture advertising is different,' he told me, 'and I want to learn all I can about it.' Since that time my advertising has improved one hundred per cent. and I know it.'

This is not said as a circulation argument, because the News wants no circulation except EXHIBITOR CIRCULA-TION, but if you can get your printer inter-ested enough it will help you on to lend him the copy for a day each week and let him get the benefit of the criticism of others' work.

And if you can get the right sort of co-op-eration from the printer you can learn a lot from him. Some exhibitors miss fire because they do not take the slightest trouble to learn the MECHANICS of advertising. The result is that they prepare advertising that will not "fit" and with little idea of how the display is going to look when it is printed in the newspaper. The smaller town exhibitor needs more than the others to have this knowledge for the simple reason that the printing offices haven't the same facilities as the cities and as a rule not as well trained workmen. You will find as a general rule that your printer is willing to give you all the cooperation in his power.

So the best advice that can be given to the smaller city exhibitor is to take advan-tage of every opportunity that is offered him and not to throw up his hands and say that it cannot be done.

The articles on newspaper cooperation in larger cities will soon be concluded and then we are going to devote more space here to talking about the advertising of the smaller fellows, about advertising that em-ploys the sort of material that you get, good, bad, and indifferent. But in the meantime the invitation is always open for you to have your advertising criticized here or in personal letters to you.

New Garrick Makes Fine Record with Its Stage Sets

PATRONS of the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul, Minn., are taking a new in-terest in the house on account of the splen-did stage settings that are being employed these days by Thomas L. Hays, the man-ager. The St. Paul theatres have escaped closing on account of the influenza because the health regulations have been otherwise strictly observed.

Mr. Hays believes firmly in the combina-tion of the music, the picture and the stage setting and he is working the idea out in most of his programs.

One of the recent settings was used under the title of a scenic prelude. This represented "A Night in Venice." The slowly opening velvet curtains revealed the Grand Canal of Venice with the palaces of the Doges in the distance. Moonlight rippled over the water and in the distance were heard the strains of music, becoming louder as a gondola appeared. A trio, con-sisting of violin, flute and harp, dressed in Neapolitan costume, then rendered "O Solo Mio" and the gondola moved off the stage to the strains of "Maria Maria."

A scenic and instrumental prelude were used with the presentation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It opened with "My Old Kentucky Home," sung off stage and then as the lights came up the orchestra played Turner's "The Darkies' Jubilee," the musicians singing the refrain, "Roll on dat Cotton," and a steamboat whistle sounding from the orchestra as a mini-ature steamboat slowly crossed the stage, of course through the water that represented the river. The heart-dear songs of Stephen Foster and other characteristic Southern music was used during the picture with "Ave Maria," on harp and violin, for the transfiguration of Uncle Tom.

St. Paul audiences have shown their full appreciation of these settings.
LAST MINUTE REPORTS

The Following Individual Reports Came in as Motion Picture News Was Going to Press

"The Cruise of the Make-Believes" (Lila Lee-Paramount)—"Very good picture. Great star."

"The Ghost of the Rancho" (Washburn-Pathe)—"Fine picture, but poor business."

"Road to France" (Blackwell-World)—"Other than patriotic sentiment, this picture has not much to recommend."

"A Soul Without Windows" (Clayton-World)—"A fine picture entitled to do more business."

"The Green God" (Morey-Blythe-Vitagraph)—"Very ordinary picture."

"Pershing's Crusaders" (First National)—"Big to average to poor business in three-day run."

"Riders of the Purple Sage" (William Farnum-Fox)—"Opened average and closed extra big in four-day run. Attractive to young and old."

"Geeter of Berlin" (Universal)—"A record breaker for seven days."

"Peck's Bad Girl" (Normand-Goldwyn)—"Average business three days."

"Cleopatra" (Bara-Fox)—"Opened after being closed four weeks by epidemic. Business light until Saturday. Strong feature but people still nervous."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released since August 1 on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column "Average of Exhibitors' Reports" the term "Extra Big" indicates a picture which far surpassed expectation; "Big" means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; "Average" is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; "Poor" indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

The comments given are indication of the number of reports received, as many exhibitors merely check off the grading without comment.

Hodkinson Transfers to Pathe

Latter Company Will Handle All Distribution Formerly Put Through General—New Arrangements November 25

A NEW releasing arrangement between W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Pathe Exchanges, Inc., whereby the latter will in the future distribute all the Hodkinson productions, was consummated last week, it was announced October 27th by both Pathe and Hodkinson. This new deal will also mean it was said, that the Hodkinson productions, which have heretofore been booked at General exchanges, will also be transferred to Pathe exchanges. Monday, November 25th, has been named as the date upon which the new arrangement will go into effect.

The productions included in the above which have previously been going through the General Film Company and which are to be transferred to work through Pathe, are the Jesse D. Haynes productions featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Lillian Walker Pictures, Bevis Barriscale Productions, Louise Glauin Pictures, Douglas Natural Color Films, etc., etc.

In speaking of the change, W. W. Hodkinson stated that the move was made as a result of much careful thought and deliberation, and was calculated to give to the users of Hodkinson Service of selected photo plays the very best and most efficient exchange service possible to secure in the field, and that Pathe's unquestioned superiority in physical exchange work made them the logical organization for the purpose.

Hodkinson representatives in each territory will have, their offices with the individual Pathe exchanges and will give their personal attention to each Hodkinson customer as heretofore. It is the desire of the Hodkinson organization—and all departments are working hard to gain this purpose—to have all arrangements completely settled so that the change will be effected before the great majority of the theatres are opened, and that not only present Hodkinson customers, but the many new customers who have signed up in the past few weeks who have been unable to secure films owing to the influenza ban, may be served with expedition and dispatch.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at present has twenty-four pictures in the various territories and over 2,500 theatres are being served with these productions. Working through the Pathe organization, every exhibitor will be assured of prompt and efficient service on his films and advertising accessories.

C. E. Shurteff, general sales manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, will leave next week for an extended trip through the Northern and Middle West territories, visiting each Hodkinson representative and giving complete instructions for the change. W. A. Bach, assistant general sales manager, will make a flying trip through the Southern territory, returning by way of Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, fulfilling the same mission in this section of the country. P. N. Brinich, Western division manager, will handle the territory from Omaha west, as heretofore.

There are now twenty-four Hodkinson representatives in the field, and, with the addition of the Pathe branch managers and Pathe salesmen, who will all be financially interested in the efficient and equitable placing of Hodkinson Service, it is estimated that the largest, most complete representation in the field will be engaged in not only selling Hodkinson Service to the exhibitor, but keeping him satisfied after he has signed for same.

In connection with the future releasing plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson stated to a representative of this paper that, contrary to the report which had appeared, his plans contemplated a continuance of the one a week releasing basis, provided consistent quality of releases could be secured.

"The Pathe sales organization is today the best in the country," said Mr. Brunet in talking of the new arrangements. "I have developed it, selected it and had it trained until I can truthfully make that statement with a very justifiable pride. When I saw our branch managers all gathered together at our 'Save and Serve' convention recently I was proud of them. I felt that it was very doubtful if ever in the history of the industry there had been gathered together a body of exchange managers who would average so high in ability, appearance, character and knowledge of the business.

"Knowing the value of our organization, I knew that we could be of great aid to Mr. Hodkinson, for whom I have great admiration and a high esteem. Our agreement cannot fail to be good business for us both and for the industry as a whole."

Heavy Run Reported on Goldwyn Specials

Goldwyn's successful special productions are said to be literally "saving the day" for thousands of exhibitors who find themselves facing the feature shortage during the present situation in the industry. The theatres which are privileged to remain open during the influenza epidemic are declared to be booking several or all of the big Goldwyn independents.
Mayer Augments Star’s Efforts

Louis B. Mayer Declares He Believes in Providing Excellent Stories, Elaborate Settings and Expert Directing for Anita Stewart

When Louis B. Mayer was host at a luncheon to many producers and distributors recently at the Hotel Astor he was quizzed as to the report that he was quite extravagant in producing his first Anita Stewart picture for the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit.

While Mr. Mayer did not state just what salary he was paying Miss Stewart, he declared that he was paying her more money than he once thought was in the whole world. “I believe Anita Stewart is a wonderful box office attraction in herself, but I will not handicap her by providing her with poor stories,” Mr. Mayer continued, in answer to many pointed questions.

“I paid what some would call a tremendous price for the screen rights to ‘In Old Kentucky’ and ‘Virtuous Wives.’ But even with what I consider a wonderful star with most excellent stories, I could not consider the so-called average director. So I managed to secure George L. Tucker.

“Yes, all this costs money, and big money, too, but what is the use of paying a huge sum for a mansion and then furnish it with rag carpets?

“Now comes the surrounding company. What would you think of a great mansion finely furnished by a master hand if its grounds were not kept up, if the lawn was scraggly and weeds grew where flowers belonged. It would be an eyesore. So it is with Stewart, her play and her director. Her surroundings are going to be in keeping with the whole. That’s why I’ve spared no expense on the supporting company.

“Of course, I admit that my way may not be orthodox. But, in my opinion, it is the difference between the machine-made suit of clothes in a sweatshop and a classy made-to-order garment from a Fifth Avenue tailoring establishment. I am not making machine goods. I am building for the exhibitor a made-to-order product. I don’t have to rush to get it out on a certain date. I take my good time in making it right, and then announce the release date. When the exhibitor gets it he must know it’s right.

“Certainly the process is expensive, but so is anything really worth while expensive. The exhibitor is mainly interested in two things—satisfying his patrons and making money. He cannot do either without accomplishing the other.”

“Cannibal” Film to Have Showing at Astor

November 19 at the Hotel Astor Robertson-Cole Company will have a showing of Martin Johnson’s “Cannibals of the South Seas.”

This company has just disposed of the New York State rights to the First National Exhibitors’ exchange, and this showing is intended principally for exhibitors in this territory.

The “Cannibal” films will be released in two parts of approximately 5,000 feet each, and tell a complete story of the trip, from the time Martin Johnson left San Francisco, when Mrs. Jack London said goodbye, to the escape from Chief Magapate, after the Johnsons had nearly lost their lives.

“Safe for Democracy” at Rivoli Theatre

When S. L. Rothafel viewed J. Stuart Blackton’s production “Safe for Democracy” he immediately booked it at the Rivoli theatre for the week of November 3. Mitchell Lewis is the star.

Commodore Blackton, after finishing “The Common Cause” and “Safe for Democracy,” announced that he would take a short rest before starting “The Battle Cry of Liberty.”

Fox Offices Make Many More Changes

Several changes are being made in the offices of the Fox Film Corporation, in the Leavitt Building, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Partitions are being torn out, departments are being torn out and shifted, and office space is being re-arranged with a view of taking care of the growth of several departments.

The offices of the New York exchange have been extended to include most of the reception space on the seventh floor. The Foreign Department, which has been growing so rapidly that it has moved three times within a year, is now more conveniently and commodiously quartered in offices adjoining the New York exchange. “Salome” headquarters have been moved and the Auditing Department has taken over the entire tenth floor.

Alsation Farm Shown in New Screen Classics

An Alsation farm in all its details has been reproduced at Throgg’s Neck, New York, for the Screen Classics production “Wilson or the Kaiser?” This super-feature has been written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller, with a big cast to interpret its seven acts.

A modest little building was found at Throgg’s Neck which suggested Mr. Karger’s idea of the home of the young Alsation hero, Conrad Le Brett, played by Creighton Hale. Metro’s technical staff, under the direction of E. J. Shulter, at once proceeded to remodel it until it came exactly within the requirements.

Giegerich to Vitagraph Publicity Department

Charles J. Giegerich, well known in newspaper and motion picture circles, has been appointed as publicity representative for Vitagraph at the company’s studio in Hollywood, and has already taken up his duties there.

This is Mr. Giegerich’s second affiliation with Vitagraph, he having been the first Publicity Director of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, at the time of its formation in 1915.
"Current Events" Show "Yanks" in France

Pictures of the Yanks "carrying on" in France, driving the Germans from the territory they have occupied for four years, are the feature of Universal Current Events No. 76. The pictures were made by United States Signal Corps photographers on the firing line.

It is declared that in some of the villages the photographers entered with the Yanks only twenty minutes after the Germans had departed and that some of the villages were still under Hun shell fire.

One of the most striking scenes is said to be the construction of a pontoon bridge, while under fire, from material captured from the Germans.

"Sumatra" in Pathe's Post Travel Series

No. 20 of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe the week of November 28th, is called "Sumatra," and takes one on the oddest and most instructive journeys of the series. Its views of places and peoples give one a clearer idea of what Holland is doing in this remote part of the globe and what she will continue to do.

There is said to be an entire entertainment itself in Palembang, the Sumatra "metropolis."

Valentine Film Goes Through Sherry

Harold J. Binney's super-production, in which he is directing as well as presenting Vangie Valentine, announces that his picture will be released in November through the Wm. L. Sherry Service. Mr. Binney regards the story, which is an original scenario by George Edwardes-Hall, as being one of the most effective vehicles he has ever handled.

It deals with romance and mystery, the dominant themes being love and adventure.

Goldwyn Salesmen "Carry On"

Goldwyn's National Sales Organization Bucks Line—Offsetting Epidemic's Effects—No Salesmen Laid Off

It takes more than a country-wide epidemic and the temporary suspension of thousands of theatres to break down the enthusiasm of Goldwyn's big national sales organization. Goldwyn prides itself upon having a distributing mechanism unlike any other in the industry: an organization of exceptional enthusiasm and loyalty.

During the period of the epidemic and the consequent closing down of both theatres and new releases Goldwyn reports that it has not laid off a salesman in its offices, has not discontinued the policy of having its men travel their accustomed territories.

Thus during the most trying time that ever confronted exhibitors, Goldwyn men have been at the elbow of the company's customers aiding them wherever possible, going over plans with owners of theatres for the reopening of their houses.

During this period of national distress for a great industry no Goldwyn salesman or manager has endeavored to force sales at a time when minds were concerned with other affairs. His company has sought in many ways to perform the functions of a great relief organization and to draw itself into ever closer relation with its customers and prospective customers than ever before, according to report.

One of the immediate results of this policy is said to have been a tremendous volume of virtually unsolicited business on previously unplayed Goldwyn first-year productions, on the Goldwyn special-productions distributed by the company, on Capitol Comedies and on Star Series contracts for the company's newest productions of the current season.

"The Kaiser's Finish" Sold for England

The English rights to "The Kaiser's Finish," the eight-part special state rights production made by S. L. Warner, have been sold to Mr. Venito Nichols of London, one of the largest of the foreign film operators, for a price said to be almost the equivalent of that which he paid for the same territorial rights to "My Four Years in Germany."

The territory for which Mr. Nichols has obtained distributing rights to "The Kaiser's Finish" includes Great Britain, Wales, Ireland and Scotland.

In purchasing foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany" Mr. Nichols accepted a financial arrangement which, for size, exceeded the sales price on any other special production he had ever obtained, according to A. Warner, who conducted the negotiations in behalf of both the German picture and "The Kaiser's Finish."

"That this price is closely approached by the one just paid to us for 'The Kaiser's Finish' is a rather remarkable tribute to the value of this special state rights feature," declared Mr. Warner.

"Mr. Nichols said that the public demand in Great Britain for war stories, with a pronounced military atmosphere, is greater today than it ever has been. The market has grown in size until the British theatre-owners are finding difficulty in getting enough pictures of that type to satisfy their audiences. Conventional dramas are still popular, but they cannot compete on the same block with a war picture."
Nine New Productions Ready at Universal

New productions have just been completed at Universal City including one multiple-reel feature, four Bluebird five-reel photoplays, one two-reel western drama, and three one-reel comedies.

The multiple-reel feature is "Carry-On," Dorothy Phillips' drama of the war, made under the direction of Allen J. Holubar. This is said to be the most expensive production Universal has ever staged, and several months were consumed in the making. More than 5000 persons took part in the production. It is regarded as the most colossal drama Dorothy Phillips has ever attempted, and is said to give her the supreme role of her entire career.

The Bluebird five-reelers include Juanita Hansen's new drama, "The Wrong Side of Paradise," produced by Colin Campbell from H. Tipton Steck's screen version of George Hull's magazine story; "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker," a Priscilla Dean production dealing with the underworld, produced by Jack Dillon from one of Jack Boyle's "Boston Blackie" stories; "Breathers There a Man," a new Monroe Salisbury drama produced by William Wolbert from George Hull's novelette of the same name; and "The Beautiful Mongrel" starring Carmel Myers, produced by Paul Powell from the original story by Sonya Levien.

"Love's Allli" is the title of the two-reel western starring Helen Gibson just finished by Harry Harvey. The comedies include "An Amateur Daniel" featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber; "Mixed Nuts" starring Willard Louis and Molly Malone, directed by Roy Clements, and "100 Per Cent American," a Lyons-Moran fun offering directed by Arthur Hotaling.

Fox Eliminates November Exhibitors' Bulletin

The October number of the William Fox Exhibitors' Bulletin, an elaborate magazine which is published monthly for the benefit of exhibitors, is just off the press. In this number the service department, which has won commendation from exhibitors for its helpfulness, has been developed to a higher degree with the aim of being of even greater assistance to showmen.

Because of the production shut-down, the next issue of the Exhibitors' Bulletin will be the December number. It will be out about November 10, and will give complete information regarding the winter policy of the Fox Film Corporation. Several announcements of special interest to exhibitors are scheduled for this number, it is said.

Eddie Polo Goes Back to Circus for Scenes

Eddie Polo, who is now making a serial of the tanbark, "The Lure of the Circus," for the Universal, actually went back to the old days under the big top, and demonstrated that although he had been a screenland star for the past few years, he could still "come back" and deliver the goods as a crackerjack aerial performer.

In appreciation of Eddie's services, the circus management turned the entire show over to Director Jack McGowan for shooting scenes for his chaptered melodrama. McGowan estimates it would have cost Universal $250,000 to reproduce the scenes secured at the circus if they had had to be taken at Universal City.

Nazimova's "Eye for Eye" Titles from Paintings

Title paintings of richness and beauty are said to add to the magnificence of Mme. Nazimova's production de luxe, "Eye for Eye," and aid in interpreting the meaning and mystery of this brilliant romance of the Orient.

"Eye for Eye" has been directed by Albert Capellani, as adapted by himself and June Mathis from the play by the Great Belgian dramatist. It will be presented in seven acts by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger.

Kitty Gordon's First for United Is "Adelle"

President Berst of United Picture Theatres of America announces "Adelle" as the title selected for Kitty Gordon's first United superpicture. This title follows the name of the heroine in Adele Bleneau's thrilling romance, "The Nurse's Story," on which the picture is based.

With her first United picture nearing completion, Miss Gordon has settled down with enthusiasm to the prospect of the extended stay in California necessitated by the series of six other pictures she is to make for United.
Ince Forms Plan to Screen the Public

Thomas H. Ince, producer of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, has conceived a plan to place on the motion picture screens in American training camps and at Y. M. C. A. huts overseas, close-up pictures of relatives here of the boys at the front. This idea will be carried out by Mr. Ince himself, assisted by a complete motion picture organization from his studio and will offer another patriotic "bit" by this well-known producer.

The plan was tested at San Diego, California, and found success. At Balboa Park many thousand relatives of boys "over there" formed in line before the camera and presented their best smiles to be shown to their loved ones overseas. Newspapers, military and civic officials gave the project their most enthusiastic cooperation. Among those who gave much assistance were Rear-Admiral W. F. F. Flisham, commander of the reserve force, Pacific fleet; Brig.-Gen. Peter W. Davison, temporarily in command of the 16th Division at Camp Kearny, and Capt. W. D. Brotherton, commander of the naval training station.

In addition to taking pictures of the relatives and friends of these in service Mr. Ince filmed many scenes that will cheer the local boys at the front. These will be edited with the close-ups so that the entire picture will be of great interest to those who will view it. C. Gardner Sullivan, chief of the Ince scenario staff, is writing the subtitles, and Bert Lannon is in charge of general arrangements.

Robertson-Cole in New Deals

Entire World's Rights, Including United States, Is Secured for Eight Rhodes Pictures by the Robertson-Cole Company

By a special arrangement with the National Film Corporation of America the Robertson-Cole Company has secured the entire world's rights, including the United States, for the National's Billie Rhodes pictures and also the picture starring Henry B. Walthall, besides looking after all the National Film Corporation's interests.

"Smiling Billy" Parsons has closed his New York offices and will confine himself entirely to producing. Robertson-Cole will supervise the accounts of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in relation to the Parsons Capitol Comedies and it will have authority to approve all contracts made through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the release of the National's feature, "The Romance of Tarzan," the concluding chapters of "Tarzan of the Apes."

The National Film Corporation is planning to produce a new attraction, completing it for release before next summer. The title and subject have not yet been announced, but Robertson-Cole will control all distributing rights.

The contract with the National Film Corporation calls for the handling of eight Billie Rhodes pictures during the coming year. The first, "The Girl of My Dreams," completed a short time ago, will be given extensive advertising by Robertson-Cole and will shortly have a special premiere in New York City.

The initial Walthall picture will be "And a Still Voice," completed before the star came East to play in a show on Broadway. Within the past few weeks Robertson-Cole closed deals whereby all J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and Sencraft features are to be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States. The Robertson-Cole Company has also acquired for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Desmond pictures to be made by Jesse D. Hampton and Martin Johnson's phenomenal "Cannibals of the South Seas."

New York Rights Sold for "Cannibal" Film

The First National Exhibitors' Exchange has secured for distribution in the State of New York, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas." The deal has just been consummated with the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world's rights to this collection of motion pictures. Manager Ralph Clark personally conducted the negotiations for the First National Exhibitors' Exchange.

The First National Exchange is arranging an elaborate advertising campaign for these pictures, for special billboard display throughout New York and other cities of the state. These are said to be of distinct pictorial and artistic beauty, and the most unusual paper of a film in many months.

A handsome color scheme—with tropical blues, greens and yellows predominating—makes the billboard tremendously eye-arresting. It is said that the paper catches the spirit and atmosphere of "Cannibals of the South Seas" in remarkable fashion.
Alice Blache to Direct for Leonce Perret

Leonce Perret has secured the services of Mme. Alice Blache to direct a series of pictures under his supervision. Among the stars she has directed in this country are: Florence Reed, Holbrook Blinn, Doris Kenyon, Catherine Calvert, and Bessie Love.

The first Blache picture for M. Perret will be from a scenario written by himself but not yet named. The star whose work will be supervised by Mme. Blache will be Dolores Cassinelli, who has already appeared in the two patriotic spectacles, “La-fayette, We Come!” and “Stars of Glory.”

An E. Forst Story for Billie Rhodes

“Such a Little Genius,” by E. Forst, author of “Sylvia on a Spree” and “Prescription,” has been purchased by Isadore Bernstein, manager of productions for National Film Corporation for the new star Billie Rhodes.

Although a new writer in film circles, Mr. Forst has had great success, having placed four stories within the past two weeks for Emmy Weihlen, June Elvidge, and Billie Rhodes.

Production on Miss Rhodes’ story will be started as soon as the enforced shutdown is lifted.

“Her Moment,” Reported as Scoring Big

A highly successful first run engagement of “Her Moment” at Clune’s Auditorium, Los Angeles, during the first week of October is reported by Manager George J. Ekre of the General Film exchange in that city. The seven-part drama written by Samuel H. London, featuring Anna Luther and directed by Frank Beal, headed the week’s program.

The same General Film manager announces that John W. Noble’s drama, “Shame,” with Zena Keele, has just concluded a Los Angeles run.

Universal Stars Are Energetic

During Enforced Vacation the Many Universal Favorites Busy Themselves in Various Forms of Patriotic Service

During the enforced vacation due to influenza, Universal’s stars are devoting their energies to various forms of patriotic service.

Little Juanita Hansen is the only one in the group whose activities are not up to high speed. Miss Hansen’s sole occupation is to lie in bed and fight her own case of influenza. Most of the others are providing good cheer for soldiers, sailors and influenza sufferers, or are engaged in work that will help the government.

Dorothy Phillips is dressing dolls for the Red Cross. Mary MacLaren has become a farmette. Carmel Myers takes her machine out daily and gives joy rides to homesick soldiers and sailors.

Edith Roberts has gone to Catalina to fish for tuna to serve the market. Ruth Clifford has procured a gauze mask and is appearing in Los Angeles hospitals and singing for influenza sufferers.

Marie Walcamp is busy writing scores of letters to soldiers in France. Fritzi Brune is hard at work with her husband, Bob Daley, composing a brand new war song. Mae Murray was reported a few days ago almost ready for a trip to New York.

Harry Carey is up on his ranch, directing operations to augment the food supply. Monroe Salisbury is also busy on his ranch, with special activity in the war against influenza.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the comedy film team, have developed a comedy skit which they intend to stage at various army camps for the entertainment of soldiers.

Eddic Polo is not so terribly active these days, as he has accumulated several dozen cuts and bruises in various stunts he has performed for the serial film “The Lure of the Circus.”

Priscilla Dean has a big task on her hands visiting modistes and milliners and getting together a new wardrobe.

Hampton Gets Stories for Kerrigan

Jesse D. Hampton seems to have no difficulty in finding suitable stories for his star, J. Warren Kerrigan. He has just announced to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors of Hampton-Kerrigan pictures, that he has secured “Four-Ace Baker,” a picturesque melodrama of the days of ’49, and “Uncharted Channels,” a very beautiful comedy-romance.

These will follow “Three X Gordon,” an up-to-the-second comedy-drama; “Come Again, Smith,” a comedy-melodrama, and “The Unfinished Story,” an Alaskan drama.

It’s a Good Idea!

Universal exchanges report having found considerable advantage from joining the Boards of Trade in their town. This idea was suggested by the Universal several weeks ago.

As a result the heads of the various exchanges at once made themselves members of the commercial club in their town. There is always either a Board of Trade or a Chamber of Commerce or a commercial club of some sort in every city of importance. Membership in these organizations places the exchange man in touch with all the important business and civic affairs of his community.

Universal Cameras Get Close-Up of Wilson

Cameramen for the Current Events and Animated Weekly service of the Universal accomplished a feat last Saturday when they captured a close-up picture of President Wilson marching at the head of the great Columbus Day parade in New York. They did this in the face of organized preventive measures by a squad of police, and in full view of thousands. Some suggestion of what happened is shown in the pictures they got.

Current Events is said to be full of thrilling scenes attending the Columbus Day demonstration. A fireman is shown making a leap from the third floor of the Morgan building. Another fireman is seen climbing to a dizzy height on a perpendicular extension ladder.

Other scenes depict the review held recently at Annapolis Naval Academy when Lord Goddies, First Lord of the British Admiralty, was the honored guest.

“The Common Cause” Now Ready

Advance prints on “The Common Cause” have been shipped to all branches of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization and will be available for showing to exhibitors this week, it is announced.

Although the definite date of release has not been fixed, the Vitagraph, through which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton’s big drama is to be offered, is going ahead with its plans for an extensive campaign in the United States and Canada.

For two weeks, it is announced, artists have been busily engaged in making sketches for the paper and advertising material that is to be supplied to exhibitors, and work is well advanced on it.

Intensive Campaign for “The Common Law”

L. R. “Over the Top,” Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,” “Within the Law,” “The Girl Philippa,” and “The Battle Cry of Peace,” “The Common Cause,” J. Stuart Blackton’s latest screen production, will be made one of the big releases of the season.

The Vitagraph Distributing Organization, which handled all of the Vitagraph specials mentioned, is anticipating splendid results with it, and is now engaged in completing plans for the exploitation of “The Common Cause” with one of the most extensive and energetic advertising campaigns that it has given to any picture in recent years.

The production is described as a stirring drama with many novelities and humorous situations and was written by J. Hartley Manners, author of “Peg o’ My Heart,” “Out There” and other plays, and Major Ian Hay Beith, author of “The First Hundred Thousand.” The scenario was written by Anthony Paul Kelly.

The cast is said to be one of great power. Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer are featured at its head and in their support are seen Lieut. Lawrence Grossmith, the English comedian and veteran of the war; Charles and Violet Blackton, Huntley Gordon, Mlle. Marcel, Philip Van Lorn and Louis Dean, who has won fame by his impersonation of the Kaiser in “Over the Top” and several other recent big productions.

In the prologue and epilogue which present the theme of “The Common Cause” are said to be five of the most famous women on the American stage today. Marjorie Rambeau appears as “Columbia,” Julia Arthur as “Italy,” Violet Heming as “Britannia,” Irene Castle as “France,” and Elbe Shannon as “Belgium.”

Scenes for the picture with the exception of the official battle shots, were made partly in New York and partly in Chicago.

United Adds Members—Pictures in Work

C. R. SEELYE, secretary of United Pictures Theatres of America, momentarily interrupted the tour which he is making in the interests of that organization, and was at his desk in the Meca building for a few days. Mr. Seelye reports further results in Michigan from the lead taken by C. H. Miles, the prominent Detroit exhibitor, in Joining United.

In addition to the number of exhibitors already published as having linked up with United in that section, further enrollments included Rialto, Gladwin, Park and Dawn theatres at Detroit, and Orpheum, Ann Arbor, and Temple at Toledo.

David M. Thomas, formerly Fox manager at St. Louis, succeeds C. Bayley as United manager at Cleveland.

On receiving a telegram of felicitation from President Berst of United Picture Theatres of America on the success of the initial showing of “The Light of Western Stars” Dustin Farnum out in Los Angeles is reported to have expressed his gratification at the news and to have remarked, “It is a great picture, and I want to add that the next one “A Man in the Open” is going to be even a more exceptional feature. I feel very enthusiastic over it.”

Of “A Man in the Open” President Berst says, “This is Roger Foscoke’s most famous story and gives Dustin Farnum great opportunity for his virile talent.”
Zukor Gets Praise in England

U. S. Consul General Pays Tribute to American Pictures—President of Famous Players Swells Fund for Disabled Soldiers

THE publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week called attention to a high compliment recently paid Adolph Zukor in England.

The statement announces that at a luncheon on October 3, held by members of the motion picture industry of England in London, Robert P. Skinner, Consul General for the United States, paid remarkable tribute to Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On this occasion Mr. Skinner turned over to the Chairman Mr. Zukor's check for 1,000 pounds for His Majesty King George's Fund for the Disabled, which brought forth the greatest demonstration ever given an American citizen, according to dated reports.

In his speech, Mr. Skinner expressed his pleasure at the fact that the Motion Picture Industry in America has been recognized as a national asset and hoped the time was near when the British motion picture industry would also be recognized in a similar manner. Through C. A. Clegg of the Famous Players-Film Company, Ltd., London, Mr. Zukor's check was handed to Mr. Skinner, who in his address, said:

"I am indeed a great pleasure for me to meet you, gentlemen of the British Moving Picture Industry, because I feel that your wonderful business being so closely entwined with that of our country, I am less of a stranger to you than would be the majority of any other British business body. And believe me, it is today the devout desire of every American to discover something by which he can get into closer fraternal touch with his older cousin, the Britisher.

"To my mind the one beautiful thing the war has brought about is this family reunion—no a mere trip or a visit to the old folks at home, but a mission of practical assistance founded upon a family sense of justice and a blood-born desire to stand by our own kith and kin—the Britisher.

"My business here is really a happy illustration of this idea, for Mr. C. A. Clegg, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has asked me to hand your Chairman, on behalf of my distinguished countryman, Mr. Adolph Zukor, a cheque for 1,000 pounds for His Majesty King George's Fund for the Disabled.

"Mr. Zukor, as many of you know, is Chairman of the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the financial department of the American Government. He has thrown the vast organization known as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation open to the needs of the Allied cause. He is spending all his days in the development and distribution of propaganda pictures. His aggregation of stars, the most talented and widely known in the business, have time and again been taken from their normal work and sent on national tours at his expense, in the interests of Liberty Bond sales, which I am glad to state have shown prodigious results.

"In fact no American citizen has worked harder or longer in the United States than Mr. Zukor, and it is extremely pleasant to record that his efforts have obtained the widest appreciation from every quarter of the globe.

"I am afraid the pleasures and drive of the war has caused the majority to lose sight of the immense contribution of service made by the British motion picture industry, but rest assured that when the roar of battle has died out and the world is again in a reflective mood, the gigantic efforts of the British industry will be taken full account of, and I feel safe in saying that however often the call may be made, your splendid record of the past will always be a guide to your future achievements.

"It is with no little pleasure that I tell you that the Motion Picture Industry in America has been recognized as a national asset, and I hope the time is near when the British Motion Picture Industry is also recognized here."

Educational Cites Big Increase in Bookings

The Educational Films Corporation is announced as enjoying a remarkable increase of Greater New York bookings as the result of the unusual conditions in the industry. Not only have many new houses taken up the Educational films, but the old accounts have doubled or quadrupled their service, frequently arranging to play the Educational's seven days a week, Educational declares.

The new interest thereby created among the exhibitors and the public, it is believed, will outlast the temporary condition of film scarcity. Henry Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the corporation, said:

"Wherever Educational has been once introduced, it is hardly ever cancelled—the advantages of balancing the program with instructive and amusing short features are so obvious. I anticipate in consequence a general permanent increase in our New York business, while reports from the fields outside New York City are all optimistic that the Educational picture exhibition throughout the country will bring with it a bigger demand for the instructive pictures."

"America's Answer" Sunday

The City Council of Evanston, Ill., has refused to permit the opening of motion picture theaters on Sundays, but broke the rule for "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War picture, which was shown Sunday, October 13, as a stimulant for the local Liberty Loan drive. It proved very effective, according to reports.

Vitagraph Officials Are Very Optimistic

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the Vitagraph Distribution Organization, and E. A. Ziegler, eastern division manager, have just completed a swing around the eastern circuit, and Mr. Goff is of the opinion that exhibitors are destined to have one of their most prosperous seasons as soon as the theatres are reopened.

"We visited Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington and Philadelphia," said Mr. Goff, "and while the theatres were closed in most of the cities, the exhibitors looked at the situation philosophically. They apparently realized that the closing order was a vital necessity in the interest of public welfare, and they are using their time to plan for the future.

"All of the exhibitors seemed to feel that just as soon as the ban on theatres is lifted that business will be greater than it has ever been before. We found Vitagraph's business better than at any time in the history of our distributing organization."

"Bridge of Ships" Meets Big Demand

One of the announced surprises in the distribution of "Bridge of Ships," by the General Film Company, has been the demand for the picture in the inland Western States. When the Division of Films, of the Committee of Public Information, issued this two-reel picture of the ever-growing activities in American shipyards and the rapid bridging of the Atlantic with steel and wooden ships, it was supposed that the coast cities would be interested to a greater degree than the inland towns. It has been found, however, that while the Atlantic and Pacific Coast cities have been strong for the picture, the interest in and around Denver, in the plains cities and the mountain towns has been remarkable.

The prints at the Denver Exchange of the General Film Company, it is announced, have been booked as scheduled and engagements in Denver, but they have also been booked solidly ever since, and for some time to come. In fact, that district could utilize more film.

Vitagraph Gives Releases for November 11

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of November 11 has been scheduled as follows:

Big V Special Comedy—Two Parts—"Frauds and Frenzies," featuring Lawrence Semon. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.
About New Pictures

"Our Colored Fighters," produced by the Division of Films, will be handled by Downing Film Company, a concern composed of colored people, and located in the Astor theatre building, New York City. It is in two reels and will be exploited particularly in the sections inhabited by colored people.

Beulah Marie Dix wrote "Women's Weapons," especially for Ethel Clayton. This offering is directed by Robert G. Vignola, assisted by Lou Howland. James Neill, the character actor, has a fine part.

"The Danger Zone" is the first William Fox Excel picture starring Madaline Traverse. Marshal Bruce Bassington wrote the story; Denison Clift and Adrian Johnson, the scenario, and Frank Beal the direction.

Priscilla Dean is featured in the latest Universal special attraction, entitled "She Hired a Husband." It is described as possessing excellent outdoor scenes.

Goldwyn patriotic spectacle, "For the Freedom of the World," is reported as making a big hit throughout Great Britain. The principal lead in the production is E. K. Lincoln.

In "Her Country First," the Paramount picture in which Vivian Martin is starred John Ford, who has recently played in the title role of a young maiden ad- dited to the flowing bowl in "Jane Goes A-Longing."

Mme. Alla Nazimova's director, Albert Capel lan, has arrived at the studios in Hollywood and will immediately prepare to direct the Russian actress in the first Nazimova production that she will make on the Pacific Coast.

Lady Tsan Mei, the only Chinese star of the cinema, makes her debut as a screen star in "M. Lowry's" "For the Freedom of the East," a Boulevard Film Company production distributed by Goldwyn.

Billy Human creates the role of the weak brother in "The Forfeit," the Frank Powell production that will be the first of a series distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

May Allison drives an automobile through the side of a bungalow in "Thirty Days," her newest picture, which is in the final stages of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

The sum of $178.37 was realized through the sale of War Saving and Thrift Stamps at the New York players' lucky corporation, held during the recent Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden.

Priscilla Dean, pretty star of the Universal Film Company, has just received a letter from the Army, recognizing her as a non-combatant and authorizing her to wear an American "ace," announcing he is in a Paris hospital suffering with broken ear drums.

Henry Warwick, who played in "The Call- laux Case," has been engaged by Charles Co burn to play the colonel in the New York production of Capt. Bruce Bairnfather's London success, "The Better Ole."

Claire Whitney will play the role of Molly Trist in Metro's forthcoming picturization of the patriotic drama, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," directed by Director Herbert Blache.

Dr. H. V. Barclay of 644 Madison avenue, New York, has recognized his son, now dead in the jewel production, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

Despite the public tendency in New York to avoid getting into crowds during the influenza epidemic, the Strand theatre played to exceptional business with its week's run of "The Romance of Tarzan."

Seventy-six aeroplanes in gigantic review over Long Island terms one of the most spectacular scenes in the Warner production, "'18 to 45," directed by R. A. Walsh.

It was necessary to send a representative aboard to secure the facts and set the situations shown in "The Kaiser's Finish," the eighteen-photograph picture directed by L. W. Warner, has produced for the state rights market.

Julia Calhoun will play the part of Fraulein Schroeder in Metro's forthcoming picturization of "The Man Who Stayed at Home."

Fox Revises Schedule of Forthcoming Releases

Compelled to revise all releasing schedules because of the halt in producing, Fox Film Corporation announces that beginning Sunday, Nov. 10, the Big Timely Pictures' release will be "18 to 45."

Fox Extravaganza's schedule shows that "Fan Fan" will be released Nov. 17; "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," Nov. 24. "Mongrels" is the Fox-Lehrman comedy listed for Nov. 10, and the Mutt and Jeff Cartoons start again Nov. 10 with "The Dough Boy.""}

Town and Country Films in New Offices

Town and Country Films, Inc., producers of the Paramount-Flagg comedies, have moved into their new offices at 25 West 45th street, New York City, where they will conduct all the business connected with the production of the pictures.

In addition to their business offices they have provided adequate cutting and assem bling rooms, projection room, etc.

MacDowell Joins Hart

Melbourne MacDowell, the character actor, is in the cast of "Branding Broadway," the forthcoming William S. Hart Artcraft picture which follows "The Border Wireless."

Extra Week for Chaplin at Strand Theatre

For what is stated to be the first time in the history of the Strand theatre in New York City, a film has been held over for an extra week. The honor fell to Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms."

This in face of the fact that the First National had booked the same picture in a great many of the surrounding houses during the second week's run. Mr. Howard Edel, manager of the Strand, announced that "both press and public demand" that "Shoulder Arms" be continued another full week.

The ruling by the New York health authorities prohibiting standees in theaters cost the Strand, on Monday nights, receipts estimated at $1,400.

At the end of the second evening performance at 9:30 o'clock, the house was re filled and the ushers were compelled by representatives of the Board of Health to close the doors to a lobby still jammed to the street curb and for a block in either direction, with people demanding admittance to standing room.

Anna Case's First Film Title Is Changed

The name of Anna Case's first picture, which has been advertised as "The Golden Chance," is to be changed, due to the fact that another production was recently released under a similar title.

While many tentative titles are being con sidered, first choice seems to be in favor of "The Hidden Truth," and this is most likely the name under which it will be given to the public.

Harris Gordon Re-engaged By Screencraft

Harris Gordon, who portrayed the leading juvenile role in Screencraft's initial offering, "The Prodigious Wife," has been re-engaged by that organization for their second production.

The story is as yet unnamed, but will be produced under the direction of Frank Reicher at the New Rochelle studio. Mr. Gordon will play opposite Mollie King.
Sweet Film Declared “Knockout”

Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan Pronounce “The Unpardoned Sin,” Starring Blanche Sweet, the Biggest Production of the Year

HARRY GARSON and Marshall Neilan make no bones in declaring “The Unpardoned Sin” the outstanding story of the Germans in Belgium, in which Blanche Sweet is starred, and which vehicle serves to bring this popular actress back to the screen after more than a year’s absence as the biggest and most important production of the year.

Mr. Garson wires: “‘The Unpardoned Sin’ is the most wonderful picture I have ever seen. It is a great bag special with a tremendous kick, a production that only comes once in a lifetime. Miss Sweet looks better than ever, and her double portrayal of the two sisters, Dimmy Parcot and Alice Parcot, will be an absolute knockout. There is no question but what the picture will have a long and successful run in New York.”

And this from Marshall Neilan, who directed the picture in person: “‘The Unpardoned Sin’ is by far the biggest and best production I have ever done. There is punch and situations one after the other from beginning to end such as you have never seen in any other picture. ‘The Unpardoned Sin’ will, I am sure, create a furor.”

Mr. Neilan, well known as one of the top-notch directors in the business, has certainly let down the bars of his usual conservatism, and it is predicted that he has pulled a surprise of some sort.

Negotiations are now under way with several first class legitimate houses to house “The Unpardoned Sin” for a long run, beginning about December 1st. Just what theatre will be selected is not known, but will be decided upon in a few days.

The picture is in eight reels. A tremendous advertising campaign, national in scope, is promised for this production.

Blanche Sweet plays two parts, Dimmy Parcot and sister. The sister writes from Belgium that she has become the victim of German “kultur,” and is so heartbroken that she begs her sister not to look for her. Dimmy’s trip from Los Angeles to Belgium is fraught with many adventures and great peril.

Wallace Beery portrays the part of Col. Klem, the German officer who has so ruthlessly mistreated the sister, and Dimmy manages to meet him and foil him later. The entire eight reels are declared to be full of power and action, with many thrills. It has the “happy ending.”

Mr. Garson will show the production to the Government officials at Washington on his way from Los Angeles.

Pathe Sees Big Opportunity in Shut-Down

The temporary shut down of production activities resolved upon by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has affected every producer and distributor of note.

This is an opportunity which is being taken advantage of by the firm of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Pathe has a range of features which have played since release in the smaller cities but which have been held out of the metropolitan centers awaiting a favorable opportunity to secure a worthy first house for initial presentation.

Two More Companies to Produce at Brunton’s

Parke Finishes Picture for Educational

Educational’s “Romance of Coal” is completed by William Parke, who has been directing this special production since July 15. His labors have included four weeks in the West Virginia mining fields, six weeks in studio and a month devoted to the script, technical details, editing, titling and assembling.

During the period referred to his efforts have been seconded by a zealous and efficient company, a faithful technical staff and the untinted co-operation of the Educational’s executives. Due credit should be given in this connection to Miss Caroline Gentry, the originator of the idea, and to E. Lloyd Sheldon, the playwright, who fashioned the story. Tom Cushing, Mr. Parke’s continuity writer, who put the finishing touches on the scenario, is now in France engaged in the patriotic work of soldier entertainment.

While the picture was privately viewed on October 28 it was declared that the characteristic Parke qualities were fully in evidence. It was recalled that many of these qualities were seen in his former Pathe production of “The Yellow Ticket.” “The Romance of Coal” is said to contain spectacular opportunities reminiscent of “Peer Gynt” and other spectacles that the director put on for Richard Mansfield and E. H. Sothern in the old “legitimate” days. Especially notable is the way he handles actors.

It is declared that the brain that directed the Castle Square stock” in Boston and the Colonial in Pittsfield loses nothing of its cunning in the more flexible medium of the screen.

Following the completion of the director’s labors “The Romance of Coal” will be exhibited for the approval of the Federal Fuel Administrator and the heads of the fuel industry throughout the country. It will subsequently be seen at a trade showing, and will then be released at one of the Broadway theatres prior to its general distribution to the motion picture houses.

Four Mid-West States Sold for “Mickey”

J. W. Burke, manager of the Mid-West Greater Features Company, with headquarters in Denver, Colo., announces that his company has purchased from Triangle Film Corporation the rights for “Mickey” for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada, and is preparing to put it out on an elaborate scale.

Latest Universal “Clock” Series at Broadway

“Around the Clock With the Marines” is the latest of the “Clock” series of two-reelers to be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will have its premiere showing in the Broadway theatre on November 4, where it will run for a week.

This feature was produced under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Stevens—It's QUALITY.
Quality in the MOTIOGRAPH goes all the way through.
You never hear of a MOTIOGRAPH Gear wearing out.
The Sliding Disc has proven beyond a doubt that it can't wear out.
Other parts of the MOTIOGRAPH are made of the same material.
Can a user ask for better service?
The 600 actual, bona fide installations in the United States Army Cantonments are proof of its superiority.
Uncle Sam's thoroughness of doing things can't be overlooked.

We are returning sliding disc

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

A product that is considered standard by the experts in any industry must meet the requirements of the service for which it is intended. White A. C. Special carbons were designed to fill the need of an efficient light source for alternating current projection. They have been tested by the experts in the motion picture industry, who are satisfied that they fill the bill in every particular.

White A. C. Special Carbons are standard. They give a pure white light of high intensity, noiseless and flickerless operation, and a rugged light source not affected by any slight changes in voltage. No new current consuming regulating devices required. Simply insert a trim of White A. C. Specials.

For Direct Current Projection
THE COLOMBIA-SILVERTIP COMBINATION GIVES A STRONG, PENETRATING LIGHT AND ABSOLUTELY STEADY SCREEN ILLUMINATION.

Unique Feature of Liberty Loan Drive

For the benefit of theatre men and exhibitors as well as for all others interested in raising the Fourth Liberty Loan, there is a feature which was used in New York City and Brooklyn which was worthy of comment.

The committee in charge of the work conceived the idea of erecting in New York City five permanent projection booths on the five principal transient corners in the city, where pictures were shown each night during the drive to attract crowds and arouse enthusiasm which would lead to the purchase of bonds.

Following each reel of film shown a speaker took his place on the platform below the screen, actually clinching the sales. In addition, in the same territory, eight motor trucks were used equipped with projectors and screens stretching between uprights so placed that the largest possible crowds could see the pictures and hear the speakers. These movable truck equipments, which are shown in the accompanying photographs, traveled all over New York City and Brooklyn each night.

This method of using motion pictures created no end of comment and proved conclusively to the Liberty Loan Committee the value of motion pictures in connection with street corner talks for the promotion of the Loan.

The films used in connection with these installations were composed of one subject produced by the leading film actors and actresses occupying about 300 feet and 600 feet of war film titled so as to show "Where money goes which is subscribed to Liberty Bonds."

* * *

The committee in charge is indebted to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Mutual Film Company for the whole-hearted cooperation which they extended in supplying positive film from which to make up the reels. Assembling of pictures was in charge of Mr. E. M. Roskam, assisted by Mr. Jack Cohn. Both the permanent and movable projection equipment was taken care of by the Independent Company.

Ohm's Law and A. C. Circuits

By A. A. Kluge

[Reprinted from the Electrical Experimenter, October, 1918.]

A SUBJECT that is usually rather hazy in the mind of the practical electrical man who has never had the opportunity of engineering training is the application of Ohm's law to alternating current circuits. This may be traced to a total lack of literature of a concise nature on the matter, for in most text-books it is necessary to digest several chapters of non-essentials before the point is reached.

In alternating current practice we encounter three different kinds of paths or conductors of the current, and it is the method of computing their effective resistances in various combinations that this article has to deal with. The first kind is the simple straight wire, whose resistance, for low frequencies, at least, depends wholly upon its length, cross-section and material.

The second and third cases of paths are the condenser and the inductance coil, designated as capacity and inductance, respectively. Seldom if ever do we find these cases in a circuit alone, but usually in combination with one or both of the other two. For example, an inductance coil always has resistance associated with it, since it is impossible to obtain a perfect conductor.

We can then make a table for the equivalent ohmic resistance of each of these types, from the data we find in text-books, as follows:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Type</th>
<th>Equivalent Ohmic Resistance</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Simple</td>
<td>R (Resistance of Conductor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capacity</td>
<td>CP (C = Capacity in Farads)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inductance</td>
<td>LP (L = Inductance in Henrys)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

In the above P represents the reactance factor of the current applied, being \( P = 2 \pi n \) (where \( n \) = frequency in cycles).

The difference in the value of these resistances is due to the differing effect which they have upon the voltage and current of our power supply. A condenser in the circuit causes the current to lag behind the voltage, while an inductive resistance causes the current to lag behind the voltage, the maximum possible limit in either case being 90 degrees, which represents a zero power factor, or a wattless current. This is graphically shown by Fig. 1.

Applying Ohm's law to the case of a simple non-inductive resistance, we find that the current is given by the expression:

I = \frac{E}{R}

with which the reader is already familiar. This is represented in Case 1, see diagram.

Extending our formula to the case of a pure capacity, we have

(I) \text{ (Effective)} \quad I = \frac{E}{1/CP} = ECP

or the current which will flow in the circuit is the product of the voltage applied (voltage as measured by an A. C. voltmeter which gives the "effective value"), times the capacity (farads), and the reactance factor \( P \). Case 2 shows this.

And for the case of a pure inductance, if such a thing were possible, we would then have

I = \frac{E}{LP}

as shown by Case 3.

In addition to these simpler ones, Cases 4 to 11 illustrate various combinations of them, and by use of the formula attached the student is enabled to calculate the current which will flow in any possible circuit. It should be borne in mind, however, that while these formulae will give the actual value of the current flowing in the circuit, we cannot then multiply this amperage by the impressed E. M. F. and obtain the power consumption of the circuit in watts. The latter is wholly dependent upon the power factor, i. e., the per cent lag or lead of the current, and it will be necessary to multiply the product by this factor to obtain the true wattage consumption of our circuit.

The power factor of an A. C. circuit is found by dividing the true watts as read off from a compensated indicating watt-meter by the apparent watts, which latter term is the voltage resultant from multiplying the effective or indicated volts by the effective or indicated (or calculated) amperes. Some A. C. installations are fitted with a direct reading power factor meter.

Literature for Projectors

Mr. D. S. Vermilion, Los Angeles, Cal., inquires: "Will you please inform me if the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have an official organ where questions on projection are discussed, and if it is possible to obtain the same? I have Hawkins' 'Electrical Guides' and Gages' 'Optical Projection.' What other works would you suggest securing?"

In reply: As the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has, up to the present, only held on the average two meetings per year, the publication of a journal has not yet been attempted, but the papers read at the meetings on technical subjects are also published in abundance, under the title "Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers." Discussions on the various papers are not printed, however, and the Transactions of the Society, as an organ for securing a medium for the presentation of correspondence from the industry at large, as is generally the case with a journal or frequently appearing publication.

Nevertheless, the Society aims to make available to the industry, through the medium of its Transactions, the most interesting, useful and accurate articles which it can secure or cause to be prepared, and copies of each issue of the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers may be purchased by any one interested therein at 25 cents a copy. Six issues of the Transactions have appeared to date, all of which are still in print, and may be secured by addressing the Society, 712 11th street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

With regard to further important and interesting works worthy of acquisition by real students of projection, such as the correspondent appears to be, we recommend:

The first of these volumes, Professor Thompson's work on Electricity and Magnetism, is a wonderfully complete, well written and finely illustrated text which is particularly satisfactory for general reading than the Hawkins "Guides." The latter are of recognized utility in the solution of electrical questions, but their "question and answer" form spoils their continuity as reading material. While the volume by Thompson is easily comprehensible by any electrical student, it is more than the "elementary" treatise which its title would imply. Necessary formulae are interpolated for the mathematical treatment of all electrical phenomena and problems, and the work can easily rank as a useful physical treatment of its subject.

In Mrs. Ayrton's book, "The Electrical Arc," the student will find a very entertaining technical reading which could be conceived of. Important data is clearly supplied in tables and graphs, and every optical projectionist will surely study the electric arc with increased interest after seeing that arc phenomena and characteristics can supply such an extensive amount of information as is contained in the Ayrton work.

Projectionists have still to be supplied with a suitable treatment of the optical phases of motion picture projection, as the optics of the cine projector in its customary and present form have not been dealt with in a specialized manner in any work on optics published to date. This is excusable on the part of the writers of modern works on optical theory, because the action of a projector or optical system is so readily comprehensible to them as to apparently require no particularized treatment. For the average projectionist or student, however, it is necessary to translate the terms and conceptions of advanced theory into the language of everyday practice, and the attempts to do this in all existing works on motion picture projection are either woefully incomplete or painfully and absurdly inaccurate.

However, projectionists will not be deterred much longer from acquiring a thorough and accurate knowledge of projector optics, because a detailed paper on the condenser system of the motion picture projector will be read by Dr. H. Kellner, of the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company, at the forthcoming meeting of the S. M. P. E. This will be reprinted in the News as soon as feasible after the forthcoming meeting, and will be followed by further data of an exhaustive nature which we have calculated and compiled for presentation to the readers in due course.

Heat of the Spot

Mr. P. Barber, Edmonton, Alberta, Can., makes the following inquiry: "Can you tell me what percentage of heat radiated by an arc, or other source of light used in projection work, is actually focussed on the aperture plate?"

The Mazda C lamp for motion picture work using about 500 watts is rated at a temperature of 2100 degrees C—that is the rated temperature of the filament—is there much of this heat lost in passing through the condenser system?

"Would like an early reply as I wish to settle an argument."

In reply: As the question of the heat at the spot expressed as a percentage of the total light source in a projector, does not appear to have much practical significance we have never attempted to measure or to calculate it, and, so far as we are aware, no one else has published any information on the subject.

It is, however, very generally known that the temperature of the arc is about 5000°, which is exactly the highest temperature known or measured, and it will be readily apparent to any projectionist or experimenter that the temperature at the spot on the cooling-plate of a motion picture projector is only a very small fraction indeed of the temperature of the boiling arc crater, and that similar considerations likewise apply to the radiating filament of an incandescent lamp used as a source of light source.

The problem of removing the heat from the condenser beam without extensively reducing its brightness is worth of consideration, but the exact degree of heat at the spot is a question of minor importance, because as long as the heat exists there its effects upon the material to be projected can be easily studied.

Odd Frame-Lines

Mr. Robert F. Smith, Hespers, Iowa, writes as follows: "Will you please tell me through your Projection Department of a correct method of splicing films with different frame lines? I have tried again and again, but can’t seem to make an efficient patch. In this respect the ‘‘News-Oz-Ograph Review’’ is particularity aggravating. In one of the earlier issues practically every splice was a misframe. I suppose this is due to the films of different nations being made different concerning frames."

"I have my bit to say concerning the condition of films. I am enclosing a sample of film with the holes ripped off of one side. This is a small piece when compared to some that I regularly receive. Occasionally I get pieces a foot or so in length without any perforations on either side. This has happened so repeatedly that I wonder if the films are inspected at all. Concerning punch holes in the film, in this district they are becoming fewer, but rather shoddy. A few nights ago one film had about 25 punch holes in two feet of film, of five different shapes. I think some operator should be satisfied in letting the producers put their trade mark on the film, and leave his individual one off."

In reply: The numerous misframes between successive scenes which the correspondent has noted when projecting war pictures, are, I am informed, in news films, are due to the various scenes having been taken on different cameras which had the frame line, or dividing line between successive pictures, arranged differently. Misframes of this character are more or less unavoidable in pictures of this class, the scenes in which have been taken in widely different localities and with a great variety of cameras.

Unfortunately, there is no method of joining scenes with noticeably different frame lines so that one will follow the other exactly in frame when projected, and while the correspondent is to be commended upon having tried to "square the circle," we nevertheless recommend him to give it up as a useless piece of

Allison and Hadaway Secure Important Patent on Portable Photographic Arc Lamp

No item of mechanical apparatus has proved more important in facilitating the production of motion pictures than the portable photographic arc lamp, and it is gratifying to note that Messrs. Allison and Hadaway of 42 West Thirty-ninth street, New York City, are the assignees of a recently granted United States patent covering important features of the successful, portable photographic arc lamp, which they were the first to introduce, in 1914, under the name of the "Panchroma."

Briefly stated, portability, in combination with high illuminating power, is secured in the modern portable photographic arc lamp by burning two or more arcs, or pairs of carbons, in series with one another and in series with one electro-magnet or solenoid, for feeding the carbons, the arcs and the solenoids being of course in series also with the current supply circuit. The feeding of the two or more arcs by one solenoid permits a light and simple construction of the entire lamp mechanism, as will readily be inferred, so it may prove of interest to describe the mechanism of the Panchroma twin-arc lamp in some detail.

The mechanical arrangements of the Panchroma lamp mechanism are shown in detail in the appended illustration, which forms part of Messrs. Allison and Hadaway's recent patent (U. S. Patent No. 1,281,745), and the special features and mode of operation of the lamp are described as follows in the patent specification.

The chief object of the invention is to provide a portable lamp which has provision for a plurality of arcs, but which is simple and durable in construction, so that it may be used by inexperienced persons and subjected to hard usage without danger of being put out of order.

In its commercial form the Panchroma lamp (see diagram) comprises two or more carbons carried by a movable plunger, or piston, and two or more carbons which are carried by stationary holders, the carbons carried by the piston being in series with the stationary carbons. A suitable electro-magnet, or solenoid, in series with the carbons, shifts the plunger (against gravity), thus providing for the separation of the carbons when the current is turned on, which of course is necessary to create the arcs between the respective sets of carbons. It is seen from the diagram that this solenoid surrounds the movable piston or plunger. The use of but one automatic feeding mechanism to regulate two or more arcs in series is considered to be the most important feature of the invention, as it makes the apparatus simpler and more compact than is ordinarily possible in multi-arc lamps.

Considering more in detail the mechanism of the Panchroma lamp, as shown in the accompanying diagram, the central rod, or plunger, is movable vertically through a central aperture in the insulating head of a hollow vertical cylinder, the lower portion of which serves as a dash-pot for a piston head fixed to the bottom of the central rod, or plunger. At opposite sides of the piston head, and fixed thereon, are two upright standards passing through openings in a plate attached to the bottom of the solenoid, which latter surrounds the plunger and is itself attached to a support carried by the inner ends of the terminals from which electric current is received. This support is of course insulated from the terminals so as not to form a short-circuit across them, and the upright standards, mentioned above, are intended to guide the central rod and prevent it from making any rotary movements. The lower part of the central rod, or piston, and the piston head itself, are made of magnetic material, so that when the solenoid is energized the plunger rod will be drawn up, but the upper end of the central rod is made of non-magnetic material. For example, the piston head and the lower part of the plunger rod may be made of iron, while the upper part of the rod may be of aluminum.

On the insulating head at the top of the cylinder enclosing the solenoid and the plunger are mounted two laterally extending brackets, having upwardly arranged open spring socket-pieces or holders for the lower carbons. These sockets, or carbon holders, are threaded in the brackets, as the diagram shows, so as to permit independent vertical adjustment of the carbons carried thereby. At the upper end of the central rod, or plunger, and insulated thereon, is a transverse bracket lying in the same plane as the lower carbon-holder brackets and provided at its ends with vertically disposed openings to receive the upper carbons, the carbons being vertically adjustable by simply sliding them up and down in these openings, or holders, and securing them by the set screws provided for that purpose.

As is clearly shown by the drawing, the two arcs burn in series, and to bring this about the lower one of the terminals connecting with the current supply is attached to one end of the solenoid winding, and the other end of the latter is attached to the left-hand carbon-holder bracket, while the upper current supply terminal is connected directly by a wire to the right-hand carbon-holder bracket. The course of the current through the lamp being shown, its manner of operation will now be easily understood.

The two pairs of carbons being in place and in contact with each other, the two terminals are connected with the source of current, whereupon current will flow through the carbons and the solenoid, which are all in series, and thence back to the source of supply. Being thus energized, the solenoid raises the central rod, or plunger, thereby separating the two pairs of carbons and drawing arcs between each upper carbon and the co-operating lower carbon. As the carbons are consumed the arcs lengthen, thereby cutting down the current through the solenoid and weakening its field. When the field of the solenoid becomes too weak to support its load (the carbons and other parts lifted with the plunger) the plunger descends until the increased current due to the shortening of the arcs gives the solenoid field sufficient strength to prevent further descent. In this way the movable carbons (in the present case the upper carbons) are automatically fed downward as they are consumed, and arcs of substantially constant length are maintained.

To compensate for any inequality in the rate of burning of the two arcs it was originally proposed to elevate the lower carbon of the most rapidly burning arc by means of the thumb screws provided under the lower carbon-holders, as it is necessary to keep the lamp circuit intact in order that the lamp may be put into operation by simply switching on the current. This method of compensating for unequal burning of the two arcs was long ago replaced, on the Panchroma twin arc, by an entirely automatic method of extreme simplicity. Although not shown in the drawing this method of compensating the inequality of burning of the two arcs consists in pivoting the bracket carrying the upper carbon-holders at its center, and also pivoting each of the upper carbon holders at its point of junction with the bracket. This simple mechanical arrangement entirely satisfies the requirements of the case, and keeps the lamp circuit intact at all times.

Since the introduction, in 1914, of the Panchroma portable twin arc lamp, several other similar lamps embodying the principle of two arcs in series with one another and in series with one solenoid for feeding both have appeared upon the market. Messrs. Allison and Hadaway must, however, be given the credit of first developing a practical portable photographic arc lamp embodying the principle described above, as is recognized officially by the granting of their patent.

The makers of the Panchroma twin arc have made numerous judicious improvements over the basic form shown in the annexed diagram, and are now marketing their latest model, known as the "New Panchroma," which has the following important features. There are no projecting parts on the Panchroma to break off, catch in the clothing of the operator or tangle up the wires, and there are no detachable parts to be unscrewed, or mislaid, or forgotten. Two doors, which act as reflectors, close over the front of the lamp when it is not in use, thus protecting the mechanism and rendering it safe in transportation. The New Panchroma still remains the leader in portability, weighing only 18½ pounds and has the dependability which has always been associated with earlier Panchroma models.

New Catalog of X-Ray Direct Lighting

THE National X-Ray Reflector Company, 235 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, has recently published a new Catalog, No. 21, describing the direct lighting reflectors put out by that company. This catalog covers all the X-Ray reflectors for industrial, flood, show window and show case lighting. The flood lighting section features three new projectors and several new X-Ray reflectors for the projectors. This gives the X-Ray projectors an even wider range of adaptability than they had before.

The X-Ray silver mirrored reflectors are so universally known and used that it is hardly necessary to go into much detail about them here. It, however, will probably be of interest to the trade to know that with the publication of Catalog No. 21 the National X-Ray Reflector Company adopted the Goodwin Plan and has made allowance for recognition of the electrical contractor-dealer in its scale of discounts. To co-operate with the Government’s regulations on paper conservation, there has been no general mailing of this catalog. It is being sent only upon request.

REPEATEDLY the question is asked, "What should a musical interpretation of the picture be?" and the answer logically is, "Music for the picture should be an interpretation and development of the subject matter, just as the symphony is a musical development of the original theme or motif.

What is a theme or motif? A musical theme in motion pictures is more or less based on the same principle as all famous composers introduced in opera. Massenet, Verdi, Puccini and others in their music scores always assign to a certain music theme or motif with the appearance of the leading characters upon the stage. This effective musical device has great possibilities in the picture drama and is valuable in giving unity to music and dramatic action. The picture musician has wide freedom in choice of his "finished" material.

Most important to remember, however, is that the first requisite is a genuinely melodious theme, one which will bear repetition without becoming monotonous to the audience or performer in general.

A theme such as that described may be varied in tempo and played either ff. or pp. as the varying of the stage action may demand. It will make the role with which it is identified "stand out." The use of the "leading" theme is naturally best adaptable for the larger and more elaborate picture productions in which the appearance and stage action of principals is broken up to some degree by minor incidents. At all events the use of the theme is an idea on which the intelligent motion picture musician can ring his own variations.

Frankly, this cannot be carried out in every picture for the sole and only reason that few compositions can be manipulated in such a way as described in the above. By this I mean some beautiful andante movements which are suitable for love themes will absolutely lose their musical value if the tempo is changed or the character of the composition the least bit mutilated.

However, such an exceptional opportunity for the development of this idea has just arisen that the editor of these columns feels it should be brought to the attention of all readers.

The general idea of depicting a theme to the action of the screen is to select one composition and use it in the most appropriate spots, but in many pictures when the leading character is depicted in extremes of emotion, the ordinary selected motif is really inappropriate, because its orchestration is presented only in one definite form.

During my ten years of experience in playing for the picture, I must say in very few instances have I been able to adapt a music theme in an appropriate manner to the action of the screen. In every case I have found that a composition published for a certain time cannot be phrased or played in every possible way as demanded through the varied stages of emotions depicted by the leading character throughout the picture.

In a case of the picture mentioned below, entitled, "The One Woman," released by Select Pictures Corporation, I have found it impossible to find a composition which could depict all the emotions displayed by the leading character (Mr. Frank Gordon). In some scenes, Mr. Gordon is calm, in others, he is mentally excited and in still others, he reaches a climax of physical violence, where a dramatic agitato is needed.

In a case of this kind, to let his calm action predominate, and the movement would be appropriate for a theme which cannot be brought up to an agitato. In a case where the climax should predominate, an agitato is the most suitable theme, but it can hardly be played as a melodious pp. without spoiling the entire effect of the musical number.

After visiting several publishers I have finally found an appropriate publication published by Belwin, Inc., of 701 Seventh ave.

Review of Latest Compositions

1. Ballroom Chatter, valce, intermezzo, by A. Schmidt, an exceptionally fine composition, published by G. Schirmer. (3 East 45th street, New York City.)

5. "Adoration," by Felix Borowski; arrangement by Chas. J. Roberts; an orchestra arrangement of this world-famous violin solo; a number which will immediately appeal to your audience. (Carl Fischer edition.)

7. "In the Jungle," intermezzo, by Chas. Arthur. This is a real trombone sneeze; a real novelty number with very attractive melody. (Carl Fischer edition.)

8. "Toreador Humesques," fox-trot, by M. L. Lake. A novel fox-trot, built on the well-known Toreador song (Carmen), with the original melody intact but cleverly worked against a complicated set of rag and countermelodies. The big dance hit of the year! (Carl Fischer edition.)

9. "Supplication," by McKee. An unusually interesting orchestra number in a splendidly effective arrangement—it opens with a melodious 4/4 "Andante Cantabile Introduction"—followed by a cello movement of exceptional musical treatment and ends as a violin solo orite, which always takes. Most appropriate for dramatic situations. (Published by M. Witmark.)

10. "Melody," by Charles Huerter. A number which will fit in well with any program. A sweet melody, a fine arrangement and a favorite, which always takes. Most appropriate for pathetic and dramatic situations. (Published by the Boston Music Co.)

11. Fifteen Minutes of Regal Splendor. A suite of four numbers Each number expressing a different musical temperament befitting the requirements of a photoplay costume in a regal fashion. All four numbers are melodious while maintaining the majestic in music. (Obtainable from J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th street, New York City.)

14—“When Shadows Fall,” a beautiful and melodious revier, adapted from the concert ballad by Frost and Keithley. (McKinley edition.)

15—Adagio Cantabile,” from “Sonnata Pathetique,” by Beechoven, arranged by Irene Berge. A wonderful orchestra arrangement of this fine work. It will add class to your program. (S. Berg edition.)

16—“A Russian Pansy” (a flower song), by Otto Langel. Once in a decade some composer is really inspired to write a wondrously beautiful melody but only once in years is such a beautiful theme born. “This is the one.” “A Russian Pansy” is a most valuable addition to any musician’s library and most appropriate for picture playing. (G. Schirmer edition.)

Get Your Music Talked About

The biggest and most successful theatres are installing Estey Theatre Pipe Organs. There are two reasons:

(1) People talk about it.
(2) Music is a big factor in theatrical success.

If you have only one musical instrument, that instrument should be—The Estey Theatre Organ.

There is now no doubt about it. Big, successful theatres have proved it. If you want to grow bigger and more successful, you ought to talk to them. Don’t wait until too late.

The Estey Theatre Pipe Organ can be built to fit any theatre, large or small. It can be used for any kind of music.

Before we can give a price, we must know how big your theatre is, where the organ will be put, and how large an organ you require. We are always glad to send an expert to talk with you.

For full information, write to the home office.

Splendid Rialto Opens in Tacoma

SATURDAY, September 7, saw the opening of the newest and handsomest theatre in Tacoma, Wash., the Rialto. Governor Earl Lister, of the State of Oregon, Mayor C. M. Riddell, Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt and the presidents of the Commercial and the Rotary clubs were among the notable guests on the opening evening.

The new house stands at the corner of Ninth and Market streets, in the center of the business section of the city. The exterior is in the Florentine period of the Italian Renaissance. The interior represents dignity and blended colors, but more than actual beauty, the thing that has been sought in this house is real comfort and perfect exhibition of the motion picture. The house seats 1,500, the far greater portion on the lower floor. In the balcony there is a double set of loges, furnished with upholstered wicker rocking chairs and seating from four to ten persons each.

Indirect lighting is used through the theatre and the arrangement of the screen results in complete elimination of the eye strain. The ventilating system is capable of driving through the house 1,800,000 cubic feet of air an hour. A complete vacuum cleaning system has been installed for use after each day's closing. Sanitary drinking fountains are installed on both floors.

One of the distinctive effects of the auditorium decoration is the brilliant treatment in tones of blue of the main cornice frieze in vivid contrast to the subdued color harmony of the wall and ceiling panels, the former treated in blended silk effect. The foyer treatment is carried out in the more subdued tones of the auditorium.

The hangings in the theatre are of blue and gold damask combined with soft shades of old blue silk, making graceful cascades. The trimmings are of blue and gold silk combined with metal gloop.

The floors are covered with a luxurious gray and blue plaid wilton carpet. The upholstering of the railings surrounding the boxes is in blue; the boxes themselves contain comfortable red rocking chairs with cushions to match.

"A dream of daintiness" would be a fitting description of the women's rest room, just off the second floor balcony. No expense has been spared in making it a true place of rest and retirement, with every convenience for the rearrangement of a war-wearied toilette. Draperies of rich brocade in purple-black and gold unite with a floor covering of purple-black wilton carpet to bring out the beauties of the solid mahogany furniture.

In the men's smoking room the draperies are of English sundown in blue, yellow and gray. Blue and yellow wilton carpets match the draperies, while the masculine touch in the furniture is supplied by solid cathedral oak.

The main entrance feature, or rotunda, is in reality the keynote of the entire design both in form and color.

Its circular form lends itself most advantageously to the solution of the difficulties presented by the unusually steep grades of the sidewalk, but at the same time necessitated intricacies of workmanship. The warm tones of the decorative frieze rendered in such masterly abandon in the true Italian renaissance freedom of line and color afford full opportunity for the unlimited expression of the decorative art, and in conjunction with the soft glow of the dome illumination reflected from the shallow dome of the ceiling produce an effect at once unique and magnificent in its gorgeousness of color.

On the Ninth street side both on the main floor and balcony levels such of the space not required for theatre purposes is devoted to store space available in such units as the tenants may require. Owing to the exigency of war and the serious problems of transportation, two big features yet to be provided are the pipe organ, which is a duplicate of the largest organ installed in this country, and the dimmers by which the delicate gradations of the electric illumination is controlled.

H. T. Moore is president of the Moore Amusement Company, owner of the Rialto as well as the Colonial, and active manager of the two theatres.

Advance Reviews

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

“The Woman the Germans Shot”
(Joseph L. Plunkitt-Frank J. Carroll. Six reels. Release plans to be announced later)

To begin with—the story in this picture has been constructed intelligently; and secondly, it has been produced with equal intelligence. Add to those factors the fact that the plot is based on an occurrence that has touched every human heart and you have summarized the strong case in favor of “The Woman the Germans Shot.”

Based on the heroic conduct and martyr’s death of Edith Cavell, the English nurse executed by the Germans in Belgium, this should not fail to be a good drawing card wherever properly handled. The picture is not gruesome, as one might be led to think by the nature of the subject. Even the shooting scene is devoid of repulsiveness, as all unnecessary details have been omitted.

The skilful construction of the story and careful handling of the direction have resulted in a production that is in keeping with the dignity of the subject—never yielding to the temptation to exaggerate and overplay the subject. Anthony Kelly wrote the story and John Adolii directed.

The war will some day be over; the miseries it has brought upon mankind will in time sink into oblivion; the world will eventually adjust itself to the new order of things. But the unjust death of Edith Cavell, the Red Cross nurse, whose only crime was that she aided prisoners, shut up in dirt holes not fit even for animals to live in, will not be forgotten.

One more thing that will impress you deeply and make you feel somewhat proud is the revelation of the humanness of the American representative in Belgium. He and his staff fought desperately and until the last to save the nurse’s life, although their efforts proved futile.—P. S. Harrison.

(Bluebird—Nov. 25. Directed by Colin Campbell)

For a logical blending of story and natural scenery, this picture could not be improved upon. One feels as having been transported in the woods, when looking at it.

Due to intelligent construction of story, which moves along at a good speed, the interest of the spectator is held steady throughout the picture. The element of heart appeal, contained in some of the situations, reaches the emotions, and contributes towards making the attraction entertaining.

The plot is based on the story, “In the Carquinez Woods,” by Bret Harte. It deals with the love between a botanist and a dance hall girl. The girl had escaped from the hands of the sheriff, who had her arrested for stabbing one of her lovers. They marry in the end.

Some of the scenes show a multitude of light-shafts formed by the sun rays shining between the branches of the trees. It is a rare photographic feat, portraying an artistic skill of high degree. This is a sight of great grandeur, which will undoubtedly arouse admiration.

The forest fire is spectacular and realistic.

The picture is clean and should appeal more or less universally.
—P. S. Harrison.

“Under the Greenwood Tree”
(Aircraft Production, with Elsie Ferguson)

If your patrons don’t get repaid for their investment in enjoyment, they will undoubtedly do so in a good sound sleep. It is as slow and uninteresting a picture as has ever been projected on the screen. It belongs to the days when the motion picture was a novelty, and when any moving object on the screen would draw the crowds and satisfy their curiosity.

Barring the first half reel, there is no action in the plot. It appears as if someone has nailed it down, the sub-titles becoming the chief motive power. The latter consist of phrases legible, written in classic style, resembling the poetic, with a touch of romance, uttered by the characters, with an appeal to the moon, waters, nature, etc.

The theme of the story is love, a principle that is considered as one of the basic elements in picture production as well as story writing. But love without the assistance of other elements, such as action of plot, heart interest, suspense, etc., does not make an entertaining picture.

The choosing of the story, for a particular player, is an art which has not been given a proper study, it seems. Many a good star has been hurt by unsuccessful selection of vehicles. This one will certainly not augment the drawing powers of such a capable actress as Miss Ferguson is.

“She Hires a Husband,” with Priscilla Dean
(Bluebird—Dec. 2. Directed by Jack Dillon)

Priscilla Dean has demonstrated in “Brazen Beauty” that she can act. All she now needs is story and director. She is provided with both in this offering, the result being an interesting and entertaining picture.

Rapid action of plot and suspense, due to intelligent construction of story, are the predominating features in this attraction. You can add the element of heart appeal, contained in a few of the situations.

The heroine becomes the object of your compassion, on account of the uncongeniality of her environment. You can’t help sym-

“MIRANDY SMILES,” PARAMOUNT

Vivian Martin Upholds Tradition by Making Another Good One

So far, no picture in which Vivian Martin appeared could conscientiously be called poor. This one is no exception to the rule.

“Mirandy Smiles” will, without any question, please your patrons, as it combines several of the emotion-affecting elements, the most predominating among them being comedy and pathos. It is the kind of a picture that puts people in happy mood and disposes them so as to be willing to tackle the most grim problems of life.

In a plot based on the book, “The Little Scrub Lady,” by Belle Maniates, the heroine is introduced as a girl of poor circumstances, helping her mother and her little brothers by doing scrub work. Her beauty attracts the attention of a fine young man. Love springs between them, eventually becoming engaged.

No jealousies, or intrigues of any description, are introduced to mar the happy tone of the story, which is taken from a page in real life. Several little children and a dog have been employed instead, adding human touches, the kind that never fail to appeal.

The picture is clean and offers wholesome entertainment to all.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Mirandy Judkins, Vivian Martin... Vivian Martin... Teddy Lawrence, a Musician... Douglas MacLea... John... Lewis Willoughby... The Boarder... William Freeman... Mrs. White... Elinor Hackney... Mrs. Gennung... Francie Beech... From Belle K. Maniates “The Littlest Scrub Lady.”

Scenario by Edith M. Kennedy.
Directed by William C. De Mille.
Photography by Frank E. Garrott.

CATCH LINES

Romance took charge of the organ stops and Teddy Lawrence, their master, could only play the one simple line.

Douglas MacLean, hero of “Johanna Eilis,” in which Mary Pickford played, is seen opposite Miss Martin in this charming romance.

Tired of the war stuff? Of the melodramatic spy play? Of the old eternal triangle done in the same old way? If you are, see Vivian Martin and “Mirandy Smiles.”

AD TALK

“Mirandy Smiles” will be the featured attraction of the house on... week and will remain for... days thereafter. This is a Paramount Picture and its star none other than Vivian Martin, the charming young actress who has achieved an enviable reputation through her long list of successes for this company. “Mirandy Smiles” is an adaptation from a novel by Belle K. Maniates which, in its printed form, was called “The Littlest Scrub Lady.”

The story of “Mirandy Smiles” is refreshing and original in that none of the usual melodramatic or hackneyed devices are utilized to tell it. It is simplicity itself dealing with the life of Mirandy Judkins, who helps her mother as scrub girl in the Opera House in a small town of the middle West. Her love story and her activities through the day when she brings smiles and gladness into the lives of all, make an entertainment that is unusual. That our patrons will appreciate it we have no doubt. There have been so many war plays, so many spy plays, so many heavy melodramas of late that a picture such as “Mirandy Smiles” is a welcome change as well as a treat.

Edith M. Kennedy, author of “Her Country First,” which also starred Miss Martin, and “The Silent Cry,” featuring the Japanese actor, Sensie Hayakawa, pictured “Mirandy Smiles” (from the Maniates novel). She has done yeoman work with the scenario, nor has William C. De Mille left anything undone that he should have in the way of production. He is one of the most versatile directors at the Lakeshore, and “Mirandy Smiles” gives ample proof of that statement. Douglas MacLean, leading man opposite Mary Pickford in a number of productions is so cast in this picture.

THE STORY

In a small middle western town, Mirandy Judkins is engaged to work in the Opera House helping her mother, who has a large family to provide for. It is as scrub girl that she meets Teddy Lawrence, the church organizer, who invites her to come to St. Marks and hear him play. When she keeps her word and comes to the church, Teddy asks Rose White, the Sunday school teacher—engaged to Teddy—whether she would like to go and see a picture. Rose is very glad to do this. Mirandy is impressed with Kennedy’s appeal to her congregation to save money for their limit. As a consequence she asks that the church give her the choir surplice to wash in order that she may earn money. Rose gets this work for her. One day Kennedy is astonished to see upon Mirandy dressed in one of the gowns that are to be given in a “sacred concert” before the children of the neighborhood. He proceeds to take charge of her life, first in church, then as minister’s assistant, but is greatly delighted when the mystery is cleared by the return of the note.

Later Mrs. Judkins comes into a sum of money and she plans to take Mirandy to the country to live on a farm. Mirandy, who has grown to love Teddy, protests, because she has no liking for cows and pigs. Then Teddy tells her that the best thing for her to do is to go away to school and receive a proper education and that when she returns he will have something very important to tell her.

ADVERTISING LAYOUTS.—The regular one, two and three-column advertisements can be secured from Paramount on this production. Schedules for all other sizes of the Star, are among the other accessories obtainable on this production.

SUGGESTIONS

While Vivian Martin has not attained the popularity that has come to other stars of the Paramount constellation, none can say that her pictures have ever been anything but refreshing, clean and always dwelling on the happy side of life. If you are located in a family neighborhood where you think this type of picture goes well, be sure to play “Mirandy Smiles.” up in this manner and dwell on the fact that Miss Martin is always to be associated with pictures of such a type. It will certainly help to popularize both the star and indirectly and incidentally your house, for if the people get on to her style of production they will be coming again when next you display her name here.

In your advertisements it would be well to mention that the picture is an adaptation of Belle K. Maniates’ novel, “The Littlest Scrub Lady.” There is the usual stunt with books but as the picture bears another title it doesn’t fit as an advertising suggestion on this picture as well as it does on others. Play it lighter, brighter side, its only side in fact, and let it go at that.

Only a scrub lady... but some smile!

This Is Not Theda Bara's Style, Says Harrison

Either there is a scarcity of stories, or some one has blundered in selecting this one for Theda Bara. Not only is it illogical, but unifying her particular talents as well. It belongs to the fiction class in which absurdity, inconsistency and exaggeration are the fundamental features. It is well to picturize such a story provided no attempt is made to present it as a serious thing. The latter is exactly what takes place in this instance, resulting in a product that will hardly satisfy critical audiences.

Barring the fairly speedy action of the plot, there is hardly an element contained in any of the situations that will reach any particular kind of emotions. The whole picture depends on that one element to hold the interest, but the unconvincing construction of the story, handled in a serious manner, destroys all good effect.

The heroine is introduced as a Spanish Senorita, wooed by many a young man, owing to her personal charms and exquisite beauty. Their erotic arrows, however, cannot reach her heart, which she reserves for a Parisian artist whom she met in her home town, a little Spanish village.

Destiny brings her to Paris where, by accident, she gains fame as a great dancer. She weds the artist in the end.

The heroine's Parisian activities are the most unconvincing of all. Sometimes they border to burlesque.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Catch Lines

Theda Bara in her latest For super-production.

The story of a woman who raised havoc with a dozen lovers.

A woman without a conscience, without a heart, with sympathy toward none and malice toward all—The story of a "She-Devil" with Theda Bara playing the role with splendid abandon.

Produced under the direction of J. Gordon Eddwards who staged such lavish productions as "Cleopatra" and "Salome".

A story of southern Europe offering Theda Bara a role which she handles splendidly. It will be a sellout in Fox's "Carmen." You will enjoy this picture of Lolette—the girl who juggled with men's hearts.

Ad Talk

"The She-Devil" is the title of this picture which the management of the theatre will present on—of a week for a run of two days. As might be expected from the title this stars none other than Theda Bara. "The She-Devil" is her latest Fox Super-Production, and offers her a role quite different from anything that has been undertaken of recent date.

At Lolette, she appears as a girl of the mountains of Spain. She is a coquette, a siren, a veritable "shred-devil," as the rest of the villagers dub her, and her various suitors squabble with one another over her affections in vain. She even takes delight in egging the men on to come to blows over her. Love never entered her heart.

At least it doesn't until the coming of Maurice Tabor, an artist of Paris, who paints her portrait and wins her affections. When he refuses to take her back to Paris with him she becomes furious, but a way soon presents itself to follow him. Another suitor, the Tiger, a notorious bandit, makes her an offer of sums of more than values thinking to win her heart. Lolette accepts them, and the Tiger, a robber and bandit, and make for Paris.

Here the main find the artist and the manner in which she wins him and saves him from the bandit, and makes a rapid-moving story of the most interesting and unusual sort. Miss Bara is at her best in the playing of Lolette, and never for a moment does she suggest anything else but the coquette and siren. She is ably supported by Albert Rose as the artist, and by George A. McDaniel as the Tiger. J. Gordon Eddwards who directed such great Theda Bara productions as "Cleopatra" and "Salome," produced this feature and made a thoroughly artistic picture.

The Story

Lolette is a coquette in the lazy little village of Juanga, Spain, and the lives of her several lovers are made miserable by her unfeeling attitude toward them. Her suitors often come to blows over her, but this only amuses Lolette. But one day there appears in the person of Maurice Tabor, an artist from Paris who paints her portrait. Tabor, however, departs after finishing his work, and is astonished when he refuses to take her with him. One on Lolette's part leaves for Paris, disguised as the Tiger, a bandit. He robs a treasure-laden coach, and makes an attempt to kidnap her thinking to win her. She accepts the loot, but, contrary to his expectancies, makes off for Paris in search of Tabor.

She creates a stir in Paris, and particularly in Tabor, who falls in love with her while she poses for another painting. The Tiger follows Lolette to Paris, and surprises her one night while she is in the theatre with the artist. To escape him she leaps to the stage and goes through a dance that soon earns her great notoriety. However, she elects to turn down all offers and departs again for Spain with Tabor.

While en route in a coach the Tiger induces them to take possession of Lolette's jewels, and makes Tabor a captive in his mountain retreat. For Lolette he prepares a sumptuous feast. The girl pretends to accept it all in good faith, and in so doing succeeds in getting the proud Tiger quite hypnotized. When he is powerless she binds him to his chair. She then releases Tabor, and the two make off together, leaving the enraged bandit behind.

"WHEN DO WE EAT?"—PARAMOUNT

On the Whole, This Is Rated as a Very Pleasing Production

THIS is a pleasing little picture. It combines human element, action of plot, thrills and suspense, including a right amount of comedy, for a diversity.

There are one or two "jarring notes" in it, however, which could have been easily remedied had a resort been made to the plainest principles of common sense. For instance, the hero, a young bank clerk of strict principles, a person who had never in his life touched a card deck, is, with hardly any efforts on the part of the villain, induced to gamble. As is natural, he loses, and not having money to pay, steals from the bank. Now, how much more convincing it would have been had the villain been shown once or twice as tempting the hero!

As the picture is entertaining, the spectator will probably overlook this point. But why not make it right when hardly any extra expense is required, and thus disarm those who watch for opportunities to belittle this new art?

It is a clean attraction.—Released Oct. 13.—Length 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

An actress from Upper Canada, "Uncle Tom" shows how to pair a crooks and saves a young man from disgrace.

Enid Bennett, a star, whose youth and beauty are matchless, stars in the latest Paramount picture, "When Do We Eat?"

Directed by Fred Niblo, long one of the leading comedians of the screen, and now one of Thomas H. Ince's most skilled directors.

Written by C. Gardner Sullivan, the screen's most famous writer.

A joyous combination of comedy and drama of a little Mack Sennett farce and subtitles that fairly sparkle, Enid Bennett has not fail to see this new Paramount picture starring Enid Bennett.

The story of a second-rate actress in a fourth-rate road show from a small home, friends, love and FOOD on a Texas farm.

"When Do We Eat?" We manage to tackle something about twice a day, but times are hard. Poor Nora, who lived both in Little Eva and Eliza in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" hadn't looked a meal since she was born for months.

When Nora found out that they served three meals a day in jail she wanted a life sentence.

AD TALK

Thomas H. Ince will present the refreshing young star, Enid Bennett, in the Paramount picture, "When Do We Eat," at the ___ theatre on ___ of ___ week. "When Do We Eat?" is not a satire on the "Hoozering" as was the name might imply. The title is derived from the plight of Nora, an actress in a very poor road company, doing, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the Texas town. Nora does not know what one square meal a day looks like, much less three until through a series of startling circumstances, she is sent down in the home of Ma Forbes. Farm life agrees with her, and three meals a day work wonders.

How Nora, using her ability as an actress, brings two crooks to justice and saves ma's son from jail makes a photoplay interesting from every angle. Miss Bennett is seen to unusual advantage in the roles of Nora, her youth and refreshing beauty were never more attractively displayed than For her, which needs that comprise this picture. Gertrude Claire is seen in the congenial role of the young heroine, and Robert McKee and Jack Nelson give a brace of clever performances as the bank sneaks.

"When Do We Eat?" was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, than whom there is no better known nor more skilled screen writer. His story here is a deft combination of comedy, melodrama and a little Sennett farce, the whole being welded to

Nora thinks three square meals a day an impossibility. She would consider herself lucky if she could get one, even a round or even flat, but Nora's profession refuses to net her the required wherewithal to make it. She is a member of an Uncle Tom's Cabin company touring the Texas banks. She plays Eliza and doubles for Little Eva, but despite all her hard work, the Sheriff brings an attachment against the show. Nora incurs the bad man's wrath when she rolls him up in one of the drops, and in order to escape it boards a freight train bound for nowhere. When she discovers that a tramp is also a passenger on the train she jumps off and lands in a hay field. Here is another sheriff who insists that she is a bad character and puts her in the town jail.

Nora likes this because she gets a square meal, but she is saved from prison bars by Ma Forbes, a kindly matron who runs a farm and taken in boarding house. The good home and ma's kindness, and her cooking, too—work wonders with Nora. She is perfectly happy, and not the least part of her happiness are the moments she spends with James Forbes, the son of the house, cashier in the local bank. James is a likable fellow, but just a little too puritanical to be altogether human on the surface. "Soup" McCool and "Pug" Hennessy are boarders at Ma Forbes, these gentlemen are from Chicago, and are awaiting orders from their boss to crack the safe in the local bank.

Through a coincidence they are led to believe that Nora has been sent to cooperate with them. Hennessy teaches James the fine art of poker, and even takes three hundred dollars payment which sum James takes from the cash drawer of the bank. Nora, acting her part of confederate, enters the room, the crooks open the safe (James having given her the combination). She then gives the alarm, and the crooks are captured. The money is found on them, including the three hundred stolen by James. In this way does Nora repay Ma Forbes' kindness to her, and after this James is not slow to propose.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a combination of comedy and melodrama, although the former element predominates. In all advertising aim to bring out this lighter side of the production, as without doubt it is the larger appeal. People seem to tire of one diet of serious and heavy plays, so when "When Do We Eat?" comes around make a little noise about its lighter tone and happy character. The story is such a clever combination of various elements that they will be no come-back.

Miss Bennett has been starring for a year now, and her youth, beauty and ability have carved for her a place of importance in the Paramount constellation. Feature her well and tie her name up with "Hoozering" stating that it is typically her kind of story. She has done pictures accentuating the comedy angle quite regularly. You can popularize her if you drive this fact home on the screen, and tie it to others of a similar sort in which she appears. You always play Fairbanks up in his particular line, and Chaplin in his. Do this with Miss Bennett, whose appearances are in a certain type of picture, rather in a certain type of role, and you will benefit.

The name of the director, Fred Niblo, and the other members of the cast can be used to advantage.

They called her Velvet Mary because she was a soft worker!

VELVET MARY is due to pull off a little job at a small-town bank where they are so simple that they think that's locked is a safe safe—but the cashier's sweetheart has been made very bright by Cupid, and the way she cans Velvet Mary's little game will tickle you silly.

"THE VANITY POOL"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Here's One That Will Go Different in Various Localities

OWING to the nature of the subject—scandals and intrigues among married people, chiefly to satisfy personal spite—this picture will have a rather narrow appeal. Some people revel in this sort of topics, others, again, object to them sternly. On that account, the satisfaction it will give depends entirely on the taste of the audience to which you cater.

The fundamental idea of the story is a married man and prominent citizen's love for a poor but charming young lady, whom he assisted financially. His enemies attempt to make a capital case out of it, but his wife, in order to save her own reputation, steps in and extricates her husband out of an uncomfortable situation.

The scene showing the woman losing her balance and starting to fall off the window, is repelling. To a great number of people, especially to the women, such a sight is sickening.

The picture is not unclean. It has been produced artistically.

CATCH LINES

A picture of the scandal in low society—of the high and the low in politics—affording a consummation which has been utilized to its fullest dramatic extent.

A powerful drama of social and political life interpreted by a cast that includes five proven stars—Mary MacLaren, Gerald Harper, Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum and Marin Sais.

Beware the Vanity Pool! Its waters are deep and he who goes beneath the surface may never rise again!

Innocent facts concerted into a gross scandal ruined Gerald Harper's chances of becoming governor of the state—but he gained a lesson that brought him more than the executive chair.

Franklyn Farnum—Mary MacLaren—Anna Nilsson—Marin Sais and Thomas Holding. That's quite an array of talent for a single picture, isn't it? Also five-and-five stars in the special attraction, "The Vanity Pool," now at the theatre.

STORY TALK

The Universal Special feature, "The Vanity Pool," will be the attraction at the theatre on Wednesday. The management feels confident that this offering will prove of unusual interest to patrons, for all of a picture's essential elements are, in "The Vanity Pool," of extraordinary merit. The story, bearing the name of Natro Bartley as author, concerns the social and domestic relations of a group of really interesting people, in which the principal figures are the candidate for governor, his wife and the other woman. It cannot be said, however, that this "eternal triangle" is developed in anything but an original manner. It gives rise to a succession of dramatic situations that sustain the interest from beginning to end.

Secondly, the cast assembled to interpret the various roles of "The Vanity Pool" really deserves the term "all star." Headed by Mary MacLaren, long a favorite in Universal pictures, the cast includes such well known names as Thomas Holding, Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum, Marin Sais and Winter Hall. These popular players are also backed by Franklyn Farnum, Virginia Chester, Willis Marles and May Talbot. There is no denying the fact that this list of names is one of the most imposing ever assembled in a single picture. At least five of these players have long been stars in their respective fields. But "The Vanity Pool" only goes to show to what extent the Universal system is in securing the best for the public.

The story was produced under the direction of directors in the business, and her work on this subject stamps her as possessing infinite talent and resourcefulness.

THE STORY

Gerald Harper and his wife, Carol, have been married for twenty years and their love for each other has grown sweeter. The only thing that holds them together is Gerald's candidacy for the governor's chair. He is the governor's lady. With this more or less vain ambition, Carol works for Gerald's election by persuading her rich friend, Diana, to use her influence with Jarvis Flint, a politician. This work consumes considerable time, and in return Gerald undertakes to make a few trips for her into dangerous lands. On one of these occasions he meets Marna Royal, the flower of an unlovely family of the lower orders, she is apparently only a child, but a strong attachment springs up between the two. One day Gerald sees her in woman's clothes and, unable to resist her beauty, kisses her. She believes that this is a promise of marriage.

Diana is unsuccessful in her attempts to secure Flint's support because the politician makes an unwelcome advances toward her. She learns of Gerald's innocent affair with Marna and, going to Garret, Gerald's intimate friend, says that she will expose the candidate unless he (Garret) marries her. Garret refuses and as a result Diana spreads the scandal. To counteract it, Garret brings Marna to the Harper household. She then learns that Gerald is married and is very unhappy. Flint lies to Marna regarding Gerald's character and, in sorrow, she returns home.

The unscrupulous Flint and the spiteful Diana meet death in a struggle. Gerald, contemplating suicide, is saved by Garret, who urges him to go away and begin over. Garret himself seems destined to look after Marna.

SUGGESTIONS

The all-star cast is the strong selling point with respect to "The Vanity Pool," although again has the Universal company stepped forward with a title that contains numerous possibilities for striking advertising. For your newspaper announcement you might dres your advertisement with a large black star, each point containing a picture of one of the five principal players—MacLaren, Holding, Nilsson, Farnum and Sais. Such a display is possible if you make use of the stills furnished on this production. In the center run the name of the picture, although the dressing of the rest of the advertisement can best be determined upon by the man who knows how much space he has to use.

Another advertisement of effective design would be produced if a swirling pool formed the background. On this you could build either a sensational or a moderate display figures clutching wildly and being swept around by the waves, or else again the faces of the players. This idea, or both of them, can also be carried out for lobby display in the picture line. If you have a good artist he could no doubt design you some striking display in colors, using the two suggestions above as a basis.

But don't forget that particularly if you have been in the habit of playing Universal pictures before, here you have both Mary MacLaren and Garret to boost. Don't forget either that Holding was long leading man for Petrova, that Marin Sais is a Kalem favorite last doing the series "The Social Pirates," and that Anna Nilsson is a noted favorite leading women on the screen today. In publicity stories play up these points, and you will attract attention to your attraction.

pathizing with her, however obstinate and unruly she may be portrayed, because, underneath the surface, you discern the kind nature of the girl. She simply becomes contrary when antagonized, as she possesses a strong will power, causing her individualism to assert itself. You are rather inclined to blame her aunt for not knowing how to handle her.

"Friction arises between the heroine and her aunt. In order to get rid of her, the latter conspires to entangle the girl in matrimony."

"The heroine breaks off relations with the hero, whom she loves, because of her aunt's overpraises of him. In order to succeed in her purpose, the elderly lady adopts a different attitude. She now speaks unfavorably of the man the heroine keeps company with. The scheme succeeds, as the heroine determines to marry him, in spite of her aunt's apparent objections.

"At the day of the wedding the heroine discovers the plot. Infuriated, she runs away. She asks the first man she meets in the street to marry her for a money consideration."

"After the wedding, the husband prefers to have her instead of the money. When she reminds him of their premarriage agreement, he abducts her to the lumber camp, of which he is the superintendent. He determines to tame her, eventually succeeding, although the task proves somewhat hard. In the end it develops that her husband is none other than her first lover. The long heard was the result of his having lost the razor."

Of course there are several improbabilities in the story. For instance, to quote one of them, it seems incredible that the heroine should not recognize the familiar voice of her former sweetheart especially after the kidnapping. But picture goes invariably overlook such weak points when the picture is entertaining.

It is a clean offering and should have universal appeal. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

(Produced by Maurice Tourneur. Release date to be announced later)

The artistic side of this production is beautifully developed in every detail, with realistic results. But the degree of satisfaction it will give depends almost wholly on the mode of presentation.

If presented along the lines adopted by Manager Rothapfel there is little doubt but what the picture will be a complete success. This production is based not on a single story, but on five in-

The picture opens showing a lady in bad temper. Her calm husband then refers to a dictionary for a definition of the word Woman. The five stories treated in this offering represent definitions.

No. 1 deals with the downfall of Adam and Eve, as related in Genesis, a subject pictured many times in the past; No. 2, with Claudious, the Roman Emperor, and Messalina, his wife; No. 3, with the mediaeval love affair of Abelard, the great Monk Rhetician, and Heloise; No. 4, with a Fable of Britanny, while No. 5 deals with a story of the Civil War days, in which a woman, deserted by a Gold Watch, betrays the whereabouts of a Confederate soldier to a Northern officer, although she knew he would be shot.

Except that all these episodes are based on a common, fundamental idea—the downfall of Man caused by the wiles of Woman—they have no relation with one another. They are separate stories, each one treating the same theme under a different garb, the object of all being to strengthen the common theory. The function of the Epilogue, to which they are joined, is to disprove, by contrast, that theory.

Whether the object of the Epilogue succeeds or not is questionable. For my part, I am inclined to doubt it, for the reason that the argument advanced in favor—the part Woman has played in the present war as a Red Cross Nurse, etc., is, although strong, hardly able to offset the equally strong opposing arguments already imbedded deeply in the mind of the spectator.

Again, whether the present day picture goes will accept an entertainment built up on a group of stories treating the same subject, as if they were single reels, is also problematical. A similar theory has been employed at numerous times in the past, with hardly any satisfactory results.

But the greatest weakness of the picture lies in the fact that the spectator, being conversant with the main idea, knows exactly how each story will end. This results in the elimination of the suspense, which is almost indispensable in a picture.

Allender of Spokane Out For Legislature

Motion picture interests will be well taken care of by the Washington state legislature, if J. W. Allender, manager of two Spokane houses, wins out in the coming election. Allender is a candidate to the state legislature on the democratic ticket. He is a native son of Washington, born in 1886. Mr. Allender went to Alaska in the gold rush days and after that thrilling experience, returned to Spokane and entered the motion picture business. His first experience in this line was to learn the electrical branch. He was operator for the various theatres offering that line of amusement during its infancy here, finally entering the business himself, purchasing the lease of the Lyric theatre in 1915.

In the motion picture business Mr. Allender has looked ahead to the future possibilities of Spokane and during June leased the Majestic theatre, which he operates in conjunction with the Lyric. In offering himself as a candidate for the office of state legislator Mr. Allender states that his platform should be based upon his standing in the community, business reputation, progressive and energetic policies used in civic enterprises, his clear and unreserved judgment used in the office of civil service commissioner and an advocate of good highways.

Coast Exchanges Prepare for Resumption of Business

The first week in the history of Los Angeles film exchanges when they were not called upon to supply pictures to the exhibitors, due to the closing of nearly all theatres in Southern California, was spent in preparing for the big business rush that is certain to follow the closing order, according to the consensus of opinion of exchange managers.

Programs were arranged, and are being arranged to supply the exhibitors instantly upon word that the closing ban has been lifted. Some of the managers took inventory of stock on hand, and others brought their books up to date. Efforts were made by some to balance all past due accounts with exhibitors.

Among the exchanges that believe a land office business awaits the film industry with the passing of the influenza epidemic are David Bershon, Universal; W. H. Hepburn, Vitascope; C. J. Marley, Triangle; B. E. Loper, Select; Guy C. Gunderson, Kleine System; Nick Steele, William L. Sherry; Ben Fish, Goldwyn; Harry Ballance, Paramount-Arclight; Arthur Lamb, Metro; A. H. Hancock, World Film; A. R. Patton, Mutual; E. D. Tate, Pathé, and many others.

Goldwyn Prepares for Move to the Coast

Announcement of the early arrival of Goldwyn stars in Los Angeles, despite rumors to the effect that the Goldwyn migration to the West might be postponed indefinitely, were received Monday night from the Goldwyn headquarters in New York. According to the announcement, Mae Marsh and her director are already on the way, and they are expected to reach the film capital the latter part of this week. Mabel Normand and Pauline Frederick, two other Goldwyn stars, are expected to follow within ten days. Madge Kennedy and her director will leave for Los Angeles about November 10, it is understood.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, will arrive on the Coast on November 15, according to the announcement received here this week. He will be followed by Rex Beach and Mrs. Beach, who will arrive about December 1. Abraham Lehr, general manager, who was expected to arrive about November 1, will not return to the coast until the latter part of November, it is understood.

A number of receptions are being planned for Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy by their friends, and these stars will no doubt find it very homelike when they reach Los Angeles.

Announcement is also made that the equipment and properties of Goldwyn Eastern studios, comprising five freight cars, has already started on its Westward journey. The first carload left New York last Saturday.

It was also announced that Geraldine Farrar may not come to the Pacific Coast until next spring, as her operatic and concert engagements will keep her in the East until that time.

Dalton Inspiration for Message Abroad

Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star, is said to be the inspiration for one of the most unique messages ever sent to loving mothers, sisters and sweethearts to the boys "over there."

A large photographic enlargement of her pose in the picture "Vive La France!" printed on satin, was presented by Photographer N. S. Evans to the Friday Morning Club division of the Red Cross in Los Angeles. This proved an inspiration and with it as centerpiece the women have pieced a quilt with hundreds of little blocks on which they have embroidered messages of love to which they affixed their signatures in threads of silk.
Mr. Fair originated a plan adopted by the local board of trade, which will prevent any confusion when business is started again. The Board of Trade has sent out a letter to every exhibitor in the territory, in which he is advised that service will be started again on the same day of the week as before. For instance, if an exhibitor in Cheyenne was running a Triangle picture Sunday, a Pathe picture on Tuesday and a Mutual production Thursday, it would only be necessary for him to wire one of the exchanges above mentioned to set in motion his whole program. If he sent his telegram to the Denver Triangle exchange, Mr. Fair would immediately telephone every other exchange, and the Cheyenne exhibitor would be saved the cost of sending additional telegrams. Ward E. Scott of Pathe is chairman of the Denver Board of Trade and H. D. Cassidy of Mutual is secretary.

With the taking over of Sherry Service by the General Film Corporation, the local exchange at 1723 Welton street has been closed, and Manager Canaday has returned to Los Angeles.

Denver exchange circles are shocked and grieved to learn of the recent death in San Francisco of R. K. Lynch, special representative of Triangle. Mr. Lynch visited Denver two weeks ago on his way to the coast. Telegrams of condolence have been sent to the New York office and to the family, and employees of local exchanges have been heavy losers on account of the closing order, but not all of them. In several instances several have found temporary employment where they have made good. H. S. Slie, former manager of the Edison theatre at Newcastle, Wyo., is one of them. He had just completed his initial trip as a road salesman for Vitagraph when “floo” hit Denver and everything was shut down. The order didn’t bother Slie a little bit. He is also an expert undertaker and business has been mighty good in that line. He hasn’t lost a day but will be ready to return when the picture business is on again.

Mr. Hayden, another Vitagraph road man, is a former tool maker. He got busy with a local company which has a big war contract, and is knocking out $8 a day.

Duffy Postpones Trip Along the Coast

FRANK DUFFY, special representative to General Manager and Vice-President Paul Brunet of the Pathe Company, because of the spread of Spanish influenza on the Pacific Coast last week, postponed his visit to San Francisco and Seattle for one week. He is making his first trip to all the Pathe exchanges in the United States since he was made special representative of the company.

After a week in Los Angeles he was favorably impressed with the way the exchanges are handling the picture business in this territory, and he remarked particularly on the close cooperation of theatres and exchanges.

"I am firmly convinced," he said, "that when the ban on all public gatherings is lifted and the theatres are again open to the public, they will play to such big business that any losses sustained during the closing period will be speedily wiped out. "Likewise the exchange men will benefit. It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good, and what appears to be an ill wind at the present time will, in my opinion, prove a great blessing."

After visiting in San Francisco and Seattle, Mr. Duffy will return to the East, when he will begin a tour of all the Southern Pathe exchanges, ending his trip by a swing through the Middle West.
Latest News Around Seattle

ALTHOUGH the picture houses are closed at Camp Lewis, Wash., the 40,000 men stationed there are treated with outdoor movies. On pleasant evenings they see Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and the rest of the stars.

Film Row and all the theatres in Tacoma, Seattle and the Northwest are quiet, but a good many of the theatres are taking advantage of this Spanish flu season to paint up their houses. Film Row, Seattle, has lost a few of its men who used to swing around in office chairs. Among them are Nave, Beale, Todd, Goldman, Koer pel and Bories. They have gone to work in the famous Seattle shipyards. They have done it for patriotic reasons, although they get paid for it and they have a little time now. Some work a half day and the balance of the day they spend on Film Row watching some of the others trying to catch up with their work. The ban is about to be lifted and everything will be O. K. again.

The picture men are gaining a good reputation with the public as a whole on account of their willingness to co-operate with the government in bond drives and in showing patriotic pictures. Among the managers of the theatres, the one who is in charge of the freight always place H. G. Rosebaum, J. A. Koer pel or James Clemmer of “Clemmer’s theatre” on their committees.

MANAGER TALLY of the Vitagraph office in Seattle, has been made manager of Clemmer’s theatre, Seattle.

FILM ROW was proud when some of her men were sent “over there,” and she was just as glad to hear from a couple of them the other day. They were Sergt. Mandel Nieder, who formerly was with H. A. Johnson Supply Company, and was later on the road with a few films of his own. He seems to be getting along with bells, for when he left he was only a film man, and now he is a sergeant in a medical detachment. H. A. Johnson also heard from his son, quite frequently, who has been in France for three years, and who writes that while he likes home, he wants to stay there till he brings a few Kaiserlets with him or is able to do so.

MANAGER WETHSTONE has bought the Grand at Mederville, Mont., and expects to use Universal files.

DONALD McCANDLISH, son of A. H. McDonald, is managing the Eugene theatre, Eugene, Ore.

HARRY JOHNSON has re-opened the “Rex” at Logan, Utah.

E. B. LAWSON of Sutherlin, Ore., has opened a theatre there.

C. H. CHETTOW has bought the theatre in Cheney, Wash.

Lewistown House Last to Close

“Theatre closed on account of the flu,” was the brief message sent from the Judith theatre to one of the owners at Butte, this being the last theatre in Montana to close, along with the Myrtle, another Lewistown house. Lewistown was free from the “flu” until a few days ago and even now the situation is far from serious there. Helena and Bozeman were two other towns that remained open until the past week.

Brentwood Company Gets Under Way

THE BRENTWOOD FILM CORPORATION, a new producing corporation, began work in Hollywood the week before the four weeks’ shutdown went into effect.

The company has leased the studios of the Mena Film Corporation at 4811 Fountain avenue, Hollywood, and the first picture is under way. It is being directed by King W. Vidor. The new concern plans to do a series of feature pictures with all-star casts. Among some of the players appearing in the first Brentwood offering, “The Turn of the Road,” will be Helen Jerome Eddy, formerly with George Beban; Pauline Curley, who has played with Douglas Fairbanks and Harold Lockwood; Winter Hall, who has appeared in Cecil B. de Mille productions; George Nichols, Lloyd Hughes and others. “The Turn of the Road” is an original story without a war angle. Some of the most beautiful homes in the fashionable Wilshire district will be used in some of the exterior scenes.

“HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED,” a forthcoming Enid Bennett picture from the studios of Thomas H. Ince, was written by Lois Zellner, and is the second devised by this author for Miss Bennett, the other being “The Little Brother of the Rich.”

Pickford Goes East to Attend to Legal Matters

MARY PICKFORD made a hurried trip to Los Angeles last week from Omaha, where she had been halted by a telegram that her sister, Lottie Pickford, was dangerously ill in the Sisters' hospital. She was met at Omaha by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, and they rushed westward as fast as the trains could bring them.

Arriving in Los Angeles they found that Lottie was slightly improved. Two days later Mary started east again, and she is expected to reach New York Thursday of this week. She has gone to New York to defend herself in a suit brought by Mrs. C. C. Wilkenning, who is suing for $103,750, which she alleges is due for three years' of service as Miss Pickford's advisor, promoter and manager.

Before Miss Pickford left for the East she said that only recently Mrs. Wilkenning made an offer to compromise the case for $600. This offer was refused, however, upon the ground that there was absolutely no foundation for Mrs. Wilkenning's claim.

Miss Pickford says that she has never had a manager other than her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who has always, and even now, handles all her business affairs. Mary further states that she was ably represented by a paid legal adviser and a personal representative during the period when Mrs. Wilkenning claims to have been her adviser, promoter and manager.

The suit will come to trial on November 15. After it is over Miss Pickford expects to be in New York about two weeks before returning to Los Angeles. In the meantime, if Sister Lottie improves rapidly enough, Mrs. Pickford expects to take her to some quiet resort for her convalescence, and she will return to New York to complete the details of Miss Pickford's new company now in course of organization.

Mrs. Pickford was called away from this work last week because of the illness of Lottie. The process of organization was also held up on account of the illness of Dennis O'Brien, Miss Pickford's attorney.

Miss Pickford stated this week that already twelve different releasing companies have approached her for contracts for any pictures that she may produce in the future. Up to the time she left Los Angeles she had not closed any contracts.

Studying the Stars

A Tip or So by Howard Hickman, Author and Director of the Latest Barriscale Feature, on Writing for Stars

HOWARD HICKMAN, motion picture director, leading man, film villain, and photoplay author, was asked by an interviewer the other day to give a few "tips" about writing for Bessie Barriscale, whose latest production, "Two-Gun Betty," was written and directed by Mr. Hickman. His brief statement, Mr. Hickman observes, applies to all stars as well as to Miss Barriscale.

"Of course the opportunities of the outside author to study the personality of the star are not usually so as mine," he began with a smile. "Being her director and having before that played opposite Miss Barriscale, or having the villain's part in some of her photoplays, gave me an opportunity to study her wide dramatic possibilities very closely. But I believe this—that with all of my seeing her act and directing her screen plays, it would have done me no good as an author if I had not studied her work on the screen. There, in my opinion, is the place to study when one wishes to write for the screen, and there is the place to learn to know each individual star. Moreover, it is within the reach of everyone, at their picture theatre.

"The off-stage personality of the star need not concern the author. The screen work of the star is the thing to study, and not any one picture—unless you intend to deliberately imitate the style of this picture, which would then be hard to sell to that star, who is probably seeking something different from the previous productions. The thing to do is to study as many different pictures of the star as possible; from the ensemble of which, form your own conception of her screen personality, and then write the story, as original a one as possible, bearing the screen personality of the star in mind."

KATHLEEN KIRKHAM, who has just completed her work in Douglas Fairbanks’ latest Artcraft release, “Arizona,” left Los Angeles last week for Chicago upon receipt of a telegram from her sister, who is seriously ill in that city.

ACCORDING to advices received in Los Angeles this week the case of Anthony Paul Kelly, former Los Angeles scenario writer, against Henry Walthall, the motion picture actor, will come up for trial in the New York supreme court this week. The litigation concerns the recovery of $5,000, which Kelly alleges he paid Walthall to bind an option on the latter’s services for a film.

D. W. GRIFFITH on a recent Monday began work on his new war drama, a stupendous propaganda production, which is yet unnamed. Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess are to play the leading male roles. The remainder of the cast has not been announced. This new film by Mr. Griffith will be a story of the draft, and its theme will be along lines heretofore forbidden, by the government, it is understood. Some of the scenes were made some time ago by government photographers at the various cantonments, and these will be woven into the story. One particularly striking feature of the production will be a scene in which huge artillery, snapped at one of Uncle Sam’s best known artillery schools, will be shown. The picture will be produced under the supervision of the War Department. It is understood that it will cost approximately $50,000.

LILA LEE, one of the newest Paramount-Artcraft stars, left this week for an indefinite stay in New York. She took advantage of the four weeks’ production suspension to make the trip. She had just finished a picture called “Puppy Love.”

NEWS of the death of Harold Lockwood in New York last Saturday was received with much sorrow in the Los Angeles film colony. He had worked in many pictures in the film capital, and was known personally to a majority of the leading film people of the Southland. Fred Balshofer, who for many months was his manager and personal friend, and who is now directing the destinies of Julian Eltinge’s new production, “Over the Rhine,” was very much affected when he heard of Lockwood’s death. Balshofer said he knew of no finer actor in the industry than Lockwood.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN has engaged as his assistant in directing his new comedy, Carter de Haven, well known in vaudeville circles, and who has also made some reputation for himself in pictures. Chaplin, after several weeks of painstaking study as to the proper theme for a new comedy, started work on the forthcoming release last Monday. Its setting, according to confidential information dispensed by Sid Chaplin, will be far removed from the inferno of the world war. It will be placed in a quiet village. Sid also intimates that the village may be wrecked before the production is finished, but that is a minor consideration.

Shipman-Curwood Company Is Formed

T HE SHIPMAN-CURWOOD PRODUCING COMPANY, with Nell Shipman as the star, and James Oliver Curwood as the author of her stories, has been formed in Los Angeles, the contract between star and writer becoming effective Sunday, October 27. Mr. Curwood authorized the announcement that he believes Miss Shipman can interpret outdoor parts better than any star he has seen on the screen. He will write original stories, it is announced, in which he plans to create for Miss Shipman characters of tremendous scope and power. Under the new arrangement Mr. Curwood’s screen releases, which now average ten releases per year, will be reduced to four or five. The announcement of the Shipman-Curwood affiliation was made this week by Ernest Shipman, president of Shipman Sales, Inc.

He’s Certainly a Useful Actor!

ROBERT McKIM, the city slicker in Thomas H. Ince’s photoplay, “Greeded Lightning,” was called upon in one scene to sell an actor banker some stock in an adding machine company. McKim had been making four minute bond speeches at theatres evenings, and the script providing no argument, he proceeded to make his Liberty Loan talk with the result he actually sold the actor a bond.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

A FISHING party, organized by David Bershon, Los Angeles branch manager of the Universal Exchange, went on a cruise just outside San Pedro last week and a mighty catch was reported. Other members of the party were Chris Glimm, manager of the Garrick theatre; Harvey Gausman, sales manager for Goldwyn; Arthur B. Lamb, Metro branch manager; Roy Turner, Metro salesman, and Louis Bard, owner of the College theatre. Mr. Bershon said that aside from two cases of seasickness, the catch consisted of one bonita, one barracuda, a skipjack and several hundred deep sea trout.

ALL Los Angeles exchangemen will hold a second meeting the latter part of this week, according to announcement by Harry Lustig, Pacific Coast representative of Metro, and temporary chairman of the Exchangemen Board of Trade in process of reorganization. The meeting will be called this week, he said, in order to perfect the organization and elect permanent officers.

LOUIS HYMAN, branch manager of the All-Star Features Exchange, left last week for an indefinite stay in San Francisco. He will return to Los Angeles when the theatres are re-opened.

MEMBERS of the All-Star Features force who received an attack of influenza last week were E. R. Williams, salesman; E. R. Van Pelt, advance manager of "Hearts of the World," and Miss Hilda Ambruster, booker.

L. FRANCK, owner of the Oash theatre at Oja, Ariz., was a caller at the Mutual Exchange last Saturday. He announced that his house was the last theatre in Arizona to close. It is located in a mining town. There were no influenza cases in the town, and he was allowed to remain open until the state health authorities requested him to close up shop.

J. L. MERRICK, Pacific Coast supervisor of Mutual exchanges, is this week recovering from a severe attack of Spanish influenza.

H. A. ASHLEY, an exhibitor of Astoria, Ore., was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He took advantage of an opportunity to spend his vacation in the Southland.

CARL RAY, manager of the Miller theatre on Main street, announced this week that he will re-open that house with the Fox production, "On the Jump," starring George Walsh. He expects to "get the jump" on rival exhibitors by showing this picture, and as a result, he is planning for his box office receipts to "take an extra jump." All this he told confidently to M. A. Walsh, branch manager of the Fox Exchange.

CARL RAY, manager of the Miller theatre, returned this week from a ten days' vacation at Kernville, where he says he killed one deer and caught several hundred mountain trout.

W. G. MEAGHER, auditor of the Greater Theatres Company of Seattle, spent his vacation this fall in Los Angeles, arriving in the Southern California city last week. He called upon E. D. Tate of the Pathe Exchange, who is an old acquaintance.

M. A. WALSH, branch manager of the Fox Exchange, this week announced a new plan of film inspection. Beginning next week every print returned from the exhibitor will be inspected upon its return, instead of the former plan of inspecting it when it was being prepared for shipment. In this way, Mr. Walsh says, the exchange will be enabled to determine what exhibitors have damaged the film, and such exhibitor will be called upon to pay for the damage thus discovered. "I believe that through this system we shall be protected better than ever before," Mr. Walsh said.

THE Fox Exchange is taking advantage of the few weeks of inactivity owing to the closing of the theatres in this territory, to inspect every film in the exchange, and to take an inventory of all advertising matter and posters in stock.

JOHAN JOHNSON, an exhibitor of Yuma, Ariz., was a visitor in Los Angeles last week.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, left Los Angeles Saturday morning for New York. After spending nearly three weeks on the Pacific Coast, he returned to New York with an optimistic farewell. He said that the public will grow hungry for pictures during the present influenza epidemic, and when the houses throughout the country are once more thrown open, they will play to bigger business than ever before.

THE Norma Talmadge company this week went to Idelwild to film some exteriors in her first Pacific Coast production on her present trip to Los Angeles.

ARTHUR RINGER, shipping clerk of Triangle Exchange, and Frances Longo, secretary to Branch Manager Marley, were ill this week with influenza. Both were reported out of danger on last Saturday.

"THE ONLY WOMAN," by Thomas Dixon, with Clara Williams as the star, was given a preview in Los Angeles this week by Select Pictures. Fifty or more exhibitors were in attendance. They were unanimous in the expression that the picture is one of the biggest and most dramatic productions of the season. Select is anticipating solid booking on this subject.

CLAUDE HALSELL, owner of the American and Victor theatres, appeared on film row on the closing day of the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign and announced that if some exchange manager, or company of managers, would rustle $1,000 in subscriptions he would double his own $2,000 contribution to the loan. B. E. Loper of Select, and David Bershon of Universal, accepted the challenge. Thirty minutes later Mr. Halsell's check for $2,000, and subscriptions for an additional $1,000 from exchangemen and their employees, were turned over to the Liberty Loan campaign committee.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, special representative of the Los Angeles office of the Kleine System, adopted a novel plan of securing contracts this week. When he arrived at Lompoc he learned that Manager Calvert of the Lompoc theatre, had gone fishing at Surf, a seaport village nearby. Rushing over to Surf he commandeered a small boat, went out on the bay where Calvert was fishing, secured papers for a new account and returned to Lompoc in time to catch his train for Los Angeles.

MR. AND MRS. JACK McDONALD, owners of the McDon-ald theatre at La Jolla, were visitors in Los Angeles this week. They signed contracts for Vitagraph's "Fight for Millions," and renewed contracts for the Select program.

WILLIAM MARTIN, well known exhibitor at San Jacinto and Hemet, two towns made famous by the recent earthquake, was in Los Angeles this week en route to Catalina Island, where he will spend his vacation until allowed to re-open his houses at San Jacinto and Hemet.

WHEN Frank Duffy, special representative of Pathe, told B. E. Loper, branch manager of Select Pictures that he would make an additional subscription of $500 to the Fourth Liberty Loan if twenty-five men on film row would also make additional subscriptions, Mr. Loper went on the war path and in one hour last Saturday secured nearly $6,000 in additional subscriptions on film row. Incidentally he located twenty-five men who were willing to subscribe again. At the end of the hour he called upon Mr. Duffy and received his check for $500.
ON October 18 the State Board of Health ordered all the motion picture houses in California to close as a precautionary measure against the spread of Spanish influenza. The result has been that nearly every town at once closed its theatres. However, a few have continued to run and are calling on the San Francisco exchanges to continue sending films. Those which have not yet closed are Grass Valley, Bay Point, Porterville, Lemore, Williams, Madera, Jackson and Nevada City. A peculiar situation has arisen in the case of the state prison at Folsom. The prison is still showing pictures to its inmates and these convicts shut off from all contact from the outside world are getting the full Pathé news, while free Californians are not now allowed to have their news events visualized.

THE theatres of San Francisco, with their army of stage hands, musicians, ushers, "front-of-the-house-men," and their players have accepted the situation with a philosophical smile, and the managements generally agree with Eugene Roth, manager of the California theatre, in this expression: "Since the unsettled state of the public mind had reduced audiences to a minimum, I believe that it is better that the theatres be closed, permitting the authorities to come to quarters with the influenza and clean it out; and since the closing of the theatres seems to be a necessary part of this work, I am glad it has been done. We will the sooner return to the normality of existence again."

ALL the theatres operating "combination" attractions assert that they will resume their offerings as soon as the health authorities permit. The general impression among theatrical folk is that two weeks will be required to fight the influenza to a finish. In this prediction the managers of the various film exchanges are inclined to agree.

L. REICHERT, manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, expresses the hope that the theatres will be allowed to reopen on Sunday, November 3. He believes that the progress of the influenza will be sufficiently checked by that time to allow the theatres to resume business. San Francisco has always been a liberal town, he says, and also a strong union town. By this closing the members of several unions of considerable influence are out of jobs, and this will have its influence on bringing about an early reopening.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., says of the situation: "Everybody is hoping now that the disease is at its peak and that it will decrease so rapidly that the theatres may re-open on November 3. Encouraging news comes from Fresno and other southern points. The affliction broke out first in the southern part of the state and it now shows abatement there. At Camp Fremont, only a comparatively short distance south of here the commandant reports that the trouble is over. The Universal Exchange is maintaining its entire organization in order to render prompt service when the theatres are ready to resume. It is getting its books and records in first-class condition, sorting its advertising material, repairing its lobby frames, and every reel of film (there are thousands in the exchange) is being given a thorough inspection. They are then being repaired and put through our new cleaning machine so that we will be able to give the best possible service. The theatres are utilizing the period in giving their houses an overhauling and thorough cleaning, and many of the country exhibitors are seizing upon the opportunity to take a vacation or are coming up to the city and lining up for future pictures or rearranging their service."

NEWTON E. LEVI, branch manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, says: "I believe that after this scare is over the theatres and all the other industries of prosperity such as it has never had before. The people never before realized how important motion pictures were to their happiness nor how much they entered into the daily routine of their lives. Now as they wander by the closed motion picture house they pause to read the posters with an interest not displayed since the earliest days of this form of amusement. Some of the theatres are taking advantage of this hunger on the part of their former patrons and are changing their posters every day or two. The people are beginning to look for these changes and to read every word of the displays. I am advising all places to keep their lobbies bright with new paper."

H. F. MOORE, assistant manager of the George Kleine System, says that he and Major M. J. Cohen, the manager of the exchange, are holding down the business together. Every one else connected with the firm has been laid off temporarily. They are busy "cleaning house," catching up on back work, and cleaning up posters and films. Mr. Moore says that since the shut-down his exchange has received a number of inquiries for new bookings. The situation looks particularly bright to him after the theatres resume. In fact, he looks for business to "go ahead with a spurt once the theatres re-open."

THE ALL-STAR FEATURES DISTRIBUTORS, INC., announce that they are keeping their entire force, and have seized... upon the let-up in business to clean up, not only the films, but also the accumulation of more or less "junk."

C. POST MASON, who came to the All-Star from Denver a couple of weeks ago to act as publicity man, especially in exploiting the important pictures handled by Sol Lesser, found very little need of his activities at present and he has secured a position with the Union Iron Works of this city. It is said he is timekeeper for that corporation, but he expects to return to the motion picture game as soon as it again becomes normal.

FLOYD ST. JOHN, manager of the World Film Corporation, says that he is treading to close up the exchange until the present frame of the public mind is changed. He expresses the opinion in very vigorous language that the worst part of the scare has been brought about by auto-suggestion and that the newspapers have been in the main responsible for the number of cases of influenza and the serious results therefrom. The papers are literally scaring people, he says. Unless a decided change of method is employed he thinks it may be as much as four weeks before the theatres will be allowed to reopen. However, he thinks that strong pressure will be brought to bear to re-open in about two weeks, but he has little expectation that it will be successful in overcoming the scare under which the people are now suffering.

HARRY LEE KNAPP, manager of Select Pictures Corporation, says: "I believe that about two weeks of energetic measures will combat the influenza and that the theatres will be able to re-open. Our organization is being kept intact, including Showfield. The present condition is much worse than ever before in their history. One thing the managers feel is that their patrons are going to find out how much the motion picture means in their life. Out of this present situation a new condition may arise, which may make for longer runs in the smaller theatres. If this occurs the fans will not become satiated by going to the theatres too often and their interest may be kept at a keener edge. It seems to me there is an opportunity for exhibitors to experiment on some pictures which should have longer runs in their houses. If they can develop their business along this line they will reduce their expense, and increase their profits through the advertising value of those who have enjoyed the show."

THE PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., has retained its entire force at full pay, and while there is little to do, Manager E. O. Child feels that he cannot afford to lose any of his organization for the lively times that are bound to follow the present shutdown.

R. W. LYNCH, vice-president of the Triangle, died of pneumonia in this city following an attack of influenza, on October 21. Mrs. Lynch was with her husband during the past week, and his brother, S. A. Lynch, received hourly reports in New York from the bedside by telegraph. During the last few days of his illness S. A. Lynch talked with the sick man's physician twice daily over the long distance telephone. While the death of W. W. Lynch was unexpected during the few days, his great vitality made such a gallant fight that hope was not entirely abandoned until just before the end.

THE VITAGRAPH EXCHANGE this week forwarded a five-reel feature and a one or two-reel comedy to nearly every exhibitor in Arizona served by the Vitagraph as a precautionary measure for the exhibitor, in the event the closing ban is suddenly lifted. The picture was conceived by Branch Manager W. H. Hephurn, and already a number of letters have been received by him from the exhibitors thanking him for his foresight. "I felt that if the ban was lifted suddenly this plan would allow the exhibitor to open his house thirty-six to forty-eight hours earlier than he otherwise would if he was compelled to wait the exchange for a show. The plan will likewise allow him to get his house open sooner, perhaps, than a competitor, thus making him a friend of Vitagraph and the Vitagraph idea of protective co-operation.

What Butte Is Doing

EVERY theatre in Montana is now closed upon orders of local boards of health, due to the prevalence of Spanish influenza. About 2,000 cases are reported in Butte. In Stanford, Livingston and a few other cities it is reported that the crest has been passed and the disease is on the wane. It is hoped that re-opening will come before long. In order to better combat the disease in Butte orders are being considered this week to close every possible place of business in addition to the theatres and churches, such as dry goods stores, saloons, pool halls, shoe stores, etc.

NEAT little signs in front of Butte theatres tell the public of the temporary close-down. At the American one reads the following: "Closed temporarily on account of the flu. We are renewing our theatre and when we re-open you will find the American all dolled up. We are saving up the best features possible."

THE closing of the theatres has apparently affected the general business life of Butte and the situation shows what an important part the picture theatre plays in America today. There being no shows in operation there are fewer people on the streets. The restaurants are doing less business and so are the confectionery houses and ice cream parlors. In fact, it looks like a different Butte today.

W. M. HAIGHT, manager of the Orpheum at Livingston, is in the city this week on business.

GEORGE CALLADAY of the Vitagraph, is back in Butte after a trip to Bozeman and other cities in Southern Montana. He reports very good business in the way of new bookings, although of course, there is nothing 'doing' just at present. He has been booking "The Iron Test" with great success, exhibitors being eager to get this new serial.

OVER in Great Falls there is a man who looks and acts the part of Bill Hart. He is Cherry Brown, and is not in the profession. When attired in cowboy regalia, with a revolver strapped to his person, he bears a striking resemblance to the star. In fact, during the recent Liberty Loan drive at a big theatre meeting Brown was said to have been introduced to the audience of film fans as the original Bill. He was given a great ovation and every one thought that the Western man who bowed to them from the stage was the genuine star. The next day they read about the "camouflage" in the press. When Brown was introduced the chairman stated that Bill Hart would next appear on the stage, but that he would not make a speech, that being the condition upon which he promised to appear.

HARRY SELIG, a towering personality in the moving picture world, was in Lewistown last week on a short business call. After spending a day there he left for New York. He will stop off at Chicago to attend to the closing of the Selig studios there and a few months later he will take charge of the Greater Selig Company, which will operate from Los Angeles. His brother, Col. Selig, is the principal spirit back of the Selig Polyscope Company. Another distinction which Harry Selig has is that he is the father of Baby Marie Osborne. She is not, however, a Selig star.

Realism Comes High—But We Must Have It

MARY MacLAREN spent three days on the private exchange switchboard at Universal City recently in order to learn the correct maneuvers of the plugs and wires. She did so in order to make realistic her part of a metropolitan telephone girl in "Dear Ruth," the newest Universal special attraction now being produced under Rupert Julian's direction. Margaret Bassett and Jessie Mitchell, the two Universal operators, acted as tutors in telephony for the star.

San Francisco reports:

"ONE MORE WEEK!"

"America's Answer," the Government's own war film, was booked for a week at the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco.

It drew such big crowds that the Rialto management "decided to continue the engagement one more week"—so as to let everybody see it.

"America's Answer" is making attendance records wherever it is being shown.

Make arrangements to secure this thrilling war feature, now, if you have not done so already. It is one of the war films produced by the U. S. Government for the people of this country and our Allies.

WHAT THE BIG CRITICS SAY:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
Exchange men and exhibitors better be sure to look this over, for a more promising state rights feature has not been put on the market in some time. The settings and photographic work will come as a revelation.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD:
The story is strongly dramatic. Mary Boland plays with convincing skill.

BILLBOARD:
Elaborate production—intense interest of story.

VARIETY:
The action is fast.

NEW YORK REVIEW:
It is so strong—so logical in its theme.

DRAMATIC MIRROR:
Offers exceptional possibilities to the exhibitor.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW:
Gripping as anything presented in some time.

TELEGRAPH:
Production superb.

EXHIBITORS' HERALD:

Immediately after seeing your latest serial, "The Iron Test," in your projection room, I booked it, and have good reason to believe that the business on it will be even greater than the record-breaking business of "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web," and "A Fight For Millions."

You may also book me up for "A Man of Might," the new Duncan serial that I understand is to follow "The Iron Test."

"Ten times the grip of an average photoplay"

Motion Picture Classic

Really the most interesting movies of our month weren't dramatic at all—but Martin Johnson's fascinating tour of the Cannibal isles of the South Pacific. Aside from being an intelligently photographed study of the various races of the remote Pacific isles, where meatless days aren't observed, the pictures have the lure of a Joseph Conrad tale. Here romance and adventure stood beside the camera-man. Johnson and his wife cruised alone among the islands, once almost meeting their death and finally getting away with a remarkable series of films. Mrs. Johnson, by the way, can go round to the movie studios any day and get a regular position. She is the dramatic suspense of the series, which we guarantee to have ten times the grip of an average photoplay.

OFFICE OF THE MANAGING DIRECTOR

Mr. Martin Johnson,

New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnson:

It has just come to my attention that you are about to release your Cannibal Island pictures of the South Sea as a whole feature instead of serially.

I want to assure you that I think this is a very wise move, first because it is really a feature in itself and will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return and furthermore will do a great deal for the exhibitors' institution. The possibilities that lie itself for both publicity and general interest have not been surpassed by any offering in the past year.

Wishing you every good luck, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Managing Director.

To Executive Heads Of Motion Picture Producing Companies

I spent four years, and a quarter of a million dollars perfecting a machine to print and develop positive film rapidly, economically, and of high quality.

I can save the Moving Picture Industry millions of dollars a year NOW.

You can have your share of this tremendous saving without the investment of a single dollar on your part.

You can get all details from our New York representative, Mr. Charles E. Stark. His visit will be the most interesting one you have had in a long time.

We Dare You To—

The Cheerful Days Are Here

We dare you—one and all—manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor to take ten minutes off right now and read every word of the article on page 2925 of this issue by J. A. Quinn, of Quinn’s Rialto, Los Angeles.

And then we dare you to—Take five minutes more off and write or dictate a brief letter to us regarding J. A. Quinn’s views.

Come on—it’s a dare.

Let’s start something!

We warn you right here that the article is a loud explosion from a real live bunch of dynamite. It is well worth reading.

And if you want “ to start something”; if you want to dissipate the ennui of a five weeks’ shut down; if you want to get things roaring and humming again—

It is well worth the five minutes to write that letter.

Come on—we’ll publish them all.

Let’s start something!

An “All-Star” Number

Speaking of J. A. Quinn’s article reminds us that we have something of an all-star bill for Motion Picture News readers this week.

In addition to the Los Angeles showman there are signed and exclusive articles by Eugene Roth, of the California and Portola Theatres, San Francisco; George L. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City; Frank L. Newman, of the Regent and Royal Theatres, Kansas City; and Harold Franklin, of Shea’s Hippodrome, Buffalo.

But then, this issue is no exception to the fifty-one others in a year. Last week, for example, there were S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis; Sam W. B. Cohen, of the Liberty, Spokane; H. C. Horater, of the Alhambra, Toledo.

If the roster of big exhibitors who swear by Motion Picture News and cooperate with it were to write to Mr. Goldfish or Mr. Zukor or Mr. Fox declaring that their pictures were the greatest on the market there would be oodles of advertising and forty-one hand springs over the fact.

And these showmen say more of Motion Picture News.

Which is why the executives are learning to say, “Use the News alone for the big advertising splash.”

The News of the Week

Just when the wise boys were counting Hearst out, and wondering where he would get a news pictorial release, C. F. Zittel places his name on the dotted line of a contract that gives Hearst the popular Universal Animated Weekly and Current events.

Thus making the first of two real news event of a comparatively dull week and beating the Kaiser’s surrender by two days.

There isn’t much else in the way of news.

The United War Drive is in full swing, New York’s exhibitors have sent a tax protest to the Senate Finance Committee, W. W. Hodkinson has written an open letter, Herbert Lubin and A. H. Sawyer have thrown their hat in the ring with S-L Pictures, the Film Clearing House is alive and kicking.

Perhaps there is also news that General Film didn’t take over any distribution system this week. But, at the last minute comes the news that Affiliated has taken over Mutual.

Our Service Department

CONTEMPORARY wants to know why the ban on new releases has been extended for another week.

He gets very heated over the fact—one might be led to think that he thought the advertising ban had been extended.

But a sincere desire for knowledge should not go unanswered. So we say:

The ban was extended another week because it was plain good business to do so.

The manufacturers have stood a terrible loss for several weeks; some are not in very good shape to stand it. The only prospect for relief is in continuing with decreased overhead while older pictures bring in some money.

And if the committee had listened to some of the producers the ban would have been extended, not one more week, but four more weeks!

Our Old Friend "Anonymous"

Do you remember that anonymous letter we published a few weeks ago from a film salesman who protested against the laying off of exchange employees during this crisis?

We have received an anonymous letter of thanks for publishing the letter, and also another anonymous communication, saying:

Read the letter of 'Anonymous' and agree with him. But please say a good word for Goldwyn. They kept us all on the payroll here and working as hard as we could. And believe me, we'll work harder than ever now.

About "The Complete Plan Book"

Why don't you talk more about your "Complete Plan Book" idea, boost it, ballyhoo it?" said an advertising manager to us the other day. "It's the best thing I've seen yet, and you must have two score of letters from exhibitors there.

He was sitting in our office and had just glanced over a few letters of praise that happened to be on the desk.

Then we told him:

We are trying an experiment in salesmanship. For a year we let you see in our column some of the letters we received from exhibitors, big and little, about our Exhibitor Service Bureau; we printed scores of the testimonials that came after we started the Harrison Exhibitor-to-Exhibitor Reviews; we published many of the communications that praised our enterprise in starting the Box Office Reports; we let you read what exhibitors in the Central States and on the West Coast thought of our sub-divisions—trade papers in themselves—for those sections.

Of course these words "from the firing line" had their effect—or else MOTION PICTURE NEWS would not be publishing several hundred pages more of advertising in the year than its nearest competitor.

But still many of the companies keep on handing out their copy as though it were charity, with little thought to the relative value of the mediums.

So we have tried an experiment in salesmanship.

We knew you all had four weeks off to read—so we have let The Complete Plan Book sell itself, along with the rest of the News.

And though we are not supposed to say anything for a few weeks, we can almost tell you now that it has succeeded.

Dealing in Personalities

It happened at one of the Monday meetings of the Producers' and Distributors' Committee.

All our most important presidents, general managers and treasurers were comparing notes on the rental collections received that morning from the various exchanges.

Off in one corner sat Richard A. Rowland, president of Screen Classics and Metro. A worried look was in his eye—a frown on his face.

"Why so solemn, Dick?" asked one of the others.

"Oh, nothing. Only the Bufalopha exchange sent in $700 this morning and I'm wondering whether it was for rental collections or whether they sold out the whole blame exchange, lock, stock and barrel."

We hasten to print this picture. For a cancellation is threatened. Here it is:

"Dear Editors: Please to cancel my subscription and do it damn quick. I always thought you were friend of picture industrious and now I read in Houston paper where 'Al' Smith is running for Governor, New York, and I ain't never seen it in News. I think if Albert Smith runs for Governor—au and all film industrious should support him and do it big and stronger. Both because he is a picture man from start of game and because his Vitagraph pictures always make money for me. Yours truly—Grand Hippodrome theatre, Delpho, Texas."

"P. s.—Please be sure to continue cancelling my subscription every week."

A STROLL along Broadway rewarded us. We met James E. McBride, former New York Civil Service Commissioner and now assistant to General Manager Sheehan of Fox.

"Why the hurry," we asked. "We thought you were doing the lessening act these days—with the business shut down for five weeks!

"Loafing nothing!" snorted Mr. McBride. "Not while there is a charity drive and William Fox is alive and kicking. We're working like beavers on this United War Work drive—and just watch the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Committee go over the top.

"So long! Got to meet Theodore Mitchell at four o'clock. He's handling the publicity. Just watch us."

But all we could watch was his smoke.

R. H. COCHRANE gave us a solid hour of his time last week just to talk the weather and general film conditions.

And, as we left the Universal office, he was kind enough to say, "Call again!"

Earlier in the day we had dropped in for a talk with Fred Warren of Goldwyn, and had the good luck to meet Gabriel Hess, the likeable treasurer of that organization.

"Say," interrupted R. H., "there is one regular fellow. I like that man Hess, immensely."

Quinn Comments On Kleine Stand

[Editor’s Note—J. A. Quinn, of Quinn’s Rialto, read the following article at a recent meeting of the Southern California Theatre Owners’ Association. The large attendance present endorsed every word, and at a later meeting, Monday, November 4, adopted the following resolution:

WHEREAS, J. A. Quinn, a recognized authority on production and exploitation with a wide and varied experience as a successful exhibitor has proposed a system for the control and elimination of production and waste, and

WHEREAS, such movement has been found to possess merit worthy of the support of all exhibitors throughout the country,

Therefore, be it resolved that this Association extend to him its enthusiastic endorsement and full support of his plan for the betterment of conditions now existing.”]

EDITOR MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

I READ with great interest in your issue of October 19 the letter of George Kleine, suggesting certain radical changes in the Film industry and also the reply by Mr. Johnson, which, to say the least, was very apropos and I am quite sure that everyone in the industry generally knows and appreciates conditions will agree with Mr. Johnston’s criticisms.

For my part I am at a loss to figure out how a man who has been in the business as long as Mr. Kleine, could make suggestions that are not only impractical but, to a great extent, absurd.

Therefore, be it resolved that this Association extend to him his enthusiastic endorsement and full support of his plan for the betterment of conditions now existing.”

NOW in the first place I agree, and I am sure that the public agrees with Mr. Johnson, which he disputes Mr. Kleine’s statement that out of 1,300 features released in 1917 there were 1,000 good ones. I think that you could hit the right figure nearer by dividing that 1,000 by three.

Just stop and think—how many program pictures have you heard especial mention of in the past few years?

We heard a lot about “The Cheat,” a five-reeler featuring Fannie Ward, that was released about three years ago, and they are still talking about it. You heard special mention of Mary Pickford’s “Tess of the Storm Country” and recently of her “Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm” and “Stella Maris.” We heard a lot of favorable comment on “Revelation” with Nazimova.

These pictures not only caused favorable comment but were big box office winners and had more than enough return and extra bookings to offset the original cost of production.

Of course there are other pictures with these and other stars that have stood out and these mentioned are a few that just happened to come especially to the writer’s mind at this moment.

Now in the pictures mentioned were, as we all know, artists of unquestioned ability who possess not only personality but the art of interpreting parts in an artistic manner, and it has not been their lack of ability to deliver the goods that has been at fault— it has been poor stories, bad direction, and other rank mismanagement that accounts for the fact that a comparatively small number of their pictures receive special praise.

A very striking example of how people are starving for good pictures was illustrated in the showing of “Hearts of the World” this picture has been going over in a tremendous way with record runs with prices up to $2.50, and although it has been shown for about fourteen weeks at Clune’s Auditorium in Los Angeles, a, 3,000-seat house, to big crowds, it has not finished its drawing power in the city yet, especially at popular prices, so that the masses could see it. The business representative approached me to show me the pictures on Broadway in my Rialto theatre, insisting, however, that I should raise my prices to scale from 25 cents to $1.50. This I declined to do.

NOW let us analyze “Hearts of the World” as a production—and ask ourselves if there is any reason the “poor public,” who have been so patiently standing for the many mediocre pictures that have been inflicted on it, should be held up every time a good picture is made?

It was a well directed, well timed picture and D. W. Griffith is justified in all the praise he is getting for it, but with all due credit to the cast, headed by Bobby Herron, whom I like very much, on and off the screen, and the public does also—just think of that picture without the characterization as portrayed by Dorothy Gish. This little lady will never be forgotten for her work in “Hearts of the World,” and if you take her personality and characterization out of this picture there would be an irreparable gap.

Now I contend that we should get more pictures of an equal calibre to “Hearts of the World,” not necessarily taken in France (7), and the masses, whom motion pictures depend upon

Theatres Emerge from Dark Period

Stop, Look and Listen Still the Watchword, But Exhibitors Look for Normal Business Within Short Time—Theatres Present New Appearance

While caution is the standard by which the theatres of the country are gradually emerging from their Rip Van Winkle period occasioned by the influenza, reports from the four corners of the States this week indicate that exhibitors are looking for normal business within a short time. Health boards have issued many permits to theatres to reopen, from Maine to the West Coast and the South. St. Paul appears to be the only city running contrary to form, the theatres of that city being ordered to close the week of November 4 after remaining open while the rest of the country was closed. It is reported St. Paul was the last city to close.

Reports from other cities carry the unanimous message that the conditions are rapidly coming around to normal. Theatres which have been closed, for the most part, have been redecorated and fixed up anew during the inactive period.

Richmond and Vicinity in Ring Again

After it had been reported from Richmond, Va., that the theatres there would remain closed at least another week, after being closed since October 5, it was decided upon by the authorities to lift the Richmond ban November 5. On that date all theatres were permitted to reopen and the taboo mark was taken off public gatherings. Regular performances were being given, at last reports, to large and enthusiastic audiences, which would tend to show that the exhibitors of the United States can expect to come back much stronger than they went away.

Ogden, Utah, on November 8 expected to get back in harness November 10, but up to press time no definite announcement had been made from that city in regard to the reopenings. It was reported that the influenza situation was greatly improved, and exhibitors felt sure they would not be required to keep their theatres closed longer.

San Francisco, Cal., although optimistic, did not expect the exhibitors to reopen their theatres before November 16, and possibly not until a week later than that. The ban on theatres in Indianapolis was lifted November 1, and practically all the houses in the state were in operation by November 6. This places Indiana in the class to resume business first, and from all indications the exhibitors expect to make up for lost time.

Milwaukee Cautions as Theatres Reopen

Reports from Milwaukee carry the news that the influenza ban was lifted in that city November 4 with prospects of big business. All exhibitors, however, have been warned against overcrowding, as has also the public. Despite this precaution it was expected that the fans would turn out big.

Most of the Milwaukee theatres have been redecorated and many alterations made, with the result that the health commissioner is said to have announced that health and sanitary conditions in the theatres are excellent. Exhibitors are of the opinion that the enforced close was a good thing for the theatres, and that business will be greatly increased.

The health department of Harrisburg, Pa., gave its permission to reopen the motion picture theatres of that place November 9. Pittsburgh and surrounding territory also reopened the same day. No reports have been received as to how the public is receiving the pictures since the shutdown, but it is not thought likely that Pennsylvania will be different from the other states in boosting business considerably.

From Wisconsin it was reported that the lifting of the influenza ban was left entirely to municipalities. Many had reopened November 8, according to advices from Madison, and it was expected the whole state would be well under way by this week. Influenza conditions are greatly improved. Lacrosse motion picture theatres were among the first in the state to reopen, getting under way November 1.

But one report was received of a city closing, and that was St. Paul, which withstood the epidemic for several weeks while other cities were closed. There has been no indication as to when the theatres of St. Paul will be reopened.

TAX ON FILM
Exhibitor Is Not To Be Taxed on Positive Film

The distributor and not the exhibitor must bear the excise tax of 10 per cent on film rentals.

On October 31 the Senate Finance Committee in Washington changed the basis of taxation on film as carried in the Revenue Bill when passed by the House.

The House had fixed the tax on the aggregate value of the film but the Senate Committee made it "10 per cent on moving picture films containing a picture ready for projection." The distributor is responsible and the tax is based and levied on the collections received.

Section Reports

Springfield, Ill.—Theatres of Springfield reopened Friday, November 8.

Cleveland, O.—Conditions here is receding. Commissioner Rottenber offered hopes of opening all theatres November 5, but disfavored zone openings. Reports indicate that the local houses cannot survive prolonged closing.

Seattle, Wash.—The influenza situation in Seattle is reported as much better. It was expected the shows would reopen November 9 or 10. People are still wearing their gas masks.

Butte, Mont.—Indications are that the influenza situation is well under control. It was the opinion of the authorities that the ban placed on theatres and public assemblages would be lifted during the week of November 10.

San Diego, Cal.—Conditions here are improving daily. The City Council conferred November 6 with military medical officers, looking to an early lifting of the ban on amusements and motion picture theatres.

Spokane, Wash.—The Spokane situation on November 6 remained doubtful in so far as the theatres are concerned. It was predicted the houses would not be permitted to reopen within three or four weeks from that date. Every person in the state has been ordered to wear a mask. Schools are not figuring on reopening for another month.

Madison, Wis.—The ban has been lifted in practically all sections of Wisconsin with the exception of a few. Madison was permitted to reopen November 7. People are hesitant in a measure to enter public places, but exhibitors are striving to offset this feeling by making improvements in the way of ventilation that will remove all fear.

Detroit, Mich.—Detroit motion picture theatres reopened November 6 by special permission of Governor Sleeper. The balance of the state reopened November 8.

Cincinnati, O.—The complex influenza situation was the cause of postponing the reopening of the Cincinnati theatres until November 10. Kentucky suburbs will reopen this week. Dayton houses were permitted to reopen November 3.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—The influenza crisis has passed, is the opinion here, and the date band ordered to be lifted November 10. Local theatres were prepared to reopen November 8.

ELGIN, ILL.—Theatres opened here November 5.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—The ban on motion picture theatres was lifted at noon on November 4.

LANSING, MICH.—The ban on public meetings and theatres in Michigan was lifted the week of November 5.

Rochester Reopens After Four Weeks Off

After earnest pressure on the part of theatrical men of Rochester, N. Y., the health authorities of that city lifted the ban against theatrical entertainments, to take in effect on Electric Night, November 5. The theatres had been closed for four weeks, lacking one day, the closing order coming from Commissioner of Public Safety Hamilton as soon as the influenza epidemic showed its head in the city. The promise had been made that the departure would be a complete one, and that Theatre Owners' Association had been chiefly responsible for keeping the epidemic within bounds, so that Rochester escaped much more lightly than most other cities. The total number of cases recorded up to Monday, November 4, was 11,886, and the total deaths were 604. With the disease showing unmistakable signs of abating, orders for the reopening of all schools, theatres, churches, saloons, and other public places were issued.

It is understood that action of the commissioner was hastened by a visit that a delegation of theatrical men paid him last week, in which the situation was presented to him strongly and the serious loss that the theatres were facing was emphasized. Manager W. S. Wolff, manager of the Lyceum theatre, headed the delegation, and explained that theatres of the city were facing a weekly financial loss of well above $40,000 and that great hardship was worked upon members of theatrical companies booked to play the city. It was pointed out further that other cities, including Syracuse and Philadelphia, which had suffered far more heavily than Rochester, were allowed to reopen a week sooner than Rochester and without fatal results.

Buffalo in Full Swing Once More

BUFFALO.—The influenza ban is off and all Buffalo theatres have reopened to tremendous business, proving the statement of one leading exhibitor that it was just as well to close the house during the epidemic. It is expected that the increased business will soon make up for the losses suffered during the closing period. Health Commissioner Franklin Gram opened the town two days earlier than was expected, with the result that exhibitors had to do some tall hustling to book pictures for Friday, the opening day. Most houses opened with the films which they had been showing the Thursday that the ban was clamped down. The motion picture houses of course, got the jump on the legitimate houses, the larger of which did not open until Monday, November 4. The two burlesque houses, the Gayety and the Garden, opened on Friday, because their attractions had been laying over in town during the closing period. The Academy, which as a rule offers stock, musical comedy and pictures, opened with pictures only, showing for three days "Italy's Flaming Front," to capacity audiences. The Palace theatre opened with first run Paramount features and for the first time in several years advertised in the local amusement sections. Manager Ira M. Mosher also boosted his admission prices from 15 to 20 cents, including the war tax.

During the closing period local houses have been thoroughly renovated and re-decorated and it seems just like the reopening of a new season. All is bright and glistening and Shea's vaudeville house when it opens Monday night will unveil a new interior, consisting of new hangings, new curtain, new decorations and new carpeting.

Pennsylvania Names Counties Now Open

HARRISBURG, PA., Nov. 4.—Announcement was made by State Health Commissioner Royer today of the dates on which the influenza ban will be lifted in nineteen additional counties of Pennsylvania. With the addition of these counties, orders lifting the restrictions have now been made in 53 of the 64 counties, 14 counties having previously been notified.

Today's announcement states that beginning on Thursday noon, November 7, the closing order will cease to be effective in Bradford, Potter, Warren, Venango and Tioga counties. Beginning on Friday, November 8, at noon, the following counties will be freed from the quarantine: Beaver, Bedford, Butler, Cameron, Clearfield, Crawford, Erie, Huntingdon, Lawrence, Mercer, Mifflin, Somerset, Susquehanna and Wayne.

There are a few of these counties, however, in which the ban remains in certain sections, namely, Hyndman borough, Broadtop and Liberty townships, Bedford county; Osecola Mills, Clearfield county; Robertsdale and Three Springs, Huntingdon county; Forest City, Susquehanna county, and Bloomsburg and Arnot, Tioga county.

Tampa Reopens

The epidemic conditions in Tampa, Fla., show such great improvements that the mayor issued a statement that all restrictions would be removed on Monday, November 4, unless there should be a change for the worse.

Theatres have been closed tight since October 8, and stores have been allowed to operate only between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

St. Paul Takes the Count at Last Minute

St. PAUL, MINN.—The last of the big cities of the Middle West and West to keep its theatres open despite influenza has succumbed to the cause and on Sunday, November 3, Mayor L. C. Hodgson, City Health Commissioner Simon met with representatives of the Citizens Committee and decided to check the spread of the malady within the city by drafting drastic measures. For three weeks St. Paul has kept up a spirit of hopefulness that closing theatres would not be necessary and Dr. Simon published notices warning people against influenza, telling them how to protect themselves and stating that the city was only being forced to do it because of the health authorities. But the malady has greatly increased in number, hence Dr. Simon's suggestion that the closing order be considered by the Citizens' body was adopted.

Sunday's meeting brought out the decision to close theatres, saloons, soda fountains, dance halls, billiard halls, bowling alleys and various other places where people might mingle and contract the disease.

Monday, November 4, the mayor, health commissioner and Citizens' committee members were scheduled to meet again and decide within the closing order that would best suit the city.

Theatregoers voluntarily offered to close their doors immediately and it is expected that the lid will go on Tuesday, November 5.

It was expected that Minneapolis theatres and other places of amusement might open Sunday, November 10, but it is possible that the placing of the lid on St. Paul's show houses may give Minneapolis health officials reason for postponing the Minneapolis lid lifting.

Fairbanks Gets Into War Work Campaign

It was announced last week that Douglas Fairbanks, the Arterfact star, has been appointed Special Publicity Representative for National Activities in the United War Work Campaign. With the emphasis being given a star and publicity man, Fairbanks pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 of the $170,500,000 scheduled for the drive, which opened November 11th.

St. John Puts New Tax on Exchanges

Exchange managers of St. John, N. B., have been having a wild time on account of a move on the part of the authorities of St. John to impose various new forms of special taxation. The immediate result of the proposals has been the ordering of the exchange branches to move to Moncton, N. B., where the civic officials have already secured a suitable building to accommodate the offices and have guaranteed a fixed assessment for the next ten years. The decision to order the removal of exchange branches to Moncton was reached at a conference of exchange men in Toronto, who acted on reports from their respective branch managers.

St. John wants to collect a special license fee from the exchanges and to charge a fee of $1 on all reels censored by the Province when the reels belong to a corporation or person not represented in the Province of New Brunswick. No other city in Canada now requires a special license fee from exchanges, and it is feared that if St. John were allowed to gain the point many other cities of the Dominion would see the necessity of imposing an annual tax on film exchange branches in their cities.

Pathe Releases First "Win War" Film

Arrangements were made some time ago by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, with Pathe for the production of a series of one-reel pictures from scenarios furnished by the committee to be known as "Winning the War" series, showing the tremendous home activities directed to this purpose. The first of the series was scheduled for release the week of November 10 and is called "The United States Boys Working Reserve Solves the Great Farm Problem."

Sliter Chosen Foreign Film Commissioner—Goes Abroad Shortly

Fred G. Sliter, manager of the New York branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed foreign film commissioner by the Committee on Public Information and sails in November for his new post abroad. His resignation as branch manager for the Mutual became effective November 1.

Mr. Sliter came to New York August 1 of this year as manager of the Mutual exchange from Albany where he had been branch manager for two years. He has been in the Mutual organization since 1914, when he became a salesman in the Albany territory. In two years he became the branch manager.

Washington Favors Picture Industry

The campaign instituted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to obtain an expression of opinion from the candidates for the House of Representatives and the U. S. Senate relative to their feeling toward the motion picture industry is meeting with an enthusiastic response.

Letters are pouring in with every mail and up to the present time every expression of opinion received has been favorable. The replies received state positively and unequivocally that the writers are opposed to any legislation that would prove detrimental to the motion picture or to the motion picture industry.

These replies show conclusively the strides that have been made by the business during the last two years. When a campaign of like nature was carried on last the Congressional election two years ago numerous replies were received which were exceedingly strenuous in their opposition to the motion picture. This year the reverse is true and the replies are enthusiastically favorable.

Every Little Bit Helps a Lot in Tobacco Fund

Though the amount be small, our boys across the water will appreciate the smokes just as much as though each gift originated from a thousand dollars.

Motion Picture News this week is in receipt of a check for $1.02 which is to be added to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." The following names, with their individual donations, accompanied the check: Nels Anderson, Olson and Anderson, Oakland, Neb., 25 cents; Miss Henrietta Delatère, Oakland, 25 cents; Miss Anna Larson, Oakland, 25 cents, and the Majestic theatre, Oakland, 27 cents.

H. A. Larson is proprietor of the Majestic theatre in Oakland, Neb.
Hearst-Universal-Mutual in Big Deal

Hearst's International News Purchases Animated Weekly and Current Events from Universal and Buys Screen Telegram from Mutual—Universal Will Distribute

A COMBINATION of four of the greatest news reels in the world was effected when Hearst's International purchased Universal Animated Weekly and Universal Current Events from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and bought the Screen Telegram from the Mutual Film Corporation.

The four will be combined and released under the title of "Hearst International News" beginning December 25th, at which time the name Pathé will be dropped from the Hearst organization as the old arrangement expires on that date.

Universal exchanges will do the distributing for Hearst's new amalgamation of news services, while the increased array of camera men will be augmented by the news gathering facilities of the Hearst newspapers and staff throughout the world.

First Issue Christmas Day

"The first issue of the 'Hearst International News' under its newly christened old name, will come on Christmas Day," said C. F. Zittel, vice-president and general manager of the International News Service Company. "The wonderful news gathering facilities of the Hearst newspapers and film organization has always been responsible, in my opinion, for the news in the news reel, and, during the time of its affiliation with Pathé, all the negatives have been supplied by the Hearst Company."

The Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events and the Screen Telegram of the Mutual Company have long held their place in the highest rank in the news pictorial field. Under the guidance of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, the Animated Weekly was established six years ago and was probably the first news subject to be organized in America. Current Events was founded soon after the Animated Weekly had gained its foothold and soon became equally popular.

Carl Laemmle, one of the most noted figures in the industry, since he became the president of the Universal when it was founded back in 1912, has made of it one of the biggest releasing and distributing organizations in the country, with exchanges in about forty of the leading cities of the country, so from a distributing standpoint the Hearst International News will be in a very excellent position.

Jack Cohn Was Active

Jack Cohn, generally regarded as one of the foremost editors of such service, and who in point of continuous record, is the oldest news pictorial director in the business, developed the two Universal reels from their infancy six years ago to the position they now hold. It is said that Mr. Cohn received a flattering offer from Hearst's International News, in connection with the transfer, to join the purchasing organization, but up to now has not decided what his future arrangements will be. It was understood that he might continue with the Universal, and devote daring and "scoops" punctuate the history of the weeklys.

The record of these exploits in many cases reads like fiction. Cohn's film that served Universal poked their noses into the first scenes of the war, and later dared all its hurricane of hail, according to report.

A Universal cameraman recorded the burial of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his consort, which was the very first spark of the world conflict. Others in the weekly service shouldered their instruments among the invaders of Belgium, France and Russia. They registered on celluloid the bombardment of Liege, Namur and Verdun, and afterwards shouldered their way back over the shell-wrecked, blood-soaked ground and wrote the visual history of the Hun's defeat.

And at home, these scouts for the Universal turned cranks in the glare of flames that painted the sky over many a munition plant torched by spies. Fires, wrecks, pageants, parades, funerals, celebrations, weddings and burials have poured in the spirit form of photography on screens for the Animated Weekly and Current Events.

It was the Animated Weekly which is said to have performed for the first time in the history of such service, the feat of putting a news event on the screen the same day it happened. Since then that achievement has often been accomplished, and the public interest has been educated to expect scenes within a few hours of their occurrence.

Screen Telegram Passes

The Screen Telegram was started by Mutual after the Gaumont franchise had terminated. It developed quite a staff of cameramen and was issued twice a week by the Mutual exchanges.

E. B. Hattrick, the man who knows more about the news reel game than any other man in the business, according to a Hearst official, and who is said to be directly responsible for the building up of the camera forces that made the Hearst-Pathé and the Pathé-Mutual such potent factors in the field, will be in full charge of the new Hearst International News and he is said to be now busily engaged in planning a campaign and placing his lieutenants in a manner that will assure every little corner of the earth being covered.

This news reel, according to Mr. Zittel, will be treated from a newspaper rather than a showman's standpoint and it will be the endeavor of the International to give the people the world's most engrossing, two-minute news in an appealing, "newsy" way.

It will also contain, in animated form, the cartoons of the Hearst newspaper artists such as Hal Coffman, Tom A. Powers, Winsor McCay and Harry Murphy. It will have behind it the tremendous publicity power of the Hearst newspapers and magazines.

While in the beginning it will only be issued semi-weekly, owing to present market conditions, in the very near future, the officials declare, that it will develop into a daily.
Affiliated Interests Control Mutual!

Chicago, Ill. (Special).—Messrs. Brink and Clark, who organized and represent the capital interested in Affiliated Distributors Corporation, have announced here that they completed the purchase on Wednesday of the Mutual Film Corporation. The deal carries with it the financial control of the distributing organization and will mean that all Affiliated productions will be distributed to its members through the Mutual offices.

No announcement has been made as yet concerning the policy to be followed on other Mutual productions now being distributed through that organization.

OTHER LAST MINUTE NEWS
Reports current Thursday stated that The Film Clearing House, of which Frank Hall is now the general manager, had taken over the George Kleine offices in all cities where they have been established. George Kleine last week announced that the distribution of his subjects would in future be through General Film, with Kleine representatives in each office.

The Film Clearing House deal apparently takes the discontinued offices from George Kleine’s hands.

Another Thursday report declared that Col. William N. Selig had completed the sale to Exclusive Features of the negatives on Tom Mix subjects. The purchase included short subjects and two five-reelers.

War Review One-Sheets for All Post Offices

One million of the new one sheets of the Official War Review, distributed by Pathé, will be given a most thorough posting.

It will carry its message to the remotest hamlet and will be displayed in the 40,000 post offices of the United States and its possessions, in every public building, city, state and federal, and in railroad stations.

Rothapfel Engages Youths

Managing Director Rothapfel of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, has set a precedent in New York theatres by engaging forty young men without previous experience for positions as ushers. Classes of instruction are held each day, and the boys who make good are raised as their ability warrants it.

Lustig in Bridgeport

David J. Lustig of Bridgeport, Conn., is now manager of the Empire theatre in that city.

In conjunction with his managerial position he also holds the photoplay and dramatic editorship of the Bridgeport Evening Post, the leading evening paper in Connecticut.

Another Liberty Theatre

It was announced this week that Fort Benjamin Harrison, near Indianapolis, is to have a Liberty theatre seating 2,000. The building will be similar in construction to Liberty theatres in other large camps.

Turner Also Victim

It was reported by wire from San Francisco on November 5 that Mr. Turner, of Turner and Dahmen, died November 4.

Influenza Takes Toll of Many in Industry

During the past week two World Pictures salesmen passed away with the influenza. They were Arthur Thompson, Chicago, and Dale P. Hill, Kansas City. Under the group insurance plan recently adopted by World Pictures each family will receive a substantial sum of money from the Aetna Life Insurance Company with whom the World insured all of its employees, free of charge to the employees themselves.

Henry Ludden, mailing clerk at the headquarters office of General Film Company in New York City, was doubly bereaved during the height of the influenza epidemic by the loss of his father and mother within six days. Both parents died in the last week of October.

The funeral of Miss Christy Walker, well known in the motion picture profession as an actress of ability and promise, who died from influenza, was held from her home 601 West 137th street.

Besides her husband, Capt. H. N. Walker of the U. S. Chemical Warfare Service, stationed at the American University, Washington, and her two-year-old son, Carter Walker, Miss Walker is survived by her mother, who came on from Birmingham to attend the funeral.

One of the most recent deaths within the industry, although pneumonia is not blamed, is that of Wm. J. Shea on November 6. He was a Vitaphone player and said to be the oldest actor in films, in point of service.

Darling Expected Home

Joseph R. Darling, representative of the Fox Film Corporation in the Far East, is expected home next month, according to word received from him this week.

Mr. Darling, who has made an extended stay in the Orient, recently left Shanghai on his way to Batavia in the interests of the Fox organization.

Harold Edel Dies of Pneumonia

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre in New York, died at 7 o'clock Saturday evening, November 2, at his home in Manhattan, a victim of influenza. His death came as a distinct shock to the motion picture industry, as it was not supposed his condition was serious. Mr. Edel was born in Greenville, S. C., and was twenty-nine years old. He succeeded S. L. Rothapfel at the Strand when the latter left to assume the management of the Rialto theatre.

Mr. Edel is survived by a wife and child, the former of whom was ill of influenza at the time of her husband’s death.

Labor Department Boosts Pictures

To encourage and promote the exhibition of motion pictures in an educational way in the schools throughout the country, the U. S. Department of Labor is sending out from its New York office a letter and questionnaire to superintendents of schools.

In regard to the work the department has undertaken, a part of the letter reads as follows: “This attempt to develop the educational possibilities of the motion picture in class-room work is under the supervision of your government. Too long has this valuable aid in the field of Americanization been neglected. The motion picture industry is ready. The next step is up to you.”

Simone at Albany

Charles Simone, General Film Company branch manager at New Haven, Conn., has just been transferred to a larger office of the company at Albany, N. Y., which he will manage. Mr. Simone had been in charge of the New Haven branch several months, and is a film man of much experience in and about New York City.
Cleveland Exchanges Form Civic Committee

At a recent meeting of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, a standing committee was appointed called the Civic Committee. This committee will cooperate with any civic body or organization in the territory, whereby any municipal activity may be benefited by reaching the public directly via the screen. Inasmuch as the Board of Exchange Managers is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce, and is in close touch with all exhibitors, all public matters are certain of receiving careful consideration if properly presented to this committee. W. E. Lusk, secretary of the First National Exhibitors' Company, was appointed chairman of the committee. His associates are H. A. Bandy, Goldwyn manager; George W. Erdman, Fox managers; Jack Conant, General manager; C. E. Thompson, World manager, and Sam E. Morris, who, as president of the board, will act as a member in an ex-officio capacity.

Film Division Names Special Representatives

A number of special representatives of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, have been named, and have assumed their duties in connection with the Bureau of Domestic Distribution. They are: H. J. Marshall, Atlanta; J. L.; Boston; M. F. Hasker, Buffalo; M. J. Sullivan, Chicago; J. G. Conner, Indianapolis; J. P. Taylor, Salt Lake City; Ned Thatcher, New Orleans; Russell Shanihan and Sydney Speedon, New York City; Ellis A. Woolf, Pittsburgh; J. F. McLaughlin, St. Louis; Frank Coffinberry, Seattle; Lee Crandall, Washington, D. C.; J. A. Needham, Cleveland.

All the cities named are centers of districts which the special representatives will cover for the picture output of the Division of Films.

Directors Host to Cinema Camera Club

The Motion Picture Directors' Association gave a chicken dinner November 5, in the evening, to the members of the Cinema Camera Club, at Castle Cave, in Seventh avenue, New York. Charles Giblyn was toastmaster. I. Searle Dawley responded for the directors and Lewis Physioc for the cameramen.

The affair was very much of a novelty in the way of decorations and favors, the surprises being many.

Hodkinson Writes a Letter

EDITOR'S NOTE—W. Hodkinson comes forward this week to assert that the industry is not suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as from the so-called uneconomic conditions which have been cited by various persons within the industry from time to time.

"Although Mr. Hodkinson does not say anything wholly new, he nevertheless presents it in a new way, and the letter will no doubt be of interest to every producer and distributor in the business.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, New York City, October 25, 1918.
Mr. T. G. Gillis, Treasurer, Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Gillis:

OPEN LETTER TO THE ENTIRE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

I wish to take this opportunity of presenting the following open letter to the trade through the medium of your journal:

The motion picture industry, particularly the producing and distributing ends, are suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as they are from the uneconomic basis on which they are operating.

The epidemic is merely serving to bring about regulations. The operation of economic laws would automatically bring about a later date and probably in a less drastic and spectacular manner than any resulting from a continuation of the shutdown.

"It is my belief impossible for a dozen producer concerns to give their adequate attention to production, and as a side line to efficiently run a distributing organization, and to comply with the new regulations of the bureau in regard to film shipping cases extended for a period of six months.

When the new regulations affecting the shipment of motion picture film were put into effect there was a provision that companies which had purchased the old style shipping cases prior to May 15, 1918, could continue to use them until December 1, 1918. Owing to war conditions and the difficulty in obtaining sheet iron, of which material the new cases must be made, it has been practically impossible for the exchanges throughout the country to obtain the new cases. As the period of grace expires in less than a month's time, an extension has been asked for until July 1, 1919.

Following is the letter requesting the extension addressed to W. S. Topping, chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives:

Seek Extension for Film Cases

National Association Asks Bureau of Explosives to Set Time Ahead Six Months Before New Regulations Go Into Effect

FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has entered into negotiations with the Bureau of Explosives relative to having the period when the motion picture companies must comply with the new regulations of the bureau in regard to film shipping cases extended for a period of six months.

When the new regulations affecting the shipment of motion picture film were put into effect there was a provision that companies which had purchased the old style shipping cases prior to May 15, 1918, could continue to use them until December 1, 1918. Owing to war conditions and the difficulty in obtaining sheet iron, of which material the new cases must be made, it has been practically impossible for the exchanges throughout the country to obtain the new cases. As the period of grace expires in less than a month's time, an extension has been asked for until July 1, 1919.

Following is the letter requesting the extension addressed to W. S. Topping, chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives:

Dear Mr. Topping:

"Referring to your revised regulations for the transportation of motion picture films and a note to paragraph 43, effective November 1, 1918, which provides that shipping containers complying with rule 43a, effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to May 15, 1918, may be used for shipment of motion picture films until December 1, 1918: I beg to advise that on account of conditions in the metal and labor market created by war requirements, the exchanges have been unable to secure a requisite supply of the new cases to comply with specification No. 32.

"They have, however, a large number of usable cases which they purchased in accordance with rule 43a above mentioned, and they request that the authority granted by the note to rule 43 be extended so as to permit the use of these cases as are securely closed and in good condition will be used for the distribution of motion picture films.

"Trust that the request for this extension will be promptly granted. I remain, Very truly yours,

"(Signed) FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT.

"Executive Secretary."

Owing to the short time remaining until December 1st, it is expected that the Bureau of Explosives will take prompt action on this request.
Submits Trailer to Help Fight Spread of Influenza

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Pittsburgh, Pa.
October 26, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: On October 8 my brother Isaac subscribed to your issue of General Blue of the Public Health Service to Motion Picture Theatre — the making of a trailer to help fight the spread of influenza, as follows:

This serious aspect of the Spanish influenza at this time it is suggested that since crowds congregate in Motion Picture Theatres, that the manufacturers co-operate in a campaign to guard the public against the spread of this epidemic.

Results may follow that would interfere with collecting of crowds anywhere unless precautions are taken. General Blue of the United States Public Health Service has suggested that small trailers of about 50 feet be made by all manufacturers and shown immediately along the following ideas:

Cover up each cough and sneeze.

If you don't, you'll spread disease.

And illustrate it as follows: A few feet showing men and women coughing carelessly allowing the spread of the germs. Preceded by a title, "The influenza, which was preceded by a man taking a picture of spreading diseases, preceded by a title, "Or This."

Then, tide, "Influenza, and this is a fact, it is a fact, telling them to wear a mask and to pick up strange fruits,

With variations to cover new ideas as they arise, which is what we refer to the demand of the public — so this suggestion was ignored for the reason that our costs are too high and followed the M. P. end of the Loan Advertisement was at a standstill. Nevertheless, you don't spread disease, you spread comfort.

IN THE CAUSE OF HUMANITY (if you do not run this in, you have the means of educating and benefiting our country, by making and using these trailers to educate our people how to fight the terrible disease. Fifty feet will do it — when you can be attached to all films used. It will help to open the theatre by showing what you will show, submitting copies of each for the Blue and Yellow School, and copies to Isaac Silverman, care American Film Institute, Seventh Avenue and forty-fifth N. W. Washington, D. C., both by special delivery. This will be highly commending that theatres be opened to educate the people how to avoid influenza and to keep them free from the same.

WILL YOU DO IT?

Kleine "Comes Back" at Editorial Carried in Recent Issues of Motion Picture World

George Kleine has addressed a letter to Moving Picture World, a trade publication, in reply to that paper's recent editorial in reference to the enforced shutdown of producers and exchanges. Mr. Kleine has mailed a copy of the letter to Motion Picture News, and we publish it below:

Kleine "Comes Back" at Editorial Carried in Recent Issues of Motion Picture World

George Kleine has addressed a letter to Moving Picture World, a trade publication, in reply to that paper's recent editorial in reference to the enforced shutdown of producers and exchanges. Mr. Kleine has mailed a copy of the letter to Motion Picture News, and we publish it below:

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

promoted by my letter to the Priorities Committee at Washington, and I assume that the reference to "A Chicago Distributor" is aimed at myself, and that your space is valuable; I'll make this brief as possible.

Mr. Hoff: "If it were not for the waste and lack of economy "— "Looking about the industry now, I see that the terminals are crying for a reduction of these criticisms are groundless." Fortunately, the level-headed business men who are engaged in this industry, who are well acquainted with the facts and a full knowledge of what they are doing, and doing what is in the interest of the success of their work."

In answer to Mr. Hoff's letter, I have twice consulted Noah Webster's dictionary in this article. Had Mr. Hoff been further removed, the editorial typewriter would not have miss-spelled "calculation," which means a drink and other things; when one speaks of a tail and calls it a "Caudle appendage," "Caudle" should be spelled "Caudle." Yours for the truth, wherever it hits.

(Signed) GEORGE KLEINE.

Another Exhibitor Has Trouble in Getting Any Liberty Loan Films to Show
From all sides come complaints from exhibitors that they were unable, during the Liberty Loan Drive, to secure any of the Liberty Loan films to show at their theatres in order to help the Allied powers to win the war. They have found their way into print. Below is another instance, and this exhibitor also expresses disappointment at not being able to get slides.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:

Referring to article in your magazine of October 16, I wish to congratulate you upon the campaign for the sale of Liberty Loans. We have had the same experience here. We were asked to make application for these films by the Film Exchanges that serve this territory and were both unable to receive them. We were given one date, October 12, but did not receive it; we then took the matter up with the Exchange and were given date of October 19, the closing date of the Loan Campaign. However, we never received the film. It seems the film could not be used in any great extent as most of the moving picture theatres were closed during this period on account of the influenza epidemic; however, we were in operation here and had no luck in getting slides on the Government Loans. On the Third Loan we were advised that these could be mailed us alike the Fourth. However, we were unable to receive the Film Exchanges.

We wish to say, however, that through our local department we were able to make a double our quota; we also give a good deal of credit to a number of patriotic pictures which we played into the theatre. We only need to say that these features, but were not able to show these. We, like Mr. Martin, feel that the theatre is not being given justice in the matter of the above subject.

Yours very truly,

PIPER, ALA.

WILLIAM RUSSELL.

Special Showings of War Pictures
Many religious organizations and clubs, it is reported, are applying to Director Charles Hart of the Liberty Loan Committee on Public Information, for special showings of "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the U. S. official war pictures.

The special showings of "Pershing's Crusaders" was at the second pre-convention rally of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union.
Industry Mobilized for the Big Drive

For the Current United War Work Drive with $170,500,000 as the Goal, the Motion Picture Industry Is Thoroughly Organized to Make An Aggressive Campaign

The Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Committee of the United War Work Campaign was prepared on November 11 to wage an aggressive campaign to reach the employers and employees in every branch of the motion picture industry for the limit of contributions in the current drive.

With such a phenomenal record established in the last Liberty Loan the industry has established a precedent which is hard to exceed. The slogan is not "Lend" this time. The urgent request is "Give."

This combined fund will be distributed among the several organizations which have played such a prominent and self-sacrificing part in helping to win the war: Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War Council, Jewish Welfare Board, War Camp Community Service, American Library Association and the Salvation Army.

One Day's Pay

It has been urged that every person connected in any capacity either directly or indirectly in the motion picture business, which of course also means the musicians, operators, ushers, etc., in the various theatrical companies in New York, should contribute at least one day's pay toward this most excellent cause.

As in the Red Cross Drive in New York, William Fox has been appointed Chairman of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team and George M. Cohan is associate chairman. Mr. Fox has again placed the Chairmanship of the Industrial Division in charge of Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Mr. Elliott appointed the following divisional directors to act on the committee with him:

Directors Appointed

These divisional directors will appoint a captain for each department in their company. These captains will appoint assistants from their departments. It shall be the duty of the captains to distribute the subscription blanks and obtain subscriptions from every employee in their department. They will make daily reports to their divisional directors, who in turn will make daily reports to Mr. Elliott as Chairman of the division.

Mr. Elliott will in turn make reports to Wm. Fox, who will in turn report to J. D. Rockefeller, Chairman of the campaign for New York.

Mr. Elliott received his appointment on Friday, and on Saturday letters were sent to all the executive heads of the motion picture distributing concerns requesting them to send divisional directors for their companies. They were requested to appoint captains of the home office, exchange, studios, laboratories, players, factory, and a captain for each branch office. In this way the entire subscription for each company will be kept intact and will not be divided as in the Red Cross Drive.

William Fox Active

Mr. Fox opened his campaign headquarters at No. 110 West 42d street, where huge floor space has been taken and hundreds of workers installed. Under Mr. Fox's leadership there has been mapped out an elaborate series of entertainments which it is hoped will realize more than one-half the amount to be collected.

On November 10 Mr. E. F. Albee presents a monster all star vaudeville bill at the Hippodrome, the proceeds of which are to be donated to the United War Work Campaign Funds. It is expected that some of the best known stage stars will participate.

A War Relics Exposition is being held at the 1st Field Artillery Armory, 68th street and Broadway, and at the 23d Regiment Armory, Bedford and Atlantic avenues, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, for eight days, starting Monday, November 11. War trophies gathered on the battlefields of Europe by the Allied armies for the U. S. Committee on Public Information, are shown. The entertainments are being staged by W. F. Hamilton, of the U. S. Committee on Public Information.

On Tuesday, November 12, at the Metropolitan Opera House a concert will be held, at which John McCormack, Maggie Teyte and Jacque Thibaud, will appear.

On Saturday afternoon, November 16, is a football game at the Polo Grounds between Princeton and Harvard, the proceeds of which are to be donated to the fund. Saturday night Charles Harvey will present an all star fistic and athletic tournament at Madison Square Garden, the proceeds of this to be donated to the fund. The crowning event of that day will be the great Victory Ball to be held at the Hotel Astor. It is expected that every one who's who in filmdom and the stage will be there.

Sunday night, November 17, the Friar's Club will give a Friar's Frolic at the Metropolitan Opera House under the auspices of George M. Cohan, the proceeds to be given to the Campaign Fund.

Fairbanks Will Help

Waving in his hand a newly-received appointment as Special Publicity Representative for National Activities just bestowed upon him by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Dr. John R. Mott, Commander Evangelistic Booth, of the Salvation Army, and Mott's son, Mr. George Fairbanks climbed to the top of a giant doughnut erected in camouflaged on the roof of the twenty-story headquarters of the United War Work Campaign, and there pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 of the $170,500,000 targeted for the drive which opens November 11.

Famous Players Gets Thanks from Washington

Further appreciation of the work that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been and is still doing for the government in furthering its war activities is contained in two letters which Treasurer Arthur S. Friend recently received. One of these letters is from Col. F. F. Russell, of the Surgeon General's Office, U. S. A., which states: "We are well aware of the services offered to the industry by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for its preparation of the film, "The End of the Road." This film was made at the Fifty-sixth Street studio a few weeks ago for the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities and is a companion picture to "Fit to Fight," which has been shown with salutary effect in cantonments all over the country, on board ship and at the training camps in France.

The second letter, from William H. Zinsser, Director of the Special Hygiene Division, Section of Men's Work of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, expresses thanks for the use of the Famous Players-Lasky projection room to show the film, "Fit to Fight," to Martin Conway, Director of the Draft in New York City.

Canadians Form New Association

An association composed of the principal officials of film distributing companies in Canada has been organized with J. J. Allen of Toronto as president. The vice-president is L. E. Quinter, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, and the secretary is James Travis of Toronto, Eastern Canadian general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The principal purpose of the new organization, the name of which has not been announced, is to watch legislative developments at Ottawa, the Canadian capital, and to secure a readjustment of the fifteen cents per reel per day tax which all exhibitors must now pay, regardless of size of theatre, location or other factors.

The new association will not interfere in any way with the work of existing exchange manager associations in Toronto, Montreal and other places or with existing exhibitor organizations.
The "Doughboys" of the Motion Picture Industry

A Brief

In Behalf of the Owners of Motion Picture Theatres (Exhibitors) in the United States

Prepared for the Finance Committee of the United States Senate by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York

The New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, representing approximately 500 exhibitors throughout the New York State, have submitted the following letter to the Finance Committee, the Senate, in behalf of the owners of motion picture houses, to submit for your serious consideration their solemn protest against the contemplated increase in taxes to be imposed upon the already overburdened owners of these theaters.

That this step is not taken in a spirit of slacking or slackening towards our Country in its hour of need, is evident from what these same men have done in the past, in carrying their share of the increased financial burdens of the Government and in thoroughly honoring every National call to their loyalty. When looking around for new sources of revenue for the Government, one would turn, not with alarm, but with confidence to the methods of the Motion Picture Industry, with its staggering figures of capital invested and profits derived. And at first glance it might seem as if the legitimate owners of the motion picture houses, creating the new existing taxes, had in mind to evenly tax production, exhibitors and patrons. But a matter of fact, developments have shown that the exhibitor has, unintentionally, we admits, been made the sacrifice.

We further submit that if the taxes as they now stand are doubled and trebled, they will become an added source of satisfaction to the small exhibitor is concerned. To pay double the amount of a seating tax, to pay a flat ten per cent tax, to pay double the special excise tax, would turn the small exhibitor over and above what it, he the small owner it would be a case of shutting down and losing his all.

The P투tility of the New Taxes as Revenuе Makers

The proposed new tax carries with itself the germ of defeating its own ends. It will fail of its purpose to increase the Government's revenue, because while raising it will only increase the taxes in dollars and cents it is bound to lower the number of tax payers.

Eighty per cent of the sixteen thousand motion picture houses throughout the United States and at least 90 per cent of the smaller houses and tax cannot exceed $250 per year. These eighty per cent are the backbone of the exhibiting end of the Motion Picture Industry. As demonstrated on the foregoing pages, the owners of the smaller houses can positively not stand any greater burdens than what they are now facing, and this new tax will put them out of existence. It will kill the birds that lay the golden eggs. And the larger houses will be but a shadow of their former self.

But aside from the question of revenue, there is the broader question of war time policies which should be taken into consideration. If it is true that in the last few days unprecedented wealth, millions of dollars which used to be spent for war stress and finance—and the Government has so declared—if it is true that motion pictures have had a tremendous effect in America, and that these houses have afforded the Government heretofore unknown means on an unprecedented scale for propaganda, in behalf of the strenghtened production of the War and in behalf of measures related thereto, such as the saving and conservation of food, appeals for help to the Red Cross, appeals for help to our soldiers, and so on, then there is a wise policy to cut the number of these motion picture houses down by fifty per cent and possibly more.

Conclusion

Drawing our conclusions from the foregoing statements and taking a survey of the entire question of taxing the Motion Picture Industry, we find ourselves confronted by what we would like to call a serious misconception on the part of the Motion Picture Industry in general and as to their taxability in particular.

Being the latest comer among the new industries, and having had a more rapid growth of wealth and status beyond what they may have anticipated, it is perhaps natural that the relative values of the different parts of the industry are not yet so accurately defined and distributed in their true proportions. The investment of fabulous sums of money in the creation of a new manufacturing industry must naturally have surrounded this part of the Industry with a glamour and a golden halo, dazzling to the outsider. It has resulted in desensitizing this part of the Industry as the substantial and essential interests and it has given to these in the eye of the general public a preponderance and standing which, to say the least, is exaggerated, if not wholly imaginary. In fact, this worship of the golden calf has put into the background the other end of the industry, the exhibitor. The exhibitor is the one who represents the exhibitor. It has almost put the stamp of negligible measurement upon the part which the exhibitor plays in the Industry, a part which is as vital to the survival of the entire Industry as anything else. Without the exhibitors, who have invested their capital in their effort in presenting the pictures to the masses of motion picture audiences, the entire Industry would not and could not exist. It should not be forgotten that these men, who build, or rent, and equip a moving picture show house, he the indispensable link between the creation and manufacture of film and the great public that pays its dimes and quarters to see the film.

In other words, we have called out the brass bands and bedecked our buildings with flags and banners and have strewn flowers upon the path of that great wonderful motion picture industry as represented by the millions and millions of satisfied patrons. We have given a thought to the thousands and thousands of little fellows, the exhibitors who with their all are bringing up the rear.

What would we say if the people would reserve their homage and their reverence for the owners of the Motion Picture Industry in the same way that we do for our ships of war, and the planes, and for our armed forces? And how would allow the humble doughboy, the regular motion picture house owner, to pass on these thoughts. The ownership of the last analysis is this humble doughboy who is carrying our message in the field and due to the ridicule. So, instead of the thousands and thousands of small owners are not as essential and just

Fullerton, Noted Ad Writer, Quits Motion Pictures

Motion pictures loses one of its best known figures in the departure of G. F. Fullerton, advertising writer for the son and von Herberg interests in Seattle. His advertising of the Coliseum, Liberty, Strand and Mission theatres has attracted the attention of the whole industry, and many times we have told you in these pages the success that he conducts in his exploitations, and "Your Idea and Ours" has included scores of specimens of his work.

Mr. Fullerton has left the motion picture game to enter the foreign field. Seattle is one of the principal ports of the country in export business, and Mr. Fullerton believes that after the war there are going to be great things happening, and so he has gone in on the ground floor.

New Independent Concern on West Coast

The Roy Stewart Feature Film Company is a new independent organization of Los Angeles, now at work on its first subject. Cliff Smith, who directed Stewart in a number of Triangle pictures, is serving in this capacity for the new company, which has begun the filming of "A Knight of the Range."

Josie Sedgwick is playing the feminine lead and Harry V. Meter is the heavy. Many of the cowboys who appeared with Stewart in other western subjects are now playing in his support. Space for the production of this first subject has been leased at the Triangle ranch near Santa Monica.

Anti-Black Dog Clubs Get Girl Members

Universal Film announces that girls are now joining many of the Anti-Black Dog Clubs, organized throughout the country with the avowed purpose of combating disloyalists. Reports received by the national headquarters of the Anti-Black Dog Clubs reveal that several clubs exclusively for girls are being formed in various cities.

The Anti-Black Dog Clubs are taking an active part in helping to arrange bookings for the feature picture "The Yellow Dog," which sets forth the mission of the clubs.

Harry Millarde Titled "Some Busy Director"

The title of "Some Busy Director" has been given Harry Millarde by several of his associates.

Mr. Millarde has been with the Fox Film Corporation for the last eighteen months and directs the productions of William Fox for June Caprice and Peggy Hyland. His latest pictures with June Caprice have been "Blue Eyed Mary" and "Little Miss Innocence."

"Bonnie Annie Laurie" and "Caught in the Act," starring Peggy Hyland, were also late Fox productions directed by Harry Millarde.

MADE EPIDEMIC BOOST HIS THEATRES

Soriero Stayed on the Job and the Result Was That His Two Houses Got High Endorsement

ALTHOUGH Thomas D. Soriero had his Park theatre in Boston and his Strand in Lowell closed along with the others during the influenza epidemic, he saw to it that the theatres were given the very highest standing in the two cities and the result was that when they did reopen they were jammed to the doors while other houses were complaining of poor business.

In Lowell Mr. Soriero wrote an open letter to the newspapers and then took the matter up with the Board of Health with the result that an examination of the theatres followed and the Strand was given a complete bill of health and praised as a perfect house. Of course, Mr. Soriero let everyone in the city know of this fact through the newspapers and his mailing list.

In Boston he went before the health board, but realizing that his plea would have more weight with the aid of Dr. York, one of the most noted medical experts in all New England, he had him appear to make the fight that eventually resulted in the theatres being allowed to reopen. Dr. York explained to the board the ventilating system and arrangement of the Park theatre and then pointed out that not one employee of the house had suffered in the epidemic. Dr. York's endorsement of the theatre was printed in all the newspapers and sent to the patrons.

Besides this by working at nights and going around the city in his auto Mr. Soriero found that many street cars were idle and got these put into play. The result that over-crowding was stopped. He offered the service of all his employees to the board of health.

In other words while other managers were taking a rest Mr. Soriero was on the job looking after the widest interests of his theatres.

C. Milliken Joins S-L Pictures

Conrad Milliken Has Become Associated with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin in the Recently Organized S-L Pictures

MESSRS. SAWYER AND LUBIN have announced the completion of arrangements whereby Conrad Milliken has become associated with them in the development of their motion picture enterprises. Mr. Milliken was formerly vice-president of Pickford Pictures, Inc., and the Petrova Picture Company.

From their office in the Longacre building the following statement was obtained from Mr. Milliken: "You may say for me that I am delighted with the new association and have the greatest hope of its future. My association with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin is the result of various satisfactory business dealings in the past, during the course of which I have come to have the very highest regard for their judgment and abilities."

"I believe that each of them has much to give to the motion picture industry and to the solution of its problems. Their energy and activity have become a byword in the trade during the last year in which it has been my privilege to be in close touch with their work and plans.

"The fine projects they have in mind should commend themselves to the careful attention of every exhibitor in the country. The organization of a producing company around Ralph Ince has long been a cherished project with all of us, and in the first picture which he will direct we expect to show the exhibitors a real surprise."

"I have always entertained an unbounded admiration and respect for Mr. Ince's artistic ability and his intimate knowledge of the needs and wishes of the American exhibitor, and I am very glad of this opportunity to have had some share in the organization of his first independent effort."

"The very least that can be said of the new venture is that it is assured in advance of the personal interest and support of every exhibitor who has ever displayed a production directed by Mr. Ince, and there are few who have not done so."

"Other plans of still wider scope and significance to the exhibitor are now under careful consideration, and we will soon be able to take further movement of the organization of several enterprises of unusual interest to the motion picture public."

Next Pickford Artcraft "Captain Kidd, Jr."

According to statements emanating from the Artcraft offices, it would be difficult to conceive of a more powerful combination of elements in the making of an exceptional motion picture than that which is responsible for "Captain Kidd, Jr.," the next Artcraft Picture starring Mary Pickford.

Rida Johnson Young is the author: Frances Marion, the scenarist, and William D. Taylor is the director. Charles Rosher is the cameraman.

The cast in support of Miss Pickford is headed by Douglas MacLean and the remaining members are declared to be the best talent obtainable.

"Captain Kidd, Jr.," is described as a delightful, wholesome comedy and is said to contain every element essential to a successful photoplay.
Coast Loan Total Runs High

Colony Referred to in Complimentary Terms by Loan Committee—Studios Raise Large Amounts and Stars Do Very Good Work

A return of Liberty Bond subscriptions made by the Central Committee of Los Angeles shows that the people of the producing colony, film exchanges and theaters, purchased a total of $1,299,850, and were responsible for subscriptions totaling $2,648,600. These totals do not include the subscriptions of members of the Comique Film Corporation at Long Beach, or the American studios.

The audit was made by Charles H. Christie, who served as chairman of the motion picture industry committee, and J. C. Jessen, who was manager of the Banks. The subscriptions from the various studios and organizations were as follows:

- Astor, $31,150
- Chaplin, $63,950
- Brunton, $17,500
- Christie, $16,250
- Brentwood, $350
- Douglas Fairbanks, $46,700
- Elinee Company, $4,100
- Famous Players-Lasky, $131,150
- Francis Ford, $1,500
- Fox, $24,000
- Griffith, $84,400
- Hampton, $12,050
- Hayakawa, $27,850
- Ince, $52,600
- Laboratories, $18,000
- Mary Miles Minter, $20,000
- Mosco, $27,800
- L-Ko, $14,750
- Metro, $36,400
- National, $47,050
- Mary Pickford, $20,000
- Rollo, $10,300
- Romanee Super Films, Inc., $1,000
- Rovine, $27,600
- Mack Sennett, $38,650
- Theatres and Exchanges, $37,000
- Louis Weber, $43,750
- Universal, $122,600
- Vitaphone, $30,050
- Triangle, $12,450

Added to this sum is approximately a half million, which consists of sales made at Tank “Victory” during the first ten days of the drive, $110,000 of which was purchased there by a Glendale man who desired the souvenir receipt book of autographed photos. Tank “Liberty” sold $1,271,700; Tank “Democracy” $612,580, and members of the motion picture industry aided many of the industrial organizations in the sale of bonds.

The work of people of the film industry has been referred to by Chairman Henry S. McKeen, of the Southern California Committee, and Campaign Manager Robert Molten as the most beneficial and influential. The two Tanks used outside of Los Angeles brought about a spirit of co-operation between the city and county committees and the central committee which heretofore did not exist. This in the future will be most beneficial. Players and directors were called on daily to appear at meetings, and it is estimated that more than fifteen hundred speeches were made for the Liberty Loan by film people.

Meetings at Tank “Victory” in Los Angeles were the largest gatherings of any held in connection with any war work in Los Angeles. The attendance at the smallest of the meetings was estimated at 15,000, while the largest, that of the Brunton studios, when Helen Keller, with eight other stars, appeared, is thought to have had an attendance of between 50,000 and 60,000, even though this latter meeting was held on Monday, a light night.

Governor Lynch of the Twelfth District Federal Reserve Bank, and Chairman Henry S. McKeen are both writing personal letters to all the people of the film colony who participated in the Tank drive, or in any other way took part in the fourth Liberty Loan campaign. As the result of the work of William Duncan, he has been selected by the manager of the Four Minute Men of Los Angeles as a candidate for this honor, the first member of the film colony to be thus honored. Membership depends upon serving through three consecutive campaigns as a four minute speaker. Bert Lytel, the Miro star, as the result of his talks at Tank “Victory,” was made the recipient of invitations for meetings which would have taken up all of his time night and day should he have been in position to accept. Mary Miles Minter did exceptionally good work on Tank “Liberty,” being the principal speaker for this during its seventeen days of campaigning, and will, no doubt, be invited to aid the Government in a larger way in future Liberty Loan drives should there be any. Roy Stewart, manager of Tank “Democracy,” and Josie Sedgwick, who aided him, have won the admiration of everyone who followed them in this work. This Tank worked through the smaller towns of Southern California, and the sales made constitute a very remarkable record of achievement.

The campaign conducted throughout the film colony of Los Angeles by Charles H. Christien is one that reflects much credit to him. As chairman of the film industry committee, he succeeded in securing the hearty co-operation of the committees organized at all of the studios, and among the theatres, laboratories, accessory people and other the maximum subscription when the people of the industry faced the most unsuccessful conditions in recent years.

Arthur H. Sawyer, who with Herbert Lubin has formed S-L Pictures organization, for the making and releasing of special productions, has announced that work is being started on the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, personally directed by Ralph Ince, which will be the initial offering under the new banner.

Plans for originating the “S-L” brand have been under way for several months, a definite policy having been outlined and carried to completion. According to Mr. Sawyer, the only films which will be made are those which have a theme big enough to assure their success on the largest scale.

“The day of mediocre films has passed,” declared Mr. Sawyer, when seen at his office. “Our definite plan is to make the biggest kind of big specials for only by the creation of the kind of fine attractions can public interest in the motion picture be kept up.

“S-L Pictures’ will cater to a public ever growing more discriminating, and will never attempt any fixed number of annual releases, or any other plan which would detract from the high quality of production which is vital today to win success.”

“The star will be E. K. Lincoln, who has made a name for himself by efficient portrayal of many difficult parts, winning an ever-growing following among picture lovers. The combination of Ralph Ince and E. K. Lincoln is particularly fine, and in support thereof will be an all-star cast, which will be announced shortly.”

for an existence, should not have to pay more than 50 cents top to see the best of them.

I contend that “Revelation,” with Nazimova, was, from an artistic standpoint and from a standpoint of timing and direction, on a par with any picture that has ever been turned out; and Metro and George Baker, the director, are to be congratulated, and I am glad to say that the prices were not raised for it at any time.

NO! By all means we must not stop production of the pictures for a moment, if we can help it, but we MUST stop the making of bad and mediocrey pictures.

We must stop these wild-cat promotion schemes by which would-be producers are inveigling many good people to throw money away by investing in their air castles, with the result of more worthless film being thrown on the market.

We must stop the shoemaking method and pay more attention to stories, direction, casting, cutting, and timing, and we must allow a sufficient time to make each picture a work of art, and if Drama—be sure that it is the proper “director”.

We ought, instead of cutting out production, to start the process of elimination, and go down the line investigating the pedigrees of many so-called directors and stars who are drawing fancy salaries and never do deliver the goods.

We ought to investigate the reason that stacks of money has been, and is now being, paid to performers for weeks and months and as much as a year, while they are absolutely idle.

We ought to find out why exhibitors are so often forced to cut thousands of feet of padding and mistakes out of pictures in order to make them fit to show. The writer has, on many occasions, been compelled to cut great quantities of padding, useless close-ups, etc., and recently took 2,000 feet out of 5,000, and the Western representative of the firm, which is one of the most prominent in the business, admitted it was a much better picture for the pruning.

If we would put the right kind of an investigating committee on the job we would soon discover that barrels of money is being thrown away uselessly through the channels that I have mentioned. What the business needs is a “Doctor”—QUICK.

NOW as to advertising. Mr. Johnston certainly has the right idea—he is right about our desks being littered with piles of literature that only serves the purpose of helping fill the waste basket. He is right about the stacks of material sent out to the daily papers, and he is right that we should have only two journals and use more economical methods in laying out the advertising copy.

If some of these producing companies would stop trying to conquer the world and stop throwing money away telling us how great they are, and get down to earth and do consistent, conservative and truthful advertising and confine their advertising to two journals; and let the quality of the pictures and the work of the artists do some of the talking when they are released, they and the exhibitor would have a whole lot less headaches than they are having now, because they would eliminate a great amount of unnecessary waste and be able to give the exhibitor the benefit by a lower price on films. For after all it is the poor exhibitor who pays for the waste and mistakes of the producer, when he pays the inflated prices asked for the film.

Mary Pickford is on top of the ladder and draws the people because she has the ART and PERSONALITY and ABILITY to deliver the goods and others in the business who have the real “stuff” in them and are delivering the goods, will always get recognition from the public; but all the money in the world will not make the public patronize so-called stars and pictures that are not up to the standard.

You have started on the right line, Mr. Johnston—keep up the good work—let us continue this movement and it will mean not only CONSERVATION but the FINANCIAL LIFE of worthy producers and exhibitors and the LIFE of the popularity of the industry.

I, for one, am ready and willing to give my time and earnest efforts to help accomplish this end.

Sincerely yours,
J. A. QUINN.

as substantial a part of the Motion Picture Industry, as the big interests who have, until now, claimed this position for themselves.

RESUME
We have tried to show and believe we have proven:
1. That the owner of the small Motion Picture Theatre is overburdened by the taxes on the Motion Picture Industry as they now stand.
2. That any increase in these taxes (excepting the seating tax) would spell ruin for thousands of the smaller exhibitors.

There is no doubt in the mind of this Committee that the legislative bodies of the Government are not only disposed to cut the taxes of the Motion Picture Industry, but that taxation of the Motion Picture Industry, have been guided by the desire and thought of distributing the burden of such taxation equitably and justly among the different interests concerned. But we must repeat and emphasize that the result of this taxation, such as we find it today, is far removed and utterly at variance with the original intent of the law. The big interests engaged in the creative and manufacturing end of the Industry, the self-appointed financial part of the Industry, has not paid one single cent, directly or indirectly, of the taxes imposed upon the Industry. On the other hand, the exhibitor, the comparatively poor owner of the small motion picture house, has not only cheerfully carried the burden imposed on him by law, but has, in addition, been forced to carry the rest of the taxation which he was never supposed to carry.

It is with a feeling of absolute confidence in the sense of justice of our law makers that we men of the backbone of this Industry are looking toward you for remedy and relief, and that we ask you to receive this memorandum and the protest it contains in the spirit which prompted us to submit it to you.

It is up to you gentlemen of the Finance Committee to say the word which will mean that thousands of motion picture house owners and their families either the continuation of a modest existence or utter financial ruin.

The Honor Roll
Irvin Willat, who has been directing under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, answered the call to the colors and was summoned to Camp Kearny. It has not yet been announced to what service he will be assigned.

Thomas Bandes, or rather Private Thomas Bandes, formerly assistant manager of Select’s Booking Exchange, stopped off in New York one day this week en route from Camp Meade, Maryland, to his home town. Private Bandes paid his respects to General Manager Arthur S. Kane and other Select officials, declaring that he would be back in the Select Service as soon as he has killed his quota of Hunns.

Manager W. F. Sexton of the Family theatre, Toronto, reports that his former projection machine operator, Gordon Moffatt, has been killed in action while serving with the Canadian Army in France. The soldier was the only son of a widowed mother. Mr. Sexton’s son was severely wounded and the further details have been supplied by the Canadian Militia Department.

Word has been received from a well-known exchange man who joined the colors last spring, C. D. Hill, formerly manager of the Indianapolis branch of General Film Company. He is now a private in the 155th Ambulance Company, 114th Sanitary train, American Expeditionary.
Advertising the Double Bill

Even If You Have to Show Two Features, Make One of Them Stand Out in Your Advertising

LAST week, under the heading of "Your Idea and Ours," we reproduced a newspaper display that attempted to advertise a double bill equally, and remarked that "It can't be done." And that remark has brought from an exhibitor in Providence copies of the legal papers with the inquiry as to what we think of that advertising. And since our series of newspaper articles were interfered with during the enforced closing and consequent lack of newspaper advertising, this is a good time to consider the advertising of double bills.

As a matter of fact, we incidentally covered this matter a couple of weeks ago when we printed an article here about advertising the whole bill, and some repetition will be found. But in the former article we spoke more particularly of advertising the lesser pictures along with the feature. We are now considering advertising two things of apparently equal worth and interest.

Now when we made the remark "It can't be done," we did not mean that a double bill cannot be advertised, but that it was practically impossible to give equal display to both pictures and expect to get over the same punch that you would have landed if you had used but one idea for your main smash. It is unfortunate that the habit of double features has grown up in some cities, but it remains that it has and therefore it is one of those evils that will have to be overcome the best way possible with advertising.

Of course the thing that induces double bills is to make the appeal for quality. In most cities this has been the way they started. There were three or four houses bidding for the same patronage and one of the theatres was getting the worst of it. The manager probably wasn't showman enough to remedy the evil so he hit upon the plan of giving the public just twice as much motion pictures as the other fellow. The result was, the others followed suit and double bills became the rule in that community. And let us say, that as a general thing, we know of nothing worse for the motion picture interests than to "feed up" the public on entertainment. The result is pretty sure to be that they will tire of motion pictures.

Now all of you are familiar with the "bargain" style of advertising. It is almost as bad as the old fake "Free" ads that used to appear in the cheaper publications, with the "Free" appearing in heavy Gothic type and then a lot of small type showing that the offer is not free at all, but that there is a string tied to it. And so the sort of motion picture advertising that is built on such lines as "Bargain Bill Today" or "Double Feature Program" is bad advertising, the sort that will not build for the prosperity of your house though it may get you in a few extra dimes over night. Remember that the only sort of advertising that really pays you in the long run is that which builds up your theatre along with drawing the public to see your current offering.

If you try to merely make this bargain appeal you can naturally get over any selling argument in your advertising, for you, in your spirit, are not trying to sell any quality of any picture, but merely quantity.

Now even if you think that you have to show two features for one admission you might as well make up your mind that you have got to pick out a selling point and use it each time you advertise if you want to get the most possible business. We know the idea will be met with: "How can we do this when one of the pictures is as good as the other and probably if we advertised one picture the strongest we might lose the followers of the other star by not calling enough attention to him?"

After all, selling motion pictures and selling newspapers are not so very different, and so let us repeat an incident we told you of a few weeks ago and in a little more detail. We were in charge of certain editions of a very sensational paper that strove for that we saw a chance to get a very beautiful make-up. And so we arranged it and when the paper came from the press it was a mighty good looking sheet for that style of paper, but here were two stories played exactly the same with the same sort of headlines and the same style of cuts. It was a "splendidly balanced" affair and we felt rather proud of it until the big boss, one of the most celebrated of newspaper men came around and gave us fits.

Our excuse was that we regarded the two stories of equal importance and wanted to give them equal play. "Forget that," he replied, "and remember that so far as selling this paper is concerned there is only one big story at the time. Pick out one story and smash it! You may pick the wrong story, but go to it just the same and you will sell the paper. You have to make the people think that here is some news so big that they cannot afford to miss it. You have to give the newsboys one story to cry. When you play two stories the impression that you give the public is that you really haven't any one big story, but that you are trying to force up two so that you can make a type showing."

After long experience in newspaper circulation we have found that is true, and we believe it to be equally true of motion picture advertising.

Now on the page opposite we have reproduced the motion picture advertising and the amusement page of the Providence Sunday Journal. The motion picture situation from the press is the straight photoplay point of view, far from ideal. Not only does the double bill idea prevail, but at least two of the theatres follow the plan of giving you a feature and then a lot of vaudeville—certainly the worst form of bargain store stuff.

But let's look at the advertising. Strand theatre, probably the leading motion picture house, advertises Lina Cavalieri and Enid Bennett and gives the two pictures almost equal prominence. It's a pretty sort of an advertisement because it has the pictures of two pretty women, but it gets nowhere. It is good as an announcement to those who are probably coming to the Strand anyway and merely want to find out what they will see, but that is just about all. In the smallest type they put a selling argument on the picture, but one has to hunt for them when they ought to be brought out prominently—that is, we mean one of them. The writer should have picked the picture and then have picked the selling appeal and made that stand.

Empire theatre has followed this idea to a considerable extent because it has devoted the whole of the design to the Hart picture. Naturally this helps sell the picture, but the display should have gone further and have played the selling argument of the production. But we can see the writer getting cold feet, for to make up for this drawing on the Hart picture he gives more type space to the other.

Modern theatre goes much further along to playing up one picture, giving bulk of the space to "Private Peat," but the use of the cuts is confusing and the one on the Marion Davies picture is meaningless and might as well be taken to apply to the Peat picture unless the reader is familiar with the features of the fair Marion. That is the fault of the arrangement of the display, but at that the advertisement is the best of any of the double picture bill displays.

While Fay's is a combination house it always plays the pictures as the main thing and then lists the vaudeville acts to carry out the bargain idea. That is a splendid plan to follow if you feel that you have to also feed the public vaudeville along with the (Continued on page 2948)

Newman Reviews “Best Things” He Does

By Frank L. Newman
Manager, Royal and Regent Theatres, Kansas City, Mo.

I THINK the question, WHAT IS THE BEST THING I HAVE DONE FOR MY THEATRE? covers a great many things.

First and above all, to establish a theatre in your community so that when the people mention, “picture shows” they will immediately connect the name of your theatre with photo plays. For an illustration, a man came up to me and asked me what was the best brand of shirts, I would say “Manhattan” or collars, I would think of “Arrow,” garters, I would mention “Boston.” Now I am not interested in any of these brands but what I want to point out is this: that these concerns had to build up their business and gain the confidence of the people that their merchandise is the best and that is what the exhibitors should do.

Of course in a case where there is only one show in a town and if a person mentions “picture shows” it would be only natural for the people in that particular town to mention the name of this one theatre and then it is up to that one exhibitor as to whether his theatre is a success or failure.

It takes a combination of many things to bring this about and I believe that while we are closed, it is good food for thought for exhibitors to try and figure in their own town what is THE BEST THING I HAVE DONE FOR MY THEATRE?

Don’t “Bunk” the Public

The first thought is to have absolutely the best pictures that money can buy. At times the exhibitor thinks he may slip something over on his patrons when he shows a poor picture, that is buying a cheap picture. He does to a certain extent, but there is an after effect.

The picture is what you really have to sell. What you do with it. The patrons must pay before they enter. They take nothing away with them, and if you can establish in the minds of the people of your community that at least 90 per cent of the times they come into your show that you have on a good picture. Personally I run only first-run pictures and ofttimes I have had a picture bought to run at one of my shows and after I have reviewed it, I found that it was inferior, but I did not try to show it and rely on the reputation that the theatre has enjoyed the past four and a half years. I immediately paid for this picture and laid it aside and bought another picture.

Even if I did not make the money I expected to or should do, WHAT HAVE I DONE FOR MY THEATRE? I have kept faith with the public, and I want to tell you that the public is fickle and you can give them the best shows possible and then try to slip something over on them and they will soon leave and seek other places, but if you will try at all times to give them the best, I am sure they will stay by you.

For an example in this particular case, just recently I had to show a picture that I really did not care to show, but it was the best I could get and any number of people came out and said to me: “This is not as good a show as you usually have, but you can’t always have good ones.” That shows you that the patrons are excusing themselves, knowing that I have always done my best to give them the best show possible. Ofttimes I hear with this remark, “The music was good,” and I also want to say something about the music.

Eleven years ago last April when I ventured into the picture business, at that time I did not know anyone who had an orchestra in their theatre. Of course the admission price was only five cents and they couldn’t hardly afford an orchestra, but still I could see that I had to have something else besides a little film I was running, to keep the public’s interest. So I immediately put in a four-piece orchestra, and there were only at that time three or four theatres in that city, and of course the exhibitors gave me the laugh and said that this couldn’t last. My theatre only seated ninety-nine and they said that it was impossible for me to keep up a four-piece orchestra, but they often say, “He who laughs last,” and I had my last laugh.

We not only kept our business, but we increased it, and right then and there we established our theatre, because everyone loves music, and ever since that time I have always had the best orchestra I could possibly get.

Just to hire an orchestra because it is twelve men or fifteen men does not mean a thing; I have always hired the best musicians I could get, and if it means ten or fifteen dollars higher than the scale, I hired them in my orchestra pit, and I believe the exhibitor who thinks he can get away without good music is making a grave mistake.

It has absolutely been proven that music can make you feel either sad or happy, in fact, it can almost control your feelings. Now in case you have on a picture and have the right kind of music played, not just simply anything, but music that will color the picture, you have made your picture sweeter, and the patrons go out of the show not knowing exactly why but your show and your picture is the best.

It is because your music has helped it so; even if your picture is not as good as you would like to have it, the patrons have noticed it and have enjoyed the picture, where if it had not been for the orchestra possibly they would have said that the picture was rotten.

How “Little Things” Count

The exhibitor should always keep in mind that he is serving the public, and every little thing that he can do to assist them is what keeps the theatre in their minds.

You take such a small thing as giving the people the weather forecast on the screen. It is something everyone should know, yet many people do not trouble themselves to find out, and then again, for instance, if it starts to rain and you run a slide on the screen saying that it is raining and if the patrons have a car outside with the top down, they will greatly appreciate you informing them that it is raining.

Making Your Theatre Appeal To Women

By Harold B. Franklin
Manager Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

At SHEA'S Hippodrome, we strive to make our women patrons feel that the Hippodrome is particularly operated for them. We feel that without the fair sex Shea's Hippodrome would not be possible. When you succeed in getting the women to come to your theatre with full confidence, the rest of your audience is assured. Women are the biggest boosters a theatre can have and it behooves every exhibitor to cater particularly to them. It must be remembered that the motion picture theatre appeals principally to the family—and women are naturally the predominating factor in the family.

No mother would hesitate to send her children to Shea's Hippodrome because she knows, first, that the entertainment is of the right kind, and second that nothing objectionable is ever shown. She also has confidence in the way the theatre is run. She knows that the patrons are of the best class. Shea's Hippodrome assumes the responsibility of guaranteeing a service that protects women from anything objectionable. Exhibitors should endeavor to maintain an inviting atmosphere suggesting refinement and courtesy. The employees should be carefully drilled so that their conduct may reflect the atmosphere of the theatre.

Appeal to Whole Family

The family patronage of Shea's Hippodrome is a big factor. A visit at any time to this playhouse will find a happy, interesting and enthusiastic circle. It makes mother and father feel good to see how their children enjoy the pictures and it cements the family ties. And right here we have the basis on which the motion picture bases its popularity and success.

Young America, encouraged by the parents, is the keystone that supports this great industry and producers and exhibitors will do well to study the taste of this audience.

The movie is a tremendous educational factor. It is well to familiarize oneself with the women's point of view. Theatrical men who have been successful have always maintained that if a show appeals to the women folks, the rest of the audience will take care of itself. This is true particularly of the motion picture theatre—a distinctly family theatre. No motion picture theatre can exist without the support of the women. It is therefore important to cater particularly to the wants of the fair sex. More so now than ever before because of the important part women will play in the future public life of the nation.

Getting Woman Interest

The great responsibility assumed by women since the war makes them a factor indeed. Instinctively every woman is a housekeeper. It is important that the theatre be kept spotlessly clean.

We always take pains in appealing to the feminine eye. The ladies' rest room is really a "rest room," and it is tastefully furnished. Fresh cut flowers in a vase in the lobby are an inexpensive nicety that is of big appeal. Know everything that goes on in your theatre and see that your ushers properly police the house so as to prevent obnoxious flirtations.

At Shea's Hippodrome we instruct our ushers never to seat a man near a girl when other seats are available. Children and elderly people are given particular attention. Those who have the space and can easily and at a little expense furnish a nursery where mothers can leave their small children in charge of a young woman garbed as a nurse. It is these little things that make your theatre more popular than the other fellow's.

The big department stores have the right idea. You will note how the department stores cater to the taste of the women—both with advertising, its merchandise and in its service. Make your women patrons comfortable in every respect. Study their likes and dislikes and benefit by that knowledge by giving them. The greater part of the matinee business of almost every theatre, principally consists of women.

The Pace for Fashion

Set the pace for fashion in motion pictures if you would appeal to the best women in your locality. Don't let your show or music get stale. Keep it bright and sparkling with plenty of novelty.

Every mother knows that children must have some diversion. "Movies" is a magic word to every child. Children enjoy the action of this fairy heaven. Mothers will not hesitate to send their children to your theatre if your pictures are right and if you run your theatre properly. It is natural that women want their children to watch pictures that depict high ideals, the good in life and stories that appeal to the highest emotions. Pictures should amuse and instruct. Make the woman feel that your theatre is "Her Theatre" and she will fight jealously for you and will prove one of your greatest assets.

Goldwyn Suggests Stunt for "A Perfect 36"

Goldwyn has issued two novelities for the exploitation of Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36." One of these consists of a herald in the shape of a corset with a circle cut out at the top so that it may be hung on the doorknobs of homes. The other is a tape measure, which is, of course, only thirty-six inches long, and which bears the legend: "Are you a perfect 36? See Mabel Normand in 'A Perfect 36.'" Goldwyn suggests that the exhibitor offer to admit free to the theatre the "perfect thirty-sixes" at a special matinee performance.

A general rule we are opposed to the "block" effect in advertising. This is the practice of using black edged border on two sides of a display to make the whole thing stand out as if it were lifted above the general body of the newspaper type. In the bunch of advertising that comes from the Madera Opera House, Madera, Cal., this plan seems to have been generally followed.

In most cases anything of the freak nature in advertising of motion pictures is bad because it serves merely to get the eye and there is rarely anything of the convincing left to actually sell the picture. There is no use to merely attract attention if you do not then have the goods. In this case the block effect has been well employed, because the writer has followed out the teaser style through the advertisement. The repetition of "To Hell With the Kaiser," first as an exclamation and then as the title of the picture, insures that everyone will read the whole display—because it is different.

We have seen a lot of announcements of theatres, but there is none better than that of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O., which has obtained the first run of William Fox pictures in that city. In fact two other theatres make announcements in the same issue of the newspaper from which we clip this half-page display, but they do not stand out anywhere like this one. It's the simplicity, for one thing, that makes it so striking. But we want to call your attention to the fact that the name of the theatre is impressed upon you good and strong. You cannot look at any portion of the advertisement without your attention being brought back to the Colonial.

By using the largest possible faces of the various players the theatre has gotten splendid illustrative effect. The typing of the little reading matter is good and there is plenty of white space to make it easily read.

Make your house the theatre that IS.

SIGNAL theatre, Cleveland, O., used a quarter of a page in advertising "The Kingdom of Youth," and it gets a mighty good effect except for the gray background that is used. But it interfiles with making the figure of Madge Kennedy stand out as it should do, especially since the face of the star runs into the Ben Day matter. It is a mighty difficult matter to bring out half-tones against either a black or a Ben Day background.

But these are minor faults. The main thing that all of the advertising of the Standard shows is that it is willing to use liberal space and keep the theatre itself prominently before the public. You will find no two of the displays exactly alike, but week after week there is evidence that the theatre is trying to get artistry into its exploitation in different ways. There is nothing that tends to put a motion picture theatre in the leadership of public opinion as this. When you come to make the advertising itself worth while the general impression is left with the public that everything about your house it worth while.

Nine times out of ten there is great pulling power in the advertising of the Standard, but there is always quality there.

OUR BOYS ARE

CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN

and all hell won't stop them

STRAIGHT BEGINNING SUNDAY

HERE is a case of the greatest simplicity in advertising anything up the picture with the news of the law. It is the work of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis and serves to stand out among unusual displays.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" was booked at the Strand just at the time that "our boys" were starting to get there with both feet and when the eyes of every American were glued to the front page news about them.

As the illustration, one of the clever drawing supplied by Universal exchanges was used, but the selling argument of the picture was dropped entirely—that is the selling "talk" was dropped. There was none needed in this case in the mind of the man who wrote the advertisement. It was a mighty good display to attract immediate attention.

But there is one failing that it has and that is: What is the picture about? That is a question that a lot of people will ask. It would have been a great deal better to have added a few lines saying that this was a complete history of the war. It's pretty clear as it is, but there are a lot of people for whom you have to literally diagram things.

The fellow who doesn't believe in advertising is the same one who calls for "Central" with the receiver down.

PLAZA theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, has evolved a most unusual advertisement on Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," and certainly one that will attract the attention of every reader of the paper. There is too much black type here though the black border is permissible because it runs into the house, which is made of bits of rules. The cut of Miss Ferguson is bad because the black circle behind the face prevents the features from standing out. The advertisement would have been very much improved had the theatre used a... name plate instead of the black letters, and had the border run into this name plate. It would have then connected up the name of the theatre, that of the star and the title of the picture well high perfectly.

There's one line of the selling talk that we distinctly do not like—the one that says of Miss Ferguson: "This is a wistful quality, too, which always makes you feel sorry for her, even when she is having a good time." A lot of people don't want to come to the theatre to feel sorry, and of course while that is really not what the sentence is meant to convey, it's likely to keep away many more than it brings into the theatre.

Don't play "policy" too much, or you'll find it a bad gamble.

There are times when an advertisement can be improved by leaving out the illustrations and this one, from the Blue Mouse theatre, Detroit, is an excellent example of it. This appeared on the last day of the showing of the picture and presumably pictures of William Farnum and scene cuts had been used in the earlier advertising.

So this final display has been devoted entirely to a selling talk on the picture, with the idea of taking advantage of the world-wide advertising that it has obtained. It could have been improved considerably by making the line "He invaded the city of sealed wives," the striking thing in the whole display. As we have said, we take for granted that the name of the star and the title of the picture had already been advertised. Certainly, then, the name of the picture should not be featured as the main thing. Assuredly it should not have been featured above that of the star. There is also a jarring note in the placing of the line "Last time today." It breaks into a sentence and spoils the meaning of the entire sales argument.

Advertising was one of the biggest agencies in putting over the Liberty Loan; it will keep you from borrowing to pay losses.

Using a space of ten inches across three columns Liberty theatre, Hartford, Conn., adopted the proper in its opening announcement. First the theatre the dominant thing and played down the attraction only so far as the use of type was concerned. Then after this had been done the manager sat down and sold to the public the various strong points of "A Romance of the Underworld."

You will note attention was called to the fact that this picture was made from Paul Armstrong's great stage success, what a strong appeal was made to the admirers of Eugene O'Brien and attention called to

The courtroom scene. Some adjectives are used, but we are mighty glad to find that there are no superlatives.

Seeing is believing is an old adage, but remember that you are in motion picture business to make them believe first and see later.

"Laughing Bill Hyde" has been responsible for some of the very best motion picture advertisements that we have seen and this display of the Kinema, Los Angeles, which occupied four full columns is a striking example of them. It is also one of the best specimens of combining the cut appeal with the selling argument and the title of the picture and the author.

"When in Danger He Always Smiled" is one of the best selling lines that has ever been offered with a production. It at once conveys the idea here is a character out of the ordinary and that one will not be called upon to look at merely brute force stuff. Then the selling argument is carried right along into the atmosphere of the present war where the Kine ma tells its patrons: "Sure Bill Hyde is an American—there are millions like him—challenging danger with a smile, eagerly inviting the great adventure and meeting it like a man." It would have been an obvious thing to refer to the present conflict in that sales argument, but we don't believe that there was a person who read this display that failed to get the point. And in these days you only need to tell people that a picture breathes the real American spirit, and then they'll pack your theatre for you.

One thing that we like about all the advertising of the Kinema is that the theatre, does not let you forget the theatre itself. Note the way that attention is called to the engagement of the orchestra. After one is attracted to the display on the Bill Hyde picture one is taken right into this orchestra announcement. It's good work, for no matter how big the picture may be there's no picture bigger than your theatre.

USE of patriotic and popular music in motion picture presentation has never been better shown that it is at the Rialto theatre this week, where the feature is "Safe for Democracy." In fact, Mr. Rothapfel has given this picture one of his very best settings and the result is a storm of appreciation.

There are fifty-one changes of music during the feature and these range all the way from light and catchy fox-trots to "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." The result is that every point of this patriotic and convincing picture is brought out all the stronger. It makes the presentation infinitely more impressive than it would be if you simply "play the picture."

This is a distinct surprise sprung right at the start of the performance. For everyone is expecting the usual overture. All of the lights go out and the house is in complete darkness except for the red over the exits and a few bars of "Auld Lang Syne" are played and enacted as the curtains part revealing one of the striking John Wenger settings. There is a circular window in the back of the stage with just a little red light at the bottom suggesting the rising sun with the Rialto quarter seated on the stage. Then they begin to sing "Love's old Sweet Song," and you immediately get the reason for the bars of "Auld Lang Syne" that were employed as the introduction. The curtains close just as the last bars of the song are heard. There is no music with the curtain selection.

Then comes the overture, Suppe's "Beautiful Galatea," played with the lights all gold and then comes the double scenic number. First we have "Nature's Mischief Makers" released by Educational Films, a short film of a picture that is full of laughs. We have the Crede that plays the eggs of the duck, then King Charles spaniels, cat and dog chums and then the monkey who is bent on overturning everything. Then comes "Flowers and Woodland Whispers," played throughout the picture, and the curtains close.

Then comes another one of the fanciful settings. With the lights all in soft blue the curtains part revealing another of the circular openings with a huge rock at the right and on the top of this four red lights and a big green tree at the left. Miss Gladys Rice then sings "Oh, Dry Those Tears," accompanied by harp, cello and organ. There is a red spot on the singer from the stage and right from the stage the stage lights come up red. Official War Records No. 20 are shown, the Animated this week. The general title is "Along the Crimson Gash of the Western Front." First we are shown scenes in the Italian fighting with the Austrians cringing before the Italians, the big guns in action and then close before the fighting with the final result of a drove of Austrian prisoners. "La Forza del Destino" is used during the first of these and then a tympani rumble for the battle scene. With pictures of the French soldiers after four years of battle come "March Heroic," with "Marseillaise" counterpointed for a few bars. "My Dough Boy" is used with pictures of feeding the American soldiers in the field and in the trenches. Then come pictures of drills with the tanks and here "Frozen Bill" is used.

Then comes the smashing finish, pictures of the British cavalry going into action. First there are three trumpet calls and then battle music and a drum roll and we see the horsemen plunge forward. This is probably the most convincing picture that has come out of the whole war for as the cavalry gallop into the battle a shell bursts in their midst and one may see three horses and their riders the victims. Then with the title, "Britain collects heavy damages" and pictures of some of the 52,000 prisoners they took we have "Rule Britannia." to the end of the picture, almost drowned in the storm of cheering.

There is a special musical prelude for the feature. Then the curtains part as the lights in the dome become blue and the proscenium arch red. With the fanciful setting there is an outline map of the United States with the stars and stripes radiating from it. The two trumps have the "Rivoli" in huge lettering. The quarter, seated in the orchestra, then sings "My Own United States" and as the end bars the title of the picture, "Safe for Democracy." is flashed on the center of the map and the feature begins.

Three choruses of "My Own United States" are used through the opening of the feature and then with the first view of the shipyard comes "Master Builder" march. With the introduction of the two trumps "Pals" is used, then the trip from "Master Builder" and the last eight bars of "Pals" again "Love's Contentment," the theme is first employed for the first time then.

One may give here only a bare suggestion of the appropriate character of the music. For instance, in the scenes where the second son, the idler, is shown in bed we have "I Hate To Get Up in the Morning," and with the flash of the picture of the soldier son we get the last sixteen bars of the chorus of "Yankee Doodle." Then a little later when the father is the only one to congratulate the son who has married his stenographer there is a laugh added with "What's the Matter With Father?" Where the little tramp swipes the bottle of milk there are the last eight bars of "Jimmy Valentine." There is another clever arrangement of the time that we see the police rounding up the loafers under the work or fight order. "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier" is first used, followed by "What Kind of an American Are You?" and their four bars of "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here," and then with the title "I Hear You Calling Me," there are a few bars played on the bassoon.

Then when the soldier son comes home wounded we have "When You Come Back," and then "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "When You Come Back" repeated. With the pictures of the shipyards workers calling on "gastless Sunday" we have "Keep the Home Fires Burning." There is another big laugh when the little tramp offers his arm to the servant maid and "I Wish I Had a Girl." helps it along. For the smashing finish we have "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" and then "Stars and Stripes Forever." The scenes themselves are patriotically appealing, but the music adds to their punch and gives a great volume of applause that the picture gets.

This ends the bill, one of the very best that the Rivoli has ever had, and certainly there is none that has been more appreciated. There is a lot of comedy in the feature and therefore no more is needed on the bill. But there are probably a lot of people that would tell you that because

A great asset to the theatre also is to have a good looking, clean, neat girl in the box office, and one who can have a Douglas Fairbanks smile and know the worth of “yes mam,” “no mam,” “yes sir” and “no sir,” instead of like some girls I have seen in the box office who looked like their hair had been combed the week before and chewing gum, their hands dirty, and someone comes up and asks them a question and they either say “YES” or “NO.”

Then to have a doorman to greet them with a smile of welcome on his face and open the door and have a neat maid inside them “How far down would you like to sit, please?” it makes the patron feel at home because he is being catered to and it shows that they think something of his patronage.

The exhibitor should always watch the air in his house and not wait until a patron comes out and says, “My, how stifling the air is in there!” Beat them to it and have your exhaust fans on and keep your theatre sanitary, clean and fresh.

In my theatre I keep the year round, white linen covers on the seats. It answers two purposes; first, it is sanitary, and, second, if a lady comes in with a fine waist of some kind on or a silk dress, she feels that she can lay back against the seat without soiling her dress from the dirt on the seat. In other words, COMFORT is above all, and it takes all this to bring about the establishing of your theatre in your community and gaining the confidence of the people that your theatre is THE theatre of the town.

One of the big things that has made my theatre a success is the co-operation of all my employees. I have thirty-five people working for me in my little theatre, and every one of them is working for the interest of the theatre. They are all taking an interest, as though the theatre belonged to them. It is because I have made them believe that they are part of the theatre and that it will take all of their help to make the theatre a success. Many exhibitors overlook this essential policy.

IT is not necessary to repeat here the advice that we have given you many times that it pays to co-operate with your city in anything that it is doing, but certainly a splendid example of this has been shown by A. J. Laurie, manager of the Regent theatre, Guelph, Ontario. He showed how a theatre is able to meet every situation and we haven’t the slightest doubt that as the result there is going to be greatly increased business at the Regent.

In the first place, he anticipated the influenza closing order by several days and voluntarily discontinued performances, but just at this moment the Canadian Victory Bond drive was on and he wanted to do everything possible in the way of co-operation. The first thing that he did was to devote the whole of the front of the house to advertising the loan. The various frames that usually carried the announcements of the current pictures were given over to bond posters and two huge signs were painted and placed in front of the house.

But then he went one better by placing a screen on a building opposite the Regent and at night he gave free motion picture shows to the general public. They being in the open air there was little danger of infection, and the people wanted pictures. But these pictures were shown to aid the Victory Bond drive, being practically the same ones, with a few changes that were made for the Liberty Loan drive. And still further than this Mr. Laurie advertised these showings just as if he was collecting admission.

No wonder the newspapers gave him front page space. And he, and other managers who show an equal amount of public spirit, will find that it puts them in first place in the hearts of the fans.

It is not merely a case of being loyal to your country but of making every resource work for it and at the same time for you.

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released since August 1 on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column “Average of Exhibitors' Reports” the term “Extra Big” indicates a picture which far surpassed expectations; “Big” means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; “Average” is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; “Poor” indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value. The comments given are no indication of the number of reports received, as many exhibitors merely check off the grading without comment.

Good.
"Good." Went good, average business for three days. Big business to average in four day run. The director had something else on his mind and the story was poor. Average business seven days. Good film and ditto star was in this production. Poorly saluted.
Big business for one solid week. A great picture. Well liked; good business.
Extra big; a wonderful picture; pleased immensely; capacity crowds. Poor; but pleased. Print bad condition. Second day better than first; a top notcher.
Extra big; One of biggest hits we ever had. Second run average business.

Extra Big

Did not draw. Broke all house records. Standing room only at advanced prices.
Extra big for week. The biggest card of all. Extra big two weeks. Some liked it, others did not. Not a good picture of its kind. Did well in news reels. A picture every one should see. We are slow in playing this. Extra big and through week's run. Big to average to poor business in three days' run.

Four American Films Active During Embargo

It is declared by one of the American Film Company's officials that the influenza period had proved quite active for their sales force despite the general close-down of business in the large Metropolitan centers. In the communities where the theaters still kept open, they continued to book the four pictures, "The Eyes of Julia Deep," "Money Isn't Everything," "Hobbs in a Hurry" and the latest Mary Miles Minter subject, "Rosemary Climbs the Heights."

In addition to this, many contracts for the entire three series of eight pictures each, featuring the three stars, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell, are said to have been signed during the period which has been looked forward to as a completely dead term.

"Fair Enough" will be preceded by "The Mantle of Charity," featuring Miss Fisher, and by Russell's "All the World to Nothing," as well as Miss Minter's "Wives and Other Wives," a "situation-perplexity" farce.

Three "Big V" Comedies Listed for November

The Vitagraph list of Big V Special Comedy releases for the last three weeks in November are announced respectively as follows:

- "Frauds and Frenzies," featuring Lawrence Semon.
- "Husbands and Humbugs," featuring Lawrence Semon.

The two-reel feature comedies, it is announced, are now being shown throughout the country and are said by Vitagraph to be the most popular comedy feature the company has ever put forth.

With one Big V Special being released weekly Vitagraph is said to be the only company issuing two-reel comedies each week in the year.

General Announces Two New O. Henry Films

When Broadway Star Features offer their new releases of O. Henry Stories it will be found that the subjects ready for the exhibitor are well ahead of schedule, as the directors had been gaining at the time production was temporarily suspended at all studios.

Two of the stories that may be expected are "The Ghost of a Chance" and "Buried Treasure," with Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle in the leading roles, direction by Kenneth Webb.

Fox Emphasizes Service Value

William Fox Declares That Success Lies in Giving Exhibitors More Than You Have Promised Them

DECLARING that "Service" in the motion picture industry too often means merely the distribution of press books, slides, lithographs and other accessories, or possibly the prompt arrival of film in a more or less usable condition, William Fox asserts that far-seeing producers are interpreting the word "Service" in its broadest sense, and appreciate that the soundest foundation for the building up of a permanent success lies in the policy of not only giving the exhibitors their money's worth, but even more than has been promised.

It is pointed out that what was perhaps a striking example of this development in the motion picture industry was the addition of Evelyn Nesbit as a star of the William Fox Standard Pictures and the securing of Madlaine Traverse as one of the stars of the Fox Excel Pictures.

As one of the Fox officials said: "The contracts for Standard Pictures, as signed by exhibitors, did not call for productions by Evelyn Nesbit. Her name was not on the list of stars who, the exhibitors were told, would make Standard Pictures. But when the opportunity came to sign this star for Standard Pictures William Fox availed himself of it—because he saw in Miss Nesbit a chance to do something for the exhibitors who had faith in him and his pictures.

"Therefore the pictures which Miss Nesbit is making are practically an out-and-out gift to exhibitors; the men who booked Standard Pictures are getting an extra star on their program."

"The same holds true of the Excel Pictures group, in which the Madlaine Traverse pictures will be released. The stars in this group, when the contracts were presented to exhibitors, were Peggy Hyland, Jane and Katherine Lee and Virginia Pearson. Now exhibitors will be able to show also pictures by Miss Traverse, thus obtaining a greater variety for their program and the benefit of any personal showing that Miss Traverse may bring with her to William Fox pictures."

"In giving to exhibitors two stars more than they had bargained for William Fox is exemplifying the rule—long established in our business—that when you give the exhibitors just a little more than what you have promised them you are building up a permanent success based on real service."

Carl Laemmle Returns From Universal City

WHEN Carl Laemmle returned to New York City from the West Coast trip he told of the fire that had threatened to destroy Universal City. He declared that, except for the Spanish influenza, Universal City was in the finest condition he had ever known it to be.

Mr. Laemmle was particularly enthusiastic over a production that has just been completed with Dorothy Phillips as star.

"There was one film that surpassed anything I have seen in months," said Mr. Laemmle. He was referring to the latest production featuring Dorothy Phillips. The title has not been definitely decided, but at present it is identified as either "Carry On" or "Until We Meet Again."

"I sat through fifteen reels of the film," declared Mr. Laemmle, "and I could have sat through fifteen more with the keenest pleasure. Our people are due to have a terrible time cutting that film down to eight or nine reels. It is positively the greatest war film, to my mind, that has ever been produced, bar none."

Mr. Laemmle's general survey of conditions was optimistic in the extreme. He was delighted over the showing of loyalty exhibited by the working force of the company.
"Unpardonable Sin" Completed

Messrs. Garson and Neilan Coming East with Blanche Sweet to Give "The Unpardonable Sin" a Broadway Run

A LONG Broadway run is planned for Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet.

Word has just arrived from the West Coast that the trio will leave Los Angeles immediately and that the much heralded production is completed. According to announced schedule, it is planned to give a special performance of the production before the Government officials at Washington, D. C.

After the Washington showing it is believed that a private showing will be promoted in New York City, where the newspaper men and other critics will be invited. From the enthusiasm already recorded as displayed by Messrs. Garson and Neilan, nothing will be overlooked to give this production the promoting and exploitation which they believe it deserves.

It is declared that several of the finest New York theatres have already been offered for the first run, and the sponsors expect the first run to be a long run and a successful run in the metropolis.

Distributing arrangements are not announced as yet, but upon the arrival of the trio from the West Coast it is expected that something definite will be made known as regards the distributing arrangements of "The Unpardonable Sin."

This is the first Blanche Sweet production that has been completed in a long time, and she plays two parts in the picture. Walter Beery portrays the part of Colonel Klem, a German officer, who imposes "Kultur" upon Belgium. Miss Sweet is "Dimmy," who left Los Angeles for Belgium upon hearing that her sister was in trouble.

After receiving help in England, Dimmy arrives at the Dutch border, but discovers that her passport is useless. While attempting to slip over the line at night, she attracts the attention of a German officer named Klem, who is one of the men who mistreated Dimmy's sister, Alice, at the convent, and mistakes her for her sister, although he cannot recall where he has seen her.

Dimmy meets Noll Winsor, who has been searching for her and who promises to help her. On his next trip into Belgium he succeeds in getting her across the line, but Klem discovers them, and, still unable to recall where he has seen Dimmy, decides that she is a spy, and has her subjected to the German method of searching suspected.

From here on the many tense situations develop, until Dimmy finally foils the machinations of the German Government and is reunited with her sweetheart and sister.

Former Senator Praises "Wolves of Kultur"

L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Des Moines branch of Pathe, arranged a special private showing of the early chapters of "Wolves of Kultur" for Governor W. L. Harding, who is the honorary head of the Council of Defense; Senator Young, who is the chairman; G. H. Messenger, superintendent of banking; Thomas Fairweather, Mayor of Des Moines, and other influential men of the city and state.

Senator Young was declared to be unqualified in his praise of the feature and furnished a list of all of the members of the Council of Defense in Iowa that they might be informed of the propaganda value of the serial.

Metro Gives Ida Darling an Important Part

Ida Darling, well-known stage and screen player, has been engaged by Metro for the part of the German spy in their screen version of "The Man Who Stayed at Home," in which King Baggot is seen in the leading role.

Miss Darling has played with Irene Fenwick, Bert Lytell, George Cohan, Billie Burke and Marguerite Clarke and supports Norma Talmadge in her two latest productions.

R. C. Bruce Is Back with Twenty Pictures

Robert C. Bruce arrived at the offices of Vice-President Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation Nov. 4 on his annual visit from the Pacific Coast to the distributing headquarters of his northwestern scenes. Mr. Bruce carried with him twenty new one-reelers and a tale of a recent trying experience in the Cascade Mountains, which had delayed his coming about a fortnight.

He will devote the next month in the East to titling and editing the new material. A taste of its quality has already been seen in "Tales of the Tall Timber" and "A Wee Bit Odd." Some of the most interesting "takes" were in the Yellow-stone and Jackson's Hole regions of the Rockies, the remainder being principally in California, Oregon and Washington.

Another daily worker in the Educational's film room is Director George D. Wright, of the New Mexican Topicals, which he is rapidly getting ready for early exhibition.

President George A. Skinner has taken the first print of the Coal Picture to the Educational's laboratory in Wilkes Barre, where he is engaged on the final revision of Director William Parke's multiple-reeler.

Artcraft Announces Next Griffith Picture

"The Greatest Thing in Life" is the title of D. W. Griffith's newest Artcraft production which the master of screen-craft has just completed at his California studios and which will be the next Griffith release on the Artcraft schedule.

The cast is made up of regular Griffith players, for the most part identical with those who have been featured in all the recent Griffith productions. Lillian Gish has the leading feminine role, with Robert Harron opposite as the young American. Elmo Lincoln appears in the role of an American soldier hero, while the remaining parts are in the hands of Adolphe Lestina, David Butler, Edward Peil, Kate Bruce and "Peaches" Jackson.
"Coal" Picture Will Be Shown to Officials

William Parke finished the Educational's "Coal" picture October 28, and the production was cleared for the approval of the Federal Fuel Administrator and the heads of the fuel industry throughout the country.

It will subsequently be seen at a trade showing and will then be pre-released at one of the Broadway theatres prior to its general distribution to the motion picture houses. The definite title will shortly be announced.

O. F. Spahr Reports Sale of Many Motiographs

According to General Manager Spahr of the Enterprise Optical Company of Chicago, the closing of theatres all over the country on account of the influenza epidemic has proved a benefit instead of a detriment to his business.

During the shut-down two Motiograph De Luxe machines have been installed in each of the following places: Akron, Ohio; St. Joseph, Mo.; Waukegan, Ill.; Chicago, Okla.; Danville, Ill., and Famous theatre at Chicago. One machine was installed also at the Noyes School at Evanston, Ill.

In addition to this it is reported that the H. K. Barnett Supply Company of Dallas, Texas, has sold and installed in Y. M. C. A. huts in the State of Texas fifty Motiograph machines and received an additional order from the Y. M. C. A. for thirty.

While Mr. O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Co., was attending the recent New York Convention of the motion picture industry, he received personally from the New York headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. an order for one hundred additional Motiograph machines.

The Enterprise Co. had previously furnished the Y. M. C. A. army huts of the United States cantonments between five and six hundred machines. The Y. M. C. A. are now arranging to ship Mazda equipment of Motiograph type to Philippines.

Goldwyn Special Gets Big List

Marcus Loew Gives "For the Freedom of the East" Seventy Days' Blanket Booking on His Metropolitan Circuit

IRA M. LOWRY'S patriotic production, "For the Freedom of the East," a drama of the defeat and rout of the Hun in Siberia, featuring the screen's only Chinese star, Lady Ts'en Mei, has been given seventy days' booking on the Marcus Loew circuit, comprising New York City and nearby communities.

Officials of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, distributors of "For the Freedom of the East," regard this as a striking testimonial to the wide appeal of this subject.

A contract for immediate playing dates was signed because, to quote the Loew bookers, "For the Freedom of the East" is one of the best pictures ever made for the average American.

The production was booked at sight for a full-time showing on the Loew metropolitan circuit after the Spanish influenza shutdown had interrupted a pre-release showing at the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, where it is declared thousands were turned away in the four days. "For the Freedom of the East" was shown.

During the month of no releases twenty Goldwyn offices throughout the United States are said to have proved by bookings that this offering is to be one of the big productions of the winter and spring seasons. Goldwyn believes it is not too much to predict for it a success equal to that of "For the Freedom of the World," another Lowry production.

Goldwyn is advising exhibitors to book "For the Freedom of the East" at once, thereby assuring themselves of playing dates, before all prints of the production are again in use. This will, they say, avoid the situation which arose with "For the Freedom of the World," which was asserted to be so popular that, though the production is months old, some theatres have as yet been unable to get requested repeat dates, according to reports emanating from the Goldwyn offices.

Metro Engages Real War Heroes for Film

TWELVE wounded British and Canadian soldiers, who came to New York to boost the Fourth Liberty Loan drive—all men said to have participated in some of the severest fighting of the war—took part in the hospital scene for the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Wilson or the Kaiser?" by Maxwell Karger, which is now in course of production under the direction of Charles Miller.

The scene was made to represent one of the numerous Red Cross convalescent hospitals in England and many realistic touches were said to have been suggested by the interested "Tommies" themselves, such as the pinning of chevrons or decorations and other honors over the cots of the men who had won them. It was the first time that they had ever taken part in the making of a motion picture, except when filmed by the photographers who make the battlefront pictures.

Many of these men possessed, besides the numerous stripes which denote the number of wounds they have sustained, decorations of various kinds for valor and bravery shown on the field.

Altogether it was described as a scene both stirring and original, and Director Miller says that whenever the opportunity presents itself he is going to corral this young band of war heroes for his productions.
Serial Drive by Pathe Forces

Huge and Well Organized Campaign for Business on "Wolves of Kultur" Serial Planned by Pathe

Pathe believes in drives, in other words, in concentration. When the entire sales force concentrates superhuman efforts on one particular subject, and steadily hammers away at that subject for several weeks, they feel that there can be only one result.

For four complete weeks commencing November 3, every Pathe district manager, every Pathe branch manager, every Pathe salesman, every Pathe booker, every Pathe home office executive concerned with sales, has been instructed to "drive" on the Western Photoplay Company's patriotic serial "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, Sheldon Lewis and Charles Hutchinson.

Pathe officials assert that former drives have been tremendously successful, and that the drive on "Hands Up," the Western serial featuring Ruth Roland and George Chesebro, resulted in booking records eclipsing every Pathe serial record to date.

Pathe in its sales drives is emulating many worthy examples set by the Liberty Loan Committee, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the American Red Cross, etc. Drives are intended to be decidedly American in character and spirit and to typify the keen sense of "Yankee hustle," and when carried out by Sales Manager Quimby it is declared that they cannot fail to go over the top.

During the Spanish influenza epidemic the Pathe sales force has had time to generate quite a lot of superhuman sales energy, it is said, and now that the ban is being lifted in various territories these men are going out with a will and a vim almost equal to the intensive spirit which carries the boys in France and Belgium over all obstacles, according to the Pathe publicity department.

While it was unfortunate for "Wolves of Kultur" that the release date of episode No. 1 fell the very week when the influenza epidemic was at its worst, and when at least 50 per cent of the motion picture theatres in America had closed their doors, this sales drive from November 3 to 30 is expected to make up for all time lost during the quarantine.

"Just imagine," said one Pathe official, "somewhere near 250 keen, alert, aggressive, hustling American film salesmen all concentrating for four complete weeks on one specific subject! When the subject is such a serial as this patriotic fifteen episode continued photoplay 'Wolves of Kultur,' there cannot be any doubt as to the result of this sales drive."

Film Story Credited with Wide Circulation

It is estimated by Louis B. Mayer that Owen Johnson's story of "Virtuous Wives," produced in motion pictures for distribution by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit as the first of the Anita Stewart special productions, has had a greater circulation in magazine and book form than any other screen adaptation of the year.

In addition to its box-office value on this point, Mr. Mayer stated that the combined advertising and publicity given to the story by the magazine and book publishers constitutes one of the greatest campaigns in the annals of merchandising popular fiction.

The story first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. It was heralded by a national advertising campaign, which embraced newspapers, competing magazines, billboards, and countless special window displays in the stores of hundreds of book and magazine dealers throughout the country. It then ran serially, for ten months, occupying the major space and treated as the featured story in each of those issues.

"Successful advertising is the result of repetition, according to the generally accepted theory which practice has pretty well proven to be correct and a fact," said Mr. Mayer. "On the estimated basis of approximately five readers to a copy of a magazine, Cosmopolitan gave the story of "Virtuous Wives" each month, a total reading circulation of 7,500,000.

"Repeating this every month for almost a year gave an approximate total equivalent to three-quarters of the entire population of the United States."

"The Bells," Next Pathe, After Embargo

"The Bells," starring Frank Keenan, an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, which was pre-released at the Rialto, New York, and held from regular issue by the cessation, will be the first Pathe feature released after the period of discontinuance.

Film Clearing House Prepares to Distribute

Frank G. Hall, newly appointed supervising director of the recently organized Film Clearing House, Inc., announces that the company will immediately start the opening of exchanges in the various territories.

"Our exchanges will only supply the actual service connected with the physical distribution of pictures," declared Mr. Hall.

"No sales force will be maintained by the exchanges, the producers or groups of producers putting their bookings in charge of their own salesmen. Film Clearing House, Inc., will have no producing companies of its own, neither will it have any interest in, nor affiliation with them.

"It will maintain efficient business organizations in every territory for the handling of film, advertising matter, etc., and for the recording of bookings and making of collections for rentals, and it will supply offices and equipment for the sales organizations representing the different companies whose film it handles.

"But the pictures will at all times be under the actual control of their owners and a strict accounting of all bookings and all moneys will be made to the owners every week."

Among the other men prominent in the new organization is Ashbel P. Fitch, well-known New York lawyer and director of many large corporations. Mr. Fitch is president of Film Clearing House, Inc.

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, whose name has become prominent in sporting circles throughout the ownership of the Yankees of baseball fame, is one of the Board of Directors, while another familiar name on the board is that of William M. Selzberg, one of the organizers and general counsel of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade and, until recently, general counsel of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Walter N. Selzberg, who has represented many leading film executives is one of the company's attorneys.

Margaret Fisher, Who Helps Make American Productions a Success. Her Latest Is "Fair Enough" Sol Lesser Gets Official Film for California

"Sol L. Lesser, chairman Division of United States Official War Films of the California State Council for Defense, will handle the distribution of "Under Four Flags," the third war feature picture of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. Mr. Lesser has also handled the California distribution for "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the first two war pictures in the Government's "Following the Flag to France" series. The World Film Corporation, which handles the general distribution of "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," exempts California, Michigan, outside of Detroit, which is under the direction of the Michigan War Preparedness Board at Lansing, and North Dakota, which is handled by the North Dakota Council for Defense, at Bismarck.

Goldwyn Concentrates on Service Department

During the period of no new releases Goldwyn's service men took advantage of the lull in activities, and it is announced that many new and novel promotion campaigns were conceived and prepared for forthcoming Star Series releases.

Previously issued advertising material was hauled from the filing cabinets and stock rooms and an analysis made of the merits and value of the literature issued. Reports from exhibitors also were carefully reviewed, and now, when every exhibitor in the country is determined to make up for lost time and forge ahead stronger than ever, it is declared that Goldwyn's Service Department is in a position now to offer even a better and more intensified service than heretofore.

Export and Import Co. Has Metro Rights

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., announces that the Export & Import Company controls the Metro subjects for the whole of the continental Europe, Brazil and Argentine, and all communications for those territories should be addressed to them.

World Announces "Just Sylvia" November 18

The resumption of releases by World Pictures will be made on November 18, on which day this company will present "Just Sylvia," with Barbara Castleston starring and Johnnie Hines featured. Others prominent in the cast are Jack Drumier, Gerrard Butler, Anthony Merlo and Theresa Maxwell Conover. The story was written by Harry O. Hoyt and scenarioized by Hamilton Smith. It was directed by Travers Vale.

On November 25, Montagu Love will be the star in "The Grouch," which was written by Forrest Halsey. Dorothy Green is the heroine of this picture, dealing with the mystery of the Great Dismal Swamps. Oscar Apfel directed the picture. Prominent in the cast are Albert Hart and Margaret Lindon.

Adolphe Osso Secures Larger Offices

Adolphe Osso has taken larger offices in the Brokaw Building, 1457 Broadway, New York, and has added a new department for publicity and personal representative.

Mr. Osso is only twenty-five years old and came from France a few years ago to become manager of the agency of Oscar Osso for the Society of Dramatic Authors, Playwrights, Composers and Publishers of Music of France.

M. Leonce Perret, Albert Capellani, and Mme. Alice Blache are among those who have placed the handling of their affairs in Mr. Osso's hands. Dolores Cassinelli, star of "Lafayette, We Come," has also selected Mr. Osso as her personal representative.

Perret's next production starring Miss Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, and entitled "Stars of Glory," will be handled by Adolphe Osso. Among the picture rights he has already sold are: Maurice Maeterlinck's "Bluebird," Anatole France's "Thais," "The Marianne" by P. Pierre Wolff—in which Clara Kimball Young starred—"The Savage Woman" by Francis de Curel, in which Clara Kimball Young starred; "Elevation" by Henry Bernstein, sold to William A. Brady; "The Torches" by Henry Bataille, sold to Lester Lonergan and Messrs. Shubert.

Two Releases This Week by W. H. Productions

Several territories are still open on the Hamilton series.

"A Busted Johnny" marks Charlie Chaplin's first appearance on the screen, and is declared to be one of the most distinctive and interesting Chaplin pictures.

"Shorty's Clever Ruse" is a two-reel western, with Shorty Hamilton as a cowboy.
Why Dixon Wrote “One Woman”

By Warren W. Lewis

W hat are the views of Thomas Dixon, the man who wrote the internationally known story from which Select Pictures adapted its great special attraction, “The One Woman”? They are the views of a master mind; of a man that gave to the world such products as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Leopard’s Spots," and many other thrilling stories of human life. It took twenty years for Thomas Dixon to give the world "The One Woman."

A few days ago Thomas Dixon leaned back in a chair at his New York office and told why he wrote "The One Woman." The story treats with the situations of home life, and that is why he wrote it. He wanted to discuss home life from every angle.

Surprising as it may seem, "The One Woman" is not fiction; neither is it a story of Mr. Dixon’s own life. When the book was first circulated there was a storm of criticism from every section of the country. Hundreds of Mr. Dixon’s acquaintances immediately recognized what they thought was a faithful portrayal of his own career.

Mr. Dixon, like Frank Gordon in the story, was once a clergyman, an ordained minister of God. During the childhood of Mr. Dixon his father brought him up with the idea of making him a minister. Mr. Dixon was born in North Carolina and attended the schools in that state.

In college is everything from botany to politics, and was so successful in the latter estate that before he reached his twenty-first birthday he was elected to the legislature of North Carolina. Before that time, however, he attended Wake Forest College. Later he was a student at Johns Hopkins University, where he was a classmate of President Wilson.

Even while he was studying for the ministry Mr. Dixon was making a close study of Socialism. It was because of his close interest in this subject, and because of the fact that in 1898 he left the ministry, that people declared "The One Woman" to be a story of his own life.

But nothing could be further from the truth. "The One Woman" is merely a story of life as Mr. Dixon has seen it and studied it. That there is more truth than fiction in this masterful theme is evidenced by the fact that "The One Woman" is based on the actual experience of the late Rev. George D. Herron, a Socialist preacher who married a beautiful woman and later fell in love with a wealthy member of his congregation. He left his wife and contracted a marriage with the new woman.

This man’s marriage with the new woman was a marriage by proclamation—Free Love. It is the theme that furnishes the plot for "The One Woman."

As "The Birth of a Nation" dealt with the situation between the North and South at the close of the Civil War, so does "The One Woman" deal with Mr. Dixon’s conception of Socialism. He has lectured on the subject, and has written short numbers for magazines and newspapers. All his life Mr. Dixon intended to become a writer, but he believed that the time for a man to write was after he had lived the part of his life that furnishes the romance for a story. Before he even wrote his first novel, he wrote and published six volumes on religious topics. Shortly after that he took up fictional writing.

Mr. Dixon doesn’t wait for inspiration before writing a novel. His themes are bigger than themes that writers obtain through mere inspiration. All of his books are written the way he wrote "The One Woman" and "The Birth of a Nation." He takes from fifteen to twenty years to study his subject. It takes about a year to gather actual material. The writing is simple. It took Mr. Dixon a little longer than six weeks to type the pages for "The One Woman."

There are few writers who have the courage or ambition to work twenty years on a subject that they can put on paper in six weeks!

Mr. Dixon doesn’t always work. He has his hours for play as well as any other man. His family occupies part of his time. The author of "The One Woman" is a family loving man. He has two sons and a daughter. One of his sons is now in the aviation corps. His daughter is married, while his other son is in charge of Mr. Dixon’s winter home, a beautiful island of three thousand acres in North Carolina. Three months of every year Mr. Dixon and his family live on this island.

The other nine months Mr. Dixon lives in New York. He has a home on Riverside Drive at 160th street.

Mr. Dixon does his writing in New York. It is two years since he has published a book, but his latest, "The Way of a Man," will make its appearance about next January. The first copy went to his publisher the day the writer interviewed Mr. Dixon at his New York office. It is a story of modern feminism and the feminist movement. It discusses the changes that modern economics will bring to a woman’s life. In a way "The Way of a Man" will be a sequel to "The One Woman."

In writing "The Birth of a Nation," as in writing "The One Woman," Mr. Dixon knew and studied his subjects. He knew his subjects in "The Birth of a Nation" because he lived the life that he wrote about. His own father—a Baptist minister—was a leader of the Ku Klux Klan.

His personal friend, the Rev. Herron, was the man whose deeds furnished the material for the plot of "The One Woman."
World Film Predicts Era of Prosperity

Immediately on receipt of the glorious news that Turkey had collapsed and that Austria was pleading for a cessation of hostilities, World Pictures took steps to observe the attitude of the public towards the theatres in New York City. The officials of the company said that they felt that here would be found an indication of how soon the motion picture producers as well as the exhibitors, might expect the full tide of prosperity for amusement enterprises that it was felt would come with the termination of this world-wide struggle.

World Pictures learned that, notwithstanding the deterrent influence of the influenza epidemic, the theatres in New York recorded an increase in box office takings of an average of four hundred per cent over the week previous. One ticket agency said their business reached on Friday $3,000 on the day, whereas a week ago they did less than $200 on the day.

Some of the theatres, in fact, seventy per cent of the theatres, on Saturday night had their standing room only signs out for the first time in many months. "If this is the experience of theatres with the elimination of Turkey and Austria from the war, what will be the effect when Germany will be compelled to surrender unconditionally?" said one official.

Experienced showmen who have been connected with the theatre for many years are unanimous in the belief that we will have for the next three or four years the greatest era of prosperity for amusements ever known in the history of the world.

Universal Films Declared Popular at Manilla

Aguedo De Jesus, former poster manager of Universal at Manilla and now a sailor in the United States Navy, visited Universal headquarters and told the officials how their pictures were taking in the Philippines.

"The Filipinos love the movies," he said. "You ought to have been in Manilla when 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' came to town. The picture stayed a week and the people just packed the theatre to see it. The box office receipts were over 1,500 pesos every night."

Advertising Drive for United

J. A. Berst Announces Plans of a Proposed Campaign of National Publicity for the Three United Stars

J. A. BERST, president of United Picture Theatres of America, has not allowed the enforced and unfortunate period of temporary quiescence to which the motion picture industry has fallen heir to check the energy and determination which has characterized and brought to success more than one of his enterprises in the past.

This is declared to be evidenced by the announcement that United has completed arrangements for a national publicity campaign which is expected to embrace every channel of exploitation calculated to promote the vogue and popularity of United stars and attractions with the public.

As an evidence of the sincerity of United's president's efforts, it is declared that United's nation-wide campaign has as its salient feature not, as might be expected, the direct exploitation of the United co-operative plan but, instead, the exciting of general public interest in its stars, a subject calculated both to be of universal appeal to the picture theatre patron and thus directly advantageous to the exhibitor.

To this end the campaign embraces both outdoor and newspaper and magazine as well as other fields of special publicity.

Arrangements are said to have been concluded by United for a remarkable billboard display in the following cities and their approaches, in all of which prominent locations have been secured: New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Cleveland, Detroit, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Denver, Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Dallas, Buffalo, and Minneapolis among the principal cities, and ultimately will embrace all cities of prominence.

Strikingly attractive portraits of United Stars, Kitty Gordon and Florence Reed, with Dustin Farnum in characteristic cowboy costume, form the outstanding feature of what the United described as one of the finest and most remarkable attention-compelling twenty-four-sheets the lithographers have ever produced.

Fails to Exploit Authenticity of the Film

M. PROCHET, of the Italo-North American Commercial Union, has written a letter of protest to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit complaining about the text of the advertising copy used to exploit "Italy's Flaming Front."

His complaint is based on his opinion, formed by official knowledge, that exhibitors who are showing the production are not paying sufficient tribute to its authenticity in their local campaigns.

He quotes from the text of an ad used by the Parkview theatre of Johnstown, Pa., which in part reads: "Six reels of Italian scenes taken by a photographer incorporated in the army. The films are official inasmuch as they were taken with consent of the Italian Government. This text was published in Italian and is Mr. Prochet's translation.

Commenting upon it, he wrote: "It seems to me that outside of misrepresenting the facts, this does so at a detriment to the value of the film. The scenes referred to were all taken by a military photographer (not by a photographer who was incorporated in the army), and the pictures are not "official insofar as taken with the consent of the Italian Government, but are a direct emanation of the Italian Government. They were taken by an official, recognized branch of the Italian army and handled and sent abroad by the Government itself."

Mr. Prochet makes the recommendation to First National that it suggest to all of its exhibitor-members the value of featuring strongly the fact that it is a genuine official pictorial document from the Italian Government and not merely "authorized by the Supreme Command."

This he defines as meaning only that individuals unattached in any capacity to the Italian army had been permitted to invade back areas with motion picture cameras and obtained negative to which the Supreme Command found no objections from a military standpoint.
Pioneer Film Announces State Rights Sales

According to the Pioneer Film Corporation the territories for “Wives of Men” are selling fast and they decline that it looks as if this attraction with Florence Reed starring in one of her greatest roles, will prove a big success from the box-office standpoint.

Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston have not only purchased the New England rights for “Wives of Men” but for “The Still Alarm” as well.

Maurice Less, general manager and president of The Lyric Film and Supply Co., bought the Indiana rights on “Wives of Men”; Arthur S. Hyman Attractions of Detroit, has just closed a deal for “Wives of Men” for the Michigan territory and the Strand Features of Detroit has purchased the rights to the same territory for “The Still Alarm.”

Tourner Will Produce in California

Maurice Tourner has just announced his intention of going to California for the winter, making his next three or four productions on the Coast. Mr. Tourner will leave with his staff immediately after completing “My Lady’s Garter,” the adaptation of the late Jacques Futrelles’ detective mystery romance now in course of filming. It will be this director’s first visit to the Coast. Mr. Tourner has been producing in America for four years, all of his activities having been confined to the East.

“I am not making the trip particularly on account of unfavorable conditions, such as may be due to a possible coal shortage and so on,” says Mr. Tourner. “I want to work on bigger subjects in a bigger way and I believe that California offers the right opportunity.”

The distribution arrangements for “Woman,” “My Lady’s Garter” and forthcoming Tourner productions are in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Taylor Secures Studio at Los Angeles

Charles A. Taylor Studios, Inc., is the name given a new firm organized by this well-known man of theatrical circles, who is author of a number of stage productions and has been identified with the film industry for the past two years or more.

He has leased a studio at 1745 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, and here is producing a film at present titled “The Girl and the Horses.” Considerable mystery surrounds the filming of this picture, as the name of the star is being closely guarded.

Frank Mayo has been brought out from New York to play the opposite lead, and others in the cast are George Gebheart, Deli Boone and Claire McDowell. Charles A. Taylor is author of the story and is personally directing the production.

B. L. James and William E. Fildew are in charge of the photography. James Tynan has been engaged to direct the publicity and advertising.

Florence Reed Cast for First United

Tribune Productions, Inc., declares that the cast for Florence Reed’s first picture for United is one of the strongest ever engaged for the support of any screen star.

It includes William Desmond, himself a star with releases current on Broadway; Alec Francis, well known on both the speaking and the screen stage; Robert Fraser, of Ben-Hur fame; Marcelle Rousseau, recently seen in Ethel Barrymore’s support, and other capable artists to interpret the parts under John M. Stahl’s direction.

The scenes of Miss Reed’s latest picture are laid in Paris. Some exquisitely remarkable settings are promised, and for the exteriors access was obtained to an exclusive estate.

Health Service Announced in Short Reels

The K. W. S. Distributing Company, Inc., of New York City, announces that it is producing a series of films under the title of “Healthograms,” each one giving some hygienic advice calculated to benefit humanity.

It is stated that these health hints will be based on information supplied by prominent physicians, but that the health aids are portrayed in pictures which are given rather a humorous turn so that they may amuse as well as give valuable advice.

These Healthgrams are to be released as “four-minute reels” in the very near future, according to the K. W. S. Company.

Gift Book Illustrated from Film Feature

For what is declared to be the first time, scenes from a motion picture production are being used to illustrate a de luxe Christmas gift book.

While movie stills have been utilized in getting out popular editions of novels, it is said that Dodd, Mead and Company’s forthcoming edition of Maurice Maeterlinck’s “The Blue Bird” marks the first instance of photoplay scenes being given an artistic position of honor.

Twenty-four scenes from Maurice Tourner’s production of “The Blue Bird” are utilized in the exquisite holiday edition of the fantasy.

Thomas Bedding Handling “Hearts of Love”

“Hearts of Love,” starring Edna Mayo, is handled by Thomas Bedding, formerly identified with “Civilization,” “Cabiria” and “My Four Years in Germany.” H. A. Tansil is president of the American Feature Film Corporation which produced “Hearts of Love.” The New York offices of the corporation are in the Candler Building.

Katterjohn Films Pledge Consistent Productions

In the production of Katterjohn Films for the coming year, it is asserted that special attention is to be given to the development and treatment of the stories produced, to the providing of exactly the locations or settings called for by the script, and to the selection of the players who will interpret the various roles.

These three points are said to have long been a particular hobby of Monte M. Katterjohn, the active head of the new producing organization, and in the special productions which he is about to undertake he announces the fullest exploitation of his ideas along these lines.

Pre-Leases Announced for Stewart Film

First National announces that on the first Anita Stewart production the advance reports from the exchanges indicate that the pre-release contracts for "Virtuous Wives" will be extremely great in number and that the majority of them will be for extended runs, with an almost unprecedentedly small number of one-day bookings for the first ninety days.

"Virtuous Wives" is proving to be one of the best commercial titles of the year, according to reports received from a number of exchanges as a comment on their early contracts for the first special Anita Stewart production made by Mr. Louis B. Mayer.

General Makes Changes in Several Cities

James B. Kelly of the Dallas branch, General Film, has two "posterettes," who are Blanche Corley and Catherine Rogers. Manager Foland of Kansas City has also a poster girl, Miss Rose Probasco.

As the work behind the counter, handling lithographs, etc., entails considerable activity, the girls wear overalls. They are enthusiastic over their duties and are said to be proving very efficient.

Sol Davis, who has been with General Film Company five years, has just been appointed assistant manager of the Dallas office.

Goldwyn Announces New Release Schedule

Goldwyn announces that the fact of its releasing a Rex Beach and Geraldine Farrar production only two weeks apart immediately after the embargo is lifted will greatly stimulate business for the theatres.

"Two productions of such powerful box office calibre are certain to prove effective in again restoring theatre patronage to high-tide proportions in all localities," says a Goldwyn official.

The new release dates and the productions and stars scheduled are:

November 17: Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week" by Thompson Buchanan; directed by Harry Beaumont.

November 24: Mabel Normand in "A Government Activities in "Over the Rhine"

Government sanction has been gained by Fred Balshofer to take many scenes at March Field, Riverside, California, for his forthcoming production, "Over the Rhine," starring Julian Eltinge.

So at sunrise one morning Mr. Eltinge, his two cameramen and Fred Balshofer, the director of the picture, arrived on the field just as 102 superb specimens of American aeroplanes, fresh from the Wright-Martin and other equally famed factories, piloted by their respective commanders, were marshalled into battle array.

Next Joyce-Vitagraph Is "Everybody's Girl"

"Everybody's Girl" will be the first Vitagraph release after the embargo. This is a Blue Ribbon feature starring Alice Joyce and is an adaptation from O. Henry's story entitled "Brick Dust Row."

Caruso's Screen Debut After Embargo

With the lifting of the embargo on releasing, Famous Players-Lasky offers Enrico Caruso in his screen debut, "My Cousin."

Edward Jose directed the production and the story is by Margaret Turnbull.

Other productions scheduled for release the same day are Billie Burke's newest Paramount picture, "The Make-Believe Wife," and Bryant Washburn's first Paramount offering, "The Gypsy Trail." Miss Burke's vehicle is an adaptation by Adrian Gill-Spear of Edward Childs Carpenter's story.
Ralph Ince Attraction in Work

The First Ralph Ince Film Attraction to Be Released Under the S-L Banner Is Now Being Produced

After many months of careful preparation the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction to be released by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of the recently organized S-L Pictures, is in work. Mr. Ince, in talking over the new organization with some friends, said recently: "I have now come to the point toward which I have aimed consistently through years of hard endeavor. Such success as I have had is crowned with new hope of bigger things to come. No conditions could be better than those under which I go on with my new work."

"Heartened by the enthusiasm of my friends and the confidence of my financial backers, every ounce of effort I can command will be brought to bear on the new productions.

"The exhibitors may feel assured that everything I have to give of intelligence, imagination and hard work will be in their new attractions. And particularly I wish now to invite the severest criticism of my friends, the exhibitors.

"He who criticizes my work with the fiercest honesty and severity will be my best friends, for it is only from the exhibitor who has his eye constantly to the ground that I can hope to gather criticism of constructive value for future work."

"I am peculiarly pleased by the addition to our circle of Mr. Conrad Milliken, formerly vice-president of the Petrova Picture Company. I have worked under Mr. Milliken's guidance and this has been associated with McClure's and have come to rely greatly on his friendship and judgment.

"We have complete sympathy in our ideas and regard to the purely creative side of the work, and I have the greatest respect for his vision of the broader aspects of the industry. I am glad that he is to have so much to do with the forging of our picture plans."

"In E. K. Lincoln we have captured a star of the first magnitude. His first appearance in motion pictures was under my direction and I have always entertained a very high opinion of his abilities and purposes. I have watched his work for a long time with keen interest and feel that he has few, if any, rivals in sustained interpretation of all that is fine and virile in American young manhood.

"The powerful theme of the story selected for the first picture in which Mr. Lincoln is to play the leading part, gives us both one of the unusual opportunities in which director and actor rejoice and it remains now only to deliver our best wares to the exhibitor whose confidence and approval is our single aim. The exhibitor is our judge."

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" Universal

After months of preparation, the American Defense Society and Universal Film, Mfg. Company announces the completion of a super film presenting a narrative of America's war and peace power.

The film shows, in effect, how the nation accomplished the military and industrial salvation of humanity in its struggle against Hunsdom, and how it is equipped now to achieve infinite good for the world.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the title of the production. It is declared to be a great spectacle, and the very first of what may be called victory films. It is, in effect, the screen story of America's conquest.

The picture will be issued as an official message of the American Defense Society, with the heartiest support of that organization and all its executive leaders.

Several nationally prominent men are said to have originated the basic idea of the production. They collaborated for weeks during their vacation in devising the general plan of what they hoped would be an epical review of the nation's rise to world leadership, and then enlisted the film experts and Defense Society into the undertaking. The work of production started immediately.

It is said that cameramen and film scientists were dispatched to many parts of the country to collect scenes and spectacles for the film, and that more than a hundred cameras were employed.

Pantages Praises Serial, Pathé's "Hands Up"

Pathé is proud, so it is stated, of the record made by the Ruth Roland serial, "Hands Up," and declares that it has not only broken the records made by other Pathé serials in hooking but that Alexander Pantages, head of the big circuit, bearing his name, writes under date of October 25 as follows:

"The Pathé serial, 'Hands Up,' is a very elaborate and well staged production, containing many exciting episodes. Your star, Ruth Roland, makes a big appeal. I like her in this picture very much. 'Hands Up' is playing first run in all my theatres and until the influenza epidemic had broken our serial records everywhere."

Brady's "Little Women" at Strand Theatre

At the Strand theatre in New York City the William A. Brady production of Louisa M. Alcott's story, "Little Women," is shown. Harley Knole directed the picture and the cast shows that Jo will be portrayed by Dorothy Gish, Meg by Isabel Lamon, Beth by Lillian Hall, and Amy by Florence Flinn. Henry Hull of "The Man Who Came Back," will play John Brooke, and Conrad Nagel of "Experience" and "The Man Who Came Back," will play Laurie.

Bedding Handles New Organization

It was announced this week that Thomas Bedding has assumed charge of the New York offices and activities of the American Feature Film Corporation, Inc., of Greenwich, S. C. As general sales manager of that company he will be found in Suite 616, Candler building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, handling the foreign rights of a notable new American, "Hearts of Love," starring Edna Mayo.

"I am staking my twenty-five years' reputation and experience in the motion picture business," said Mr. Bedding, "on the future of this picture. As you know, I have been identified with some big offers—Cabrera, 'Civilization,' and 'My Four Years in Germany' among them. 'Hearts of Love' is in their class. Edna Mayo, Gladden James, Frederick Truesdell and Fred Hearst are in the cast.

"For the United States and Canada 'Hearts of Love' will be released on the General Film program. My present business is to dispose of the foreign rights. I have already had several bids and offers for rights in various parts of the world and this before the picture has been publicly shown.

"'Hearts of Love' is entirely an American picture; American in theme and sentiment; made with American money; directed and acted by Americans.

"H. A. Tansill is president of the American Feature Film Corporation. The main offices are at Greenwich, S. C., and the company is financially strong."
Paramount-Articraft Will Have Twelve Specials

Paramount-Arcticraft specials will number twelve instead of nine because of the success the Famous Players-Lasky Company considers those already issued have enjoyed.

"The Hun Within" and "Private Pearl" are pointed out as two exceptionally successful productions and Maurice Tourneur's "Sporting Life," the third Paramount-Arcticraft special will be released November 24.

Two other specials have already been completed. They are "The False Faces," a picturization by Thomas H. Ince of the thrilling story by Louis Joseph Vance, and "The Silver King," a screen version of the most successful melodrama in the history of the stage.

In "The False Faces" Henry B. Walthall has the leading role of "The Lone Wolf," while in "The Silver King" William Faversham is starred, with Barbara Castleton as his leading support.

The sixth Paramount-Arcticraft special will be a John Emerson-Luise Loo production titled "When the Boys Come Home."

"Huns" Object to Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs

Emphasis was given to the Anti-Yellow Dog Club movement and indirectly to the 117 Productions film, "The Yellow Dog," last week by a report said to have been received from some one on the Western front.

Germany is declared to have made this campaign in America the subject of special notice.

It is said that many of the Huns take notice of the movement with editorial statements published in the paper, America in Europe, which is printed in English and left behind by the Germans in their retreat from Northern France.

The remarks appear under the title, "The Boy Detective to the Rescue." They ridicule the organization of American boys into Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs to combat German propaganda and disloyalty in this country.

Alice Joyce Recovers and Returns to Studio

Alice Joyce has recovered from her recent illness and has returned to the Vitagraph studio.

Her next release will be "Everybody's Girl," and this will be followed by "The Captain's Captain." In addition to these, she has also recently completed work in a Robert W. Chambers story, "The Cambrian Mask," and is now in the midst of work on the early scenes of "The Lion and the Mouse."

During the height of the influenza and pneumonia epidemic in New York Miss Joyce was taken ill, and it was feared she might be one of a score of both of the dread afflictions. She was only ill a few days, however, and soon was well enough to take a trip to Virginia, where she has fully recovered her strength.

Walthall Signs with National

National Film Corporation Contracts for Exclusive Services of Henry B. Walthall—Released Through Robertson-Cole Company

THE National Film Corporation of America has signed a contract with Henry B. Walthall for the exclusive services of the star for an extended period.

The definite signing of Mr. Walthall follows close upon the deal by which the Robertson-Cole Company takes over the National Film Corporation interests, handling for the entire world the eight Billie Rhodes pictures, as well as the forthcoming series of Walthall dramas.

According to present plans Walthall will make four or five dramatic pictures during the next twelve months. William Parsons, general manager and treasurer of the National Film Corporation, declares that Mr. Walthall will receive one of the highest salaries of any individual male star in the motion picture world. Several stars may receive greater remuneration through the fact that they own their own producing organizations, but Mr. Walthall will take first place among salaried stars, declares Mr. Parsons.

The film star has just scored a personal hit in the spoken drama, "The Awakening," at the Criterion theatre in New York, and Mr. Parsons declares that every metropolitan critic commented enthusiastically upon his remarkable performance.

Mr. Walthall will return immediately to the National coast studios to begin work on his first feature of the series.

Walthall scored one of his first big hits in Griffith's "Judith of Bethulia," the first American feature production, and he followed it with his famous depiction of the little colonel in that screen classic, "The Birth of a Nation."

Musical Score Completed for "Common Cause"

The music score for "The Common Cause," the production of J. Stuart Blackton, which is soon to be released through the Vitagraph distributing organization, has been completed and was played for the first time last week.

Commodore Blackton and a party of invited guests, which included a number of prominent musicians, heard the music played by its composer, Manuel Klein, in the home office projection room of the Vitagraph distributing organization at 1600 Broadway.

Mr. Klein, who is said to be one of the best known musicians and composers, was director at the New York Hippodrome for ten years, and he was selected by Commodore Blackton as the man to give "The Common Cause" a musical setting commensurate with what he considered the importance of the production.

From the offices of the Vitagraph distributing organization comes the announcement that plans are maturing.

Billie Rhodes to Have World Exploitation

The Robertson-Cole Company, which lately has acquired a number of important features for world-wide distribution, is planning an exploitation campaign covering two hemispheres for Billie Rhodes, the new star of the National Film Corporation.

Last week announcement was made that the Robertson-Cole Company had concluded a deal whereby it will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National's series of eight Billy Rhodes pictures, along with the Henry B. Walthall pictures to be produced by the same concern.

Robertson-Cole have immediately started outlining a big campaign across country and through other lands. One of the first steps will be a special New York presentation for the trade.

The first Billie Rhodes picture is "The Girl of My Dreams," to be followed by a circus girl story. Miss Rhodes has completed the second production.
E. K. Lincoln Will Star in S-L Pictures

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have announced that E. K. Lincoln will be starred in a series of big specials under their Lubin trademark, starting this week on the first, which will be a Ralph Ince Film Attraction, personally directed by that creator of film spectacles.

"The combination of E. K. Lincoln and Ralph Ince is a formidable one, which should bring forth money-getting productions," declared Mr. Sawyer.

"Mr. Lincoln has now a place of esteem in the eyes of the public, who remember him as the star of 'For Freedom of the World,' 'Lafayette We Come,' and many other successes."

Mr. Lincoln stated that he felt particularly gratified at being associated with S-L Pictures, and under the direction of Mr. Ince.

"Big films are the only thing today," declared Mr. Lincoln. "I have always wanted to be associated with an independent producing organization which had the courage to break away from any certain scheduled number of releases, and whose aim was solely to put out films of stupendous importance. Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Lubin both have the right idea—not to make many, but to make good pictures."

"The part which I play in the first special, which we are just starting, offers me the biggest opportunity I have ever had to portray American manhood in its ideal form. We are all bound to secrecy as to the topic of the picture. I can only say that its theme is far-reaching and of international importance, and I think it is the greatest scenario I have ever read."

"Years ago I was under Mr. Ince's direction in the Vitagraph studios. I have always been an ardent admirer of his artistry and I consider him one of the greatest directors of the day. He has a fine perception for the dramatic, a keen insight into human nature, and the most perfect sense of the fine points of detail that I have ever observed in a director."

Ince Will Soon Occupy His New Studios

According to report from the Pacific Coast, the new studios being erected for Thomas H. Ince at the former home of the producer, Culver City, will soon be ready for occupancy, and it is possible that Thanksgiving will see the companies and the executives installed there safely.

The present quarters of the Ince people at the old Biograph studio, near Pico street, Los Angeles, have been outgrown and it was essential to secure more commodious quarters. The Culver City plant will be easily accessible, it is said, and afford all the room needed for any purpose.

Blackton Will Announce Distribution Shortly

In response to many requests received by J. Stuart Blackton concerning his new feature, "Safe for Democracy," which was the principal attraction at S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli theatre, Commodore Blackton states that details of his distribution plan for this production will be completed and announced shortly. The run of the picture at the Rivoli was a pre-release showing, and no release date has yet been set.

"Safe for Democracy," which is founded on the "work-or-fight" law, was just completed by Commodore Blackton, and its first screening was immediately booked by Mr. Rothapfel. Mitchell Lewis is starred, and the supporting cast includes Ruby de Remer, Ida Darling, Helen Ferguson, John C. Wade, John H. Goldsworthy, Sidney D'Albrook, Gus Alexander, Eugene Strong and Aubrey Batrice.

Big House for "Belgium, Kingdom of Grief"

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," was shown to a full house at the Institute of Art and Science in Brooklyn, according to report.

They engaged the picture for their members for two shows, the next one to be on November 30. It is said that several thousand members had to be turned away for lack of seats for the first showing.

Everybody is declared to have expressed themselves as highly pleased with the film. For about two weeks in advance all seats were sold and those who wished to buy seats for the showing had to be turned away as there were no more seats to be procured, it is said.

A Man's Experience Getting "A Woman's Experience" Into the Rialto

During the coming week the Bacon-Backer production, "A Woman's Experience," will hold stellar position on the screen of New York's Rialto. This announcement is interesting in more ways than one. In the first place the Bacon-Backer pictures are independent and, as Gerald F. Bacon of that producing company rightly opines, if S. L. Rothapfel sees fit to go out of his way and secure a picture produced by such a company, then indeed is it worthy of consideration from other big men of the country. And in the second place this little announcement leads to a statement of the matter in which "A Woman's Experience" was booked.

Mr. Bacon knew very well that he had a good picture and he felt more certain of it when the trade press came out and told him the same thing. So one day Mr. Bacon called up Mr. Rothapfel and told him that he had a picture to show him and Mr. Rothapfel dared him to come around with it.

So Mr. Bacon did. Mr. Rothapfel had a bad cold. Mr. Bacon felt uneasy. "Mind you," he said to the News, "when a man's feeling good, I'll stake my product at odds but you know, when you see a man red nose and snuffing with the influenza at its height, you sort of have the feeling that you are going in to attend your own funeral. That's how I felt."

And Mr. Rothapfel sat back in his chair and the picture was run. At the end of the first reel the manager straightened up. It had gone five hundred feet and he was quite excited. When the second reel was done he turned to Mr. Bacon and said, "Jerry, you have a great picture!" Mr. Bacon knew he had, but he didn't expect this from a man with a cold at the end of the second reel. But Mr. Rothapfel isn't the kind to say a thing's great when it isn't. So Mr. Bacon brightened up. The funeral was turning into a celebration after all.

When "A Woman's Experience" had run its length Mr. Bacon was given the choice of either the Rialto or the Rivoli for either one of two weeks. He picked the Rialto for the week of November 10. And he went out feeling unusually warm around the heart.

Why shouldn't he? A booking in one of Rothapfel's theatres for an independent company is worth much and, while Mr. Bacon isn't saying much, he knows full well that there are men of Mr. Rothapfel's judgment and ability in other cities, men who won't allow a good thing to pass by without an effort.
Hollywood Hookum

Mae Marsh is here. Usually warm for October. Elegant sunshine for filming. Doug Fairbanks was seen with a full beard. Julian Eltinge is contemplating a trip to New York. C.B. Robertson, Goldwyn casting director, is in town. Charley Chaplin threatens to ruin another picture, beginning next week. Bill Hart's expected home next week from the gay and festive East.

To press agents: Why not have the stars pose in some of their new style Flu masks. Bill Russell is not in town this week for the very good reason he is mortoring in Yosemite Valley.

Roy Stewart Feature Film Company has become a member of the old family of film makers out here. When we all began kidding about the weekless days and meatless days, and all the other 'less days, we never dreamed it would come to the showless days, but we are, so why worry about it?

Fears were entertained this week that Bert Lasson was ill. For he had not invented a "sensational" for nigh on to ten days—and just then the 'phone rang, and Bert's raspy voice began disheveling the delicate mechanism.

As much as Miss Gordon completed a production on Monday, and was not to return to the studio until Friday, it is presumed the publicity department will say something about "Kitty's back." We have just emptied the wastebasket.

An order is ever issued providing that all employees at the Griffith plant shall wear masks. Bill Keefe claims he'll be the handsomest man of the organization. The plant, of course, the mask is large enough, and every one of the Hookum's staff concurs with him in this statement.

In the Lasky Studio publicity department it was said this week the quality of Hollywood HOOKUM has been materially lowered for the publication had not in recent weeks contained the names of K. McGaffey and A. Hurl Shirk. The supposition is that Hookum is now as good as it ever was.

The secret is out. A HOOKUM stunt this week discovered how Jack Cunningham can turn out five reel continuities hourly, daily, weekly, as he sees fit. Inside stuff to scenarists—Jack has two mills, both Underwoods. When the bearings of one get hot, he shifts the yellow sheet into the other, and but a second's time is lost. Try this on your next continuity.

"Pep" McGowan couldn't find a man who would make a high dive for him, as all candidates said they would rather be affected by the tail end of the work or fight order in preference to doing such stunts, so J. "Pep" did it himself, and had it not been for the water being shallow and the wearing a large amount of hair off the top of his head on the nice soft sand he would have performed the dive perfectly. At all rates he secured another good excuse for having his head shaved.

NOTICE TO READERS

HOOKUM did not cease publication, and this is therefore fair warning that it shall continue in its duties of enlightening the world. One edition slipped a cog, owing to a number of flu germs congregating in the sanctum and making publication impossible. The entire staff, including the devil, having regained usual health by the aid of the sunshine of California (Chamber of Commerce, please note this). But Hookum hereby goes on record with a definite statement. When one has the Flu, one knows that he has had the Flu. The man who says he thinks he has had the Flu can therefore be put down as a poor guesser. The office cat will swear to any of the above statements.

GRIFFITH EXPLAINS

In the hope that a definite statement from the government on matters of filmdom might be secured to forever settle the momentous question confronting screen fans and film workers, Mr. David Wark Grif- th is, for this week asked by Hookum to tell why the wheels of vehicles appear to turn backward. The noted producer descended to investigate and make an exhaustive report, same report coming to Hookum office this week.

"The best way to retreat," Mr. David Wark Griffith said, "is to go forward. This I believe applies to the question you gave me to solve, and also to conditions 'Over There.""

This answer by Mr. Griffith indicates he has given the subject deep consideration, and we refer all future inquiries to his reply. The question is settled.

About Metro Players

Bert Lytell, Metro star, and one of the leaders of the film industry in the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign in Los Angeles, this week received his appointment to the officers' training school at Fort McArthur, Waco, Texas, where he will go soon to try for a commission. Lytell recently finished his latest film-play for Metro, titled "The Spender." During the filming of this play he worked at nights for the success of the big Liberty Loan, appearing in theaters anywhere he was posted. His address to the thousands of people gathered at tank Victory on Metro night was a notable appeal. He is one of the best-liked stars in the Los Angeles film colony, and his friends expect him to return with a captaincy or even a major or colonel's commission. Mrs. Lytell, who is known to the theatrical world as Evelyn Vaughan, will remain on the family ranch at Napa. She expects to do her bit by becoming a farmette.

Evelyn Carewe, director, and his brother, Finis Fox, also a writer, returned to the Metro studios this week from the East. Mr. Carewe was the director of the late Harold Lockwood. When Lockwood died recently in New York, Mr. Carewe was expected to direct the pictures of Viola Dana, who is expected to arrive soon on the Pacific Coast. It is an odd coincidence that as soon as he was given this work Miss Dana's husband, John Collins, died of influenza. According to reports reaching the Pacific Coast Miss Dana has the malady in New York.

"Fox Studio Doings"

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox child stars, have arrived in Los Angeles, and they are at the Hollywood Hotel with their mother, Mrs. Irene Lee. They will not begin making their first picture on the coast until the influenza ban is lifted, and that is expected to occur sometime in November. Arvid E. Gillstrom, who has directed the children in their last pictures in the East, is also in Los Angeles. He will handle the megaphone in the new picture.

The title of the new Madlaine Traverse picture now being produced at the Fox studios is "The Danger Zone." Scenes in the picture have been taken in the Majestic Theater, the courthouse, and the Midwick Country Club will also be shown in the scenes. It is announced that the production will be finished within the next two weeks.

Because he was behind in his schedule the Henry Lehman comedy production continues in full force at the Fox-Lehman comedy lot. Mr. Lehman has four companies at work this week.

Henry Lehman, of the Lehman Sunshine comedies, this week announced that he had engaged an orang-outang by the name of Joe, who will appear before the camera in the role of a laugh-getter. He is cast for a part in "The Fatal Marriage," a new comedy. Joe is called upon to express his opinion of a German in this production. According to those producing the film Joe expresses this opinion to the satisfaction of all patriotic Americans.

Fred Fishback has completed a new Henry Lehman Sunshine comedy in which Mack Swan is the star. It is a satire on western drama. Ethel Teare is the leading woman.

Paramount Aircraft

Director-General Cecil B. deMille has started the only new production now in the making at the Famous Players-Lasky studio. No name has been selected for this. Elliott Dexter will play the male lead, and Gloria Swanson has been engaged to play opposite. Others in the cast are Sylvia Ashton, Julia Faye and Theodore Roberts.

Work will be resumed shortly on the Bryant Washburn Paramount subject which was stopped when the star, his director, Donald Crisp, and leading woman, Margery Wilson, were all three taken ill with influenza.

The Norma Talmadge Select Company is now at work at the Lasky studio making "The Heart of Wetona." Sid Franklin is the director, and Tom Meighan leading man.

Ethel Clayton this week finished her latest screen effort, and it has been titled "Mickey Van." It is a detective story, and was directed by Robert Vignola. The theme was provided by Carolyn Wells. Emery Johnson is the leading man, and other members of the cast are Noah Berry and T. N. Geldert. Miss Clayton will now begin her four weeks' vacation.

Universal Newsletters

Ruth Clifford this week completed her newest Bluebird production titled "Home James." It is a light comedy-drama and was directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story was written by Gladys E. Johnson and Katherine Carr prepared the scenario. Members of the cast included Al Ray, cousin of Charles Ray, playing opposite the star; Lee Harry Holden, Margaret Cullington, Clifford Gray and John Cosser.

"Riders of Vengeance" is the temporary title of the latest western melodrama to be completed by Harry Carey for Universal. The picture was directed by Jack Ford, while the story was written by the star and director and put into scenario form by Eugene P. Lewis. The leading feminine role is played by Seena Owen, former Griffith star. The supporting cast is composed of Joseph Harris, J. Farrell McDonal,d, Alfred Allen, Jennie Lee and Clita Gale.

Allen Holubar, Universal director, was this week made an honorary member of "Fragments of France," a club organized in Los Angeles by returning Allied soldiers. He was given this honor because of the popularity of "Carry On," a film-play produced under his direction.

The real name of Dorothy Phillips was Dorothy Gwendolyn Strible before she married Allen Holubar, her director, according to her own announcement this week. She says she assumed the name of Dorothy Phillips to fool her friends when she tendered her debut as a Baltimore stock company, and that she has used the stage name ever since. She will soon complete her new picture "Destiny" at the Universal studios.

Here and There

Mission Productions, Inc., whose organization was recently announced, will by the end of the week have completed the first picture which features Little Gloria Joy, child actress of six years, who has had a number of releases. Sherwood Macdonald is in charge of directing this little star, and the company's first picture will be "Send Him Away with a Smile." Doris Lee, who has played opposite Charles Ray in a number of lease productions, was loaned by the Fox studios for the lead in this picture playing opposite Charles Speri. Important character parts are taken by Frank Whitson and Eugenie Ford.

One of the strongest casts selected by any west coast film company is that picked by General Manager Harry Garson for the Clara Kimball Young Select picture, "Cheating Cheaters," adapted from the stage play of the same name by Max Marcin. Jack Holt will play opposite Miss Young. Nocholas Dunaev will take the part of Tony, and other principals engaged are Edwin Stevens, Tully Marshall, Frank Campeau, Anna Q. Nilsson, Fredrick Burton, Mayme Kelso, Eleanor Hancock, Joseph Singleton, W. A. Carroll and others. Alan Dwan, who for the past several months has been directing Douglas Fairbanks, will be in charge of the direction of this and future releases of Miss Young.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn star, has left New York and will arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of this week, it was announced by local Goldwyn connections last Tuesday.

New York

Gentlemen:

Let me express my appreciation of the "Plan Book" department of the News. It is the most splendid aid ever offered for the intelligent billing of pictures.

Yours truly,

Geo. A. Bleich

Just One Reason Why Motion Picture News Dominates the Field
IN the art of optically projecting upon a screen a magnified image of a photograph or other transparency, it has become the custom to place the optical lantern above the level of the point upon the screen which coincides with the middle of the picture, in order that the lantern may occupy less valuable space in the theatre or hall than the point immediately opposite the screen, which is usually required for seating purposes.

It is also customary to place the screen in an upright position substantially perpendicular to the normal line of vision for the average spectator. When the projector is situated above, or to one side of, the normal to the screen surface, the resulting obliquity of incidence of the projected beam produces a distortion effect on the screen known as the "keystone" effect, so called because a rectangular figure at the object, or transparency, is distorted, in the projected image, to a figure resembling an inverted keystone. This keystone effect is due to the fact that all parts of the screen where it intersects the rays are not equidistant from the projection lens, or, in other words, the central ray is not normal to the screen; and since the rays of the beam leaving the projector diverge from the projector, the image on those parts of the screen more remote from the projector will be magnified to a greater extent than those parts nearer the projector. Moreover, the sharpness of definition also suffers from this obliquity, as will be pointed out later.

By the method and means described in the following paragraphs, however, the keystone and other distortion may be counteracted without substantially impairing the definition. In ordinary practice the transparency to be projected upon the screen is placed perpendicular to the optical axis of the projecting lens, and a little farther away from the lens than its principal focus, and the light from an electric arc or other illuminant is passed through the transparency and the lens. Under these circumstances, assuming for the moment a perfect lens, an ideal or mathematical image is produced in space in a plane perpendicular to the optical axis of the lens and a considerable distance in front of the lens. If a screen is placed so as to coincide with this image plane, a perfect, enlarged image, geometrically similar to the transparency itself, will be formed on the screen.

Strictly speaking, there is no other point in space where a true image is formed, and if the screen is placed at any other position along the optical axis, or if the angle it makes with the optical axis is changed by the slightest amount, that is, if the screen is tipped, there will appear no true image on the screen, and the pseudo image which is formed will be indistinct, and will lack what is technically called "definition".

Practically, however, the case is somewhat different, since no lenses are perfectly corrected, and since the eyes of the spectators are at considerable distances from the screen, and it is therefore impossible to detect minute losses of definition in the image beyond a certain limiting point. The screen can, as a matter of fact, be moved through considerable distances without appreciably changing the distinctness of the picture projected thereon, and it can also be tilted to considerable angles without changing appreciably the distinctness of the picture.

There exists, therefore, a considerable region of space in which it is possible to get a practically distinct picture on the screen, and since throughout this region the appearance of the screen as regards distinctness of picture is not changed, it is appropriate for practical purposes to speak always of the image as if it were on the screen no matter what the position of the screen throughout the above mentioned region of space may be. This region of space before and behind the plane of best definition in which it is possible to get sufficiently distinct pictures on the screen regardless of the position of the screen, or in which it may be tipped through moderate angles, will be called throughout this exposition "the image region," and the sufficiently sharp picture on the screen will simply be called "the image."

Although the image on the screen does not change appreciably in distinctness throughout this image region, even with moderate screen obliquity, the size and shape of the image on the screen does not remain the same when the screen is moved.

If the screen is perpendicular to the optical axis and is moved in the image region from a certain point to a point more remote from the lens, the image on the screen will become larger in the same proportion as the distance from the lens is increased, and if the screen is tipped in the image region about an axis perpendicular to the optical axis, the image on the screen will be distorted. The most noticeable characteristic of the distortion when the screen is oblique is the "keystone" effect mentioned at the beginning.

Just as there is an image region, as above described, surrounding the mathematical image in space, so there is a corresponding region surrounding the plane transparency, or object, in which the object can be moved parallel to itself along the optical axis, or slightly tipped, without appreciably changing the distinctness of the image on the screen. Since, in distinction to the image, the plane transparency, following the technical terms of optics, is called the "object," I will call this region of space by analogy "the object region."
The magnitude of the object region is in general very much less than the magnitude of the image region, and since both of their limits are determined by the positions at which the blurring of the image is noticeable, it is clear that both regions have very imperfectly defined boundaries. The magnitude of the image region corresponds to what is known in optical technology as “depth of focus.” My method of overcoming the distortion known as the keystone effect can now be put in general terms.

The beam of light in the object region bears stamped upon it the geometrical characteristics of the object, i.e., the picture on the slide or film. These characteristics become invisible during the passage of the light through the lens, but they appear again in the image region and produce on any screen in the image region, perpendicular to the optical axis, a magnified, geometrically similar image of the object. Our problem, therefore, is to modify or reconstruct the lens system in such a way that the image, defined by a screen perpendicular to the axis, is no longer geometrically similar to the object, but is distorted in such a way that it contains within it what might be called an “inverse keystone effect,” that is, the distortion of the image beam is such that the image produced on a screen perpendicular to the axis in the image region will be distorted in such a way as to show a keystone effect of an opposite kind to that which the unmodified lens system would produce on the oblique screen at the same point.

The type of geometrical distortion of the projected image is substantially that which occurs in common practice when the screen is not perpendicular to the light beam, and hence, as before mentioned, one distortion may be used to neutralize the other. It should be noticed that these two distortions which thus neutralize each other are due to quite different causes, the one on the oblique screen being due to the fact that all parts of the screen are not equidistant from the projection lens, whereas the distortion of the image beam is the direct result of a unique type of refraction.

The simplest way to accomplish the distortion of the image beam before mentioned is by the substitution of a properly distorted virtual image for the object. For this purpose I have, among other methods, obtained good results by the use of an optical element in the shape of a cylindrical lens tipped in relation to the transparency, the action of which may now be described, reference being had to the appended diagrams.

In Figs. 1 and 2, a represents in conventional form the objective of an optical lantern, b represents the transparency and c represents the screen image. It will be noted that the central line d of the light beam from the objective to the screen is not normal to the screen, consequently the projected image e upon the screen will have the shape of an inverted keystone, as illustrated in Fig. 1a, the lower part of the projected image being more remote from the optical lantern than the upper part, and therefore magnified to a greater extent. Since the transparency, or object, b is normal to the central light beam d, the plane of the real image is also normal to the central light beam d, as shown at e'. There will be a consequent loss of definition of the image e on the screen owing to the fact that the screen image c is not in the same plane as the plane of the real image e'.

In order to produce a distorted virtual image of the object with which to counteract the distortion of the projected image on the screen, a refracting element, or elements, is introduced between the transparency and the screen, preferably near the transparency, capable of magnifying or reducing the virtual image in substantially one direction only, namely, in the direction of distortion of the original image, which magnification or reduction, or both, are qualitatively and quantitatively suitable for neutralizing the distortion of the screen image.

The example of such refracting element illustrated in the drawings is a plano-convex cylindrical lens L, the axis of which is tipped relatively to the transparency, thus producing a distortion of the virtual image similar to, but opposite to, that of the screen image. Such virtual image is indicated diagrammatically at b', Fig. 2. The parts of the cylindrical lens L nearest the object b cause a certain magnification of the virtual image, depending on the distance of the lens from the object and on the focal length of the lens, while the parts of the lens L at a greater distance from the object b cause an increased magnification and a removal of parts of the virtual image farther from the transparency. By suitably choosing the strength of the cylindrical lens (focal length), and its inclination with respect to the transparency, any reasonable magnitude may be given to the progressive magnification of the virtual image. In other words, the distortion effect which is desired may be obtained to any desired degree.

The relation of the object and virtual image are illustrated in Fig. 3, wherein the distance of the lens L from the object b, the inclination of the lens L, and also the distance between object and virtual image, are exaggerated for the purpose of clearness. Assume a beam of light passing through point 1 of the object b, of which one ray e passes through lens L and is refracted along the line e', while another ray f is refracted along the line f'. The virtual image of the point 1 will therefore appear at point', which is the point of intersection of the two lines e' and f' when they are prolonged backwards. Similarly, beams passing through a point of the object b immediately below the point 1 (indicated at 2 in Fig. 3a) will pass through the lower part of the lens L and along lines in the same vertical planes with e and f, and be refracted along lines e" and f". The virtual image of the point 2, therefore, will be at the point of intersection of the backward prolongations of the lines e" and f" shown at 2'. The other corners 3 and 4 of the object b in a similar manner produce virtual images 3' and 4'.

The virtual image b' is thus distorted, and when projected upon the screen by a beam oblique to the screen, appears as an undistorted image b' (Fig. 2a) because the distortion of the virtual image b' is equal and opposite to the distortion of the screen image due to the obliquity of the beam and therefore neutralizes it.

From the foregoing description it will be clear that not only may the keystone shape of the projected image be corrected, but also the vertical lengthening of the image on the screen which commonly results from the downward inclination of the beam to the screen. The positive cylindrical lens magnifies the image in the direction perpendicular to its axis, as previously explained, and by suitably coordinating the curvature of the lens to the obliquity of the beam such lateral magnification may also be used to offset the vertical elongation of the image due to the obliquity of the beam to the screen. Thus, the apparatus neutralizes both types of distortion due to the obliquity of the beam to the screen, namely, the keystone distortion and the elongation of the image more in one direction than in the other.
The Reticulation of Gelatine
By S. E. Sheppard and F. A. Elliott
[Reprinted from the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, September, 1918]

The reticulation of the surface of negatives is often a source of trouble to photographic workers. This trouble is most likely to occur in hot weather and is generally produced after fixation, either during or subsequent to washing. The wet gelatine layer becomes more or less finely wrinkled or corrugated, the network of puckers forming a pattern, generally extending over the whole of the negative, but sometimes only over part of it.

The "grain" of the network may vary considerably from very coarse dimensions down to very fine and even microscopic dimensions. This reticulation persists with only slight modification after drying. At the same time, if it occurs on a developed plate, the silver deposit undergoes a redistribution along with the reticulation of the gelatine, accumulating in the raised portions and diminishing or vanishing in the valleys or troughs between.

This reticulation has been utilized in some photo-mechanical processes; thus it is by the reticulation of gelatine that the "grain" of a collotype is produced. It has been employed in the production of irregularly grained "half tone" screens, in which the reticulation pattern takes the place of the cross line rulings of the regular screen.

Swelling of Gelatine in Water and Its Shrinkage on Drying

The immediate cause and mechanism of reticulation will be best understood if we first consider a few facts on the normal swelling and shrinkage of photographic gelatine film which takes place in this treatment and use.

There are two aspects to this: In one we have only to consider change of mass or bulk; in the other, change of shape. As to the first, any piece of gelatine placed in water within a temperature range of roughly 0° to 20° C. swells, at first rapidly, then more slowly, and finally reaches a limit. Fig. 1 shows the curve of this swelling plotted against the time.

An understanding of the conditions affecting and determining reticulation will not only be of practical use but will tend to throw light upon the physico-chemical nature of gelatine, and perhaps help toward the scientific specification of gelatines for photographic use.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS A FEW REASONS
why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1. Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEW-MAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2. Because of their richness in beauty and design, they live the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of tion in which the gelatine first swelled or was cast and dried. Gelatine, in the abstract, as a homogeneous material alike in all directions, should, theoretically, tend to swell or shrink uniformly without change of shape, only altering its mass or bulk. If gelatine could be dried very slowly so that the loss of moisture proceeded at the same rate in all parts of the mass then it would shrink without change of shape, but such a condition cannot be realized in practice and gelatine dries more rapidly on the surface than in the interior, thus producing stresses and distortion. In the case particularly important to us, the gelatine is coated on a glass or film support and firmly attached to it, so that one side is eliminated as regards drying, etc. The gelatine cannot spread off the plate, so that its swelling and shrinkage are limited to one direction, viz., that perpendicular to the plane of the support (Fig. 3).

This state of affairs is determined in advance by the first drying down of the jelly (or emulsion) on the support; it is not peculiar to the photographic film, since ordinary sheet or leaf gelatine which has been dried on nets shows the same tendency to have its principal expansion perpendicular to the face of the sheet.

Production of Reticulation

A gelatine film, under normal conditions, can be repeatedly swollen and dried without losing its capacity to swell and shrink normally to the plate. It is evident that a certain strain must be imposed upon the gelatine in drying, which is removed by swelling. If we consider an ideal unit cube of the swelling gelatine, supposed free from all constraint, it would tend to expand uniformly in all directions. This ideal uniform expansion corresponds to a uniform swelling pressure, i.e., a pressure the same in all directions. We can consider this resolved into forces perpendicular to the surface and forces parallel to the surface. Actually, the gelatine layer in sheets or on plates does not swell uniformly. The forces parallel to the surface which would, of course, tend to remove the film from the glass or support, must be compensated. This compensation is in a measure external or initially external, being due to the adhesion of the gelatine to a rigid support, but it is chiefly internal, arising from a uniform strain or tension impressed by the mode of drying.
Now suppose the gelatine layer be subjected to drastic internal action, excessive swelling and excessive dehydration, either successively, or, in a measure, simultaneously, then gelatine jelly will be strained beyond its elastic limit, showing either a total or a partial reaction.
Total reaction would imply the detachment of the layer from its support, a result which is seen in frilling and floating off, as a result of excessive lateral expansion.
If, however, the adhesion to the support is maintained, but the newly disengaged tangential or lateral forces are not entirely compensated, then the strain distribution in the gelatine layer ceases to be uniform, and we get a local puckering or folding, similar in character to that produced in the earth's surface by tangential forces acting on restricted areas of semi-liquid igneous rocks.
Thus the immediate mechanism of reticulation is the production of restricted tangential dilation, which is partially arresting to this.

This, however, leaves unsettled the inner physical chemistry of the process, that is, the origin of an excess swelling pressure (the super-pressure), and of a partial or localized arrest of this. This can be discussed best in dealing with specific cases of the production of reticulation.

Liberty Loan Boosted in Los Angeles by Efforts of Cameramen
THE Cinema Camera Club of California played an important part in the sale of bonds for the Fourth Liberty Loan drive.
The club was requested by the Liberty Loan Committee of Los Angeles to assist them in their work by furnishing camermen to photograph the various activities of the campaign workers.
The drive was opened by Mary Pickford at the Victory Tank in Central Park, and each buyer of $5,000 of bonds or more was photographed with Miss Pickford, and the film was later turned over to the purchaser of the bonds.
Numerous ingenious methods were adopted by the campaign workers to further the sales, one of which was to form groups on the Tank representing various states. Each group designating a certain state had movies made of them which were later forwarded for exhibition to their native state. Only those buying in excess of $100 or more were permitted to get before the camera.
The Cinema Camera Club donated the services of two of its members each night for the work, who were under the supervision of Edward Littell, a member of the C. C. C., to whom is due most of the success of the undertaking.
The films are being distributed throughout the country with proper screen credit to the Cinema Camera Club. A battery of lights were furnished by the Winfield-Kerner Company, while the laboratory work was donated by the Bloom Laboratories.

W HEN the various heroes of our Allies are portrayed upon the screen, the orchestra leader, considering it unavoidable, immediately plays the patriotic anthems of their countries. What is the inevitable result? The audience immediately rises, caring commotion and distraction, and above all, interfering with everybody's view, thereby losing the trend of the story.

To most people, this interruption during the progress of a picture is most annoying, but still musicians seem to be under the impression that this is the only possible musical accompaniment in such an instance.

However, the editor, while preparing the musical setting for that marvelous, patriotic feature, "LAFAYETTE WE COME," found himself confronted with this serious problem, for through the entire picture there were continual close-ups and long-shots of such men as Marshal Foch, President Wilson, Sir Douglas Hais, General Pershing, General Diaz and other Allied leaders, followed by awe-inspiring views of our boys in France, hordes of them on their march to Berlin.

Being in a quandary and fully determined not to suggest the patriotic airs of the various Allied nations, in order to preserve the continuity of the picture in the minds of the audience, after visiting all the publishers, the editor was fortunate to find certain marches which suited his purpose admirably.

They are "Over the Top Boys," "Blue Devils," "Aces High," and "Fighting Tommies." The main outstanding factor of all these above-mentioned marches is that they are so composed that they create the emotional atmosphere by each containing a reminiscence or faith suggestion of the respective national anthems, with original martial themes. This instills the audience with the same patriotic enthusiasm and fervor without being compelled to display visible homage and respect to their Allies.

For example, "Over the Top Boys" is a characteristic American march, portraying Yankee grit and courage and composed of an introductory bugle call, an original theme, and a strain of Dixie and Yankee Doodle. "Blue Devils" is dedicated to the Alpine Chasseurs and is typically French in character. The trio is broad and sonorous, in which bits of the "Marseillaise" are heard as a country melody. "Aces High" is a bright, breezy aviation march, in which a figuration occurs, depicting the hum of the motor. "Fighting Tommies," true to its name, is an inspiring march displaying the bravery and valor of Great Britain's pride.

In this march are heard snatches of the "Grenadiers" and "Rule Britannia." A surprise occurs in the trio which is the Englishman's declaration from "Pinafore," "I would not be a foreigner," used very effectively as a country melody.

The editor submits the following cue sheet of "Lafayette, We Come" which will at once demonstrate to the orchestra leader that the problem of patriotic music can be solved without resorting to "God Save the King," "Marseillaise," "Star Spangled Banner," etc.

"LAFAYETTE, WE COME"

Special Features

The timing is based on a speed limit of 14 minutes per reel (1,000 feet).

Lafayette Theme: "Lafayette, We Come" (Steady March Tempo)—by Henry W. Reiger

Love Theme: "May Dreams" (Moderate Romance)—by Gaston Borch

Sinister Theme: "Sinister Theme" (Dramatic Misterioso)—by Sol Levy

In order to give this picture an appropriate presentation from a musical standpoint, orchestra leaders, pianists and organists are kindly requested to note the following:

1. Cut No. 1, lasting about 40 seconds, is a combination of short scenes and titles portraying put Allies and all the national melodies of Italy, America, France and England, should be performed in the above scenes to the extent of about four to eight bars of each hymn.

2. Cut No. 7 marked tacet for 25 seconds is very important, because after the expiration of this time, a concert is given, and in order to bring forth the musical contrast, this tacet mark is very essential.

3. Cut Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 are short scenes portraying various ensembles of cut. Cut Nos. 11-16 are marked tacet on the cue sheet in order to create a musical contrast between the national airs which are to be played for the respective tableaux shown.

4. Cut No. 17, lasting 1 minute, is a dance scene. I have mentioned "Over There" (Song) by G. M. Cohan (15 seconds) until—

5. Cues Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19 and 40 should not be substituted by any other compositions than the ones suggested, because such marches as "Blue Devils," by Sol P. Levy, "Aces High," etc., were specially written and published with this picture, and therefore are not available to substitute them.

6. Cues Nos. 71 and 72 should also not be substituted, as the compositions mentioned on the cue sheet are in every way the most appropriate music for the purpose, and the arrangement which is used in No. 72, in an original English characteristic March, with the famous "Pinafore" song in the trio and has been especially composed for this purpose by Horace S. Levy.

7. The last five cues Nos. 86, 87, 88, 89 and 90 are a mix-up of all patriotic scenes of a stirring character and it was therefore impossible to state the definite length and time of every one of these cues.

8. To insure a correct musical presentation with this film, the editor earnestly suggests that in cases where a complete reel is impossible, the orchestra leader should at least get acquainted with the nature of the picture covering the above mentioned notes.

9. The arranger also wishes to point out the fact that many of these compositions mentioned on the music cue sheet are not in the library of all musicians and in order to enable everybody to avail himself of this music as listed in these cues, he wishes to inform all concerned in playing this picture that complete music sets or in part are obtainable, along with the sheet music, from publishers, Publishers, 540 Madison Avenue, New York City, at the lowest possible rates.

Note: To be played as vocal solo with piano accompaniment.

"Roped," with Harry Carey
(Universal Special—Jan. 13. Directed by Jack Ford)

In direction, one of the most difficult roles to handle is the transplantation of a character—usually the hero or the heroine—from a common environment to an aristocratic. Such an operation, when it concerns a serious subject, besides good judgment, requires skill. The Director must, at all times, have the player under control, as the least laxity or carelessness will cause the action to become nonsensical and burlesque.

It is very apparent in this case that, in transferring the hero, a millionaire cowboy, from his ranch into New York's exclusive society, the director was conscious of this fact, as a consequence, he has made the action convincing. The result is a production that, in addition to action of plot and suspense, combines genuine comedy and tender pathos, two of the elements that never fail to make a picture appealing as well as enjoyable.

In order to play a trick on the boss and thus have some "jolly good time," the ranch boys advertise for a wife in one of the New York papers, giving his name and address, as if coming from him. For the fun of it a society belle answers the ad, stating she would consent to become his wife. The hero is next seen departing for the big city. You can imagine the merriment he creates when, attired in a primitive dress, he appears in a fashionable hotel and registers.

He meets the girl. The mother is shocked at first, but, when told the prospective groom is a millionaire, and as her finances are at low ebb, feels differently. It results in a marriage.

Although the mother-in-law is provided with all the luxuries of life, she schemes to bring about a divorce so that her daughter may marry one of their set. In the meantime, love commences to awaken in the breast of the girl.

A child is born, but the father is not allowed to even have a look at him, because, not being sterilized, he might infect the baby. But he steals at night into the baby's room in order to have a glimpse of his son, a yearning that is denied him. This scene is pathetic and touching to the extreme.

The cowboys, after a decision, pay a visit to the hero, bringing a number of gifts for the son. It is not possible to describe the comedy they cause.

In the end, in spite of the trickery of the mother-in-law, a reconciliation takes place.

The picture is clean and wholesome. It should appeal to everybody. Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"Safe for Democracy"
(J. Stuart Blackton Special Production. Seven reels)

Infectious humor, the patriotic thrill, and the dramatic element, are admirably combined in the latest J. Stuart Blackton production, "Safe for Democracy." The producer has shown stronger than in any offering that we have seen the power of contrast in his flashes and he has created a picture that stands out as one of the truly great expressions of the American spirit in the war. There is not a heart string that it does not play upon, and so long as we are at war, and probably for a long time after, we will laugh and drop a tear and get ready to fight alongside of the characters in this film.

It may be called a propaganda picture. It is founded on the "Work or Fight" order. We are first given the contrast of the two tramps who boasted that they never have worked with the young son of the patriotic shipyard owner. The young millionaire has a "weak heart," and he gets out of the draft, but we are shown flashes of the chip of the old block who is "over there" doing his whole bit to make the world safe.

We have this idler marrying his father's stenographer, not because he loves her better than the others, chorus girls, but because he thinks that by marrying some one he will get out of the "work or fight" order. There is a strongly dramatic scene when this youth, who is playing the chorus girls strong, comes home drunk and tries to attack his wife. She rebels and leaves, and when she is out of funds she seeks to kill herself and is saved by the clever move and the American philosophy of the tramp.

It is truly a great American picture. It is founded on the war, but it ought to last long afterwards.

There is a splendid cast, Mitchell Lewis, who plays the powerful and magnetic tramp, and Ruby DeeRemer as the stenographer-wife were featured as the stars in the Rivoli advertising, but as a matter of fact this should be played as "the perfect picture cast." To our mind the dominating character among all of these real Americans was "John Craig," as played by John P. Wade, while Gus Alexander convinced everyone that he is a comedian well worth while by the scores of laughs that he got. Mitchell Lewis was clever in one of his best roles. Mr. Blackton picked his actors well; they all live their parts.

If you want to give your people a picture of American life, take this picture and tell them that is just what it is, and they will come and laugh a big part of the time, and cry a little, and thrill a whole lot and go out of your theatre with bigger and better hearts and tear-dried and farer-seeing eyes. Your people will want to come back and see it again.—R. E. Pritchard.

Walsh’s Fans Will Like It, But It May Not Make New Friends

GEORGE WALSH has created a good following, especially among the younger generation. To most of them, this offering will appeal immensely, as it has been produced along the lines that made this star popular to them. It affords him all the opportunities necessary for displaying his athletic ability. But spectators who don’t see his pictures regularly, or who will see him in this one for the first time, I am afraid will grumble a little, as, outside of the star’s stunts and the activity of the characters, the picture contains no other element that will appeal to any specific kind of emotions. Heart appeal, in particular, is absent in it.

This sort of a subject, treating with German spies during the pre-war period, as well as immediately after the declaration of war by the United States, has been done to death lately. The hero is always provided for, to save the abducted heroine from their hands.

The subtitles are numerous and consist of a multitude of words. No sooner than you, with great exertion, read one, another follows. They have been constructed so as to draw laughs. But whether they will succeed or not, is a question. They are far fetched at times.

The picture is clean.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST
Bill Durham....................................George Walsh
Barbara Knowles..............................Regina Quinn
August Myers................................William Bailey
Carlton Lake.................................James Black
By Ralph H. Spence.

George Walsh, the breezy young Fox star in a picture of rapid-fire thrills and sensations.

The moral of this play: Flat feet are no handicap if you have a level head.

Bill was rejected in the draft because of flat feet, but this didn’t stop Bill from beating up a German who thought to start a revolution on the border, nor did it interfere at all with his love affair.

They wouldn’t give Bill a German hunting license because he had flat feet, so Bill became a poacher and bagged his game for Uncle Sam without permission. Uncle Sam didn’t kick at all, however.

Instilling pep into the world was Bill’s favorite pastime until he ran up against Pancho Villa—then he was obliged to reverse his tactics and take some pep out of this gentleman.

He was hitting on all six, but was possessed of a couple of flat "wheels," so the draft board turned him down. The Germans are such fast runners that the Government wants only men who can keep up with them.

AD TALK
George Walsh, the Fox star, whose ability presents an even chance between acting and athletics is coming again to the screen—on a Motion Picture News Theatre—on a five-column week in his latest victory picture, "I’ll Say So." George (his impossible to call such a delightfully informal fellow miss) has seldom had such a good vehicle as Ralph H. Spence provided him in these five reels. He appears as Bill Durham, and like the other famous member of the family offers his services to the Government when war is declared. The Government, however, is making it a point to pick out fast runners, that the armies may keep up with the German retreat, and because Bill has boarding house feet he is turned down despite all the rest of him that’s sound.

And Bill is rather sore of course. Why shouldn’t he be? But he is far from being discouraged particularly when he encounters a very pretty girl in the bands of very wicked German spies. He pursues the young lady to the Mexican border, where the situation is worst on stirring up a baby war between Villa and the U. S. A. He succeeds in stopping this before it is started, and then makes haste back to New York where he saves the girl from being married to another disciple of Kultur.

All these things keep Bill on the go from the start. He’ll Say So in its very finish. And all these things keep George Walsh going, too. George loses in this instance. You couldn’t separate them if you wanted to. The parts fit the actor, and the actor fits the part. The support includes Regina Quinn as the only girl, and William Bailey and James Black as actors courting opposite the role of the spies. Don’t by any chance miss "I’ll Say So." It is a spy play, but—it’s in a class by itself.

When Bill Durham learns that the United States has declared war on Germany he makes all haste to a recruiting station to offer his services. But he finds that his flat feet exclude him from all branches of the service. So he takes his pedal extremities out with a vengeance and encounters a pacifist, who is engaged in casting slurs on the flag. When Bill is through with this fellow, his map looks like the interior of Germany—very sick, but, despite this service in the cause of justice, Bill is taken off to jail. Barbara Knowles, a young person very fair to look upon rescues him from the bars, and Bill immediately falls in love.

Barbara, he knows, is an orphan, and her guardian is a gentleman of Kultur. His latest orders make necessary a trip to Columbus, N. M., where he plans stirring up a little sedition with Villa and her crowd. All that Bill hears about the destination is Columbus, and so he boards a train that sets him down in a Connecticut town of that name. Life here is slow for Bill, put through the medium of a misdirected letter he finds out where the right Columbus lies and his himself there in all speed.

Here Bill proceeds to mix it up with Villa’s band, and his smartness and daring make it impossible for the Mexicans to carry out their orders received from the gent of Kultur. But he loses the girl again. Her guardian has taken her back to New York, where he plans marrying her off to another German. But they don’t reckon on Bill. He gives pursuit again, and only arrives at the church just in time to prevent the fatal wedding. But there has to be a groom, and so Bill nominates himself for the position being enthusiastically seconded in his motion by Barbara.

“SET FREE” BLUEBIRD

Clean Picture, with Few Thrills and Lots of Entertainment

This picture will please picturegoers. It is of the light romantic drama class, containing also some comedy situations. Action of plot and suspense have been successfully introduced in the well constructed story, which holds the interest fairly tense all the way through.

The tricks of the little dog used furnish part of the entertainment.

A number of the situations have been blended with beautiful natural scenery, adding no little to the entertaining values of the attraction.

Towards the end the spectator is furnished also with some thrills.

The picture is clean and will have an appeal mostly among audiences that possess more or less refined tastes.

A more extensive review was published in our issue of October 19, on page 2607, under the temporary title, “Double Crossed.”—Released Dec. 16. Length. 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

“I’LL SAY SO”

possess some clever lines fully descriptive of the character of the picture. The press department has also suggested a number of type-display advertisements in one and two-column sizes, facsimiles of which will be found in the press book on this production.

Slide, music cue sheet.

SUGGESTIONS

The Fox advertisements on this contain a number of snappy lines that the exhibitor will do well to duplicate in his own copy providing he does not use that which is already prepared. The picture is a breezy one in common with all Walt pictures, and, although the plot is melodramatic in many senses, the main character is more light than heavy. So try to get this pep and dash in your advertisements and announcements of “I’LL SAY SO”.

The title itself offers you something quite full of possibilities. In any throw away it can be used to advantage by using it as your own opinion of the picture itself, of course tying it up with a few other words. Walsh seems to be getting more popular each day, so bill him well; We would advise against the use of “Smiling” before his name. This tends to cast the production in the light of a short length comedy.

PAPER—There are two one-sheets, two three-sheets and two six-sheets on this production.
All paper is printed in the style of past Bluebird subjects. The colors are attractive, the lettering striking and the selected scenes most suitable for this particular type of reproduction.
LOBBY DISPLAY—There are a selection of scene and star stills in the usual standard sizes suitable for framing and will make an attractive lobby display. A title card goes with each set of stills.
CUTS—Scene cuts are provided on this production in one and two-column sizes and may be used either in the text or advertising pages of your newspapers. For advertising, however, the exhibitor had best make his own selection of scenes to be used from the stills. There are also still cuts of Miss Roberts for this production as well as stock cuts with star in attractive pose.
SLIDE, MUSIC CUE SHEET, WINDOW CARD AND PRESS SHEET are among the other accessories provided on this production and may be secured by the exhibitor at any Bluebird exchange.

SUGGESTIONS

If you are in the habit of dressing your newspaper, lobby and general advertising in the atmosphere of the picture you will have the opportunity here of bringing out its romantic quality. This is its dominating note, and as it is by no means an unattractive one it should be brought out to its fullest extent. At the same time the picture is a comedy-drama and if you can get an idea of the comedy in your advertising do not fail to do so. The catch lines have been written with this end in view and probably there is one among them that will appeal particularly to you.

“MARRIAGE” — KEENEY-SHERRY

Calvert’s Second Is Different Sort Than First; Good Film

s the first picture in which Catherine Calvert appeared, “Romance of the Underworld,” was of the suggestive sort, it is natural for you to think that this one also is of the same type. But it is not, except that, at times, some of the situations are so constructed as to lead you to believe so, but in the end everything is explained satisfactorily.

“Marriage” may be classed as a good picture, the kind that holds the interest and entertains. It is based chiefly on the element of heart appeal.

The fundamental idea of the story is a wife’s willingness to sacrifice her honor by becoming a cheat at the card games, in order to earn enough money to help cure her blind husband.

The villain, who kept making advances to her, discovering the fact that the heroine and her partner are cheating, threatens to expose her, unless she submits to him.

At the dinner the villain rises to make the exposures, but the heroine forestalls him by confessing, also stating that his threats were powerless to make her deviate from her duty to her husband. This situation is very dramatic.

Miss Calvert’s acting is splendid. She expresses emotion with ease. The supporting cast has also been successfully selected. The interior settings are good.

Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, in her second photoplay “Marriage.”

Guy Bolton, celebrated playwright, author of many, stage successes including “Polly With a Past” has turned his hand to picture writing and has evolved the splendid photoplay “Marriage.”

A wife becomes a card cheat to save the life of her husband.

Is it better to confess one’s own misdeeds or let another tell of them with venomous intentions?

Come and see if Guy Bolton, playwright extraordinary, has made a success in writing his first picture.

AD TALK

Patrons of the new theatre have an unusual treat in store for them on the night of the opening of Frank Keeneys’s second production “Marriage.” will be presented. Mr. Keeneys’s first production “A Romance of the Underworld” will perhaps be remembered by our patrons. The same star, Catherine Calvert was presented in this feature and, astounding as was her appearance in her first picture, “Marriage” is guaranteed to be better.

Miss Calvert, it is widely known, is the widow of the late Paul Armstrong, a playwright whose many successes earned him immense revenues. On his death she took up the management of his estate and shortly afterwards emerited pictures.

“Marriage” was prepared for Miss Calvert by another celebrated Broadway playwright, Guy Bolton. He is co-author of “Polly with a Past,” one of the most successful of Belasco productions, while on the other hand he has had a very important finger in many musical comedy successes in collaboration with F. G. Wodehouse and Jerome Kern.

The story of “Marriage” revolves about a highly dramatic episode, namely, the result of a systemized plan of cheating at cards instituted by a woman that she may obtain money enough to stand for the operation on her husband’s eyes; resulting in the fact that the villain discovers her deed and threatens her with exposure unless she love him as her lover.

Mr. Bolton has handled this situation skilfully both in building it up and with respect to the minor details. Miss Calvert has her support from David Powell, a well known and well liked leading man, Thomas Holding. Ida Darling, Walter Hiers and Hazel Alden.

She goes out hoping to find Ballantyne at his hours to plead with him. He, however, passes her and gains admittance to her apartment. While he is there Jack enters. One sight of Ballantyne is enough—he withdraws in a rage. Ballantyne threatens Eileen with exposure that night at dinner unless she accept him as her lover.

Sure that Ballantyne will keep his word, Eileen makes a confession at the dinner table. Jack, who has hid himself with the idea of killing Ballantyne, forgives his wife readily and takes her in his arms.

Catherine Calvert in “Marriage”
ARRING the first reel, there is hardly any action in the plot of this picture. It consists chiefly of talking among the different characters, or addressing the moon, waters, nature and so forth. With possibly an exception now and then, no picture can be entertaining when it is built on a plot as slow as this is.

The heroine is presented as a wealthy, titled young lady who loves nature. She has many admirers among young and old of her social set, but none of them attracts her. She invites them to the woods, promising to choose one of them as a husband. She masquerades as a gypsy, and while swimming in the pond, meets a young man of fine appearance. They are attracted to each other, and after many adventures, they become engaged.

The picture has been taken outdoors, natural scenery furnishing the background in the majority of the scenes. Had the story been stronger, there is no doubt in my mind that it would have furnished a satisfactory entertainment. This one doesn’t come up to the talents of Miss Ferguson. An extensive review of this picture was given on page 2889, issue of Nov. 9.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

Miss Ferguson’s name is one to conjure with as the number of successes released during the past year. Use her name prominently in all display, whether it be newspaper or lobby advertising and mention some of her past successes such as “The Lie,” “Hearts of the Wilds” and “Barbary Sheep.” She is a talented actress and deserves prominent mention in whatever advertising you do.

The title itself offers you the chance to dress up your advertisements in the proper atmosphere. In the background you might arrange a picture of a large tree with gypsy vans encamped beneath, while in the foreground, in bold strokes, show Mary Hamilton should be seen in this picture. You might make such a display by drawing the background figures in sketch, using cutouts from a still for the foreground.

AD TALK

“Under the Greenwood Tree,” with Elsie Ferguson as its star will be the attraction at the —— theater on ——— next week and for five days thereafter. This is an adaptation of a play by Henry V. Esmond in which Madeleine Elliott was seen when it was produced in New York in 1908. Miss Ferguson is seen in the role of Mary Hamilton, an English society girl who tires of the conventional routine of her existence and who takes it into her pretty head to lead the life of a gypsy for a while. So with her secretary she makes camp on forest land belonging to Jack Hutton, who for granted that she is what she appears to be and sends his men to drive her off his property. But when he catches sight of her himself he changes his mind.

The romance and adventure of Mary and Hutton form a photoplay that is charming in every respect. There is the delightful comedy introduced when Mary spreads a feast for Hutton on silver platters, where she also goes up for a drink and for the joke of it she says that she stole it. Hutton does not understand this joke of life (and for that matter neither can Mary) and the comedy is a Hugh as a result. The pair’s experiences with real gypsies lends added interest to the tale and the romantic angle of the story is not the least of its many attractions.

Miss Ferguson, one of the most talented dramatic actresses on the screen today, performs with a rare appreciation of the requirements of the part. In every scene where she appears Miss Ferguson is a brilliant character. Eugene O’Brien, leading man for Artcraft, is one of many of her pictures, is Miss Ferguson’s leading man, playing with rare power and skill.

Mary Hamilton, an heiress, wears of her existence in conventional society and determines to have a “caper” of her own. Peggy, she secures a gypsy van and outfit and camps back of the estate in the guise of a gypsy. The gypsies from whom she bought the van and outfit attempt to bully her into paying more. Mary bids them to be gone at the point of a gun and they go, with vengeance in their hearts.

Sir Kenneth Graham, one of Mary’s admirers, comes to see her in camp and also dons gypsy garb. At this time Jack Hutton, who owns the ground where Mary’s camp is made, decides to run all gypsies off his property. Sir Kenneth is apprehended and cast into jail despite his objection. But when Jack catches sight of Mary he changes his mind about this particular gypsy. It is a case of ‘selling out’ at first sight. Later in the day he returns to partake of a feast Mary has prepared for him on the van. Her secret is out. Hutton tells him that she stole all this silverware and Jack is horrified.

Peggy, who loves Sir Kenneth, goes to liberate him and, after Jack’s departure, Mary is set upon by the angry gypsies. Jack returns to Mary’s defense but is knocked senseless by the band. Peggy and Sir Kenneth return to the rescue and Mary, because she wishes to watch over Jack through the night, administers a dose of laudanum. In the morning Jack insists that Mary marry him that he may transplant her into a decent environment and it is not until then that he discovers the identity of Miss Ferguson and Sir Kenneth happy and with Jack and Mary happy the ending of this romance is actually four-power happiness.

“TONGUES OF FLAME”—BLUEBIRD

Interesting Story and Heart Appeal Should Help Put This Over

As it was said in the review published in our issue of Nov. 9, on page 2889, this picture will offer your patrons satisfactory entertainment, as it is based on an interesting story. It contains also the element of heart appeal.

The plot is based on the book “In the Carquinez Woods,” by Bret Harte. It treats of the love of a botanist for a former dance hall girl, whom he had met in the woods, while studying plants. The woman had escaped from the hands of the sheriff, who arrested her for stabbing a man who attempted to harm her.

The picture opens with a view of the heroine on horseback. She is seen cutting the rope with a concealed knife, shoots and wounds the sheriff, and then escapes. Towards the end, it develops that the sheriff is the father of the botanist.

The natural scenery used as a background for the picture is very beautiful and adds to the entertaining values. A remarkable artistic feat is also accomplished in the photographing of the sun’s rays between the branches of the trees in the form of light-shafts.

The picture is clean and should please.—Released Nov. 25.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Bret Harte wrote of the west as no other. He wrote in bold, vivid strokes and painted the land of his heart with the utmost fidelity upon the printed page. "Tongues of Flame" is an adaptation of one of his best known stories, "In the Carquinez Woods," and the producers have brought out the wonderful atmosphere of the original story with amazing attention to detail.

Marie Walcamp, popular Bluebird star, in a visualization of one of Bret Harte’s classics of the western land of old.

Sheriff Dunn sought: Dormant, the half-breed, with murder in his heart. Dormant, fleet of foot, with agile brain, was ready to fight to the death with the clumsy sheriff, when he came upon evidence that showed the man was his father.

THE STORY

Through the Carquinez woods passes Sheriff Dunn, his deputy and a captive girl, Teresa. During the night, the girl succeeds in killing the deputy and after infllicting wounds on Dunn makes her escape. She is found and protected by Dormant, a half-breed, who lives in the hollow of a great tree. He recognizes her as a girl of the dance halls who stabbed her lover in a quarrel. Dormant protects her and Teresa grows to love him. He, however, is attracted by Nellie Wynn, daughter of the country preacher, who is a Flipant girl, attracted to Dormant because he is different.

They often meet each other in the woods. On one of these occasions Dormant asks Nellie for a dress, telling her that it is for the wife of a poor trapper. Instead, he gives it to Teresa, who is almost in rags. Teresa wears it, and one day is seen in the forest by a sailor of Nellie’s, who believes that the girl is Nellie herself. He goes to Dunn, also a sailor for Nellie’s hand, and tells him of this, saying that the girl goes to the forest to visit Dormant. Dunn, crazed with jealousy, rushes to the woods to kill Dormant, but Teresa learns of his plan and goes to the tree to warn the man she loves.

Dormant has found a note book which gives him the information that Dunn is really her father, having betrayed his Indian mother years before. So he refuses to combat with Dunn when he comes in search of him. And then a forest fire sweeps through the woods and Dunn, Teresa and the heartbroken Dormant perish in the flames.

Slide, music cue sheet, window card and press sheet are among other accessories obtainable at Bluebird exchanges on this production.

SUGGESTIONS

In order to get the full worth out of this picture don’t stop after you have handed out the information that it is a "western." Be sure to mention the name of the author, Bret Harte, for he ranks high among the American authors of the present day. His many books dealing with western life have been read widely, and "In the Carquinez Woods," from which "Tongues of Flame" is adapted, is one of the most popular. Give all this information in your newspaper advertising and you will attract unusual attention. It is quite probable you will bring new patrons to your house besides, as Bret Harte readers who, perhaps, in the past, favored on the motion picture, will welcome the opportunity to see what a producer has done with this one of his works.

In a high class neighborhood district Harte’s name should be featured even above the star’s. However, you who run this picture know just how popular Marie Walcamp is in your neighborhood, and if you think it advisable play her name up in the usual way. It is our opinion, however, that the author’s name will draw the money in this instance.

REPRINTS

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE BEEN COMPLETED BY WHICH Motion Picture News WILL BE ABLE TO FURNISH REPRINTS OF PAGES IN THE COMPLETE FILM BOOK TO MANUFACTURERS AT ACTUAL COST.

They Make a Most Valuable Aid to Every Exhibitor Book your Picture.
Contains Plot That Is Sure to Go Over; Heart Interest Is There

ALTHOUGH there are no new situations treated in this picture, intelligent handling by the director, assisted by several human touches that have been inserted in the story, make a clean and wholesome entertainment.

The employment of two little children, a boy and a girl, neither of them over four years old, add to the entertaining values. The story depends on them a great deal.

The plot deals with the heroine’s efforts to win back her husband, who has become infatuated with an adventuress. She pretends to have been hurt and can’t do any house work. The adventuress, who is visiting, is requested to do the cooking, but proves a failure. The husband then is glad to fall back on his faithful step-brother, his wife.

The action of the plot is speedy, the photography good.

It is a picture that will appeal to the human emotions, therefore should please all.—Length, 5 reels.

—P. S. Harrison.

Until their children are stricken with scarlet fever, Anne Elliot and her husband, Nicholas, a novelist, are happily married. When this occurs, however, the house is quarantined and Nicholas is forced to live away from his wife. During this time he becomes attracted by Esmee Hale, an artist, who does a portrait of him in his new book. Esmee is a false Bohemian and takes it upon herself to do what she likes to the hero in his too “commonplace” existence. When Anne recovers from the fever and is allowed to return home, Anne comes to the realization of her husband’s intentions toward Esmee. This makes her the most bitter of her industrious life. How ever, she says nothing to him.

Esmee, though pretty and talented, is without any artistic aesthetic, must live and Elliot must pay the bills. And Esmee is extravagant, so Elliot takes her to Bluff Wall Street. He loses, while Anne, on the other hand, makes several wise investments and succeeds in treasuring her capital. She keeps this good fortune from her husband and suggests that they try a little cottage in the country and begin work on a play that they have long had in mind. Elliot agrees, let it be so; but the children must have Esmee, so she takes up her quarters with husband and wife.

Here Elliot learns the value of contrast, and Anne, seeing her opportunity to bring him to his senses, dismisses the maid and then takes to her bed pretending to have scalded her foot. Esmee is, therefore, obliged to tend to the duties of the household and here she falls miserably. Removed from her confining sphere she proves to be a slattern, an incompetent housekeeper. Furthermore, Elliot discovers that she is considerably older than he thought. And so Esmee’s inglorious situation has become Anne’s forgiveness, which she is ready to offer.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides having a talented and popular star in Miss Clayton to exploit in this production, the producer has got a good title and one which will certainly appeal to a large section of the public. It is, as a matter of fact, one of the most entertaining features presented thus far this season.
"SHE HIRED A HUSBAND"—BLUEBIRD

Priscilla Dean Subject Not Up to Her Mark, But Should Please

THIS offering was reviewed lengthily in the issue of November 9, on page 2889. Although it does not compare with some of the best Priscilla Dean pictures, it should give satisfaction just the same. Action of plot, suspense and some heart appeal are the elements upon which it has been built. The star acts in a very peculiar, nevertheless interesting and pleasing, way of her own. She portrays the role of a fearless and impulsive but kind-hearted girl convincingly. There are some improbabilities in the story, but they will be overlooked by picturegoers, because the picture is entertaining.

It is a clean attraction and suitable for any theatre.—Released Dec. 2.—Length. 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE STORY

Daphne Trowbridge is a most perversive young person who worries her aunt and uncle from morning until night by constantly going contrary to their wishes. In time they are unable to hear it longer and decide to marry her off to—Tom Dunstan, a husband who lives on the estate next door. They sing his praises to Daphne, and she, perversive as usual, turns him down when he proposes. Tom departs quite broken up about it. The next suitor the Trowbridges select for their niece they speak of in no kind terms, and their plan works for a while for Daphne accepts his proposal. However, the trick just before the wedding and refuses to partake. Determined that they shall see her secure a husband for herself, she goes out in search of one and picks a heavily-bearded stranger she meets at the station. They are married with the understanding that it is to be a "name only" contract.

At home, the "stranger" removes his beard and proves to be Tom, and he, wise fellow, decides to the Daphne not recognize him as the man she married, so Tom paints his husband in an array of horrible colors. Tom then disappears to the woods, and Daphne, in spite of the lumen he left, is unable to search the woods. This time he kidnaps Daphne, and takes her off to the wooded wilds where she proceeds to practice the tactics of the caveman upon her. Eventually she becomes a dutiful wife. She is again kidnapped by Tom's enemies, and after a fierce fight he rescues her. An old scar on his shoulder reveals his identity to Daphne, and she is more than happy to discover that her husband and the man she really loved all the while are one and the same.

CATCH LINES

Daphne bought a "bearded stranger" for a husband; merely to oblige her aunt and uncle, and when the beard came off she discovered a husband she always loved!

Daphne Trowbridge suffered from a severe case of perversity until her lover disguised himself and practiced the well-known caveman tactics upon her.

Priscilla Dean, an actress so competent that she just had to become a star.

Daphne Trowbridge wasn't hard up at all. She could have had any one of a dozen young men for a husband, but to save herself from such suitors she hired a husband. This paper proved to be the man she had loved all the time.

If you want to get anywhere with a perversive young person just be contrary yourself. This is the way the Trowbridges figured Daphne, the only trouble being that they let her in on their game, and then there was the very dickens to pay.

Colorado Experiences Fifth Week of Influenza Ban

On October 28th Colorado theatres entered upon the fifth week of inactivity due to the closing order of the State Board of Health on account of the epidemic now raging throughout the state and nearly all over the country. So far as Colorado was concerned on October 29th, there is small hope of the ban being lifted much before two weeks. The situation in the state is still very serious and the authorities are inclined to take no chances on a premature reopening.

For several days past new cases reported in Denver daily have averaged two hundred, and there has been a total of approximately 250 deaths. The mortality records for the whole state have been broken. Pueblo's daily average of new cases is about two hundred.

New Mexico, Wyoming and Idaho report little improvement in the situation. The epidemic is abating in Utah with the exception of Salt Lake and Ogden, where strict quarantines have been maintained.

The Nebraska authorities have rescinded the closing order in several sections of the state, effective on midnight, November 1st, but quarantines will be maintained in localities where the disease is not under control.

Omaha lifted the ban also at midnight November 1st. Theatres there opened on Saturday, and several houses started a program beginning at one minute after midnight on October 31st.

Cliff Believes Day of War Play Is Gone

DENISON CLIFT, special feature writer for William Fox's West Coast studio, and formerly of the Lasky and Inc. scenario staffs, believes that the war play, with its battle scenes, will soon vanish.

"But there will be war plays and war plays for fifty years and more," declares Cliff; "not the kind of pictures that have won popularity during the war, but stories dealing with the myriad social questions and problems growing out of the war. The influence of the war will be felt in stories, plays and literature in general for several generations."

Clift has completed scripts for several Fox stars, including "The Coming of the Law" for Tom Mix, "Quicksands" and "The Sneak" for Gladys Brockwell, "The Danger Zone" for Madeline Traverse, and is now at work preparing versions of other stories for winter work at the studio.

Merle Davis Takes Management of Ansonia Amusement Company

THE most important theatre sale of the year in Montana was consummated at Butte when Phil Levy, largely interested in the Ansonia Amusement Company and its general manager, disposed of his interests to Joseph Oppenheimer, well-known Butte capitalist.

Mr. Levy, who is president of the Montana Exhibitors' League, having served at the head of the state picture men's organization for the past four years, retires. He will remain in Butte looking after other business interests.

Close on the announcement of the sale of the Levy interests in the amusement company comes the official report that Merle Davis, well-known advertising man and artist, has been selected general manager and E. Marshall Taylor, former manager of the Orpheum, will serve as assistant general manager.

The Ansonia company is the largest in the state, operating the Ansonia, Orpheum and Broadway theatres in Butte, the New Marlowe in Helena, and the Pantages in Great Falls, as well as booking Pantages through Montana.

Mr. Levy has been in the show business in Butte for seven years and has been successful. With his retirement also comes the resignation of W. W. Wisner as manager of the Broadway. Mr. Wisner will devote his entire time to his advertising business.

For seventeen years Mr. Davis, new director of the Ansonia houses, has been advertising manager and artist for the Symons Dry Goods Company, a leading Montana store.

The new management is taking advantage of the "flu" shutdown by making extensive improvements at the Ansonia and Orpheum. Both houses are being dressed up a bit. The inside ticket office at the Ansonia is being eliminated and the usual custom of a ticket booth near the street will be adopted.

Selected pictures will be a feature. The old Princess theatre, now closed, will be used as a projection room where every picture shown at any of the Ansonia houses will first be reviewed. The patrons will be given only such selected and reviewed pictures. The censorship will be in the hands of the managers and if it does not measure up to the requirements the picture will simply not be shown.

At the Ansonia the full picture program will be shown and in addition two Hippodrome acts booked by the Kelly-Burns circuit. C. W. Eckhart will continue as manager of the Marlowe of Helena, a new house featuring moving pictures and also playing the big road attractions.
Rosebaum Elected President of Northwest Board of Trade

H. G. ROSEBAUM, newly elected president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, is manager of the Seattle branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Film Corporation and one of the best liked men on Film Row. He was elected because of this and because the members wished to continue to have a man with energy and force at the head of the organization. The Northwest Board has made a wonderful name for itself. Many Eastern Board men have praised its work and have commented that it did better work then the Eastern boards. Mr. Rosebaum has always believed that the exhibitor is the most important link in the industry and in order to uphold it, he believes that the board should do all in its power to make things as easy as possible for the exhibitors.

The retiring president, J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle office of the World Film Co., is given great credit by his colleagues for giving the name of The Northwest Film Board of Trade the wonderful one it has for efficiency, consideration and willingness to help the government in every way possible. One of Mr. Koerpel's latest ideas has been to establish "Emergency Stations." This will, in many instances, bring some of the small country show houses 4,000 miles closer to Broadway. These emergency stations are nothing but railroad station houses, where films will be left in care of railroad men, so that in case an exhibitor does not receive his films on account of the poor train schedule, a snow storm, etc., he can travel to one of these stations and obtain some sort of a film. This is but one way of co-operating with the producer.

The board also co-operates with Uncle Sam, who has praised it, by helping sell his bonds and producing pictures that show war events.

Portland Exhibitors Want Allowance for Time They Are Closed

Since October 10, all picture houses and theatres of the city have been in darkness, but at the present time, indications are that the quarantine ban will be lifted in about ten days.

On Thursday, October 24, a meeting of all theatrical and amusement interests men was held at the Heilig theatre, there being present more than 30 members of the amusement fraternity. Among the matters which were introduced in the discussion were those of the influenza ban, the new tax bill which is now before the Senate, and the matter of rents during the time in which the closing order is in effect. A committee composed of the following men was elected: Walter Armstrong manager of the Strand theatre, chairman; secretary, Walter W. Kofeldt; W. E. Ely, Hippodrome theatre; Sol Baum, manager of the Universal Film Exchange; C. M. Hill, of the Paramount Art-Craft Exchange; William Pangle, manager of the Heilig theatre; Joe Bratt, manager of the Echo theatre; G. T. Holtzclaw, of the Circle theatre; Larry Keating, of the Lyric theatre; Frank McGettigan, of the Orpheum; and Calvin Heilig, of the Heilig theatre.

This committee of men met in the office of Mayor Baker Friday morning with Dr. Parish, City Physician, and Dr. Sealy, of the State Board of Health. The committee requested that more drastic action be taken in regard to the quarantine ban which had been put on the city. It was pointed out that numerous department stores were holding sensational sales, which resulted in drawing large crowds to their establishments. It was pointed out that in several parts of the city the orders of quarantine were not being obeyed. The committee stated that so far, it would seem as if the theatres and churches were being discriminated against. They requested that the ban be placed on the city tighter than ever.

The committee also appointed drew up a set of resolutions to be submitted to the various landlords whose premises are occupied by the theatres. In these resolutions it was requested that the landlords make some allowances to their tenants for the time that they are closed, and it is expected that the landlords will be very fair in this matter, as some four or five have voluntarily signified their intentions to meet with the unusual conditions.

A telegram was sent to senators McNary and Chamberlain, at Washington, D. C., reading as follows: "At a combined meeting of all of the Oregon theatrical interests held in Portland today, a resolution was unanimously passed that on account of the influenza epidemic causing the closing of the theatres which naturally is resulting in a great loss of revenue, to the parties concerned, we ask that you will use every effort to afford some relief in the bill increasing the war tax on amusements. Inasmuch as the immediate levying of such a double tax coming on the heels of the closing order it would cause great financial embarrassment."

Fear L. A. Samuelson Lost at Sea

Great apprehension is felt among the moving picture men of this city, as to the fate of L. A. Samuelson, who was on board the Dumaru, a Portland built vessel, which was lost between Guam and the Manila Islands. L. A. Samuelson has been connected with the Pathé Exchange for four years. He was a booker with the Portland, Seattle and Minneapolis Exchanges, when Walter W. Kofeldt was manager.

Latest News Around Seattle

AS to the closing of the theatres in Seattle, no one manager wishes to give his opinion for publication. The consensus of opinion, however, has been that a little politics has been brought to play, together with the "flu" scare. All managers and exhibitors have willing to help the city administration do away with the "flu." Nevertheless, they could not see why the theatres could not stay open in Seattle when they were open in New York. One manager remarked that as far as cleanliness and ventilation were concerned, there were very few houses all over the country that could, as a whole, compare with those of Seattle, and that if the city officials would allow the houses to stay open the managers would fumigate them as many times a day as the officials desired. All seemed to think it perfectly proper that the houses should be closed until all were perfectly cleansed and arrangements were made to keep them in that order. They would be glad to ask anyone to leave in case they sneezed.

AMONG those recently seen on Film Row were N. E. Hoff, Fred Mercy of Yakima and T. E. Edmundson.

AFTER the City of Prosser was closed for a few days on account of the "flu," the Mayor opened it again. The manager of the Prosser theatre then ordered "To Hell with the Kaiser" and after two big days the town was closed up again.

J. P. CATTER of Baker, Oregon, is remodeling the Baker theatre and is making it ready for high-class road shows. On account of war conditions he will employ girl ushers, who will wear white shoes, blue stockings, white skirts and blue middies. S. J. Idem was promoted assistant manager.

EUGENE LEVY, manager of Levy's Orpheum, has decided that he will add musical stock productions to his motion pictures. Changing off from one to another.

Ruffner Expresses Opinion of the Four Weeks Close Down

THE cessation of film manufacture for a thirty-day period may prove a boon to the producer, but the enforced shutdown of theatres is almost disastrous to the exhibitors, according to the opinion expressed by Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto theatre, Butte, to a Molion Picture representative.

The Rialto is one of the leading houses of the Northwest and is devoted exclusively to moving pictures and music. It is one of the celebrated string of Jensen-Von Herberg theatres.

"The theatre managers are called upon to face a crisis in their business which is without precedent. The closing orders came like a bolt from the blue and we had no time to adjust ourselves to the new conditions so suddenly brought up. We simply had to obey the orders and think at leisure."

In this manner did Mr. Ruffner express himself. "We are not complaining, but every theatre closed is hit just in proportion to its size," he continued. "But from the standpoint of the employes do I see an even more vexatious problem. For instance, at the Rialto alone forty-five employes are out of work and will be until resumption, the date yet being indefinite. All of these bought Liberty Bonds of the fourth issue. In fact this house and employes subscribed 100 per cent. Some of them, I personally know, went the limit and now will be unable to meet the next instalment. It is up to the banks or the Government to permit them doing so by some arrangement or other."

"What goes for the Rialto in this respect may be said of every other house in the city."

Another item referred to by Mr. Ruffner was the loss of revenue resulting to the Government. In Butte, from the theatres alone, if the shutdown lasts a month, the tax loss will be $10,000.

"Not in a spirit of criticism do I wish to point out this defect in the orders of the Board of Health, but so that it may be helpful should another such calamity ever befall us again," he said. "It is evident that the Board has not gone far enough. It should be 'all or none' in respect to shutting up everything possible or else nothing. In Butte only the theatres, churches, schools, public gathering places and pool halls were closed. The danger to exposure to the 'flu' germ exists at non-essential stores and many other places."

Speaking of conditions in the theatre as regards ventilation and fumigation the manager stated: "We have one of the most complete ventilation, cooling and heating systems in the country. We can freeze or steam people on short notice. We can fill all space quickly with disinfectants. In fact the Rialto is a good place for people to come if they want to be disinfected."

Mr. Ruffner commented on the fact that the month of business which is plucked from the theatre calendar is one of the best of the year. "The average theatre, generally speaking, overcomes its inevitable natural losses resulting during the summer months by way of retrieval by November 1. Now that opportunity is snatched away. A cream month is gone."

DENVER theatres are ready for the opening on short notice, and it is certain the fans will require equally short notification. Several of the Curtis street houses have undergone extensive alterations during the enforced closing period, including the Rivoli, formerly the Paris, which changed hands a few weeks ago. This popular rechristened show-house will open with Thomas Dixon’s “The One Woman” and a special musical program.

AT Colorado Springs, Frank Tammen, owner of the American theatre, has completed extensive improvements which included the remodeling of his entire front and redecorations, which involved an outlay of $20,000. He will open with the First National’s production, “Romance of Tarzan,” or Sessue Hayakawa in “His Birthright,” released just before the closing order through Mutual.

M. H. TODD, manager of the Princess at Cheyenne, and his wife are staying in Denver until the ban is lifted. He says conditions in Wyoming are very bad.

WALTER S. RAND, district manager for General, has successfully dodged the “Roos” and is spending ten days in Denver. When asked about business in his district he said: “Just fine”; but quickly corrected his statement and added that his answer was merely force of habit.

R. H. McCLUSKEY has resigned as salesman for Mutual out of Denver. He will operate the Strand at Hoisington, Kan., which was closed several months ago by W. T. Hollar.

E. B. REMINGTON, another Mutual salesman, is working in the beet fields in northern Colorado at $5 a day and find yourself. He will return to Mutual when the game is on again.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, district manager for Universal, is back from Butte and Salt Lake. He says that “floo bird” ought to be sent back to Germany.

MAX ISLAR has taken over the Gem theatre here, which was formerly operated by Mrs. Anna Jordan, who is now in Seattle.

P. G. ARMBUS, owner of the Royal at Gehring, Nebraska, has purchased the Liberty at Lusk, Wyoming, and the Opera House theatre at Manville. He expects a big business at his new houses on account of the oil boom in that section.

R. J. CHURCHILL, former local manager for Fox, has left for Camp Kearney in California on a general call. Mr. Churchill resigned his position with Fox early in August, expecting a call in September. He was experienced and very popular here and his departure is a matter of much regret. He was formerly salesman in Kansas City territory for Artcraft when that organization first opened an office there, and later opened with Geo. Klein when he established his service in Kansas City. He was also connected with V. L. S. E. when they first opened at that place. He was in charge of the Denver Fox headquarters fourteen months.

Unfinished Productions Bridge Gap at Famous Players-Lasky Coast Plant

In connection with the closing of the picture theatres in various parts of the country temporarily and a resultant suspension of releases, Frank Garbutt, West Coast business manager of the Lasky studio, outlined the conditions at the big Pacific Slope plant of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and at the Morosco studio. Mr. Garbutt stated that Cecil B. De Mille began work on a new picture, as did Ethel Clayton. These two pictures will be completed, as will those of Vivian Martin at the Morosco plant and Bryant Washburn, when all will take four-week lay-offs. Lila Lee and Wallace Reid have both completed their pictures and have stopped work for the same period. Those stars who are now in work will take their lay-offs at the end of the pictures, as to shut down in the middle of the productions would entail great loss and extra expense. As the lay-offs will not all occur at the same time, the studios will not be entirely shut down, and as a consequence only a certain proportion of the workers will be idle at any time during the period of partial inactivity.

There is every belief that the climatic conditions of the West Coast will result in an early victory over the disease that is now prevalent.

Cecil B. De Mille made a fine start on his new Artcraft picture, written by Jeanie MacPherson, while Ethel Clayton, under Robert Vignola’s direction, is doing a mystery picture by Carolyn Wells. Lila Lee has gone to New York to spend a month’s vacation with her guardians, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards. Wallace Reid will probably go on a vacation. Ann Little, his leading woman, declares she will stay at home. Vivian Martin is busy with a new production under Chet Withey. Bryant Washburn is getting on famously under Donald Crisp with “Venus in the East,” supported by Margety Wilson and Anna Q. Nilsson. He will take a rest following the completion of the picture.

The weekly drill of the 51st Company (Lasky) Home Guard was called off in deference to the Health Department orders. It is hoped that drills may be resumed shortly. For the same reasons the maneuvers in the San Fernando Valley have been indefinitely postponed. The minstrel show may yet be held as planned on November 16, depending on the state of affairs. But unless the ban is soon removed it will not be possible to hold rehearsals, which may delay the performance. Everybody is hoping for the best.

A recent visitor to the Lasky studio was Mrs. Gerard, wife of the former ambassador to Germany and a party of friends. They viewed the studio with much interest.

A rumor locally to the effect that Cecil B. De Mille would sever connections with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of which he is director general, is emphatically denied by Mr. De Mille and all concerned. He may do considerable war work, but his affiliation with the concern remains absolutely unchanged in any degree.

News of Los Angeles Studios

PRINCE AXEL, of Denmark, upon the occasion of his visit to Los Angeles during the latter part of last week, insisted upon visiting the "movies," but was entertained at the Lasky plant, and later by Charlie Chaplin at his studios in Hollywood.

ELBERT W. BIBY, father of Edwin Biby, of the publicity department at the Chaplin studios, died this week at his home in Long Beach. He had been stationed there as an acting camp in Texas, and another in the Red Cross work in France.

A RUMOR was current in Hollywood that Charlie Chaplin had been attacked by the "flu," but this was denied by Chaplin in person when he appeared two nights in succession in the lobby of the Alexandria hotel. Chaplin expects to begin "shooting" on his new picture soon. The subject is yet unknown, but the scenes will be laid in a rural community, it is announced.

A NUMBER of stories appeared in the Los Angeles press that Priscilla Dean, Universal star, was engaged to be married to Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, former race driver, but now one of the American flying aces in France, but the story was denied by Miss Dean. She says she is a "stunt," Accordingly, he was entombed by Cecil DeMille. His next picture will be called "The Gutter Rose," and the story is now being prepared under the supervision of Director Ted Browning.

ELINOR FRIED, former film editor of Universal, stationed at the New York offices at 1600 Broadway, has reached the Pacific coast to collaborate with Frank Lawrence, the coast film editor of Universal, on Universal and Bluebird productions.

The recent picture made by Charles Ray under the working title of "Dreamy Dub," will be released under the title of "The Girl Dodger," it was announced at the Ince studios this week. In this play Ray is seen in the bookworm who evaded feminine association. He eventually fell into a situation that is said to have changed his ideas of the fair sex.

J. BARNEY SHERRY has been reengaged by Thomas H. Ince to play the part of a millionaire stock broker in a play now being produced. Sherry has interpreted so many millionaire parts that he is now called "the millionaire of the screen."

ENDI BENNET has begun work on a new picture, which is to be a drama in a desert setting. The story was written by J. L. Hawks and will be directed by Fred Niblo.

DOROTHY DALTON has begun work on a new film play which is said will be one of the most elaborate in which this star has ever appeared. She will play the part of a ambitious New York society woman.

The stages at the new Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City are nearing completion. It is claimed they will be the largest and lightest in the country. The administration building will be completed within about three weeks.

GEORGE McDaniel, who played opposite Theda Bara in one of her last pictures, made on the coast, completed the lead this week in Harold Bell Wright's screen interpretation of his novel, "The Shepherd of the Hills."

MAY ALLISON, who recently finished "Thirty Days," her last production for Metro before the closing order was received, spent last week at home, announcing that she would take a vacation in the mountains before returning to work.

Agnes Marc Has Been Engaged As a Member of the Stock Company at Famous Players-Lasky West Coast Studios

RALPH ROBINSON, publicity director for Metro, has been placed in Class A1 of the draft, and he is expecting a call to the colors any day. His brother, Carlyle Robinson, who was personal representative and publicity director for Charlie Chaplin, has received his commission as second lieutenant at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark. Lieutenant Robinson expects to be soon sent to Camp Fumanon, Kansas, now under command of Maj. Leonard Wood. It is understood that another promotion is in prospect for him and that he will be placed in command of a company.

TAKING advantage of the lull in production activities, a party composed of Charles and Al Christie, George Beban, Sessue Hayakawa, Scott Sidney, E. Mason Hopper and Jack Pratt, spent the week duck hunting in the vicinity of Elizabeth Lake. Statistics of the hunting expedition will be furnished by the publicity men of the various studios.

LOTTIE PICKFORD, sister of Mary Pickford, who has been ill at the St. Vincent's hospital, is on the road to recovery, it was announced at the hospital this week. She is suffering from an affliction of the ear, which at one time threatened to develop into pneumonia. Her condition was regarded as being so critical two weeks ago that her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, and sister Mary, rushed to her bedside from widely separated points. Mrs. Pickford was in New York, while Miss Pickford was touring the Northwest.

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S superproduction, which has reached its second week's production, is yet unnamed, but it was announced this week that it is a story of the eternal triangle. Production, however, was interrupted for a few days because DeMille was confined to his home with a bad cold. He refused to be classed as an influenza victim.

THE Essie Barriscale Company, now producing for Hodkinson release, has just finished the filming of "Two Gun Betty" which was directed by Howard Hickman who is the author of the story. Jack Cunningham prepared the continuity. The Barriscale Company has been organized, incorporation papers having been taken out under the laws of Arizona. Howard Hickman is president, J. D. Frothingham, vice-president and treasurer, and M. C. Lovers is secretary. The attorney for the company is now in New York completing negotiations for the release of pictures made by this company. Si Snyder has been engaged to direct the publicity and advertising matter of the company.
HARRY BALANCE, branch manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange, has recovered from an attack of influenza that kept him in bed for twelve days. He was back in the Paramount-Artcraft exchange this week, and predicted a big rush of business when the theatres are again opened to allow for business.

PERSISTENT rumors that all theatres in Arizona will be opened next week were received Saturday and Monday by film exchange managers. Ballance, of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange, was informed the theatres in Deming, N. M., would be open not later than Wednesday of this week.

SPECIAL Representative Harry Lustig of the Metro is shortly to leave on a trip over the western territory which will embrace the exchanges of Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle and San Francisco. He had prepared to leave on this trip, when Mrs. Lustig was taken ill with typhoid fever, but she is now practically recovered after a very severe attack.

MAE MARSH, popular Goldwyn star, arrived in Los Angeles last Thursday. She was greeted at the train by Mr. and Mrs. Ben Fish, of the Los Angeles Goldwyn exchange; J. A. Quinn, manager of Quinn's Rialto on Broadway; Norma and Constance Talmadge, and Dorothy Dish, all friends of the little star.

SINCE the Rex Beach production, "Laughing Bill Hyde," featuring Will Rodgers, was exhibited at the Kinema theatre, the Goldwyn exchange has been flooded with inquiries from exhibitors concerning the making of pictures of the same kind that are not being produced, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

BEN FISH, branch manager of the Goldwyn exchange, and his salesmen, Bernard Fish and Harvey Gausman, this week are planning a drive on Bill Parsons' comedies as soon as the influenza ban is lifted. If the exhibitors refuse to book these comedies, the campaign is under way, these three muscle-teers will demand the reason why.

GEORGE SARGENT, manager of the Liberty theatre at Camp Kearny, last week asked David Bershon, branch manager of the Universal exchange, to provide the Liberty theatre with film for outdoor shows in the camp, all indoor performances having been prohibited. Mr. Bershon conferred with Metro, World Film, All Star Features, Mutual, and Kleine, with the result that enough feature pictures were sent to Camp Kearny to keep five different shows running at five different points in the camp every night last week. The system will continue this week, and every week hereafter. Mr. Bershon said, so long as the closing ban is in effect in the big cantonment. Manager Sargent wrote a letter to Branch Manager Bershon thanking Mr. Bershon for his interest and quick action in supplying the picture so badly needed in the camp.

The Universal exchange at Phoenix, Ariz., was closed last week. All territory formerly served by this office will be handled hereafter from the Los Angeles branch, it was announced. The new arrangement is being made, according to Branch Manager Bershon, so as to give Arizona exhibitors quicker service on the newest releases. In the event of sending such releases to the Phoenix exchange, and booking them from that point, the pictures will be sent direct to the exhibitor from Los Angeles, thus gaining much time. "And as everybody knows, time is money," Mr. Bershon said.

LARRY E. LUND, manager of the Broadway theatre at Oakland, motored to Los Angeles last week. He was accompanied by Mrs. Lund.

AL TUCHMAN, head of the supply department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of New York, was a visitor at the Universal exchange this week. He is touring all the Universal exchanges in the United States. He held a number of conferences with David Bershon, branch manager of the Los Angeles exchange, and made special trips to Universal City.

S. S. MOOR, formerly connected with the Universal office in New York, has been transferred to Los Angeles and is now attached to the Universal exchange in Los Angeles.

TAKING advantage of vacation time afforded them by the closing of theatres in the Los Angeles territory, eleven branch managers and salesmen of Los Angeles exchanges last week slipped away from the city for a hike in the Sierra mountains. They were the guests of Bernie Loper, son of B. E. Loper, manager of the Select exchange, at his lodge cabin in Santa Onita canyon. Members of the party were B. E. Loper, of Select; David Bershon, Universal; C. L. Theurkauf, Bluebird Universal; Harvey Gausman, Goldwyn; Guy Gunderson, Kleine System; Thomas Hancock and Harry Merritt, of World Film; H. A. McBride, of the Ham Beall Publicity Bureau; L. D. Purdy and A. B. Lamb, of Metro. While every member of the party reported sore feet from the long hike, yet each one reported that the vacation had acted as a tonic, with the result that when the theatres are again open these "peppery" managers will be out after the business with greater energy than ever before.

FRANK DUFFY, special representative of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, left last week for San Francisco and Seattle on his way back to New York. He spent about two weeks in Los Angeles.

E. R. WILLIAMS, salesman for All Star Features, who was ill last week with influenza, was able to return to the exchange offices this week.

E. O. VAN PELT, advance business manager of "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith's great picture, has survived a severe attack of influenza and was this week at the All Star offices.

ALVIN G. FORRY, of the All-Star Features exchange, and acting branch manager in the absence of Louis Hyman in San Francisco, this week received information that he had been chosen to attend the officers' training school at Fort MacArthur, Texas. He will leave for the Texas camp within two weeks, he said.

BILLY SNELL, manager of the Topic theatre at El Centro, wired the M. & R. exchange this week that he believed the theatres of El Centro would be open by the latter part of the week.

GEORGE M. MANN this week resigned as district manager of the Fox Pacific Coast exchanges. He will be succeeded by Paul Mooney, district manager of the Fox exchanges in the Middle Western States, and well known in film circles. Mr. Mooney has had charge of the territory served from St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati for several years. He will make his headquarters at the Fox exchange in Los Angeles. Announcement of these changes was made by Branch Manager M. A. Walsh.

TOM MIX, Fox Western star, went to the hospital last week to undergo an operation for the removal of lead from his hip that is said to have been there for fifteen years. He was under ether for three hours. A story is told on Old Blue, faithful horse belonging to Mix, that the animal refused to eat or to be led or to be entertained in any manner while Mix was absent. Accordingly the horse was taken to the hospital, according to this same story, and when he got a glimpse of his master, he proceeded to act as all good horses are expected to act.
Complete San Francisco News Condensed

ALL indication of opening theatres depends upon the course of the influenza. For a week the entire city has been wearing "flu" masks, and today's reports from the Board of Health seem to indicate that they are proving effective. The report shows a falling off of 50 per cent. in new cases in the past twenty-four hours. Any such improvement continued a few days would make November 10th a very likely date for the reopening. In the meantime, every theatre in the State is closed, although Visalia has written to inquire for films for November 3d. As the theatres were closed by the State Board of Health, it is not believed that Visalia will be permitted to open until the disease is fully checked in San Francisco.

THE management of the Tivoli theatre in San Francisco and the T & D theatre in Oakland is making extensive improvements in both houses. In both the pit is being cut out and arrangements being made to greatly increase the size of the orchestra. How many men these orchestras will be increased has not yet been decided, but it is said it will rest with the leaders. Both houses are being thoroughly renovated and new installations are being made for stage effects. The other houses belonging to the T & D circuit are being generally overhauled and such work as is necessary to put them in first class condition is being done.

SOL L. LESSER, chairman of the United States official war film division, State Council of Defense, has received notice from Charles Hart, director of the national division of films, that the third Government film feature, "Under Four Flags," will be ready for distribution in California about November 15th. "Under Four Flags" is exclusively a fighting picture. Its scenes will present a vivid story of welfare as waged by Yankee troops. The activities of the French, British and Italian soldiers, under the master direction of General Foch, will supply the remainder of the material of the film. The initial showing of this new film will be made in San Francisco immediately after the withdrawal of the Health Board's influenza order. It is intended to have the premier view at the Greek theatre, University of California, Berkeley. This preview will be given to invited guests only and will be the first ever held in this classic theatre. Incidentally an open air display of a motion picture in the middle of November will form an additional advertisement for the balmy atmosphere of this State. The circulation of "America's Answer" has been greatly hampered by the prevailing influenza, and it is understood that the theatres which have contracted for this second film will have to use it before they will be allowed to have the third.

ISADORE BERNSTEIN, representing the National Film Corporation of Los Angeles, stopped over in San Francisco a day or two on his way back from the East to convince some of his friends that the report of his recent demise was anticipatory. He says that he never felt better.

E. H. EMMICK, president and general manager of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., accompanied by Mrs. Emmick, left for the East immediately after Mr. Emmick's return from his duck hunt. As he got away before your representative had a chance to see him, and the others on the hunt decline to talk, it must remain a mystery how many ducks the party secured.

THE Spanish influenza has laid its heavy hand on nearly every exchange in the city, although so far the Paramount people report they have had no sickness. While several theatre managers in the State have passed on from the effect of the disease, no one connected with the local exchanges has as yet died. J. T. Turner, of Turner & Dahnken, is reported to have been very low from pneumonia following an attack of the influenza, but the latest reports indicate that he is on the mend. H. J. the Pathé Exchange, Inc., and Ed Rowden, clerk in the same exchange, were stricken this week, although neither case is regarded as serious at present.

ALFRED A. BERARD, proprietor of the Modesto theatre at Modesto, Cal., died October 25th from pneumonia, following an attack of the influenza. He was thirty-five years of age and was one of the best known and best liked exhibitors in the State. The body was brought to San Francisco, where the funeral services were conducted in accordance with the Masonic ritual. L. Reichert and G. C. Blumenthal, both of the Metro, were the representatives of film row at the funeral.

FRANK ROGERS, manager of the Apollo theatre in this city, is also a victim of influenza. He died from the effects of the attack this week.

MOST of the film exchanges in the city are running on half time. In this way the mail can be taken care of, the cleaning up process can proceed, and at the same time the employees can get as much fresh air as possible. A good many feeds of exchanges and the managers of many of the closed theatres have seized the opportunity to go to the coun-ry and a number have started on long automobile trips. Among those who are out of town for a week or so is Floyd St. John of the World Film Corporation. He is spending a week at Paterson, Cal.

HARRY LEE KNAPPEN, manager of Select Pictures Corporation, says that he has been notified that "Big Mich."
Lewis, who has made such a reputation in Rex Beach stories, is to be the star in six big specials which will soon be released. The first of these is "Vengeance is Mine," and this is said to be a very powerful photoplay.

G. C. PARSONS, branch manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has just returned from the hospital, where he went a week ago to have his tonsils removed. The fact that Mr. Parsons did not go to the hospital with influenza, makes his trip there all the more remarkable.

CHARLES PERRY, formerly of the Winter Garden, New York, and other theatres, has been appointed manager of the Rialto theatre in this city.

J. M c C U L L O U G H , formerly manager of the Jewel theatre in this city and later connected with the Mutual Film Corporation, left last week for France, whither he goes in tape service of the Y. M. C. A.

J. A. KRAKER, formerly with the Vitagraph, is now in France with his regiment. He was heard from this week and raves that he is prepared "to teach the Hun a new goose step" if he ever gets in contact.

THE Bining theatre, Ashland, Ore., has just installed a new
this city.

THE American Photo Player Co., of San Francisco, announces that it has sold five foto-players to the Lynch Enterprises, and that they will be distributed among the corporation's theatres in the south. This is a duplicate of an order given about a year ago.

Short Notes of San Diego

MANAGER W. H. HILTS of the Alhambra theatre has tem-orarily discontinued the house during the influenza embargo on public gatherings, and the place has been equipped for use by a shoe dealer.

The plans for the construction of a new theatre on Eighth street, between Broadway and E street, on the Post properly, have been abandoned for the present.

LOCAL motion picture houses, since their enforced closing, have been using their lobby display space, in a number of instan-tces, for advertising the fourth Liberty Loan and the

J. M. DODGE, of Dodge & Hayward, of Spreckels (Hippodrome) theatre, while the house is closed has been taking a vacation trip to San Francisco and other northern points.

KENT G. BUSH, of the Broadway Amusement Company, operating the Broadway and Superba theatres, has been making good use of his time in taking the bag limit of ducks on the back-country lakes and reservoirs.

THOROUGH renovation of all the motion picture houses is the order of the day, so that everything may be spick and span as soon as the ban against shows is raised. The public is looking forward to this release. Fortunately conditions have been much more favorable here than in most other cities, throughout the country.

What Butte Is Doing

C. W. ECKHARDT, manager of the Marlowe theatre, Helena, moved to Butte this week to confer with the new general manager of the Montana Amusement Company, Merle Davis.

THE theatres at Scobie, Mont., re opened on Monday, September 28, according to George Bourke of the Universal exchange, his company getting orders to start service on that date. The "flu" lasted just a month there.

THE D. B. LEDERMAN system of booking and office work has just been adopted at the Universal exchange here and Manager Bourke is loud in praise of it. This is a uniform system to be installed at all Universal exchanges.

R. J. KLEIN has purchased the Crystal theatre, McQueen's addition, Butte. The new proprietor is getting ready for the reopening of the house as soon as health authorities permit.
The former owner, J. A. Maguire, is reported to be in the army.

H. K. BRIN, traveling out of Salt Lake for the Universal, was in Butte this week.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG of Denver, district manager of the inter-mountain region for Universal, was here this week.

Butte Considers Closing Order a Blessing.

THAT the forced stoppage of film production by the big manufacturers of the country is a blessing in disguise is the opinion of George Bourke, manager of the Universal exchange in Butte, Montana.

"Overproduction has been badly overdone," he said. "A big percentage of pictures never found the screen in Butte and even in New York. The exhibitor out this way will not miss a month's suspension of releases in the least."

Mr. Bourke reports that there is "nothing doing" at his exchange, the entire state being closed up at this time, with the exception of Scobie, a little town in northeastern Montana, where the "flu" first made its appearance and where after a month's shutdown houses have reopened, and one coal camp, Bear Creek, near Red Lodge, was still open at last reports.

There are rumors that Great Falls may reopen, and in Butte it is felt the worst is past and that the closdown will not continue very much longer.

"We are getting ready to book houses where we left off, when the resumption comes," said Mr. Bourke, "and while we do not relish the inactivity, it may really result in good and open the eyes of manufacturers to the wisdom of limiting new productions."

Famous Players-Lasky Studios Buy Bonds
Liberally

THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION'S two studios in Los Angeles went one hundred per cent on the Liberty Loan, with a total of $153,000, the sum of $23,000 being raised at one studio and $130,000 at the other. Every employee of the studios bought one bond and 65 per cent made additional subscriptions. This amount, added to the $428,000 subscribed on Zakur Day in New York, raises the Famous Players-Lasky subscriptions to $81,000, with none of the branch offices reported.

The biggest subscriptions at the studio were made by Cecil B. De Mille, Frank A. Garbutt and Ethel Clayton. Miss Clayton sold $22,500 worth of bonds in three hours by offering to double all subscriptions taken at the studio on a certain afternoon. When the total was added up, Miss Clayton made out a check for $15,000—this in addition to her first purchase of $10,000 made on Famous Players-Lasky night at the tank in Central Park. Other big subscriptions were made by Elliott Dexter and Bryant Washburn.

No perfect gentleman like Bryant Washburn for her! So Bryant hired a bloke to treat her rough. He thought he'd cure her of this foolish idea.

Did he?

Unless you were one of the thousands who laughed at this play when it ran for months on Broadway, you'll never know—until until you see Bryant Washburn in the splendid motion picture, which is funnier than the play ever dared to be.

Your new serial, "The Iron Test," which I am now running in my theatre, appears to be the best yet. And it will have to go some, too, to beat "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web" and "A Fight For Millions."

The public has learned to expect something big when Vitagraph serials are announced, and as a result my audiences from the first episode of "The Iron Test" have been large and enthusiastic.

"Miss Ambition"
A FIVE PART BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Written by REX TAYLOR
In "Miss Ambition," the Exhibitor finds his ideal feature—one that, having all the qualities to attract patrons, pleases them after they are in, and brings them back again.

This powerful role of a beautiful girl who climbed the social ladder and then went back—for love—has proved a most fitting one for Miss Griffith, one of the most successful screen delineators of the society girl.

Directed by HENRY-HOURY
Supporting her in the unweaving of this strong, colorful story are such well known favorites as Betty Blythe, Walter McGrail, Denton Vane, Templer Saxe and Harry Kendall, while the artistic direction of Henry-Houry is reflected in the exquisite settings, novel lighting and fastidious correctness of detail.

Your Audiences Have Had Time To Think

While your theatre was closed your patrons have had more time to read the newspapers and magazines. Even an epidemic could not dull or destroy their interest in the motion picture.

The motion picture has become a part of the lives of the American people.

While reading about their favorite heroines and heroes of the screen they were barred temporarily from seeing, your audiences have had time to think.

They have had time to wonder why you have given them some of the poorer pictures and the lesser stars instead of the better pictures and the bigger stars.

They have had time to weigh pictures and screen personalities in the balance. And they've now decided to ask you, the exhibitor, to raise the grade of your pictures. They expect more of you now than ever before.

You can meet all of their demands, you can anticipate their desires, you can head off some possible complaints right at this moment by booking Goldwyn Star Series productions in your theatre.

ALL audiences want to see Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore. All healthy, normal human beings desire to see Rex Beach's famous characters on the screen.

ALL audiences want to see Quality pictures, made from powerful stories by the ablest directors in the industry.

ALL audiences desire to see finely made productions in preference to poorly-made pictures.

YOUR audiences are receptive to Goldwyn Pictures. The name Goldwyn "out front" and on your screen means increased strength, power and reputation for your theatre.

GERALDINE FARRAR in a modern society and mystery melodrama was just what you and the public wanted. “The Turn of the Wheel” made good and will continue to be a profit-making attraction throughout the year. Booked at The Strand, New York.

MABEL NORMAND returning to broad comedy in “Peck’s Bad Girl” caused the screen public to cry “Hurray!” Exactly what they wanted—and a big success in theatres everywhere.

TOM MOORE an instant hit as a Goldwyn star in “Just For Tonight.” Fast, speedy, romantic comedy—the kind of story that made audiences forget about the war.

MADGE KENNEDY’S most liked picture—“The Kingdom of Youth.” Exhibitors were so enthusiastic about it that they conducted big personal advertising campaigns—and business was heavy. Booked at The Strand, New York.

REX BEACH’S “Laughing Bill Hyde” with Will Rogers introduced a brand new star to the American public and such notices as the critics gave him have rarely ever been equalled in screen history. Booked at The Rivoli, New York.

MAE MARSH in “Hidden Fires” has what dozens of exhibitors rank as her best picture since “Polly of the Circus” and “The Cinderella Man.” Booked at The Rialto, New York.

All of these productions are brand new hits since September 1. Two thousand additional theatres, including yours, should book and begin playing them before Christmas. Productions like these are the basis of Goldwyn’s power. They are confidence-builders—and for you they are patronage builders.

THAT'S your problem—and your intention—as an exhibitor. You reopen your theatre under a new head of steam. While closed up you've been thinking. You know now that you cannot hope to pull out ahead with lesser stars and average pictures.

Big stars build patronage and prosperity just as big guns win battles. Goldwyn means in the public's mind big stars and big productions; the screen's best known personalities. We announce for forthcoming release:

Nov. 17. TOM MOORE in "Thirty A Week" from the stage success by Thompson Buchanan. Booked at The Rialto, New York.

Nov. 24. MABEL NORMAND in "A Perfect 36". By Tex Charwate. A big, broad comedy-drama. An even greater success than "Peck's Bad Girl."

When you give audiences what they want you never have to worry about your profits. Your box-office takes care of itself.

70 DAYS BOOKINGS IN Marcus Loew’s Theatres

At the very moment of the recent suspension concluding a record-breaking pre-release week as the first independent production ever booked at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia.

Betzwood Film Company's Great Patriotic Spectacle

For the Freedom of the East

with LADY TSEN MEI
Conceived and directed by IRA M. LOWRY had been booked on sight for a full time showing on the entire Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit.

Few productions are ever rated by the Loew experts as strong enough to warrant such a blanket booking. This contract for immediate playing dates was signed because—to use their own words—“here is one of the best pictures ever made for the average American.”

Twenty Goldwyn offices during the month of non-releasing have proved by their bookings and by exhibitor approval at trade showings that “For the Freedom of the East” will be one of the big, steady, money-making productions of the Winter and Spring seasons.

If you act quickly your nearest Goldwyn office can give you an almost immediate playing date. Don’t wait till the prints are all busy which would delay you in getting this big successor to “For the Freedom of the World.”

Vulgarity is peculiarly the heritage of civilization. The naked young girl of the Solomon Islands is as free from self-consciousness in her untrammeled, earringed estate as she is unaware that clothes are a matter for legislation in the greater part of the world. At maturity, immediately preceding marriage, she paints her body with yellow ochre according to tribal custom. After marriage, she may wear ornaments of shell or feather or twisted grass, or even the semblance of a dress.

To Our Patrons

It is not often that I permit myself to become enthusiastic to the extent of endorsing a film production, but the beauty and novelty of Mr. Maurice Tourneur’s latest spectacle, entitled “Woman,” compels me to proclaim it one of the most remarkable motion pictures I have ever seen.

It gives me pleasure to announce that this masterpiece will be shown at the Rivoli for the week beginning Sunday, October 27th.

The production will be given a musical and scenic setting worthy of its superlative merit.

Owing to the length and magnitude of the work, no additional pictorial feature other than the current release of the Creel Committee’s official allied war review will be shown on the program.

I earnestly urge every devotee of the motion picture to witness this latest example of Mr. Tourneur’s art.

Faithfully,

Managing Director.

THE DOOR’S WIDE OPEN

An exhibitor should not be expected to hunt among a score of exchanges in each city to find a day’s show. He could find it just as well among three or four exchanges. He could find it most easily at any General Film Company exchange, established since 1910.

Nor should manufacturers be expected to scatter their product among a score of exchanges to reach the same exhibitor in each city.

Furthermore, distributors should not be expected to build and maintain a separate exchange in each city. It multiplies their overhead expense and reduces service efficiency. It makes film cost more to the exhibitor.

However the old situation is improving. The government has taken the nonsense out of railroad routing. And General Film Company is taking the nonsense out of motion picture distribution.

General Film Company long has advocated conservation and warred upon extravagance. It leads in practical conservation by presenting itself as a ready-to-use medium between any manufacturer or distributor and the exhibitor.

Why do thirty, and more, individual producers route their product through General Film Company exchanges? Because its exchange system, the oldest established and most splendidly equipped, was unreservedly open to them. No wonder that they adopted General Film in its completeness rather than the casual exchange here and there.

Why do the most experienced distributors like George Kleine and Wm. L. Sherry discard their own circuit of exchanges and adopt those of General Film Company? They have told you. Looked at calmly, an exchange is a plain, unadorned utility which can serve many interests at a saving. General Film exchanges can do it particularly well. And these men, standing on their own platform of conservation, have shown the strength of their convictions by applying them.

Progressive people see the absurdity of film distribution in the extravagant way, when it can be done better at a minimum of outlay. They naturally turn to such a smoothly-running, permanent service concern as General Film Company, which circulates their film while they retain full control of it.

For over a year General Film Company has been inviting progressive people to employ its facilities.

The invitation still holds good!

Yours for conservation,

GENERAL FILM COMPANY (INC.)

Unconditional Surrender

Back of everything is the Idea from which it sprung. Back of Fox success is the Fox Idea—the plan of producing only the kind of motion pictures that the most people want to see. Back of Fox success is an IDEA so big and broad and sound that it couldn’t do anything else than succeed. Any man is bound to win out, who is clever enough to know what the public wants—and wise enough not to haggle about the cost of giving it to them—for the public is more generous in its pay than the most generous philanthropist with his gifts. The public will not only PAY for what it wants, but will pay liberally to the point of extravagance. William Fox has succeeded for the very reason that he gave the public what it wanted—succeeded far beyond his own ambitious dreams of only a few years ago. The public has surrendered to the Fox Idea.

Films to the William Fox Idea

There is no "kamerading" about it—it's a complete, wholehearted, unconditional surrender to Fox Pictures. And the exhibitors of marked success have followed suit—made just as complete, wholehearted, unconditional surrender.

Now—since successful exhibitors are the ones that lean on Fox Pictures, isn't it a wise move for you to do what they are doing?

Wouldn't it be good business for YOU to follow in their footsteps?

For nothing succeeds like success, —and the Fox idea is a success—a bigger success than you realize, or than we care to boast about.

If you, as an exhibitor, really want success—and we know you do—you can best succeed with Fox productions just as thousands of other exhibitors have.

An Amazing Tribute

By ROB REEL

Give 'em credit. The Fox people with their filmed life of GENERAL PERSHING, their “18 TO 45” draft picture, “THE PRUSSIAN CUR”, not to mention their expose of current European public scandals, are first on the streets—or the screen—with the news.

—CHICAGO AMERICAN, Oct. 8.

The timeliness of WILLIAM FOX productions is the talk of the trade.

It smashes all precedent and surpasses all expectation. Never previously have exhibitors found available such a remarkable and sustained series of opportune pictures as WILLIAM FOX now is offering.

Trade papers have recognized this and discoursed extensively on the changed conditions—on this new era which WILLIAM FOX has ushered in.

Exhibitors generally have been amazed at the wealth and diversity of the offerings. And they have been quick to seize the opportunity to make the busy ticket taker's chair the only vacant seat in their houses.

The good news has spread even further. It has become a common topic of home conversation and of newspaper comment.

It has made WILLIAM FOX at once the marvel and the envy of the most resourceful producing organizations in the land.

No wonder then that an editor of the Chicago American says: “Give 'em credit”!

The biggest productions dealing with events of today are WILLIAM FOX productions.

These pictures have been planned—made—printed—long in advance of the chosen release time. They have come onto the market at the psychological moment—have had the tremendous impetus of popular enthusiasm—have set new and hitherto impossible records of profit.

They are the result of WILLIAM FOX IDEA—the Idea that lets you cash in immediately on the big, vital events of the hour—the Idea that increases the strength of your program and the value of your theatre!

And it's a fixed—definite—steadily growing Idea—an Idea so soundly established that the editors of the leading newspapers recognize and comment on it.

We think William Fox should have been a newspaper publisher. We have thought this for a long time—as, month after month, Fox comes to bat with a production that shows the top-notch publisher's knack of feeling the public pulse.—Editorial,

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

It is the Idea that foresaw public interest in the German espionage system in America and enables you to show HORST VON DER GOLTZ, the chief spy, in your theatre as the principal character of "THE PRUSSIAN CUR."

It is the Idea that witnessed the dawning of public interest in the career of GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING, recognized the value of that interest, and months ago began the filming of "Why America Won," the picture biographical, unique in the history of the cinema industry.

It is the Idea that has made available to exhibitors everywhere such timely productions as "QUEEN OF THE SEA," featuring ANNETTE KELLERMANN, and "WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY," a tremendous morality picture dealing with social problems of the hour.

It is the Idea, developed to its uttermost limits, without duplication of theme, that is enabling wide-awake, live-wire exhibitors to capitalize public interest as they never have done before. It is the Idea to tie to—the Idea of promise and profits—the one big, progressive, courageous Idea of the new 1918-1919 season.

The WILLIAM FOX BIG TIMELY PRODUCTIONS will be money makers whether you show them now or later, but the unusual profits—the turn away crowds—will be the reward of those exhibitors who link up opportunity with TODAY.

WILLIAM FOX has made these productions possible—has given them to you, each on an individual basis. It's up to you whether you will go over the top to Prosperity, or content yourself with being a camp follower.

The time to decide is NOW!

A magazine's success is measured by its advertising. Look at the "News!"
Now that the cry "Kamerad!" has come from the Kaiser—

Now that the world is asking what fate is in store for the arch-foe of mankind—

Film buyers are offered this big, gripping, up-to-the-minute drama that shows the Kaiser punished as the public wants to see him punished; that tries the Hohenzollern before the court of World Justice, pronounces and carries out his fate.

It is the picture of the hour, but it is also a picture of permanent value. The beauty of its scenes, stretching back into the dawn of history; its thrilling panorama of present events; its spectacle of humanity triumphant over its would-be crucifier, make it a drama that will live and earn money for the exhibitor long after ordinary screen dramas are forgotten.

The man who acts quickly will draw big profits from this picture.

Gentlemen:

The Members of the Institute appreciated the opportunity of viewing your great film Picture entitled "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." Every chair in our Hall, seating about 2400, was filled and many were unable to secure admission.

The Picture is an interesting and vivid portrayal of the History of Belgium and of her period of devastation and suffering.

In the course of the hour and three-quarters that the Picture was on the screen, I saw no one leave the Hall, a striking tribute to the interest aroused.

We are glad to be able to announce to our Members that two additional presentations of the Picture will be given.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES D. ATKINS,
Director.

The pictorial paper furnished with "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief" is from Original Drawings by noted French and Belgian Artists and has never been equaled by any Motion Picture publicity. Twenty four, eight and six sheets, two threes and three one sheets, lithographs, designed by a noted Belgian artist and printed in National colors. The National Song, La Brabantcon, for souvenir. NEW YORK

What the New York Critics Say!

"William A. Brady has reached the top notch in photoplay achievement. 'Little Women' at the Strand is one of the most satisfactory pictures ever produced."

Evening Sun.

"William A. Brady's production of the screen classic is the most satisfactory thing we have seen."

Harriette Underhill, Tribune.

"Admirers of the original 'Little Women' will find delight in the animated illustrations of the story—charming—spectators at the Strand seemed to respond with mirth and quick sympathy as gay scenes and grave were flashed before them."

Times.

"The story is acted most sympathetically and the production created an impression that few motion pictures have done in a long time. So absorbed and responsive was yesterday's audience that the picture should draw full houses at every performance."

Evening Telegram.

"Cast is excellent. Charm all its own—very appealing and quaint—telling incidents—distinct characterizations."

Sun.

"One of the most successful adaptations of well known stories to the moving picture screen. Stirs heart interest. Homely sentiment and genuine appeal. Finely presented at the Strand."

World.

Write That Letter!

Of course you didn't get time to write us a letter this week regarding that bomb-shell which J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, exploded in our last issue.

There was too much peace in the air for all of us—the days of note-writing seemed at an end.

But don't forget that we are still in the motion picture business; the three-a-day bread and butter has still to be provided by the motion picture business.

Dig up your copy of last week's Motion Picture News and find that Quinn article. He said some sizzling, ripping things about productions and production policies.

You will either agree with him emphatically or disagree with him—equally emphatically. In either case you will feel like saying a few jarring words yourself.

Obey the impulse.

Remember—we dared you to! And, "by the same token," you can dare us to publish every word you send.

As we said before—let's start something.

J. D. Williams on the Job

Between closing the details of the First National-Mary Pickford contract and celebrating peace, J. D. Williams found time during the week to send us a scorching letter regarding J. A. Quinn's views.

You will find it on Page 3045. Read every word of it, and when you write your own letter discuss both of these contributions.

Mr. Williams places an enthusiastic endorsement on every word spoken by the Los Angeles exhibitor. He indicts our Times Square friend, the producer, in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Quinn did not deal in generalities—neither does Mr. Williams.

But there is one point made by the prominent exhibitor which Mr. Williams does not take up. Mr. Quinn's letter, heartily endorsed by the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association, included these sentiments: "The exhibitor will be better served and better satisfied when you cut out most of the costly printed matter that now fills our waste-baskets, and the senseless placing of advertising in every sort of medium—and confine it to two journals."

Don't forget that point.

Now that reports from every section of the country show over eighty per cent of the theatres once more open for business the industry probably has time to say a word of thanks to Dr. Roy S. Copeland, New York's Health Commissioner.

In the face of the most determined opposition Dr. Copeland kept firm in his belief that a well-ventilated, cleanly theatre was not to be feared; that the value of amusements in keeping up the spirits of the public gainsayed any possible danger.

The theatres were kept open—and the influenza is disappearing in New York with much less of a black memory than it left in many other cities.

Dr. Copeland won out—but requires no vivid stretch of the imagination to picture the abuse and calumny that would have been heaped on him had he failed.

He fought a propaganda led by former office-holders and aided by panic-stricken but silly-informed citizens. He fought for the motion picture theatre. He won.

We don't know of a word more of thanks that we can say than the above statement of fact.

Unless we add the words of one manufacturer to us. He was speaking during the period when ninety per cent of the country's theatres were closed.

"Frankly," he said, "I don't know what the picture industry and especially the distributors would do if it were not for this man Copeland in New York. He has given us the only chance we have to balance a single dollar of income off against the terrible overhead loss we are suffering."

Perhaps It's the Last

If the letters we receive from exhibitors are any criterion, there is a widespread feeling of resentment against the promoters of each new "drive" and their habit of taking up collections in motion picture theatres.

The showmen hesitate to speak. For they desire to do all that is within their power to aid each worthy drive for funds.

But they are becoming more and more of the conviction that the amount of nickels and dimes collected at a picture theatre performance bear no proportionate relation to the inconvenience caused the audience and the actual loss inflicted on the theatre owner.

At the present moment—when theatres are making a valiant effort to recover from the effects of the influenza epidemic—the situation is particularly trying.

The use of the screen to aid the various drives is proper. The message to "Give" can be conveyed to the public there in even more forcible manner than by means of the press.

No dissatisfaction will be aroused—and if we are any judges of psychology, more financial benefit will accrue to any cause. But heckling interruptions and long-winded speeches are out of place.

A New Step in Service—This Week

That popular service feature of Motion Picture News—the Exhibitors' Box Office Reports—will be found this week on page 3125 in a new and advanced form.

The Complete Plan Book made the service hit of the year with exhibitors big and little. It is being filed in theaters everywhere as the only complete guide to pictures—giving the review and complete exploitation aid all in one spot.

Now the Exhibitors' Box Office Reports have been merged with the Complete Plan Book—a ten-strike in service, and making the Plan Book more than ever the one indispensable tool of the exhibitor.

In one spot the exhibitor will now find a complete record of all pictures released during the previous three months; the name of the star, the producer, the release date, the issue of the Complete Plan Book in which the review and exploitation aids appeared, a brief summary of the Motion Picture News review, comments in the exhibitors' own words as received by our Box Office Reports Department, and a "Consensus" grading of all reports received.

All in one spot!

And all in The Complete Plan Book!

This forward stride will be followed in the weeks to come with further improvements in the Box Office Reports Department and The Complete Plan Book. For we know that you know—that—Motion Picture News never stands still!

S. Barret McCormick—Teacher

One of the biggest men in this business told us one day, "If I could get a man like S. Barret McCormick on salary I'd hire him tomorrow just to work with us in helping exhibitors to put over our pictures the way he puts the Circle shows over."

Yet this same manufacturer would probably expect a word of explanation to understand that Motion Picture News actually dominates the exhibitor reading field as we know it does.

There are fifty-seven reasons—more or less. One of them is S. Barret McCormick.

This successful showman is a regular and exclusive contributor to Motion Picture News. And he doesn't write press stuff—but plain, straight-forward lessons in the advertising and presentation of productions. He lays his cards on the table—for the benefit of all News readers.

This week appears the second article of a new McCormick series. It is called "At the Zero Hour"—the moment when a manager or advertising man goes "over the top" to consider his next bill.

You'll find it on page 3065.

And as we said before—McCormick is just one of the reasons.

Dealing in Personalities

When we had the cut made for this likeness of Watterson Rothacker we had intended heading this column with the word "Lost or Strayed."

For all our best sleuths had reported to us since Monday that the debonair Chicagoan was in New York—and yet he hadn't been seen in Motion Picture News office.

Which was not according to either law or tradition.

But on Wednesday he made his appearance. So we won't have to offer a "Reward and No Questions Asked."

But having made the cut we must use it. And use it to tell you that alongside of this thin column of type is the face of the one man in America who is happier than either Harry Schwalle or J. D. Williams over the signing of Mary Pickford by First National.

That man is Watterson R. Rothacker.

And he's celebrating because he is going to do the laboratory work on the new Pickford subjects.

We are not celebrating. We foresee all the columns of space we will have to use up publishing letters of commendation received by Watterson R. with each succeeding release.

Louis Mayer deserves a word of mention here now that the war is over and most producers with war subjects on their hands are losing sleep worrying over them.

When Mr. Mayer got Anita Stewart's signature to the dotted line of a contract he was bombarded with war subjects by every playwright, novelist and scenario writer who had a typewriter.

But Louis is a clever showman. He had made a few clean-ups on war pictures, but when he started to pick a production in which to put his own money and time he chose "Virtuous Wives," "Old Kentucky," and a string of always sure-fire subjects like that.

And now he's laughing up his sleeve.
Williams Replies to Quinn Letter

[Editor's Note—In the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, dated November 16, was published an article which J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles, read at a recent meeting of the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association. The theatre owners endorsed every word in the article in every emphatic measure, and adopted a resolution pledging Mr. Quinn full support in his plan for betterment of conditions now existing.

The whole industry read the article, but J. D. Williams, of First National, was first to come under the writer with a reply. As he wrote his letter immediately after arranging with Mary Pickford for the release of the latter's future productions, Mr. Williams finds opportunity to speak a word for the well-known star.

Incidentally, Mr. Williams takes occasion to say a good word for Mr. Quinn in many respects, admitting that the latter's arguments are convincing and adding that more moral courage of the Quinn type would be a boon to the exhibitors and the industry.

Editor, Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

YOUR editorial preface to the straight-from-the-shoulder statement by Mr. J. A. Quinn in your issue of November 16 is a challenge to the industry to disprove his charges of incompetency or to admit that he is right.

Mr. Quinn makes a sweeping accusation against manufacturers. And he gives it force by hitting straight and hard. He makes a convincing argument because he is specific. Generalities mean nothing when criticism is intended. More moral courage of the Quinn type would be a boon to the exhibitors and the industry.

Mr. Quinn declares that "what the business needs is a 'doctor'—quick."

This is written on Tuesday. Since Saturday afternoon I have met and talked casually with three of the industry's most prominent producers. Each of them expressed the following general opinion on Miss Pickford's contract with our organization:

"What's the idea of Miss Pickford paying $40,000 for the rights to the story of 'Daddy Long Legs,' and the same sum for 'Pollyanna'?" She does not need big, high priced stories of that kind. Her popularity is great enough to get the public in to see her in stories that would cost a whole lot less. She is going to waste a lot of money foolishly that way.

Would Mr. Quinn or any other exhibitor take any pride in presenting Miss Pickford to their patrons in a production cheapened by an inferior story? Would Miss Pickford's popularity grow? Do people pay just to see Miss Pickford on the screen, or do they give her such phenomenal tribute in memory of "Ten of the Storm Country," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Stella Maris," constantly hoping that the newest and latest Pickford offering will be on a par in quality with those released.

The answer is obvious—to exhibitors, at least.

Mr. Quinn speaks as an exhibitor when he challenges George Kleine's statement that of 1,300 features released in 1917, 1,000 were good ones by the reduction of that number to approximately 100. I agree with Mr. Quinn.

The internal conditions responsible for such an appalling record have got to be remedied. And straight-from-the-shoulder criticisms and discussions are the most certain means of shaming those responsible into a corrective policy or out of the industry entirely.

History is repeating itself in this industry, despite the fact that its progress has been rapid and consequently difficult to keep pace with.

Let's go back for a moment to the heyday of the old Biograph Company. Every exhibitor knew the Biograph standard and the box-office value of Biograph productions. The word Biograph spelled capacity business for practically every theatre. Today Biograph is a memory. Why? Five or six commercial parasites, tumbled by a combination of fortunate circumstances into executive control of the distribution of the work of real talent, made it a club with which to pound exhibitors into supporting associated output of lesser quality. Exhibitors could easily be afforded to pay five or six times as much as Mr. Quinn did and pay in those days for Biograph productions, but—they didn't.

Biograph productions cost more money to make than other releases on the same program. They featured capable, popular players. The stories were good. The direction was of the best. But Biograph did not get rental prices five or six times as great as the inferior releases of other producers distributing through the same exchanges.

If Biograph had received what it was properly entitled to by merit and the exhibitor value of its output, Mr. D. W. Griffith would undoubtedly be the directing genius of its organization today and the name Biograph would lead the industry in quality and box-office popularity.

I intend no affront to any individual in this connection. Some of the producers of those days are my friends and probably if I had been in their positions then I would have done very much as they did. It is merely a question of method.

And there are exact parallels today for the Biograph situation of five, or six years ago. And today, as then, it is a question of method that is the fundamental error in the correlation of the three prime elements of the industry.

The position of a big star on a program today is relatively the same as was the position of Biograph productions on a program in the Biograph time. The star's productions stand out as beacon lights to exhibitors. But beware of the hidden shoals and the jagged rocks of disaster in the guise of "regular releases" surrounding the work of any big star. A manufacturer with a program franchise signs a contract with a star. Six or eight productions a year are agreed upon. Exhibitors are told about the wonderful box-office value of the star. His or her contract is described as further evidence to exhibitors that the foundation of the producing or distributing company is laid on the ground of quality.

Exhibitors know, much better than the manufacturers, what stars are popular and profitable. They send in their applications for themselves. The manufacturer is elated at prospects. Why not pyramid the chance for a moderate profit? The way is simple. Contracts with three, five or seven or more second, third and fourth rate stars. Exhibitors are "clamoring" for the big star's productions. Make him take the releases of the others as a condition of his contract. Result, the manufacturer dreams of a theoretical profit from the release of "one-a-week" instead of "three-a-year."

And, as Mr. Quinn aptly charges, the exhibitors pay.

Does the producer, under such an arrangement, get as much for the productions of the big star as they deserve in the proportion of their merits to the merits of the releases of the small stars? He does not, and he cannot. And the result is that he is unable to pay the big star what he or she is rightly entitled to. It is a method that is a three-sided boomerang. The star does not enjoy a remuneration in keeping with his or her actual box-office earning power. The producer works an injustice to the star, to himself, to all of his releases and to the exhibitor. The exhibitor is forced to book and pay rental for productions he does not want and cannot show to a profit to support the manufacturer's effort at monopoly.

Mr. Quinn says of Miss Pickford: "She is on top of the ladder and draws the people because she has the ART and PERSONALITY and ABILITY to deliver the goods." Mr. Quinn and every other exhibitor whose backbone is his greatest asset will perhaps be interested to know something of Miss Pickford's confidence in the policy of quality with its consequent elimination of waste, extravagance and exhibitor burden.
Country Notes Reopening Progress

Estimated That More Than Eighty Per Cent of Theatres Are Again Open—St. Paul and Minneapolis Still Closed— Merchants Register Kicks

STEADY improvement in the influenza situation was noted the past week throughout the country, many additional reopenings being reported through the special service which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has maintained for the benefit of keeping the industry well informed.

At last reports it was estimated that more than eighty per cent of the nation's motion picture theatres which had been closed because of the epidemic, have reopened and that exhibitors are most optimistic over the prospects of future business. St. Paul and Minneapolis have secured the limelight by closing at a time when other places were reopening. It is expected November 24 will see the end of the Minneapolis ban.

The most cheerful reports come from the West, where the majority of theatres are open. Los Angeles expects to reopen November 21.

Dayton Fans Fail to Respond Loyally

The Dayton, Ohio, representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS wires that business in the Dayton motion picture theatres has fallen down considerably since the influenza ban was lifted on November 2. Two probable reasons set forth are that some people are still afraid to come out where the crowds assemble, and that parents with children under sixteen years of age do not attend the shows because the theatres will not admit the youngsters.

The Strand theatre offered an exceptional bill in "The Marriage Ring" as the main attraction.

All of the Dayton theatres have undergone a change since they were closed.

Buffalo Recovers and Forges Ahead

With all theatres in full swing again, Buffalo, N. Y., local managers this week are lending their aid to putting Buffalo quota in the United War Work campaign over the top. Thursday evening all the neighborhood houses will give 25 per cent of their receipts to the fund and Sunday evening all the downtown houses will give 30 per cent of their receipts. With a general admission of $1 to any theatre. Houses cooperating in this stunt are the Teck, Star, Majestic, Gayety, Shea's, Academy, Olympic, Garden and Lyric. Coupons are printed in the local papers which are exchanged at the box office for tickets. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, is manager of the features bureau of the campaign and has staged an attractive setting at Lafayette square.

Exhibitors Peeved at Health Officials

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—In its fifth week of motion picture "darkness" Minneapolis is showing signs of anger towards health authorities. Some exhibitors feel that Dr. Guilford, who has handled the dictatorial end of the closing, has been playing with them.

For two weeks past Minneapolis' influenza conditions have been such that the ban could have been lifted without fear of the malady getting a fresh start toward hazardous ends. Doctors have stated as much and public officials have verified the authenticity of such statements.

At one meeting of health officials and theatre men, church men and others, Dr. Guilford said that theatres might open at their pleasure should they provide each patron with a mask.

With the closing of St. Paul theatres November 5 Dr. Guilford stated that Minneapolis' ban would not be lifted for at least two weeks because, he stated, that he feared "St. Paulites might carry influenza back to Minneapolis." St. Paul and state health authorities are not of that opinion.

Minneapolis exhibitors are hopeful that they may open their doors about November 17 but it appears that November 24 might be a better guess as to the time.

Ban Lifts on Whole of Pennsylvania

HARRISBURG, PA.—The influenza ban has been lifted from the theatres in practically the whole of Pennsylvania, the restrictions on November 9 having been ordered by State Health Commissioner Royer, but the ban is to be removed from the last of the 64 counties, Franklin, the order having become effective there last Saturday, November 9. The theatres still under restrictions in the state are a few in isolated sections of certain counties where the epidemic has lingered a little longer than in the state as a whole.

Saturday, November 9, the theatres of Pittsburgh were released from quarantine, but thirty-seven theatre owners of that city are confronted with charges of having violated the state order for having opened their houses in advance of that set by the health commissioner's official sanction. The managers acted on the proclamation of Mayor Babcock, who encouraged the reopening of both theatres and saloons in Pittsburgh, on the contention that the danger from the epidemic had passed before the date set by Dr. Royer for removing the restrictions. This attitude of the mayor resulted in Dr. Royer sending a corps of agents to gather evidence against the picture houses, with the result that arrests followed. After the arrests there was no further trouble in Pittsburgh, the rest of the theatres waiting to reopen until the day set by the state authorities.

Section Reports

OGDEN, UTAH.—The influenza situation is improving and the ban may be lifted on November 18, reopening the theatres.

BUTTE, MONT.—The ban was lifted in Anaconda November 13, following the reopenings in Butte by five days. Theatres in Butte were closed October 26. It is said by health authorities there is no further danger from the epidemic in Butte. All theatres are doing exceptional business, and exhibitors are satisfied. Other Montana and Northwestern towns were expected to follow in the footsteps of Butte, as the epidemic is said to be under control.

CLEVELAND, O.—Cleveland theatres opened Monday evening, November 11. Fifty per cent of Ohio houses have reopened. Cleveland exhibitors report big business since the passing of the influenza.

CINCINNATI, O.—Motion picture theatres of Cincinnati reopened November 12, the ban having been fully removed.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The influenza epidemic has abated here, but health officials up to November 13 had not decided upon the date of reopening for theatres. The prospect was that with continued progress towards stamping out the epidemic the order for reopenings would be given to be effective about November 23.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The situation here is much improved. Official action on reopening the theatres was to be taken (Continued on page 3047)
Close-ups of the Week's Events

The limelight of the industry gleamed upon Pittsburgh exhibitors last week, insofar as the influenza situation is concerned. It appears the Mayor of the Smoky City encouraged the reopening of the theatres on the contention that the danger of the epidemic had passed. But this was before the date set by the State Health Commissioner, who ruled that the houses could reopen November 9. Listening to the Pittsburgh Mayor, thirty-seven exhibitors opened their picture palaces before November 9—and have been confronted with charges of having violated the State order. It is said the city of Lancaster was also lax in observing the order, but that exhibitors were very cautious and kept out of trouble.

Nearly the whole of Pennsylvania is "open" now.

Exhibitors of North America have been so "wrapped up" in their own troubles incident to the influenza closings that they have not had time to wonder if anyone but themselves suffered. Reports indicate that theatres of Brazil and many other countries of South America were closed on account of the epidemic. But the chap who said that "Misery loves company" may be mistaken in this case, as exhibitors in general declare the closing period has done much good to the exhibiting business. No kicks have been registered.

The "brotherly love" which has always been in evidence at St. Paul and Minneapolis is again active, being revived on the eve of peace. St. Paul propped for a time in the epidemic crisis at the expense of her neighbor, and was then closed tight. This brought forth word from Minneapolis that the latter's theatres would remain closed for at least two additional weeks, as it was feared St. Paul inhabitants would import germs to Minneapolis.

They're at it again.

Observing personages within the industry have noted that the independent producers are planting pictures solidly on Broadway as a result of the influenza. And, judging by the box office reports, the fans like the films immensely. "The Woman in the German Shirt," which Select has secured, is one of them. "A Romance of the Air" was at the Rivoli. The Rialto had "A Woman's Experience." At the Strand was "Little Women," a Brady picture. "Marriage" played the Broadway. "Lafayette We Come" was also in evidence.

The merchants of the country have been awakened to the fact that motion picture theatres are necessary to their business. From all sides the shopkeepers are registering kicks at the enforced closing of the theatres, claiming that without motion pictures they have practically no trade. Which appears, on the surface, that the time is ripe to encourage cooperation between the merchants and exhibitors.

Section Reports

Thursday night, November 14. On good authority it was stated the theatres would be permitted to reopen on November 23.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The picture theatres and churches planned big programs in celebration of their reopening Sunday, November 17.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The ban in Seattle was lifted Tuesday, November 12, and all motion picture theatres are open. Patrons must wear masks in all houses and when shopping in the stores.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—The ban on theatres, schools and churches here was to be raised November 17.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The theatres here have been rejoicing at reopening November 16. All motion picture houses have booked excellent attractions in anticipation of big business.

Influenza Hits Yakima Employees

The epidemic of influenza, which resulted in closing practically every theatre in the United States, has been particularly a blow to the Mercy Amusement Company, Inc., of Yakima, Wash., which operated three theatres in that city.

Three employees of the company have died either from influenza or from pneumonia resulting. The first of the three to succumb was Frank Read, for four years drummer in the Empire theatre orchestra, and who died October 26 of pneumonia. Walter E. Jordan, property master for two and a half years at the Empire, died of influenza October 29. Mrs. Jordan, wife of Walter E., died of the same disease two days following the death of her husband, leaving a four-year-old son. Fergus D. Shaw, for three years projection operator for the company, but who for the past two months in military service, stationed at Pullman, Wash., where he was an instructor in the radio corps, died of influenza at Pullman October 27.

Besides losing three valued employees, the three theatres of the Mercy Amusement Company have been closed since October 9. Prospects are, however, that the ban will be lifted in another week.

Los Angeles Hopes to Open November 21

A wire from Los Angeles on November 13 stated that Los Angeles exhibitors believe the Board of Health will permit theatres which closed October 11 to reopen November 21. A petition asking the closing of all business places or the reopening of the theatres has been filed with the City Council. It included the names of many ministers, officers of labor unions and all exhibitors and managers of other theatres. The hearing was set for November 14.

Edel Buried in Buffalo
BUFFALO, N. Y.—Harold Edel, former manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, and the Strand, New York, was laid to rest in the Mitchel H. Mark mausoleum in Forest Lawn. Many local friends attended the ceremonies, the arrangements being in charge of Moe Mark, Mr. Edel's uncle. Mr. Edel is mourned by a wide circle of theatrical men in Western New York.
Weber Directs

Productions to Be Made at Studio in Hollywood—First National Will Do Releasing—Work at Once

With the reshaping of motion picture events on the West Coast, which included the marriage of Charles Chaplin and Mildred Harris and the reported withdrawal of the latter from Universal, came the definite statement to Motion Picture News on Nov. 13 that Lois Weber will direct the Anita Stewart productions. Miss Weber formerly directed Mildred Harris, and it is presumed that the latter's marriage to the screen comedian changed her motion picture future considerably, in so far as engagements are concerned.

Lois Weber is probably the best known among women directors, and her acquisition by the Stewart organization has been the cue for numerous messages of congratulations to the Mayer forces. To a representative of Motion Picture News in Los Angeles it was made known that the new producing arrangements will not change the method of distribution of the Anita Stewart productions. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been handling these features, the most recent being "Virtuous Wives," and will continue to release them. The studio staff will also remain as formerly, it is announced.

Plans for the immediate future call for production work at Hollywood, which city Miss Stewart is expected to reach this week. Upon her arrival it is presumed that work will be started immediately and that no time will be lost in putting the first of the Weber-Stewart features through the camera.

Among the productions which Lois Weber made for Universal are "Borrowed Clothes," "Forbidden" and "There's No Place Like Home," all starring Mildred Harris. Regarding the future business plans of the latter no statement has been made.

In regard to "Virtuous Wives," the most recent Stewart picture, Louis B. Mayer said: "It is a story that will have a direct, intimate appeal for every girl and woman in the United States. It will be available through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

It is understood that the Mayer organization confidently expects Miss Stewart's productions to have an even greater appeal with Lois Weber at the helm of the directorial end. The new name is well known among the fans of the country, who have come to know her productions for the skilful direction with which they were made. In Miss Stewart she has a star whose popularity can be made even greater than it has been, in the opinion of many of the industry.

"Under Four Flags" Will Have Official Showing

Official showings of "Under Four Flags," the third U. S. Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, are announced for seven cities outside of New York, where the latest Government war film will be made known at the Rialto and Rivoli during the week opening November 17th. All the official bookings are for a week.

In Washington "Under Four Flags" will have the spotlight attraction at the Harry M. Crandall's new Metropolitan theatre, which opens its doors Saturday evening, November 23rd. The Metropolitan will be one of the handsomest cinema houses in the United States.

Indianapolis will see the new picture at the Circle theatre during the week beginning November 24th. The Walnut theatre, Cincinnati, will have the official showing during the week of December 1st. Three cities will see "Under Four Flags" during the week of December 8th. In Kansas City it will be shown at the Liberty theatre, a new house; in Dayton, O., it will be seen at the Strand theatre, and in St. Louis at the Odeon.

St. Louis exhibitors favor the Odeon on account of the competition which the public will receive before being released for the regular picture houses, and are said to be cooperating to make the engagement a success.

The official showing in Philadelphia will be at the Stanley, which has booked the picture for the week of December 16th.

Universal Men Banquet at Kansas City

A banquet was tendered to L. B. Douglas, manager of the Kansas City Universal office, on Saturday, November 24th. This was an anniversary of his birthday.

The dinner was attended by all employees of the exchanges, including Messrs. Siren, Pearson, Lozier, Recob, Kelly, Abramz, Lusk, Stillwell, Glemon, Jones, Dodson, Queido, Cass, Hill, Moyer, and Misses McLea- don, Freeman, Lish, Wellwarding, Helm, Bolton, Cooper, Ludwig, Bladen and Scott, and Mrs. Crisian, Mrs. Lynch and Mrs. Mossman.

A handsome diamond scarf pin was presented him, and the affair wound up in the wee hours of the morning. Mr. Stern acted as toastmaster, and speeches were made by Mr. Pearson, Mr. Hinton, Mr. Jones and Mr. Dodson.

Statues Help "Under Four Flags"

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has adopted as the pictorial background for its publicity for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, which gets its first Government showing at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, in New York City, Sunday evening, Nov. 17, the military group which has adorned the up-town front of the "Flatiron" Building, at Twenty-third street and Broadway, for several months. It is called "The Allies," and the four heroic figures represent the fighting men of America, France, Great Britain and Italy.

United War Work Team Is Aggressive

The members of the Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Team of the United War Work Campaign, of which William Fox is chairman and George M. Cohan associate chairman, has been announced from headquarters of the committee, 110 West Forty-second Street.

Men prominent in the theatrical and motion picture world volunteered to give their unqualified attention for the drive, which commenced November 11th to 18th inclusive, and make every effort to oversubscribe the allotment made by the Executive Committee in charge of the Nation.

She told us, before starting for Los Angeles on Sunday, that she and Douglas and scenario writers in mind from which to make the final choice before starting work on her first release through our exchanges. She named them and they were borrowed by the top-notchers. She named several plays and books is considers for adaptation to the screen, as they are among the biggest and best in the history of literature and the stage.

The three producers mentioned above questioned her policy of protecting herself and exhibitors by insuring quality from both star, story and direction. She knows that her popularity is dependent upon what she does, and what she produces. She knows that the public would not continue to lavish its patronage upon her if the quality of her product was not in keeping with her ability and standing. And she is certain to intensify her popularity in exact proportion to the increase in the appeal and entertainment value of her releases.

The bulk of trouble in our business lies with the producers. They have to consider many factors, including producers a combination of star, story and direction. They know that lack of vision, business ability and confidence in their own judgment. They want tremendous profits quickly. They overlook the fact that they lose our confidence when they go on business purports who combine luck and chance in a gambler, instead of going along practical and obvious lines. They get a star and exploit him or her to the extent of their conception. And if it costs more than a couple of thousands of dollars to make the production cost would be too great. The public is disappointed and votes its disapproval on the exhibitor. And the producer declares that the business is going to the devil.

This great fault will be corrected by exhibitors, if it is corrected at all. The para ticke producers will continue to throw mediocre stuff at exhibitors as long as they will book it. They have proven that they cannot measure up to the box-office standards for a producer. They will give us the wrong song, wasting our money, because those opinions and ideas without the least thought, regulated, or study at all. And exhibitors will continue to pay the freight until.

A story by J. A. Quinn's of the business get together and say, "This is my real job. This is the work of this bunk. These swivel-chair producers are going to stop playing and get down to business or expire. And unless these people are going to hold them up to ridicule and give them the chance to earn the money that the public are are wrong. We are going to give our patronage to the stars and producers who know more that we can get the show that we want and refuse to pay premiums in booking what we don't want to see.

"We are going to play the big star quality picture for longer, and he has more money for us by more intensive to the public to the methods and give us carriage. We are encouraging we can to those who see that quantity is slowly killing us and are going to restore us to the good graces of the public by thinking only in terms of quality."
Milwaukee Plans New Motion Picture Theatre

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—Milwaukee is to have a new 3,000 seat photoplay theatre to be erected immediately after the removal of the present bar against building, if plans now under consideration are carried out. This theatre, which is to be erected on the present site of the Schlitz Palm Garden, Third street and Grand avenue, is being planned by outside photoplay interests who have already made several minor investments in local theatrical enterprises. But one Milwaukee man is interested in this project.

The location for the new house is an ideal one as the corner is in the very heart of Milwaukee and more people pass this corner than any other in Milwaukee. All that remained in the way of completing this deal is the actual closing of the lease for the property. Details of the transaction have been fully completed, it is said, but the actual signing is being delayed until peace has been completely negotiated.

A scale of prices ranging from 15 cents to 50 cents will be in effect for the productions, and elaborate programs will be presented. Under this scale, it is planned to have 1,500 seats at 15 cents, the balance ranging upward to 50 cents, making it possible to care for that large class of people who refuse to pay more than 15 cents for photoplays and at the same time affording splendid accommodations for the higher priced patronage.

"Your Fighting Navy" to Be Exploited Big

"Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," the Educational Film Corporation's multiple-reeler of Uncle Sam's sea fighters, will come into added prominence as the result of the great events of the last fortnight, Educational believes. The Navy that took the visitor to Europe will now return to bring them back. The warfare against the deadly mine and submarine is succeeded by the policing of the northern European waters and due measures to cope with any sinister designs of the Bolshevik fleet. In the final peace settlement the great role of guarding the seas in behalf of the League of Nations is to be shared by the navies of America, Great Britain, France and Italy.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, says: "We regard the signing of the German armistice as imparting increased value to our Navy picture. Millions of Americans, including the kinsfolk of the three-quarters of a million sea fighters are curious to know what the Navy has done and is doing. This curiosity has been whetted by Secretary Daniels' and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt's partial revelations of its recent amazing activities. As a nation of seamen who value naval experts, I make the prediction that the Navy will play a large and perhaps a predominant role in the final settlement of world affairs."

ONE FOR THE IMITATORS!

Industry Looks for Busy License Bureau If Chaplin Stunt Is Given Wide Vogue

IMITATORS of Charles Chaplin, who on special occasions inserts the title of "Spencer" to separate the given and surname, have been given a chance to prove to what extent their imitations go, if the news that emanates from Los Angeles is correct.

It is asserted that the screen comedian and Mildred Harris were married October 23 at the home of the Los Angeles County Clerk, R. S. Sparks. The alleged secret marriage first was to be known within the industry have been trying to ascertain the truthfulness of the report ever since. At last reports it was said the County Clerk modestly admitted he had been asked to perform the act, and attributed the request to Chaplin, the honeymooners threatened to go to Santa Anna or some other place unless the clerk promised to seal his lips, and everybody knows that would have took Los Angeles off the map almost entirely. So County Clerk, faithful to the Capital of the motion picture industry and to its much imitated comedian, agreed to silence.

Then followed the news that Lois Weber will no longer direct Miss Harris and that the latter's future is "indefinite."

Anyway, there's no law against Cupid demanding unconditional surrender, even while the studios are trying to rest up from overwork.

National Association Meeting

Regular Quarterly Meeting of Directors of National Association of Motion Picture Industry Held November 14

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry was held at the rooms of the association, 806 Times Building, 11 o'clock, Thursday morning, November 14th.

Numerous important matters were on the calendar for discussion and action at this meeting. The Washington situation was carefully gone over in every detail, especially the recent action of the Senate Finance Committee in amending the War Revenue Tax Bill.

Another important matter scheduled for action is the organization of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. At the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association in Chicago it was decided that the two national exhibitor organizations should merge into one body to be called the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. Since the Chicago meeting nothing had been done pending the arrival of Peter J. Schaefer, the president of the merged organization, in New York.

It is also very probable that the Board will have a delegation of its members to attend the annual meeting and convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, of which the Association is a member, to be held at Atlantic City, December 4th, 5th and 6th. This is a very important convention, as the question of world trade after the war will be discussed in all its details.

The part that the motion picture will play in the reconstruction period after the war is naturally very large, and it is expected that the delegation from the association will take an active part in the deliberations of the convention.

Another subject brought up for discussion was the question of inaugurating a campaign for Sunday opening of motion picture theatres throughout the United States, preliminary details for a campaign of this description are now in the course of preparation, and it merely requires the action of the board of directors to put them into effect.

Advertisers Plan to Welcome Soldiers

At the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's, the first steps were taken toward a fitting celebration of the return of those members now in the military and naval service of the country, several of whom have been participating in the fighting on the Western front. To that end, a committee was appointed by President P. A. Parsons, consisting of Paul Lazarus, Bert Adler and Julian Solomon. The weekly addresses, which proved such an enjoyable and instructive feature of last winter's sessions, will shortly be resumed, and at Thursday's meeting, Arthur James, Julian Solomon and Nat Rothstein were named the speakers' committee for the ensuing year.

The sympathy of the association was extended by resolution to Phillip K. Mindil, whose only son has been reported killed in action in France. Mr. Mindil was connected with the film industry for many years and numbers many of the members of the association among his friends.

Minnesota Rejoices at Booze Report

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Exhibitors, a majority of them, are pleased with the outcome of the recent voting on state-wide prohibition. Latest returns show the "drys" to be in the lead by apparently safe margin and theatre men are of the opinion that the dry state will mean more business for the theatres. Hence influential theatres, open during the campaign period, supported the "dry" amendment to the state constitution.

Many Exhibitors Write Letters of Praise for Services Rendered—Community Section Becomes Very Valuable

"YOUR cooperation is doing an immense amount of good, and I am mightily pleased with the spirit of help obtained through your kindly offices and endeavors."

Thus writes Mr. L. C. Mishler, of the Mishler theatre in Altoona, Pa., expressing appreciation for what the Department of Films, Committee on Public Information, had done for him through his Department of Domestic Distribution. What led up to it was the number of telephone calls and personal visits he had received as a result of the circular letters sent out by the Department’s Community Section in advance of his showing—a form of advance publicity given to every booking now made on the Government war picture, America’s Answer.

The one point insisted on from first to last by the Department of Domestic Distribution is that an opportunity to see "America’s Answer" is owing every man, woman and child in the United States. The picture is no mere diversion. It is an accounting by Uncle Sam of his stewardship in handling the billions of dollars entrusted to him. Moreover, it shows, as no other picture does on the same scale, just how our boys have been living in trench lines; how despite the hardship and grimness of war, is a cheerful and even a laughing matter on transport and train, in "Y" hut, and even just beyond the range of the guns, where Y. M. C. A. helpers and Salvation Army lasses have been distributing doughnuts, chocolate and smokes. It is a fine, big, powerful picture, as well as an intensely human and intimate one, and Uncle Sam intends that no one with the price of the smallest admission shall miss seeing it.

As part of the Department’s plan the Community Section has come into being, initiated and carried on by Clara de Lissa Berg, which endeavors through a systematically planned advertising campaign to stimulate an interest in "America’s Answer" throughout the community, so that it will demand the picture; and which follows the receipt of booking dates with personally addressed letters to heads of industrial concerns, schools, churches, clubs and various organizations, bespeaking their cooperation in making the coming exhibition a success.

When this is done, the manager receives a letter, telling him of the circulation that has taken place and inviting him to suggest other individuals whom he would like addressed, an opportunity that has been gladly taken advantage of by those exhibitors who have been able to open their theatres during the past fortnight.

There follow a few of the many replies to letters sent out by the Community Section, which show how vividly the plan has affected the exhibitors and what practical cooperation and how practically that spirit is transacting itself into action.

Is Appreciated

From Rt. Rev. Richard H. Nelson, bishop of Albany, to the clergy of his diocese: "You will render a service to the great cause in which our country is engaged if you will use your influence to have this picture exhibited in your town." Letters such as these were received from many bishops, and copies of them were sent to clergymen of the dioceses covered.

From Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector of Trinity Church, Covington, Ky.: "I will do all in my power to have the members of my congregation to attend. I have seen the film. It is a wonderful presentation."

As a result of the request made to him by Rev. J. R. Lewis, of Brunswick, Ga., the manager of a picture house in that city agreed to book "America’s Answer," and the same is being done in many cities.

In response to a request made by the Community Section, Mrs. Saunders, president of the Mississauga Women’s Clubs, addressed a letter to all presidents of women’s clubs in her State containing this request: "Will the women of your club ask the picture houses in your communities to show America’s Answer and give them your support by attending the performance?"

Rabbi William H. Greenburg, of Dallas, Texas, writes: "I shall be glad to use my influence in inducing the manager of one or more picture houses to book America’s Answer."

Dr. David R. Corson, assistant superintendent of schools in Newark, N. J., wrote that he would announce a coming exhibition of America’s Answer at a conference of school principals. Mr. Randall J. Condon, superintendent of schools in Cincinnati, wrote as follows to all his school principals: "Will you please ask the houses in your district to arrange to show these pictures and say that without doubt arrangements can be made to allow the children to attend matinee performances."

Mr. H. H. Kenyon, promoter of service of the Y. M. C. A. in Philadelphia, wrote: "We are glad to extend it to you in aid of your advertising America’s Answer. ... If you will give us full details we will endeavor to carry them out to the letter."

Thus is the circle of interest completed, and a 100 per cent showing of the great picture is from every point of view a 100 per cent success.

De Luxe Gets Scarey Dawley as Director for Doris Kenyon

J. Scarey Dawley, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, has signed a contract to direct Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company in De Luxe features. Theodore C. Deitcher, president of Miss Kenyon’s company, has been endeavoring to secure Mr. Dawley’s name to a contract. Mr. Dawley had decided to give up directing and devote all of his time to literary work, and only consented to return to directing with the understanding that he would direct Miss Kenyon exclusively.

"I consider her one of the most remarkably talented and beautiful young women before the public today," explained Mr. Dawley, "and I am satisfied that I will be able to do wonderful work with her."

The first of Miss Kenyon’s pictures to be directed by Mr. Dawley will be "Twilight," a tremendously dramatic production, adapted for the screen by Louis Joseph Vance, and originally written for the Metropolitan Magazine by Vingie E. Roe, and published in the October issue of that widely circulated publication under the title of "The Alchemists of Love." Work on the production will be started at once.

Mr. Dawley has been a motion picture director for twelve years, which was preceded by a stage career of four years’ duration. He has always been particularly successful with romantic directors and directed Marguerite Clark for three years in all of her most successful productions. He also directed Mary Pickford, Billie Burke, Elsie Ferguson, Bertha Kalche, Mary Miles Minter, Mrs. Fiske, and many other celebrated stars of the screen during his long career. In addition to all of this he found time to write eighteen plays for the stage and screen.

"Billy Hart Night" for New York Elks

W. V. Hart, veteran motion picture man, conducted one of his famous "Billy Hart Nights" at the Elks Home, 108 West Forty-third Street, Sunday, November 17th, at which he was the host to film stars and his wide circle of friends. These Billy Hart Nights are periodic affairs at the New York headquarters of the B. P. O. E., and have always attracted a capacity crowd to the auditorium.

All the leading movie heroes and heroines residing in the East are in the habit of attending, to be introduced by Mr. Hart to his friends and brother Elks, according to report, and to make a bow or speech as they may feel inclined, having the social stunt a long- established one at the Elks Home, and each year increases in importance. A program of motion pictures and music accompanies the appearances of the stars. So far, admission has always been complimentary, and by invitation, but this time an admission was charged, the proceeds going to the United War Work campaign.

Proctor Goes to Coast for Pathé

Ralph O. Proctor, who has served as division manager of Pathé through the Central West, with home office in Chicago, has been transferred to the coast and will supervise Pathé’s interests in San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake, and have his headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Proctor went to Los Angeles on a vacation trip, and after spending a few days there sought a transfer which was granted him. While in Los Angeles Mr. Proctor was the guest of Bryant Washburn, star of Paramount.
Brunet Answers International

Declares Pathe News Film Is Not Discontinued and Was Never Known as Hearst International News

"THE Pathe News was never known as the 'Hearst International News.' It has always been identified with the name of Pathe since its inception over ten years ago, and it always will be!" This is the keynote of a statement by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in reply to the announcement printed in several trade magazines, of last week, which read in part as follows: "After December 24, the date on which the contract between the International Film Service and the Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the Hearst-Pathe News expires, the name of Pathe will be eliminated from this famous reel, and it will resume the original name of the 'Hearst International News.'"

"To clear up any misconception that may exist as the result of this statement of the International," said Mr. Brunet, "it may well be to give a brief résumé of the history of the Pathe News, which for the last twenty-three months has been united with the International's news film, the combination being known as the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' The first news film to be devised, assembled and released was the Pathe Journal in France some twelve years ago. The innovation proved to be so successful that the Pathe organization in this country, about ten years ago, started a similar news film, released weekly in one reel, called the Pathe Weekly. Four years ago, in the spring of 1914, to be exact, it was changed to a daily short reel of 200 or 300 feet, and the name became the Pathe News. As the Pathe News it continued until January 1, 1916, when by terms of a contract entered into with International Film Service, Inc., the name of Hearst was added, and it was called the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' But though the Hearst name was added, the Pathe News remained the sole property of Pathe, controlled, published, edited and distributed by Pathe. For reasons deemed good and sufficient by those originally drawn for the period of two years, the name will expire on December 24, and which will expire on December 24, has not been renewed.

"The International statement refers to the Hearst-Pathe News as 'this famous news reel.' The Pathe News has been famous since its inception over ten years ago, and the best evidence of its fame is the fact that during the past two years it has survived with flying colors the criticisms and censure directed against it as the result of the popular misconception of the reason for the joinder of the name Hearst with that of Pathe.

"I positively and unqualifiedly deny that the Pathe News, soon to resume its old name and the one under which it became famous, was ever known as the 'Hearst International News,' as has been intimated recently in advertisements appearing in certain news and trade papers.

"I positively and unqualifiedly state that the Pathe News of December 24 and after will be the same famous weekly that thousands of exhibitors have known, shown and admired in past years."

Pioneer Releases "Prodigal Wife" Film

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces that it will release "The Prodigal Wife," which was made by the SereenCraft Company under the personal direction of Frank Reicher.

"The Prodigal Wife" stars Mary Boan, and the supporting cast includes Lucy Cotton, who has made a name for herself in many recent Broadway productions. The story is an adaptation of "Flaming Ramps," by Edith Barnard Delano, which appeared in Harper's Magazine. It is an absorbing tale of mother love, a story that is sure to hold the interest of all those who see it and furnish entertainment of a very high quality.

Following the release of "The Prodigal Wife," the Pioneer Company will place on the market a feature starring Mollie King, which is now in the making but which has not been named as yet.

"Wives of Men," starring Florence Reed, which the company also released, has been booked for a week's run at all of the Poli theatres in New England.

Smith Gives Bills to Employees

There was a unique celebration of the signing of the war's armistice at the Vita-
Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Editor,
The Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnston,—

The Government at Washington, it seems to me, ought to take notice of the conservation measures you have placed at the hands of the motion picture industry. I refer to the service department you are conducting in The News under the title of The Complete Plan Book. This department, if properly employed by all the producers, should be made the means of saving tons of paper and an ocean of human effort every week.

I have been watching the department closely for several issues, and I have noticed the fine endorsement you have received in general terms from the various leaders of filmdom. The pages of the plan book have been uniformly perfect and efficient. The comments of acceptance have been thoroughly deserved.

But it seems to me producers and exhibitors have yet a specific action to take in order to adequately apply those pages.

I believe the Complete Plan Book should be adopted by producers and exhibitors as an absolute substitute for the reams and stacks of printed material that is ordinarily sent out by the producers individually and watched by the exhibitors. The respective pages the Book devotes each week to discussion of advance films are all the exhibitors need to guide them. Why not let these pages suffice? Why not cease burdening the mails with rafts of special material from each company?

If the industry were to focus on your department an infinite amount of time, material and energy would be saved. The exhibitors, I am sure, judging from interviews I have had, would welcome the change. It is a fact that ninety-nine per cent of the producers' publicity is thrown in the waste basket. To save that material and use it even in the most limited way would require a force of book-keepers at each theatre. Besides that, the same is the case with motion picture editors of the newspapers throughout the country. They get such great quantities of material and at so early a date that it does not warrant their keeping the same. I am in a position to state that they eventually refer to The Motion Picture News for whatever information they seek.

It is utterly impossible for the film man to keep files and records of all that literature. But if your plan were accepted universally as the standard and single service medium of its kind, the exhibitors could keep the weekly issues filed easily, and would find tremendous advantage in using them from time to time.

The producers up to now, it seems to me, have been running a race to see who could produce the most elaborate press sheets in the greatest number.

A producer came to me recently and asked what I thought of the publicity material I received from his company. I told him I was doing with it just precisely what I did with the material from other companies. "I throw it in the waste basket," I said. He then asked me, "Well, why not send me some of the stuff you get from other companies, so that I may be guided in improving my service?" I was glad to oblige him.

I judged that he might abandon some of his own overplus of literature and also avoid the mistakes of the others. But I regret to say that just the opposite took place. This producer immediately increased his output and tried to outshine his competitors by issuing still more elaborate press sheets.

There is no doubt still room for improvement in your department but as it stands, the Complete Plan Book is the nearest approach to real service that exists in the field.

Permit me to thank you for the refreshing ideas contained therein, and allow me to compliment you for usual progressiveness.

Sincerely,

M. KASHIN
What Style of Advertising?

There Can Be No Set "Rules," for It All Depends upon Many Local Conditions

IN advertising, conditions govern. There are no such things as hard and fast rules and when some of the self-styled experts try to tell you that there are you will save time by moving on down the street. Advertising in motion pictures depends even more than any other on conditions. Of course there are plenty of things to avoid doing, but we ourselves haven't the nerve to get out in the open and tell you just what to do all the time.

We make this observation because we have received a question from an exhibitor in a large city who has not been a consistent advertiser asking what style of advertising we would advise him to adopt. We believe that there are interesting points to the general exhibiting public here and since the city that we wanted to discuss next has not reopened its theatres and there is no picture advertising appearing in the papers, we will give you the generalities of the answer here.

Specifically, the exhibitor asks whether he should adopt the line-drawing style of display or the half-tone with a combination of type, or the black and white effect. Now on the opposite page we have illustrated several different sorts of these displays, all of which have been drawn especially for the theatres except that of the Orpheum, Cleveland, which has used one of the "westernized" cuts by Universal for the main effect.

In the first place much depends on your newspaper. It is unfortunate that there are comparatively few that get good printing effects out of the half-tone and black and white effects. The Rochester newspapers do and therefore the displays of both the Strand and the Echkel theatres of that city run largely to these effects. If you do not get good printing these should be avoided, for nothing looks worse than smeared effects. It's a good idea to experiment with this if you like this sort of effect. As a matter of fact, if you have real influence with your newspapers you can improve upon the appearance of this class of advertisements by having the stereotype "underlay" them.

It is for this reason that many of the exhibitors have dropped the style and have gone to the drawn style of display.

Now there is one thing to avoid in the black and white and half-tone style of advertising. You can rarely use small type of script matter and get away with it. Now take the case of the Strand theatre display. Now, although the original display is thirteen inches across four columns, the script matter opposite the cut of the star can be read only with a great deal of eye strain. Always avoid the use of small script on black. It is confusing at the best and with such a background there is no contrast unless the wide style of letters is used.

Echkel theatre used a quarter of a page and adopts a combination of the half-tone effect and type. It makes a distinctive display by having the name of the theatre partly hidden by the trees in the background, but at the same time it interferes somewhat with making William Farnum and his horse stand out.

We much prefer the combination of the cut and the type advertisement when you have a good deal to say about pictures. The black and white half-tone, when there are a number of pictures mentioned, somehow nearly always seems to result in confusion.

Now turn to the displays of the Sun and the Muse theatres, both of Omaha. They show up much better than they did in the newspaper because one of the leading theatres ward the same hand-drawn effect and none of them stood out as distinctive.

That leads us into another point: A theatre has to be governed considerably by the general style of advertising that the other theatres are using. Especially designed advertising is obviously employed to make the displays stand out as distinctive. Yellow may be your favorite color, but you would hardly paint your house that color if all the others on the same block were yellow. We have noted that in more than one city the general advertising runs to one type and stays that way.

If your newspapers make a practice of jamming all the theatre advertising together in one corner of the page and most of the other theatres are using either the type or the half-tone combination we would earnestly recommend the hand-drawn, or sketched effect. That is the policy followed by Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The newspapers charge such a high rate that the use in all of them of really big space is out of the question. The result is that all of the theatres use small space and these masses of type are jammed together.

Franklin soon saw that and decided to get in the expense of having hand designed displays and generally uses a little more space than everyone else. The result of the contrast is that the displays of the Hippodrome stand out as the dominant thing on the page.

Right here let us make another observation. If the habit in your city is to use small space and the others are not doing the same thing you can always get a better showing by using the hand-drawn effect— as light as possible. Note the display of the Muse theatre.

Here is another point: You are going to have a mighty good artist to get away with this. Why, some of the drawings of stars sent out by the producers as alleged displays are almost comic sketches, so unlike the players are they.

There remains a third style of this character of advertising, and the best of it is represented by the display of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta. Nine inches, three columns is the space. Now this is what is known as combination work, line work and half-tone. It is the most expensive sort of engraving, but it is hard to find one that is more effective. You will find some of the best advertisers like the Standard theatre, Cleveland, generally using this form.

Plenty of white space is essential to this style of advertising and we really believe that it is the most effective of all where you are liberal with your space. Naturally the style of the line work depends on the character of the picture. We consider the specimen here as the ideal because it is placed in perfect keeping with the beautiful picture of Miss Young. To have used a heavy effect here would have been to spoil the appeal. For a different sort of picture we would use the heavy effect.

Space counts a great deal in determining the style. There is nothing, generally, messier than a small display attempted in the black and white effect. In our opinion the worst of advertising is that which is known as the reverse effect where the result is that the lettering shows in white and the background in black, employed in small space and without a cut.

Where you take space like that of the Strand and where you get good art work and excellent printing there is nothing to beat it. With the exception mentioned, the display of the Strand is ideal. It dominates the page by its size and with that is artistic, striking and convincing. And yet alongside of this the smaller space display of the Criterion would have attracted just as much attention, and next door even the single column of the Muse would have come in for notice. In the midst of type advertising any of these displays would have dominated even had the other type ads occupied more space.

Now G. F. Fullerton, whose work is familiar to all of you, really originated the style of advertising that he has used in the northwest. He uses big space and unusual white space, sometimes having the scenes sketched and sometimes in half-tone, varying them. This style of advertising has spread to many sections west of the Mississippi and it is good advertising wherever you have the space to do it with, but it suffers in reduction.

Selecting Advertising Style Depends Upon Many Conditions

Illustrations of the hand drawn style of advertising is illustrated by the Sun and Muse theatres, Omaha. Strand theatre, Syracuse, used the black and white and half tone effect. The Eckel, of the same city, used half tone, line and type. The Criterion, Atlanta, has the combination effect, and the Orpheum, Cleveland, "draws in" with a producer's cut.
Conditions Govern Style in Advertising Motion Picture Houses

McCormick, of Indianapolis, some of whose work is reproduced on another page of this issue, generally uses a combination of half-tone, border drawing and type, and his advertising is always striking, though he uses more type than most good advertisers, for the reason that he always goes about selling the picture and puts real salesmanship behind it.

In referring back to the exhibitor who asked the question, let us say that we have answered it for him, but we did not undertake to do that until we had studied the copies of the newspapers of his city for several weeks and knew very well what the other theatre was in the habit of doing. Unless the others imitate him his advertising will be distinctive and he dominant because it is distinctive.

While we are aware that a lot of good advertising men are likely to come down on our heads, we would never vary the design for the name of the theatre, except in size and position, under any circumstances. We would keep that name distinctive at any cost. Then it becomes a signal to the eye.

Here are a few things to bear in mind in selecting a style of advertising:

See what the other fellow is doing and try to do yours different.

But don't let anything tempt you to get freakish. Once in a while there comes along a picture on which the freak style pays, but that is an exception.

If the other fellow imitates you, change enough to be different, but not enough to lose your individuality.

Because of the black and white and half-tone unless you are sure of the engraving and printing. It is costly and can be an awful mess.

 Beware of the wholly drawn displays unless you have a first-class artist, and on this style of work they are rare.

The combination of the half-tone with drawn work like the Criterion is always the safest. Or you can use type in the combinations of the half-tone and the drawn border and get the best results.

These are not rules. As we said at the start, we wouldn't try to lay them down.

But if there is any exhibitor who wants to know how he can improve the style of his advertising, if he will send us copies of his papers for several weeks we will be glad to advise him privately.

W. D. Ward, Universal exchange manager at Detroit, conducted a unique campaign for "The Yellow Dog" and earned much free advertising. He borrowed two booths from the Michigan State Fair and placed them at prominent corners. Boy Scouts were put in them and membership in the "Anti-Yellow Dog League" were offered, resulting in 10,000 Detroiters joining

Defense League and Theatre Co-operate and Put Over Picture and Liberty Loan

ACCORDING to the official announcement from Washington there is likely to be a Fifth Liberty Loan even if a treaty of peace is signed, and the theatres will doubtless be expected to do even more than ever in putting over the loan which will not have behind it active war. That is one of the reasons why there is so much interest in the manner that H. J. Thaeber, manager of the Strand theatre, Salina, Kan., put over "The Prussian Cur."

It is best told in his own words:

"At the request of one of the members of the Defense League I booked this picture, as he explained that it was the best propaganda picture he had ever witnessed, and his enthusiasm gave me an idea."

"Requesting him to inquire of the Defense League if they would permit me to exploit this picture under their auspices I would exhibit it at the usual admission prices. The idea was very well thought of, due to the fact that the Fourth Liberty Loan was about to be launched, and this picture was one that would certainly aid the sale of bonds."

"Called before the board the following morning, I was requested to explain to them just what I was going to expect them to do, and my request was that I be permitted to use their name (Defense League) in all advertisements, and that they would assist me in the distribution of advertising matter by permitting me to tell the merchants that I was putting on this picture with the request and aid of the Defense League and that I must be permitted to place window cards, heralds and posters in their stores, and I did not get one refusal in the town."

"Besides all of this I had the cooperation of both papers, obtaining 'readers' or notices every day for six days previous to the presentation of the picture, and each of these 'readers' were very large and were gratis."

"I also used this line in all advertisements: 'At the special request of the Defense League we are presenting this production at the usual admission.' Every member of the Defense League was a 'walking advertisement' and worth more than all the newspaper advertising I could have purchased."

"Having been told that I could go to any extent in using the Defense League, I was permitted to use every store and business house in the city, and in the gratis notices the newspapers were demanding that everyone must see this picture, as it was their patriotic duty."

"It suffices to state that through this exploitation this production broke all house records, and was the most profitable engagement that I have ever had."

"But better still, the Fourth Liberty Loan in this city went OVER its quota in less than two days USING THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM, and I KNOW that this picture was the means of assisting to a great extent."

"And out of all this it developed that the Defense League feel that they owe me a debt of gratitude, while in reality they have done me as great a service."
What the Liberty Theatres Are Doing

By Edward L. Hyman
Director Picture Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

To anyone who is dejected, there is inspiration in this article by Mr. Hyman on the effect of motion pictures on the soldier boys. This is good matter to get into your newspapers, good matter to aid you in winning motion picture co-operation from that paper. Show it to your editor and tell your patrons about it.

What are the Liberty Theatres doing for the soldiers? They are giving the boys a fine show. The success of the Liberty theatres in New York is due to the combination of several factors. The idea of the Liberty theatre is a new one, and the boys are anxious to try something new. The pictures are well produced, and the actors are good. The Liberty theatres are the only ones that are doing this kind of work.

The Liberty theatres are doing a great deal for the boys. They are giving them a chance to see good pictures, and they are also helping to keep the boys out of trouble. Your Idea and Ours

IF the man who wrote the advertisement for the Grand Theatre, the new million dollar theatre in Pittsburgh, knew anything about the character of the Wm. S. Hart production, "The Border Wireless," he carefully kept evidence of the fact out of his display.

Now this is a production so far different from anything else in which Hart has been seen that this was the point to be brought out, not merely saying "different," but by telling why. In the first place, the dominating thing is that it should have been told that in this picture Hart is seen in the role of an American soldier, enlisting after he frustrates the Huns and wrecks their wireless plant. Yet the writer of the display says: "Quick witted, two fisted and romantic... In a vigorous story." On the top of this he uses one of the old "gun" cuts. The selling point of this picture has been deliberately passed by and the public has been given to understand that it is one of the usual sort of Hart stories—which it is not.

The designer must think that Hart sells himself in no matter what production he appears, and then proceeded to handicap Hart in doing just that.

Some managers still insist on being kaiserers to their patrons.

OUT of all the good advertising that has been brought out by the second Charlie Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms," we think that of Shea's Hippodrome is right at the top considering the fact that Harold B. Franklin got a most effective display and used only five inches across three columns. As you have seen, the light drawn effect in all of his displays so as to get the contrast with the advertising of the other Buffalo theatres. This is essential because the newspapers of that city insist on massing together all the advertising of motion pictures. If legitimate and vaudeville houses and Mr. Franklin aims to keep his advertising distinctive.

Here he has used in Ben Day effect small figures of Chaplin doing various things in the war with one large figure of the comedian. It stands out like a house afire.

And we want to call your attention to the fact that he does not say "Grand Double Bill." He features one picture—the right plan.

Let confidence be your advance guard and you'll find a big army of success backing you up.

THERE could have been one improvement in this half-page display of Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, and that would have been to give more white relief to the face of General Pershing and the figures of the marching men. Yet the partial circle accomplished that to some extent.

The designer of the display was eminently right in playing up the name of the American commander above the title of the production. He is the one in whom the country is interested. By the time that the display was used everybody was convinced that it was assured that America has already won, but there is still that same strong desire to see pictured the life story of General Pershing. And so the display states simply that the picture is and then says no more.

We are also mighty glad to see that the Hippodrome did not try to play the vaudeville up strong. To have done so would have interfered with the appeal on the Pershing picture. It was the one big thing to put over and it was well done. The display dominated the entire amusement section of the newspapers.

Marly Progress and Personality in your theatre.

THIS display occupied two full columns in the Dallas, Texas, newspapers. For the reason that if it had been reproduced in full the cut would have been longer than the page of the Motion Picture News, we have chopped about half of the reading matter out of the center of the display. This portion is devoted to the ventilation, the caption, the house, the methods of keeping it clean, etc. It is good business talk.

The attention of the reader was caught immediately with the caption, "How it happened that no one caught the 'flu' at Hulsey theatres," a splendid line at the bottom which says, "At Hulsey's Health Resorts" and then gives the name of the three theatres in Dallas. This is the work of Herschel Stuart, general manager of the E. H. Hulsey interests.

Unconditional surrender—to Enterprise.

THIS eleven-inch, three-column advertisement of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., is important because it teaches a lesson on the advertising of war pictures. Just because the armistice has been signed it doesn't mean that all of these war pictures are dead by a whole lot, but it does mean that you have to think your head in arranging the displays. Those managers who go ahead and exploit them as if hostilities were still in progress are not going to get the full results.

Now note the way that "America's
What Live Wires are Doing

Answer" has been exploited here. It was right up to the minute with the latest developments and has the Hun begging for peace and then it goes ahead to tell you that this picture shows why America's answer to the Hun plea is unconditional surrender. Would you want anything more up to the dot than this, and don't you think that such statements will appeal to the fullest number of possible patrons? We are sure of it.

The display is hand drawn with the face of Alla Axiom brought in at the bottom, yet the fighting theme is still helped dominant with the silhouetted figures.

You won't have to make peace with your patrons if you make yourself as one of them.

It is becoming quite a habit in Seattle to alter the titles of pictures. We have recently recorded several such examples. This time "The Romance of Tarzan" has been advertised as "The Sequel to Tarzan," and we don't know but what this is a good way to advertise this picture, provided the theatre figures that the original Tarzan pictures scored such a big success that it will be satisfied if it gets into the house all of those who saw the first picture.

Yet when G. F. Fullerton wrote this display he evidently wasn't sure that this was sufficient appeal so he added a box telling just what this picture shows and adding that there is an additional reel giving a summary of the events in the previous picture. We believe that bigger patronage would have resulted if the picture had been advertised on its selling argument, and then there had been introduced quite incidentally the fact that this was a sequel to the other picture. Just at present it is a little too much of an invitation to only those who saw the first picture.

But, as we have observed, we are not sure in these conclusions for the original Tarzan picture did such big business that the Coliseum was satisfied that it could not handle more than viewed the first one. In that case, it was the proper style of publicity.

Now let's plan a little of the strategy that is going to bring the victory to your theatre.

You can make up your mind that when one of your displays is confusing at the first glance of the eye it is bad advertising. Advertising is like some humans—the first impression that we got of the other fellow somehow seems to stick.

Our first impression was that this is a triple bill and that the manager of the Griswold, Albany, N. Y., is trying to put over the impression that he is offering a whole lot for the money. Of course a second glance shows us the date, but the advertisement never should have been arranged so that there would be the slightest doubt about the offering that he has to sell first. We realize that in some cities the manager believes that his Sunday show will sell itself, and in some cities that may be true, but in such a case the Griswold should have gone ahead to sell the Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday show instead of balancing it off nicely with that for the latter half of the week. We repeat about advertising two or more pictures equally—it can't be done.

VISALIA THEATRE, Visalia, Cal., shows a desire to do liberal advertising and with the help of the printer it would get much further. For instance, the half-page display on "The Great Love" has just about as messy an effect as could be given it. In the first place there is a multitude of rules and the typing practically all in lower case is bad. And whoever conceived the idea of putting part of the cast at either side of the title must be a follower of the "beautifully balanced" effect theory. It is well written, practically all taken from the Arcturian plan book.

Now if the theatre had used its name plate—it shows it has one at the left—and then the date and had gone ahead to say that Griffiths presents this picture and that it is a study of the regeneration of women by the war and had followed this with the excellent selling talks that he used, had then thrown in a prominent line saying it had practically the same cast as "Birth of a Nation" and finally had followed with the cast he would have had a straight away reading ad and would have avoided the mince pie effect.

The Visalia seems to be making a strong effort to pull them in every day of the week. The manager realizes the value of arousing curiosity sometimes and when he tells the public "If you do not know what we are fighting for, come to this theatre October 17 and 18." The house gets liberal reading notices and we had almost expected to find a reading notice that would "give away" the surprise, but we are glad to say it wasn't there.

ONCE MORE

Let us again ask you not to mark the advertising copy that you send us for reproduction. If you insist on disfiguring it you might as well save postage, as it cannot be used in that state.
SUNDAY every one was just recovered from the celebration that set New York on fire on Thursday, even though it was a false one, and we were busy buying all the extras to be sure to be on the job when the Huns really did give in. Of course, every one knew that it was coming during the week and probably there are some exhibitors who would have hesitated to put on a picture during that time.

But that is just what Mr. Rothapfel did and Sunday night at the Rivoli they were packed on the sidewalk—and Monday, when the celebration of all celebrations happened you could not get near the place. And since the citizens have recovered again they are going back at it the same way. And do they tear the house down with the showing of the war pictures in the news weekly? You're right.

Now you will note, when it comes to it, about the question of a little martial music in it, and that at the very end, but the use of “My Old Kentucky Home” as the theme keeps one stirred every minute. Both of these popular numbers have a bearing on the picture and the war review as you will see. We haven’t the slightest doubt that the same pictures on this program without the music would have fallen flat, but the result was one of the most enjoyable of presentations.

Tschaiikowsky’s “Solonelle,” better known as “1812” is the overture. It is a brilliant co-operation written to celebrate the dedication of the Cathedral of Christ the Redeemer in Moscow to commemorate the defeat of Napoleon and the “Marsellaize” is counterpointed in it a number of times. With the times as they are one may imagine the applause that it gets. Some how one settles in his seat, convinced that we are going to have a regular victory celebration coming along.

“Bird Studies,” released by Educational, is the interesting scenic picture and it got a bunch of applause at the end when we saw it. There are some remarkable close-up views of these wild birds that must have tried the cameraman’s patience to get. Drigo’s “Serenade” is the music used throughout.

Then comes Miss Gladys Rice singing one of the old favorites, “Then You'll Remember Me.” Mr. Rothapfel has been making it a practice for several weeks to revive these old favorites and it makes a great hit with the audiences. Miss Rice sings these unusually well and the audiences are always delighted with them. Now lots of managers think that to run a high-class house they have to have a bunch of Italian or French or Spanish songs, and we get them at the Rialto and the Rivoli at times. The audiences applaud, but you know that there are a lot of people who don’t like good opera and who go because they think that it is the proper thing to do, and they applaud most heartily because they think that they will be considered ignorant if they don’t appreciate.

All of which is said because we have noted that at the Rialto and Rivoli these old time songs in English seem to us to get the real genuine sort of applause, the sort that springs from the heart and means something.

For this number the setting is simple, but effective. With the dome and prosenium arch in red and the side in purple the curtains part, with the singer standing before the red back curtain, near the left of the stage and just in front of three evergreens.

Then comes the Animated. For the first time Mr. Rothapfel is using some of exactly the same pictures at the two houses. At the Rivoli the Animated opens with Gaumont’s pictures of the graduating classes at West Point, just as opens the Rialto. "No Victory" is the music used and with the views of the marching men the audience start on their way to patriotic explosive-ness. Then follow Screen Telegraph pictures of motor trucks taking supplies to the firing line and here we have "Keep the Home Fires Burning," this continuing through Screen Telegraph pictures of allied women at the War Congress in Paris and Gaumont’s pictures of women nurses at Chaunteil Thierry writing letters for wounded American soldiers.

This leads in to the Official War Review No. 21 and when the general title is flashed on the screen the audience breaks into pandemonium again, for it is “Under the Master’s Pipe” and "General Foch." The first pictures are of our boys moving the artillery up through the ruins of French villages and then we are shown with the harvest of prisoners they meet coming back from the front. “Pomp and Circumstance” marches up to Letter E is used here and the majestic music of it adds a lot to the general effect.

Then we are shown our doughboys crying for the people of the French villages they capture, feeding them from their stores, and “Pack Up Your Troubles” sets us all humming, while we choke down a few tears. Next are pictures of the work of the French Army in the field miniature reproductions of a German stronghold they are about to attack and here “Sons of Britain” is used. Then we have pictures of the Italians battling against nature as well as the Austrians and bringing up their cannon. We all knew by this time that Austria had deserted her old pal, the Kaiser, and therefore the applause of this was all the more accentuated. Sicilian Vespers is played up to the top we have Italian soldiers and sailors forming a human Italian flag and swaying back and forth to give the effect of the waving emblem. “March Royal” is used for this smashing finish.

Then the lights of the theatre all become blue with the orchestra bathed in blue, and after a few bars the curtains part. Greek Evans in Arab costume is seated, behind him a half opening with the distant moon and the stars in the blue sky, another one of John Wengen’s artistic effects. After a few lines of “A Son of the Desert Am I,” another favorite, he rises and completes the song.

“A Romance of the Air” is the feature, with Lieut. Bert Hall, an American of the Lafayette Escadrille, in the principal role. “Les Enfants de France” is played for the opening and then for the appearance of Hall, who, a title tells us, is a Kentucky gentleman, we get “My Old Kentucky Home.” This is brought back a number of times for the love scenes, and we would call it really the theme of the picture, though the music score tells us that the theme is “Dawn Skies.” At any rate the way that the old Southern song is used leaves the impression on the audience that a few others would leave. “Madelon,” “Meditation,” “La Vosgienne,” “Caressing Butterfly,” Gruenfeld’s “Romance,” and “Love’s Lament” are also used.

“Robespierre” is the score of this patriotic music to be used and this comes when the officer and the two women reach France. When we are shown the French colonel preparing for an attack “March Militaire, St. Saens,” is played and after we have “Kentucky Home” again the march is repeated. When we are told that the eye of the great offensive is here we have “Sambre et Meuse,” “Battle Cry of Freedom,” introduced during the defense of Hall before the court martial and finally at the end of the production with the wedding ceremony on the day that America entered the world war to bring victory to the earth.

Now just as the last scenes are on the screen Lieut. Hall, in French aviation uniform, comes out on the side of the stage, the house is dark and he cannot be seen, but when the picture ends and the white lights flare up the audience makes itself heard. Sunday night the ovation lasted five minutes. He scored a hit with his speech.

At the performances when he does not appear the orchestra plays selections from "The Chocolate Soldier" and then follows the very funny Fox Sunshine comedy,
"Mongrels."
The symphonic poem from " Vysehrad" is the brillian overture. For the first time we have seen it there are two harps in the orchest for this number and it starts with a duet, with the flutes and then the other reed instruments coming. Then to mark the passing of the glory that Lumir, the singer sees, the lights go down to a roll of drum

There is a peculiar arrangement here for the overture runs directly into the scene that follows and there is not a moment given for the great applause that the ren tation deserves. " Sumatra " is the subject of a Post-Pathe travel picture. "A Song of India" is the first selection and with it the girl next to me began to sing. "Love Song Oriental," "Samboula" and " Oriental-es " are the other selections.

With the lights all in red and Miss Helen a Morrill dressed in a gown of the same color she sings " Kiss Me " from "Mlle. Modiste." There are a few bars from the orchestra and the lights die down with the start of the song itself. It is an effective arrangement of the lighting be cause it serves to center more than even all the attention on the singer. The Byzantine setting is used here.

Gaumont pictures of the West Point boys, with the music "To Victory" opens the An timated. Then comes Screen Telegra pictures of the marching replacement troops at Camp Gordon and the music changes to
"Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." Then the scene transfers to Washington and Gaumont shows us the United War Work drive opening with Mme. Schu man-Heink singing on the steps of the capi tol. " Keep the Home Fires Burning " is the music. " When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Voux " is used for Screen Telegra pictures of teaching French to Ameri can soldiers. With Gaumont pictures of American aero officers we have " Over There. " This continues through Gaumont flashes of Thaw, the American aviator, Mrs.
T. R. Roosevelt, Jr., at the Paris Woman's Conference, and pictures of the honor tee
Gen. Garibaldi. With pictures of American wounded seeing the sights of Paris we get " Hands Across the Sea," continuing through views of General Joffre at a celebra tion. Then we have a series of short Screen Telegra pictures in France and as the soldiers are shown sorting the junk we have " Columbia March," which con tinues up to Gaumont pictures showing the chief characters at the Versailles armis tice conferences.

The audience goes wild during these pic tures. First we have Poincaire and Clemenc eau, then Lloyd George and Lord Reading and a host of other noted men, and they all get a wild welcome to the screen, but when General Pershing appears on the screen it is sure enough all off and you can't hear " Allied March " which the orchestra is playing with all its power. And it is equalled with the title, " Wilson says to Germany, " See General Foch."

We were surprised that the Animated didn't end there, but it didn't, for there fol lowed Hearst-Pathe pictures of women vot ing for the first time in New York to the " Good Luck, U. S. A. , " and then we have
"For the Freedom of the World," stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

RAISED HIS PRICES
That's a Result of the Influenza in Orange, N. J.

MANAGER D. J. SHEPHERD of the Palace Theatre, Orange, N. J., raised his prices when he reopened after a long shutdown due to the influen za epidemic. Formerly his prices every day except Fl day and Saturday were fifteen cents, with the to prices for Friday and Saturday evenings twenty-five cents. With the reopening matinées became twenty cents and the evenings

Mr. Shepherd believes that this is the time for manag ers through the country to raise prices so that a fair profit can be made if they at the same time give the people the proper bills. He is opposed to double features and cut rate prices and believes that after the people have been without the pictures for several weeks this is the time to make the necessary in crease. Which seems to be good logic.

Detroit Theatre Uses Spoken
Prologue with Picture
How a knowledge of the drama and particu larly personal experiences with the stage assist in the presentation of pic tures, is illustrated by Charles J. Nevison, house manager of the Del-Theatre in Di troit. Mr. Nevison is constantly stag ning special scenes of dramatic worth in order to gain the approval of the patrons.
When he put on " To Hell with the Kaiser " for a three day run a week ago, he made a special stage setting and intro duced a spoken prologue. The characters were Satan and the Kaiser. Satan was accompanied by a group of small devils, part of the setting showing a burning pit.
The Kaiser begged Satan for mercy, but each of his requests were refused, Satan de claring that his sins were so great he wasn't even worthy of finding a place in hell.

To make Satan's statements more forc ible a vision of a martyred Belgian woman and balé was shown at the right of the stage.

For " Uncle Tom's Cabin " Mr. Nevison put in a minstrel first part introducing col ored buck and wing dancers on a Missis ippi levee.
Morgan Theatre, Auburn, N. Y., is one of the smaller city theatres that stands out among the houses that are doing things. Located in a city with a census population of 34,178, this theatre decided that it had its part to do in putting over the Liberty Loan. The only trouble was that the “flim” came along and stopped the good work just as it was good and started. But it shows that Manager Ross A. McVoy had the right idea and that things can be done in one of the smaller cities if the manager really tries.

A striking stage drop was used in connection with the Loan drive. Mr. McVoy is fortunate in having in Edward J. Wise not only one of the best operators that can be found anywhere, but a man with an artist’s and a designer’s touch. The basic of the display was an American flag, and with this were used one of the cut-outs from a poster on “The Yellow Dog,” while the circular picture immediately under the field of stars was taken from the displays on “The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.” In keeping with the figure of Uncle Sam was a shield bearing the slogan, “Help Uncle Sam Club the Kaiser. Buy Liberty Bonds.”

On the day that the drive started Mr. McVoy entertained the inmates of the local orphans’ home at the matinee. The various placards were prepared by the management of the house and after the matinee they were displayed in the lobby over the heads of the people entering.

When Mr. McVoy took charge of the Morgan it was the same house that it is today, but it might be best described as “bare.” The pictures were simply thrown on the screen and that was all there was to it. But Mr. McVoy decided that atmosphere was needed, and one of the means that he used to introduce this was through the music. He engaged Mrs. Cora A. Robinson, an artist in interpretation, and now at the opening of each performance there is an organ solo of a patriotic nature, and as the selection comes to an end the curvature is lowered, the lights dimmed and then the picture starts. At the end of each performance there is a lively exit march, with the curtain dropped again and the lights on in full. And this organ music is in contrast with the situation at the Morgan before Mr. McVoy took charge. At that time there was a piano, and the player played without any idea of the action of the pictures. Now the pictures are really played, and the result has been a wonderful increase in the volume of business. Says Mr. McVoy:

“But with very little exception every action is caught, and, while no sudden change is ever noticeable, yet the cues are worked out so that the music is half our show, yet it is a ‘one man’s band.’ We cannot as yet support an orchestra, so we believe in giving the best that we have.”

But he should have gone further and said that he is a manager that is doing real things with the best that he has—that he is thinking about not only the presentation of his pictures, but about the things that enter into the routine and into the national life of the people. He is getting a lot out of things that he is doing.

Uses Closed Period for Improving Theatre

H. C. Young, who owns the Cotter theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., does not believe in letting temporary troubles interfere with the operation of his theatre. On the contrary, he uses these to better his theatre for the future. During the period that his house has been closed he has redecorated, added a new machine and made many other changes that are calculated to please his patrons.

Mr. Young was making great preparations for putting on “America’s Answer” for an entire week, but the closing order went into effect just two days before the engagement was to start.

TWO MORE MEMBERS

Both Small and Middle Class Cities Added to Advisory Board

This week announcement is made of two new members of the Advisory Board, one representing cities of the middle class and the other the smaller group. Some time ago we promised you that the smaller cities should be represented well on the board and we believe that we have kept our word.

Sid Laurence is manager of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., a city of 123,227. Mr. Laurence is always doing things at his house and accounts of a number of them have appeared.

H. L. Percy, one of the owners of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Ore., a city of 12,400, is the other member. With his partner, A. J. Moran, Mr. Percy has made the Rialto one of the successes of the Pacific Coast section, and that is saying a great deal.

Ticket Booths in “Tanks” Novelty in Montreal

Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman theatre, Montreal, put on a smashing lobby display with “Crashing Through to Berlin.” In front of the house he reproduced the forward portion of two tanks and then used cut-outs of charging soldiers and a collection of war trophies. The two ticket booths were placed in the tanks. So much attention was attracted to this display that Mr. Pomeroy said the entire display to another local house that had the second run of the same picture.
Patterson Finds Benefit From Shut Down

NOTE: This article was written before the Criterion reopened. You will hear later of Mr. Patterson's successes.

"IT'S an ill wind that blows nobody good" is admittedly an old and very trite saying, but it contains a world of homely truth. Managers of motion picture houses the country over doubtless felt they had been hit a staggering blow when they were ordered by the authorities to shut up shop in an effort to prevent the spread of influenza, but when you come right down to brass tacks the shut down will prove a blessing in disguise.

I am an optimist by faith and practice. Every problem necessarily challenges a man's thinking power. It sets his brain to work, and a man needs his brains in the picture business. It takes thought to produce a picture, and it takes brains to put it over after the exhibitors.

This shut-down has given everybody—producer and exhibitor—an opportunity to sit down and take a good, long think. The last year has been a strenuous one in the history of the motion picture industry. The producers have been working day and night putting out all sorts of pictures—short reels, big features and serials; and everybody has been plunging along at breakneck speed trying to make the best of the situation.

We haven't had a chance to analyze things. Our noses have been too close to the grindstone. Each day has brought its own problems, large and small, to beset our waking hours and many have disturbed our mighty rest. Now we have had the opportunity thrust upon us to sit up and take notice of where we are headed.

An exhibitor whose time is taken up wholly with looking at pictures to find those he thinks best suited to his particular needs and who has the countless details of house management upon his shoulders, now is able to take stock, ascertain just what he has accomplished and, at the same time, look into the immediate future.

Of course, the shut-down means loss of money to all of us, but it also means a gain in countless ways. Here is a chance to find out if we are on the right track. Have we gotten the most out of our opportunities? Have we given our patrons the sort of entertainment to which they are entitled and for which they are willing to spend their money? Is our house merely four walls with a roof overhead, or is it a pleasant, comfortable place that is inviting; a real place of genuine entertainment?

These are questions that will bob up in the minds of the exhibitors who are farsighted. The motion picture business is of mushroom growth, but it is an industry that is here to stay. The hold that the motion picture has upon the public at large can never be shaken loose. It depends upon the producers and the exhibitors to make it bigger and greater than the most enthusiastic in the business can foresee.

The producers have been working day and night putting out all sorts of pictures—short reels, big features and serials; and everybody has been plunging along at breakneck speed trying to make the best of the situation.

We haven't had a chance to analyze things. Our noses have been too close to the grindstone. Now we have had the opportunity thrust upon us to sit up and take notice of where we are headed.

An exhibitor whose time is taken up wholly with looking at pictures to find those he thinks best suited to his particular needs and who has the countless details of house management upon his shoulders, now is able to take stock, ascertain just what he has accomplished and, at the same time, look into the immediate future.

Of course, the shut-down means loss of money to all of us, but it also means a gain in countless ways. Here is a chance to find out if we are on the right track. Have we gotten the most out of our opportunities? Have we given our patrons the sort of entertainment to which they are entitled and for which they are willing to spend their money? Is our house merely four walls with a roof overhead, or is it a pleasant, comfortable place that is inviting; a real place of genuine entertainment?

These are questions that will bob up in the minds of the exhibitors who are farsighted. The motion picture business is of mushroom growth, but it is an industry that is here to stay. The hold that the motion picture has upon the public at large can never be shaken loose. It depends upon the producers and the exhibitors to make it bigger and greater than the most enthusiastic in the business can foresee.

Personalize. Naturally, I am not very strong on blowing my own horn, but I do think that personal experience is of interest to the other fellow. The shut-down order in Atlanta caught me at the beginning of what I expected to be a very busy week. The injunction to close up shop came like a flash from the blue sky, and for a moment I felt that I was up against it. At one fell swoop all my plans had fallen like a house of cards.

Then I began to think. Here was just the opportunity for which I had been looking. For a long time we had been planning to give our house a good cleaning up. Of course, we had given it a thorough cleaning every day, doing all that could be done with soap and water and elbow grease—but now was the chance to do the thing in a big way.

Decorators were called in for consultation. Paper hangers and painters were hired, and before the day was over we were on the road to make the house over. These workmen have been mighty busy since that shut-down order, and today our theatre is as spick and span as the day it was turned over to us by the contractor, with this difference: it is a better house, more comfortable and contains more of the little things that go to differentiate a mere film house from a motion picture theatre. We have installed improvements that we have found by experience will appeal to our patrons and make them feel that we have a personal interest in their comfort. We want them to feel that although they have to pay to get into the place, they still are our guests and entitled to the best we can give them.

When our doors reopen to the public the old patrons will find a brand new house awaiting them. We believe thoroughly in the idea that a good picture must have a good setting—proper atmosphere created by pleasant surroundings and music, and this repeat from the strain and stress of everyday detail has enabled us to plan this very thing.

Therefore, I say, the shut-down order has given us a chance to work up our efficiency—that is, systematize our efforts so they will accomplish the most in the way of promoting the picture. It has enabled us to revive our "pep" and get right behind our promotion plans to the end that we will be able, when the time comes, to put a number of ideas that have been evolved into actual practice. I think that if exhibitors and producers would look at the matter in this light great and lasting good will accrue from a situation which at first blush doubtless caused many persons in the industry to throw up their hands in despair. This is no time to "cry over spilled milk"; it is the time to build for the future, because the future of the motion picture business was never brighter and never offered such a flattering chance for brains, hard work and optimism to win and win in a big, permanent way.

Newsletters Appreciate the Loss of Advertising

I

In the October 26 issue we reproduced a full page from Collier's Weekly which told consumers impressively the work that the motion picture is doing for the country today and the necessity for it tomorrow. We told you that this was national recognition, and that if you were not getting the co-operation from your newspapers, you were trying to make up for it in advertising. You don't have to call attention to this fact. But you should always avoid saying the obvious. Call their attention to this Collier's article. Your newspaper will get the "drift."

Managers Get Publicity Out of Victory News; Dayton Theatre Makes Picture of the Crowds

FROM various sections of the country come reports of managers who took advantage of the announcement of peace to celebrate in their theatres and to bring the thousands of celebrants there. Most of these celebrations came with the false announcement of Thursday, but that it was untrue was no fault of the managers and they deserve credit for their readiness to take advantage of opportunity.

One of the notable instances of this was furnished by Mark Gates, manager of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O. Almost as soon as the news was received from the local newspaper office Mr. Gates placed his big orchestra on the sidewalk in front of the house and led the celebration with a series of patriotic airs.

Residents of Dayton who were thronging the streets proceeded to gather in front of the theatre until a crowd of some 5,000 had congregated, when, at the suggestion of Manager Gates, a parade was formed which soon developed into one of the biggest in the city’s history. Taking advantage of the situation thus developed Mr. Gates directed a local concern, The Pyramid Film Co., to make a moving picture of the crowds in front of the theatre and the parade as it passed the house.

This was done Thursday, Nov. 7, at 3:15 p.m., and under the hurry up direction of Manager Gates the picture was rushed through in time to be shown on the screen of the Dayton theatre at exactly nine o’clock the same evening and was received with wild enthusiasm.

The fact that the announcement of the signing of the armistice was premature did not in the least detract from the value of the action and Mark Gates is to be congratulated as having in all probability the very first motion picture made in the United States of the gigantic celebration in recognition of the cessation of hostilities.

Manager Sid Laurence, of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., put on a special prelude to his performance as the result of the peace announcement. First the orchestra played the “Star Spangled Banner,” and then the curtain rose showing New York Harbor and the Statue of Liberty ablaze with light. A moment later a vessel was seen entering the harbor, and during this time Mr. Laurence sang “Homeward Bound.” There are not many managers who can jump into the show and sing a selection, but Mr. Laurence was a member for years of the famous “Variety Newsboys Trio.”

Both the Strand and the Rivoli theatres, New York, brought their orchestras to the sidewalks and celebrated the victory.

Closing Order Fails to Halt Picture’s Exploitation

Since the closing order went into effect in Portland, Ore., all 24 sheets posted for “Crashing Through to Berlin” have been snipped with a 4-sheet black type poster reading “Immediately upon re-opening this picture will be shown at the Star theatre.” Three thousand tickets had been sold for this picture before the closing order went into effect.

Window displays advertising the picture have been posted in several large stores. A band concert will be given every night in front of the theatre, and vaudeville acts will be given each night. Co-operating with Manager W. W. Kofeldt is the National League for Woman’s Service, of which Mrs. Alice Benson Beach is city chairman.

Hyman Tells Work Done by Liberty Theatres

Converting Objectors

At one of the great southern cantonments a special morning performance of a certain patriotic picture was given to all of the conscientious objectors in camp. This picture presented a truly convincing argument of why the German autocracy must be crushed. At the conclusion of the performance six of the conscientious objectors signified their change of attitude and expressed their willingness to become fighting men. So great was the effect made upon this prisoner audience that within the day the number was increased to fifteen converts to the greatest cause that man has ever fought for. How much more effective is this method than the gravel pit or the thirty-year sentence.

The Liberty theatre, in many cantonments, also becomes the school for the soldier whose educational qualifications are lacking, and at such hours as their military duties permit one may see the wistful features of the Slav, the happy smiling eyes of the Latin or the proud earnestness of the native of the “cracker” communities—Americans all—wrestling with the intricacies of the three R’s and building, with the study of civics and citizenship, a firm foundation for the future.

Admission charges to Liberty theatres range from 10 to 25 cents ordinarily, with some of the larger and more pretentious attractions bringing a half dollar.

“Smileage” coupons are as good as cash at the door of the Liberty theatre, however, and there is no more welcome gift, from the folks back home to the boys in camp. than a Smileage book. Smileage coupons average well over fifty per cent of the day’s receipts in most of the theatres. In some instances the commanding officer of the camp is entrusted with the distribution of Smileage books, which have been sent in by private interests or institutions which have taken this means of contributing their bit. In this way the Smileage book becomes an award of merit and provides an incentive towards soldierly and gentlemanly conduct.

“Red Headed” Girls Admitted Free to “Empty Pockets”

Free seats for red-headed fingers were offered by the Central theatre, St. Louis, as an advertising stunt on the showing of “Empty Pockets.”

The offer was limited by Mr. Sweeney, the manager, to the performance given between 10 a.m. and noon.

The idea was suggested to him by the action of the story, in which are five red-haired women, who become entangled in a murder mystery through their acquaintance with the slain man-about-town.
Robert Lieber Cites Financing Benefits

Owner of Circle Theatre in Indianapolis Declares Banking Tides the Exhibitor Over Rough Places—Could Open After Being Closed Through a Solid Year

FOLLOWING closely the glowing announcements that the theatres of the country were gradually reopening after the enforced shutdown because of the influenza epidemic, the publicity department of First National Exhibitors' Circuit issued from its New York office some opinions of Robert Lieber on banking and financing. Mr. Lieber, who is owner and operator of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis, declares banking and financing are essential and extremely necessary factors in the continued success of any exhibitor, large or small. If the showman takes the necessary precautions, according to Mr. Lieber, he can close his theatre for a whole year and reopen as strong as he closed.

The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders to provide ample financial protection against any emergency, says Mr. Lieber.

Reserve Fund Needed

"A reserve or sinking fund of at least twenty per cent of the total sum invested in the theatre and its occupied property is the exhibitor's safest insurance against the nominal risks of the business," said Mr. Lieber in his interview through the publicity department of First National.

"If the Circle theatre closed its doors tomorrow for an enforced shutdown of one year," declared Mr. Lieber, "we could reopen the house at the end of the twelve-month with colors flying and our finances in splendid shape for the carrying on of the business, even in the face of severe competition or adverse circumstances of any character. We are adequately protected against even that remote possibility—simply as a matter of sound business judgment—so it is reasonable to presume that we could weather any probable storm of lesser intensity."

Mr. Lieber is president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and head of the H. Lieber Company, owners of the First National's Indiana state franchise. In the Circle theatre he has developed a pattern which is recognized by the industry and the exhibiting branch particularly, as one of the model houses of the country. While his manager, S. Barret McCormick, has devoted himself to the artistic phases of motion picture presentation, Mr. Lieber has devoted himself to the practical commercial side of exhibiting, with the result that the Circle theatre presents a novel and unique anomaly as a profitable business proposition.

Avoid the Reverses

"It is the easiest thing in the world for an exhibitor to pay dividends to his stockholders when the theatre is showing a profit," said Mr. Lieber, "and it is the hardest thing in the world for an exhibitor to levy an assessment on stockholders when the theatre is going through a turbulent period and needs more money than is being taken in at the box-office. Any exhibitor, no matter how strong and impregnable his business may appear to be, is liable to experience reverses."

"The jeweler conducts his store for eleven months in the year on a gross income which is little more than enough to pay his operating costs. But during the holiday season his sales reach their highest point and he gets his year's profit from the Christmas trade. He has to divide that profit between dividends to his stockholders and himself and a reserve fund on which he can draw, if necessary, during the spring, summer and fall when there are months that show a loss. The retail clothier has much the same financial problem. In the average town he has two profitable seasons—spring and fall."

"The exhibitor has the summer months to consider in arranging his financial program for the year. He knows that there will be weeks without profit and that it would be economy for him to close the house. Perhaps competition makes such a course unwise. To maintain his standards of quality in entertainment he must make no curtailment in rentals. The fixed overhead charges for the theatre remain the same. Perhaps there is a sudden and unexpected loss due to a disease epidemic, similar to the present influenza shutdown. There are a score and more of possible happenings which may occur with a serious effect on any theatre's bank account."

Founded on Good Will

"The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders, if there are any, to provide ample financial protection against any emergency. Otherwise, his investment in the theatre is in constant jeopardy. I believe that one of the reasons why many bankers look with distrust and doubt upon the retail branch of the motion picture business is because many exhibitors have bank balances which do not give proper protection to their investments.

"Exhibiting is a business without fixed, liquid assets. It consists of retailing merchandise with a momentary value and it is a loan. An exhibitor has only his theatre. And its value depends entirely upon the ability of one or more men to manage it successfully.

"When an exhibitor goes to a bank to apply for a loan to tide him over an unprofitable period, or to finance improvements to the theatre, the banker would first examine his account and then say something like this: 'Your deposits with this bank have averaged five per cent of your total investment in your theatre. In several occasions you have overdrawn your account. I understand that early in the spring you were doing an extremely profitable business. You tell me you invested that surplus in a home and there is still a first mortgage on it for sixty per cent of its value. If I grant your application for a loan I will have as security a theatre or a jeweler can go to a bank and borrow money, at six per cent, on stock on hand. Their merchandise is negotiable, because it has a fixed market value. But an exhibitor is not negotiable, because it depends entirely upon the ability of one or more men to manage it successfully.

"If, in the estimation of the banker, that balance is kept big enough to guarantee the exhibitor ample financial latitude in any emergency, he is impressed with the fact that the exhibitor is a good business man and is conducting his affairs along sound commercial lines. As a consequence, the exhibitor is received with open arms when he requires assistance."

"Surplus funds can be safely invested in one or more of several good securities. The most promising one is Liberty Bonds. The cash reserves for the Circle theatre are invested in Liberty Bonds, and this will continue to require assistance for surplus cash as long as the Government needs Liberty Loans. It is probable that there will be several more of them, even though peace is declared.
Lee Children in "Keep Smiling"

Jane and Katherine Lee to Appear in 'Keep Smiling,' Fox Production Termed the First Musical Comedy of the Screen

RALPH H. SPENCE, special writer of humoros subjects and sub-title specialist for William Fox, has just written what he calls the first "musical comedy of the screen." The new play is entitled "Keep Smiling," and the stellar roles will be interpreted by Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kiddies.

In constructing his comedy it is declared that Mr. Spence has managed to fit each episode to some well-known musical composition and that he has punctuated the picture with one hundred and thirty humorous sub-titles, thirty of which form definite orchestra cues.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the keynote of the play. Other selections that fit the action of "Keep Smiling" are: "Smiles," "Till the Clouds Roll By," "The Sunshine of Your Smiles," "Over There," "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall," "Taps" (Bugle), "Manny's Little Chocolate Soldier," "We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser," "Beautiful Lady," "I Hate to Lose You," "Blue Bells of Scotland," "I'm So Glad My Mama Don't Know Where I'm At," "My Hero" and several others.

"While 'Keep Smiling' has its dramatic moments, it is mostly comedy-drama, and at times drops—or rises—to real farce," said Mr. Spence. "Its plot, characters, settings and tempo strongly suggest musical comedy, and there is a real surprise in the finale."

"Mr. Fox instructed me to write a comedy for the Lee children, and 'Keep Smiling' represents my idea of comedy," continued Mr. Spence. "I have depended entirely upon situations to provide the laughs. I have studiously avoided unnatural, improbable and impossible incidents, and the only place that custard pie appears in the play is on the dining table. I have always been a hearty supporter of custard pie for the last inning of a table d'hote dinner, but I have always nursed a strenuous objection to desecrating this delectable dessert by draping it over the be-whiskered physiognomy of some pantomimic comedian."

The Red Cross Plans to Aid Its Films

As part of its campaign to secure cooperative circulation of its war work films, the Bureau of Pictures, American Red Cross, issues bulletins which are the direct medium of communication with the chapters of the organization, and through them with the twenty million members in this country.

The division bulletins, with several hundred thousand circulation of an intensive sort, keep the chapter leaders advised of the Bureau of Pictures releases and how to find the theatres where they are being displayed. This co-operation is said to be continuous, and is reported as bearing fruit in the inquiries received at General Film Company exchanges.

A timely release is now ready, "Victorious Serbia." The Bureau of Pictures, W. E. Waddell director, has recently removed to 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, in order to be in the film district of the metropolis.

Rothacker Complimented on Film Developing

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is exhibiting with pride the following commendatory communication from the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Seattle, Wash.:

"We beg to advise that shipment containing our prints of 'Shoulder Arms' reached us a few days ago. Yesterday we screened this comedy for the benefit of the other exchanges on film row; we had quite an audience, as everybody from exchange manager to poster boy was anxious to see Chaplin's latest. It somewhat helped to take the edge off the gloom which has made itself felt since the closing of all theatres in the territory, and everybody agreed that 'Shoulder Arms' is positively a hit. Many expressions were heard on the excellent photography, and the writer wishes to add his appreciation of your work in developing and printing the films.'

Mutual Places W. A. V. Mack in New York

It was announced this week that W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of Mutual by President James M. Sheldon, succeeding Fred G. Sliter, who, as announced in Motion Picture News last week, has been appointed by the Government a foreign film commissioner. Mr. Mack has assumed charge of the New York office. He is succeeded in Buffalo by Edward J. Hayes.

The promotion of Mr. Mack is in accord with President Sheldon's policy of selecting men within the organization for higher places.

Mr. Hayes has been connected with the General Film Company, Buffalo, as branch manager, and has also had charge of several big theatres, among them the Colonial theatre of Elmira, N. Y., and the International theatre of Niagara Falls. He has been a branch manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, where he made a splendid record. His wide acquaintance and intimate knowledge of conditions in the trade and the needs of the exhibitor should carry him far in the ranks of Mutual.

President Sheldon also announces the appointment of Edward L. McShane as manager of Mutual's Washington, D. C., branch, succeeding H. R. Mason, who resigned on account of ill health.

Blanche Sweet's Latest Called Timely

"When I say that this production is particularly timely I must be given credit for reading the newspapers and therefore know that the War is ended and that the influenza also has practically finished its course.

"The people are now in the mood for good, clean, substantial entertainment. But a motion picture production must have exceptional merit if it expects to keep in the so-called 'special' class. Many scenes of 'The Unpardonable Sin' depict Belgium.

"During the many years to be spent in the period of re-construction of that country it will always be a keenly interesting and absorbing topic," continued Mr. Garson.

"Marshall Neilan has produced a masterpiece in this eight part production and I am firmly convinced that it will prove to be a classic for a long time to come."

The New York theatre that will house the premiere of "The Unpardonable Sin" has not yet been announced.

Vitagraph Names Releases for Nov. 25

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of November 25 has been scheduled as follows:

Serial—Two Parts—"Fiery Fate," Episode No. 6 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Hollaway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Towner and Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Special Comedy—"Submarines and Simps," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock. Directed by R. H. McCray.

Normand to Do "Sis Hopkins" for Goldwyn

The next picture which Mabel Normand will make for Goldwyn will be a screen version of "Sis Hopkins." Goldwyn has acquired the moving picture rights to this Hoosier play from Rose Melville, who wrote and created and played the part for nearly a quarter of a century.

Very few plays on the American stage have a more curious history than "Sis Hopkins." To the present generation of New York theatregoers it is known only by hearsay. In the provinces it was said to be for twenty years about as well known as "Rip Van Winkle," "Way Down East," or "In Old Kentucky."

Rose Melville and her husband, Frank Minzey, toured America with it year after year for nearly twenty-five years, always making the same sure profit and usually playing to about the same audience. In both large and small towns all over the country many people would go to see Rose Melville regularly once a year.

As a matter of fact, "Sis" is one of those parts that grew rather than being written, because Miss Melville never ceased building and elaborating the part. It is considered to be an ideal character for Mabel Normand in pictures, as the character and situations offer ideal opportunities for her to build comic scenes on.

Lehr in Full Charge of New Goldwyn Studios

In full charge of the new Goldwyn studios at Los Angeles is a man who less than a year ago had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant.

He is Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which has just moved its studio and producing staff from Fort Lee to the Coast.

So marked was Mr. Lehr's success from the start that within a few months after joining Goldwyn he was elected a vice-president and placed in full charge of production under the supervision of Mr. Goldfish.

Ramsaye Leaves Mutual

It is announced by Terry Ramsaye that he has resigned from the executive staff of Mutual Film Corporation and that he will make known his future affiliations next week.

Mr. Ramsaye joined the Mutual organization as director of publicity in June, 1915, going into the organization as a member of the staff of John R. Freuler, the then newly elected president.

His offices were maintained in New York City and then moved to the Chicago headquarters and then back to New York again.
Canada to See "Cannibal" Film

Canadian Premiere of "Cannibals of the South Seas" to Follow New York Trade Showing at Hotel Astor

MARTIN JOHNSON'S "Cannibals of the South Seas" has its Canadian premiere at Massey Hall in Toronto November 23, which follows by a few days the New York trade showing in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor on Tuesday evening, November 19.

The metropolitan trade showing was arranged by the Robertson-Cole company, which controls the distribution of the feature for the entire world. New York State will be handled through the First National Exchange and the showing is particularly intended for exhibitors in this territory.

The Toronto presentation of "Cannibals of the South Seas" will run seven days. George W. Beynon, who has arranged a special musical score for the film, will handle the music at the Toronto showing, as he will at the Hotel Astor presentation. Martin Johnson and his wife, who accompanied him throughout the expedition, will attend the Massey Hall premiere in Toronto.

By December 1 the Robertson-Cole company will announce how "Cannibals of the South Seas" is to be presented in the remainder of the United States outside of the Empire State. Remarkable interest is declared to be manifested by exhibitors everywhere, and the Robertson-Cole organization is said to be in receipt of hundreds of inquiries regarding the releasing of "Cannibals of the South Seas" throughout the country.

Robertson-Cole are sending a print of "Cannibals of the South Seas" to the London offices of the company. A British trade showing is being arranged. Particularly strong interest is being evinced in "Cannibals of the South Seas" in England, since most of the savage islands visited by Mr. Johnson are British possessions.

The picture will be released in two parts of 5,000 feet each. The sub-titles are said to have been carefully handled, retaining all the vital information and the real flavor of adventure, as well as a lively vein of humor.

The Birth of a Race to Open in Chicago

It has been announced that "The Birth of a Race" will open for an indefinite run at the Blackstone theatre at Chicago beginning December 1. Joseph Carl Breil, who composed the music for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," is the composer for "The Birth of a Race," and will have an orchestra of thirty musicians.

Scenes for this photoplay were taken in Florida, New York and New Jersey under the direction of John W. Noble. The photography is by Herbert O. Carleton, and the developing, printing, tinting and toning is the work of the Craftsmen Laboratories. Art titles throughout the picture are from the studio of Ferdinand Pinney Earl.

Among many who have contributed characterizations to this production are Jane Gray, Anna Lehr, Anita Cortez, George LeGuerre, Philip Van Loan, Charles Graham, Will H. Gregory, Ben Hendricks, Alice Gale, Doris Doscher, Dick Lee, Edwin Boring, David Wall and Belle Seacome.

Shoulder Arms" Three Weeks at Broadway

With an extension by the Broadway theatre, New York, of its original booking of one week to a three weeks' run on "Shoulder Arms," and increases by the vaudeville houses of the B. F. Keith Circuit of from three days to a week on Chaplin's second million dollar comedy, with reports on early runs on "Shoulder Arms" from practically all of the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, indicates to them that it will play to a total of more days than any other Chaplin production.

Lesser Buys "Five Nights" for the Coast

With the announcement that Sol L. Lesser has bought "Five Nights" for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands, comes news of other sales of the screen version of Victoria Cross' novel, that is declared to denote a spurt of activity in the state rights market.

The Southern peninsula of Michigan for the Victoria Cross feature went to Haynes Features, Inc., of Detroit, and the Siles Film Exchange has acquired "Five Nights" for Chicago, while Al Harshen has it for New York.

A deal has just been reported with F. M. Sanford whereby he gets the picture for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

According to the Classical Motion Picture Company, which is selling "Five Nights" to state rights exchanges, one of two things is happening. Either the big box office results shown by "Five Nights" in New York and Ohio are attracting attention to the feature, or the state rights market is showing sudden activity.

Mary Miles Minter in Active Close-ups

What the American Film Company declares is a new departure in the realm of film art is termed the "active close-up." In "Wives and Other Wives," featuring Mary Miles Minter, a screen farce in which she plays a young matron, there are said to be many demonstrations of this by the star, augmented by the cameraman.

"Heretofore," said an American official, "the close-ups have usually been taken with the object or the person in a fixed pose or with very limited action. Few of the producers have risked the dangers of facial movement at close-ups because of the fact that not many faces can be active and yet remain attractive under the tremendous magnification on the screen."

John W. Greer, Advertising and Publicity Director of the B. A. Rolle Productions
Metro Has “The Great Victory”

The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns” is Next Screen Classics Feature

WHILE Richard A. Rowland, Metro’s president, disclaims any supernatural method of obtaining information, others in the Metro offices are declaring that Metro luck is again triumphant in having perfected another topical patriotic production in its newest Screen Classics offering, “The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns.”

“Scenes already photographed have been verified by current events,” declared one official. “Metro directors seem to have an almost uncanny foreknowledge of the trend affairs would take, and the new production de luxe simply repeats the proverbial ‘Metro luck’ as powerfully demonstrated in ‘To Hell with the Kaiser,’ ‘The Slacker,’ ‘Draft 258,’ ‘My Own United States,’ ‘Her Boy’ and ‘Lest We Forget.’ “The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns,” will show in tangible form the actual events of the conclusion of the world war. History has collaborated with Maxwell Karger, the author, in providing the material for this splendid representation of the most important period in world affairs,” he continued.

“Weaving a beautiful romance woven into the thread of important happenings of the war’s earlier phases, Mr. Karger has completed his story in such a way as to give motion picture patrons the benefit of the amazing occurrences of its climax and close. ‘The Great Victory’ will not only serve as an inspiring means of entertainment for playgoers of the present day, but will undoubtedly be preserved as a correct chronicle of world events for future generations.

“The capture of Sedan, the Versailles Conference, the reception of the German envoys by Marshal Foch and his associates of the Allied command, the delivery of the terms of the armistice and the final acceptance of it, the abdication of the Kaiser and King,” William II., who thereby became simply William Hohenzollern, the subsequent wild acclaim with which the news was received in America, and President Wilson’s appearance before Congress to read them the whole text of the armistice terms, have all been included in the picture.

“Moreover, there will be further incidents in ‘The Great Victory’ which will not be made public until the actual projection of the production upon the screen of a New York theatre, remarkable incidents connected with these epoch-making events.

Select Gets Julia Arthur Film

Select is Distributing "The Woman the Germans Shot," with Title Changed to "The Cavell Case"

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has arranged to market through Select Exchanges the drama embodying the story of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross Nurse, in which Julia Arthur is being presented by Joseph L. Plunkett and Frank J. Carroll.

This is the feature which, under the title "The Woman the Germans Shot," was presented at the Strand theatre in New York City the week beginning October 27, and which on the initial day of its run is declared by Select to have created a new turn-away record for that playhouse.

The new title of the picture is "The Cavell Case," the phrase, "The Woman the Germans Shot," being retained as a subtitle. The picture will be handled as a Select Special. This is the second Special to be announced by the Select people this season, the first being the Thomas Dixon production, "The One Woman."

"Select considers itself fortunate in securing for distribution so strong a subject as this," said one of the officials, "the picture having been pronounced a success from every standpoint.

"Based on one of the best scenarios Anthony Paul Kelly ever wrote, dramatically gripping from start to finish, beautifully played by its distinguished star, Julia Arthur, and by a supporting company which gives to every character in the drama the individuality and prominence it deserves, splendidly directed by John G. Adolfi and given a production that is eminently satisfactory, 'The Cavell Case' has won golden praise from the expert public of motion picture circles, and from New York critics and theatre patrons.

"This opinion was crystallized in a striking statement in the New York Evening Mail of October 29, which noted that "Tradition is vanquished in "The Woman the Germans Shot," the principal film feature this week at the Strand theatre. Unlike most film portrayals of historic events it does not leave the impression of elaborating facts for the purpose of dramatic suspense."

Albert E. Smith Plans a Training College

A training college for the development of motion picture actresses and actors from inexperienced material is planned by Albert E. Smith, President of the Vitagraph, to be opened after the first of the year.

There will be no charge for tuition, and practical experience will be afforded the students as "extras" for Vitagraph.

Hodkinson Releases "Made in America"

It was announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation this week that it will in the near future release "Made in America," an eight-reel production. The scenario was furnished by the Division of Films and the United States Government co-operated.

It is to be produced and directed by Ashley Miller and will be released, one reel each week, through the Pathe exchanges.

It is the story of the making of the American soldier, from the time he signed his registration card for the first draft till he landed armed cap-a-pie in France and won a glorious victory over the Hun.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was selected by the Government to handle this film, which will be preserved in the archives of the Government as an accurate pictorial history of the making of the American soldier in the war for liberty and justice.

Caruso Subject Among Early Releases

With the resumption of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's release schedule November 17, attention is largely centered upon the first screen appearance of Enrico Caruso, idol of the opera world, whose Artcraft picture, "My Cousin," is released on that date. The story chosen as the vehicle for the tenor's first venture as a star in motion pictures was written especially for him by Margaret Turnbull.

The central figure in "My Cousin," is a poor artist, Tomaso Longo, by name, who makes models for plaster casts and whose proud boast is that he is a cousin of Cesare Caroli, the great tenor, whom he greatly resembles. Tomaso is in love with Rosa Ventura, a cashier in her father's restaurant, and although she flirts occasionally with Roberto Lombardi, proprietor of a fruit and vegetable stand, she really loves Tomaso.

Reports That "Manx-Man" Has Steady Booking

State right pictures have been proving their worth in the recent epidemic, according to information just received by Sales Director J. L. Kemper, of the Manx-Man Company, from his special representative, Leon Schlesinger. Writing from Chicago, Mr. Schlesinger says:

"I have just visited some of the Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa territories unaffected by the epidemic closing ban, and find that although the exhibitors were deprived of the new pictures they were working state rights pictures pretty hard, and in many instances making money. Of course, even in this 'open' section business was affected, because many people were afraid to attend, even though no ban had been ordered by the authorities.

"The exhibitors were not looking to make money, but they were glad to meet expenses. This they were able to do according to the strength of the state rights picture. And the good ones got the business, and we can include 'The Manx-Man' among the latter."

Special representatives Weiner and Pelzman, who were recalled from the New England and Ohio territories, respectively, when the epidemic first commenced to rage, some weeks ago, have been sent back to these territories by Sales Director J. L. Kemper, who feels that conditions have been restored to normal.

Climax of "Hands Up" on November 24

"Hands Up," the Pathe Western serial, starring Ruth Roland, comes to an end in what Pathe terms a tremendous climax this week beginning November 24.

Echo Delane, the hero, and the Inca Prince have been hidden in a cave by "Two Gun," the girl's cowboy protector. She is being sought by the Incas to be wedded to the Prince, according to the prophecy. The night has arrived on which, the tradition tells, the great meteor is to fall. And then the climax occurs.

Later "Hands Up" returns an invalid from the battlefields of France and offers to release Echo from her engagement to marry him. To this the girl refuses to listen and tells him that he has done his duty well and that the bandages are the bandages of honor.

Cecil B. de Mille's New Feature Is Started

Cecil de Mille has started his newest artcraft feature, "Don't Change Your Husband," and reports from the Lasky studios declare that there is a fine chance for Gloria Swanson to display beautiful gowns expressly designed by Margareta Hoffman for the picture.

The cast is small: Gloria Swanson, Elsie DeWitt, Theodore Roberts, Lewis J. Cody, Sylvia Ashton, James Neill, Julia Faye and others make up the roster of players. Jeanie MacPherson wrote the play and it is said to be an original conception throughout.

Pathe Claims New Mark for Latest Serial

In a statement to Motion Picture News this week, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., declared that the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," which has been scheduled for release the week of January 5, marks an important period in the development of the sequenced screen story. It is asserted that all of the lessons of construction and effects afforded by the twenty-two previous Pathe serials are so utilized in this work of George B. Seitz and Bertram Milhauser that "The Lightning Raider" is a new sort of serial.

Miss White is featured with Warner Oland and Henry Gsell, well known to the screen, carries the role of a hero. The serial was directed by George B. Seitz and is the product of the Astra Company, which has produced more Pathe serials than any other concern, having to its credit "The Shielding Shadow"; "Mystery of the Double Cross"; "The Seven Pearls," "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate" and "Hands Up."

"The Lightning Raider" is said to show Pearl White in an entirely new characterization and there is the challenge of mystery in the very first scene. It is her ninth serial. Since "The Perils of Pauline" she has been starred in the three "Elaine" stories, "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army," "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate."
Bushman-Bayne Join Vitagraph

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have started work on a Vitagraph production directed by Houry.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have started work on a Vitagraph production under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Henry-Houry, French playwright, actor and director, has in hand the direction of the pair.

Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the authors of Vitagraph serials and other Vitagraph productions, wrote the play, which is described as a romance of the present day and one in which the stars will be called upon to face many hazardous situations. The title of the production has not been decided upon as yet, but will be given out in the near future, it is announced.

This production, it is officially stated, will be the first of the four special productions to be made by Vitagraph during the ensuing twelvemonth. In his outline of production plans for 1918-19, made some time ago, Mr. Smith stated that in addition to fifteen or twenty-five reel features for the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program, fifty-two Big V Special comedies, and four fifteen-episode serials, his company during the year would produce four super-productions, these to be made under his personal supervision. This means that the Bushman-Bayne production and the other three promised specials will be of the same importance and excellence as "Within the Law," "Over the Top," and other big Vitagraph productions which were made under the personal supervision of the Vitagraph chief.

Mr. Smith declares that Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have been provided with an exceptionally strong supporting cast for their production, the more prominent players being L. Roger Lytton, for many years prominent in Vitagraph features; Jean Paige, who first appeared in O. Henry pictures and latterly has appeared with Harry T. Morey, Charles Kent, a Vitagraph veteran, and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Henry-Houry, who is directing the starring combination, is a Frenchman who attained prominence in Paris as a legitimate actor, producer and manager before going into motion pictures, and he was said to be rapidly taking a place in the front ranks of the cinema producers when he abandoned his work and enlisted in the army.

He is a veteran of many battles, including the first battle of the Marne.

Until now he has directed Corinne Griffith in Blue Ribbon features, having been responsible for the production of "Love Watches," "The Clutch of Circumstance" and "Miss Ambition."

G. L. Tucker Talks About "Virtuous Wives"

George Loane Tucker is the director of "Virtuous Wives," produced by Louis B. Mayer and starring Anita Stewart. This will be distributed through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"I ask any exhibitor," said Mr. Tucker, "to estimate the percentage of married couples who are patrons or prospective patrons of his theatre in proportion to the unmarried clientele. Then add to that approximation an estimate of those who expect to be married sooner or later, and he will find that 'Virtuous Wives' as an altar-starting story has an appeal for every type and class of individual.

"The story of 'Virtuous Wives' is one of those unusual themes which contains a genuine appeal for the three most important features of a production. It gave Miss Stewart a role which fits her exactly and in which she was interested to the point of extravagant enthusiasm. Its situations and action are such that it offered me, as the director, unlimited opportunities for exceptional results, artistically, technically and photographically."

"Marriage" Released on November 25

The release of the third of the Frank A. Keene productions, "Marriage," will occur on November 25. "Marriage," with Catherine Calvert and a cast, including David Powell, Thomas Holding, Ida Darling, Walter Hiers and Hazel Alden, has just completed a week's engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, where Mr. Keene declares it played to one of the biggest week's business in the history of the theatre.

"Marriage" has been directed by James Kirkwood and will be distributed through the William L. Sherry service, as have the other two Frank A. Keene productions, "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Out of the Night."

Select Secures "Woman the Germans Shot"

Plunkett and Carroll's production "The Woman the Germans Shot," in which Julia Arthor made her screen debut, has been secured by Lewis J. Selznick, of Select pictures, and the latter concern takes over the exclusive booking privileges throughout the entire United States.

Since the week's showing at the Strand theatre from October 27 to November 2 of this life story of the martyred British Red Cross Nurse Edith Cavell, upon which data the production is based, it is said that the producers have been accorded a most unusual number of applications for both negative purchase and also for the exclusive booking privileges.

"It is rare," said Mr. Plunkett, "that such competition for the control of a production is exhibited in motion picture manufacturing circles.

"What success is to be accorded the production will be vouched for by the unqualified and sincere endeavors of the New York motion picture theatre going public who during the exhibition of the production at the Strand theatre unquestionably placed its stamp of absolute and thorough approval on this production."

New U. S. A. Series to Be Released Dec. 23

The World Film Corporation, which is to distribute the new "U. S. A. Series," which will comprise twelve two-reel pictures, to be produced by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has notified its exchanges that the first picture, "When Your Soldier's In," which visualizes the work of the field hospitals in a new and interesting way, will not be released until December 23.
George Randolph Chester for Vitagraph

George Randolph Chester, author of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, has been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, to assist as literary adviser at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. Mr. Chester assumed his duties last week and is now actively concerned in giving to scenarios the same snap and sparkle as the Chester writings.

Mr. Chester is not treading new ground when he takes his place as literary counselor for Vitagraph, because he has been a frequent visitor there since the production of his novel, "The Enemy," and "The Message of the Mouse." The latter was an original story written by Mr. Chester and his wife, and was produced by Vitagraph some time ago with Anita Stewart in the leading role.

Ever since the production of his first story on the screen Mr. Chester has been a keen student of motion picture construction and production, and henceforth he will divide his time between fiction writing and motion picture work.

The acquisition of Mr. Chester is the latest step by Albert E. Smith to perfect "the story" of the motion picture. The Vitagraph president has been one of the leaders of the industry in demanding clean, clever stories.

More than two score of popular fiction writers are represented in current Vitagraph features and several of them, such as Robert W. Chambers, Cyrus Townsend Brady and James Oliver Curwood, are represented on Vitagraph's release list by numerous productions.

Frederick Bennett Joins American Film Co.

Frederick Bennett, novelist and contributor to leading magazines and former war correspondent, is now publicity director of the American Film Company. Mr. Bennett spent two years in California with some of the principal studios, wrote the Helen Holmes serial "The Lost Express" and many other stories.

He is a graduate of New York and Chicago newspaper offices and was for some time general manager of the International News Bureau for all Europe. Mr. Bennett is now at work on a special campaign for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher.

"Topics of the Day" Handled by K. W. S.

The K. W. S. Distributing Corporation announces that they have consummated a deal with the publishers of the Literary Digest, through their representative, Mr. Siegel, so that they now have the national rights to "Topics of the Day," which until recently was distributed by the Literary Digest people themselves.

The Literary Digest publishers report that so instantaneous has been the success of "Topics of the Day" that it has become a part of many theatre's programs.
Miscellaneous Notes

The famous Alaskan malamute who was passed from Peary to Douglas Fairbanks to Charlie Chaplin to Tom Geraughty to Wallace Worsley, has changed hands again. Mr. Worsley, who directed Louise Glum's latest production for distribution by the W. M. Hodkinson Corporation, entitled "The Goddess of Lost Lake," found another unsuspecting soul, who took a fancy to the big sled-dog, and now he is installing a new set of screens at his house and harvesting as much of his potato garden as the dog saw fit to leave.

Mr. Harry O. Hoyt, who was formerly on the scenario staff of the World Pictures, has turned director, and his first picture will be "The Hand Invisible," starring Montague Love.

Director Burton King reports that he has averaged 25 scenes a day in making the Houdini Serial, "The Master Mystery." This is unusually fast work, and has been done in spite of the fact that Houdini is just recovering from a broken wrist. Marguerite Marsh has been ill for several days, Floyd T. Buckley has a fractured finger, and most of the other members of the cast have been ill at recent intervals.

The story for Viola Dana's new picture for the Metro Company will be a picturization of Van Zo Post's novel, "Diane Ardyth." It is an entertaining story and should afford the clever little star an opportunity for some unusually good work. John H. Collins will direct the picture.

Ralph Kellard, formerly a Pathe star, is now playing the lead in "Over Here," by Oliver Barry, at the Fulton theatre.

Frank Mayo, now co-starring with Jane Elvidge in "The Love Divine," for World, has announced that in the future he would like to have all requests for his photographs accompanied by 25 cents. These donations he will present to the Red Cross, and collectively they should buy quite a few more miles of bandages.

There is said to be a real love story in "A Moari Romance," which is treated as a Moari version of the ancient myth of Damon and Pythias.

The titles for the first four "Outdoor" pictures, produced by the Rodman Film Manufacturing Company, released through Mutual exchanges, have been selected, and are "Flatheads and Blackfeet," "Bad Men and Good Scenery," "A Moari Romance," and "Peaks, Parks and Pines."

Will Intensify Exploit "After the War"

OFFICIALS of the Argosy Film Company, which has just established itself for a sales campaign in the state rights field, believe they have stolen a march on their competitors. The Argosy's newest film is "After the War," and they declare it to be the first real production treating international conditions growing out of the world conflict.

"This picture is the timeliest subject on the market," said M. H. Hoffman, the sales manager for Argosy. "It is precisely as important in relation to public interest at this time as were 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' and 'My Four Years in Germany,' when the latter were issued during the war. But this production is distinctly not a war picture. It not only brings forward intensely interesting revelations of conditions produced by the war, but it tells a remarkable love story of love and romance. The problem that 'After the War' projects upon public attention is embodied in the question, What shall become of the women of the war-ridden countries who have suffered the supreme trial at the hands of the invaders? How will society treat these women and their desired offspring? Is the vital problem of today. Yet the film is so strongly romantic the problem idea does not obtrude.

Stolen Orders" Does Well In South

The Southwestern Film Corporation of Dallas, Texas, has reported in a letter to Motion Picture News that William A. Brady's production, "Stolen Orders," has proven a money-maker for exhibitors in the South. The film is being handled in Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas by the Southwesterns organization.

The new L. and A. theatre in El Paso, Texas, which opened November 9, used "Stolen Orders" as the opening attraction, as did also the new Liberty theatre at Beaumont, which opened the same day. Another theatre to use the picture as the opening attraction is the new Princess at Orange, Texas.

The Southwestern Film Corporation declares that never before has a state rights production proven so popular among the exhibitors of that territory as "Stolen Orders."

General Appoints Henry in Denver

It was made known through the General Film Company publicity bureau this week that General has bimetallized its organization that a change has been made in Denver, where the office is now in charge of T. Y. Henry, who had been connected with General for long periods during the last six or seven years in the Denver territory.

After a long service with General, he became manager of the Paramount office, later branching out with an office of his own. In renewing his service with General Film Company he does so as a sales executive already in intimate touch with the field, in which he has a most extensive following.

What Motion Picture News Reviewer Thinks of Picture
"AFTER THE WAR"
(Argosy Film Co. Length, 5 Reels. State Rights)

THIS is one of the strongest dramatic offerings released lately, the direction end having been handled in a convincing manner.

The picture contains some situations with heart interest as well as some with thrills, but the most predominating entertaining element in it is mystery. Pictures based on this element rarely, if ever, fail to have popular appeal, due to the peculiarity of human nature, which always seeks to delve into the unknowable.

The element of suspense is also splendidly maintained because of the intelligent construction of the story, which never gives away the action in advance.

As the title clearly indicates, the fundamental idea of the plot consists of after the war events as conceived by the author.

At the opening, the picture shows the hero and the heroine in an Italian village happily contented. The war breaks out. The hero is called to the colors. The country is invaded. Unable to get away, the heroine remains.

During a battle, the hero is taken as a prisoner and is about to be executed. Becoming aware of the fact, the heroine begs the enemy commander to spare his life. He agrees to do so provided she submits to his wishes. To save the hero from further tortures, she gives in. The hero, not knowing the exact reason for his liberation, feels grateful to the German officer.

The scene now shifts to Washington, at the period after the war. At a reception in the Italian Embassy, in which the entire Diplomatic body is invited, a famous prima donna is to sing. At the sight of the German Ambassador she is overcome. The Italian Commissioner, the hero of the story, recognizes his sweetheart in the person of the famous singer. After the performance he seeks to meet her, but, having also recognized and wishing to avoid him, the heroine rushes away. He calls at her home and begs her to renew their love and marry him, but she refuses, calling herself unworthy of him. Demanding to know the cause, she relates what had transpired between herself and a German officer, and that that officer is none other than the present German Ambassador.

The Ambassador’s wife, who had noticed the strange conduct of her husband at the reception, calls on the heroine, in order to find out, if possible, if there is any connection between him and the prima donna. The heroine explains all to her, pointing to a child as the evidence. At this moment, the Ambassador enters, having come with the purpose of renewing relations. The wife then shoots and kills him.

Assuming the blame for the murder, the heroine saves the woman from being prosecuted. The latter begs of the heroine to be given the child. Her request is granted, and there being no other barrier, the hero and the heroine wed.

Some people might not approve of a mother giving up her child, since she is not guilty of immoral conduct, but this will be chiefly a matter of individual taste.

The picture, of course, cannot be called unsuggestive, but it is timely and, owing to the peculiarity of the subject, the number that might object to it will possibly be a limited one.—P. S. Harrison.
"After the War" Links Up With Peace Revelations in Europe

"AFTER THE WAR" is a picture that lends itself to starting discussion, and it is likely to prove one of the most sensational that has been shown. And it is distinctly an "after the war" picture, for it portrays action some years hence, referring back to incidents that occurred during the hostilities.

It is largely founded on one of the most terrible evils that came from the policies of the Huns—the attacks on women. It is an unusually tense production and holds the interest tight to the very end. It is a picture that is very frank, and you will have to be frank in advertising it. It is going to startle the spectators during its showing, and, though the ending is a happy one, it is going to create no end of talk.

It is built on the brutality of the Hun, and it is a picture that is going to convince anyone that has any doubt that our fighting has been in vain. But it is not a picture of armies, but of individual brutality and lust. Only a very small group of soldiers are shown at any time. There is not a shot fired in the picture, except the one with which the Austrian woman kills her husband.

WHILE the picture is not a war picture in the sense of fighting, it will arouse still further the hatred of the officer group of Prussians who misled all Central Europe and plunged the world into terrible conflict.

Grace Cunard is the star in this picture, which was directed by Joseph deGrasse. Miss Cunard has a big following over the country for her appearance in a number of serials and other productions under the banner of Universal is going to create interest in her work in this picture of the Argosy Film Company.

Her name and the title are the two things to feature in the advertising, but we repeat that this is a picture that should be treated as sensational to get the fullest box office return. It ought to arouse as much discussion as "Where Are My Children?" and similar productions, because of the sensational things that it shows and because of the immense amount of debate that it has caused.

ARGOSY FILM is preparing a big exploitation system along these lines. Some of it is illustrated in these pages, but all of it has not been completed. There will be advertising in all sizes and a lavish array of paper, together with a wealth of scene pictures, many of which are reproduced here and in the advertising section.

This picture is to be sold to state rights buyers, and therefore it is important to exhibitors that they should be able to get the material, for they have found in so many cases in the past that after they have booked a picture they have had no material with which to exploit it. Argosy promises in this case that there will be no lack of this matter, and certainly, from the evidences given in the matter reproduced here, the matter that is crowded out and that in preparation, the promises are borne out. The exploitation is being handled by one of the most successful men in the business of motion picture exploitation.

And therefore the exhibitor who takes this picture should do so with his eyes open and knowing that the way to make money out of it is to get the whole of his community talking about it. There will be disagreements of opinion, but it is such disagreement that has been responsible for putting over most productions of this sort. Pictures that have aroused the same sort and volume of discussion have played engagement after engagement in the same city because of the big exploitation that they got on the first showing and the large amount of word-of-mouth advertising.

While the story of "After the War" is fiction, the same story has been paralleled to a greater extent in thousands of cases in France and Belgium and Italy, where girls, hitherto innocent, have become mothers of children whom they hate because of their brutally enforced Hun fatherhood. For the plot of this picture hangs around this incident, and the way it is worked out is going to cause still more talk.

It is certain that the news after the signing of the armistice which will come from Europe will increase the fury against the Huns in this country and the rest of the civilized world. We have heard already of many such cases of these attacks on women, but they have been to a greater or less extent impersonal. The Huns swept over this territory and their deeds have been hidden away for a time and there have not been the enforced mothers to tell their stories.

But now the Huns are getting back out of their territory and the terrible griefs of these people will be revealed. And then there are the thousands of young girls whom the Huns carried away with them back to Germany. Under the terms of the armistice every one of these people must be repatriated before the first word of the peace discussion can be said. And their stories will float through the press to the world. The talk from now on is going to be "after the war" talk, and the stories of the terrors and the wrongs are going to form a big part of this discussion.

And when these do come the exhibitor will do well to take advantage of the news that his papers are printing and to link up this picture with it. And, as we have said, the showing of this picture is going to cause a great wave of discussion in every community.

The heroine of the story is an innocent Italian girl who yields to a Hun officer to save her sweetheart from torture, which she is forced to witness. It is as delicately told as can be done, and then only in a flash, but the main developments of the story hang around the fact that a hated child is the result and seems to bar her marriage to the lover, that she has found again after the war.

But there is another element that the picture brings out. We hear lots of times that these acts have been due to the madness of the war and that it is not the nature of these people to do such deeds unless they are crazed in the shedding of blood. Yet one of the things that this picture brings out is that the spirit still lives in that Prussian caste after the war, for he is shown attempting to make the same proposal to his victim again.

And, while the war is over and peace signed and the relations between the former enemies is resumed again, we are shown the Hun type again in this man. He does not need the uniform to stamp him. The face and the bearing and the manners of his are those of the tribe that the last four years of history have aroused us against. If Prussianism continues to exist in any form, this picture will serve to keep up our enmity of it.
Big Chance Afforded to Stir the Interest of Women

EXHIBITORS showing this picture will do well to make a big appeal to the woman element of the community and especially to the mothers. With little exception the women of all nations, apparently even those of our enemies, have been largely good women. The spirit of the women in this war stands out as one of the glories of it.

It has been the man who has been responsible for the brutalities and the destruction, while the women have borne the crosses of suffering in a wonderful manner. There have been hundreds and thousands of them in France and Belgium who have been victims of the Hun brutes, and their suffering appeals to the great womanhood of America, who know only part of the terrors of the conflict, because no Hun soldier landed here.

And one of the things that struck us when we saw the picture was that even the wife of the German was a good woman, moved by a woman's feelings and actually winning out sympathy in the end. It is true that in a fit of jealousy she shot her husband, but only after she had heard his story from his own lips in her hiding place and because she heard him seeking to break his martial vows. Every woman will sympathize with her after they have seen the picture.

THERE is another thing that is going to arouse a lot of discussion—and that is when the enforced mother of the child which she hates because of its fatherhood yields to the plea of its father's widow and slayer and gives the child into her keeping. It is suggested to us that there will be much discussion of a mother giving up her own child. It looks to us that the child had in its body not only nothing of love, but of intense hate, at the time that it was conceived, and the title makes plain how she loves it. It was perfectly proper that it should go back to the nation from which it came, for under such circumstances the boy when he grew to manhood would have the same Prussian brutality in his being.

But we know that it will cause discussion and this is a point to encourage to get the word of mouth advertising. There may be a few that will condemn her action, though we doubt it.

If your city is of sufficient size to warrant it, why not give a private showing of this production to one of the mothers' clubs and use their opinions in at least one of your advertisements.

In the heading you could ask the question:

"If an enforced mother of a child whose father was a Hun and loathed it, would she give it to another, the widow of its father, when its existence with her kept her from happiness and the man she loved?"

This is an exceedingly frank question, and we would advise you not to put the personal element in it because it may offend some. But you don't need to do that, because everyone will get the point.

If such a plan is impractical in your city we would use a circular campaign with this same question elaborated and going ahead to state that this is one of the debatable events shown in "After the War," giving the name of your theatre and the date.

But be careful that this goes only to the married women of your community. You need not worry about the woman, for the rest of them will hear of it, but don't even suggest, even by the slightest thing that might be construed into an inference that any woman who is not married would discuss what she would do in such a case.

REMEMBER in all your exploitation that the woman is the strongest element in your community. The pictures that she comes to see the others will want to look at and so it is well worthwhile when you have a picture with the woman punch in it to put it over as strong as possible.

This is going to make a big appeal not only in the city where you have a chance to put over the private showing or in some other way get the quotations from the leading clubwomen of the city and use it in one of your advertisements, but in the smaller town and the neighborhood theatre as well provided you show it for more than a day. In such communities gossip travels fast and it's a pretty sure thing that this subject will be the main discussion of the day.

And in dealing with this subject in any way, do not put your emphasis on the act that brought the child into the world, but the consequences from the birth of the child. In that way you will avoid any charge of appealing to mere sensationalism, for then you are putting it squarely on the correctness of the action of the picture. You needn't worry much about that result.
Keep Telling the Public Just What This Is About

Here is another picture where you want to keep the title the dominant thing. You will note in the specimens of advertising that will be supplied by the Argosy Film Company that this idea is carried out, and properly so. The smaller type explains the timeliness of the picture.

But aside from the bigness of the production there is another point that you want to keep bringing out, and that is the humanness of it. That appeal is essential to get over, because you do not want your public to think that this is another feature that shows a bunch of fighting.

As a matter of fact we know of no better way to exploit this picture than to use liberally in every way possible the scenes that are reproduced in the advertising pages. There are punches to all of these and if you are making your own designs you can attract attention with a series of these.

Begin your advertising well in advance of the showing of the picture. We would not advise a teaser campaign on this cue, for it would be much better to devote the space to straight-out exploitation of the production. In this case talking about the picture itself will arouse more curiosity than any possible stunt stuff.

Every conceivable form of paper is being supplied with the picture, including the regular sizes, special lobby displays, heralds, window cards and the like, so that the exhibitor who has the use of billboards should resort to the circus style and cover the territory. The 24-sheet is especially striking and curiosity-arousing.

We would advise you strongly to go to your newspaper and lay the story of the picture before him. Promise him that you are going to do big advertising and urge his editorial cooperation. In most cases you will be able to get it and more of the word-of-mouth advertising that we have referred to will come from these stories.

Have them liberally illustrated from cuts made from the still or use those which will be provided by Argosy in both cut and mat form in all sizes and great variety.

At the same time keep smashing your advertising over. If you want to put this picture over to the biggest possible business you are going to keep hammering away on it. No one believes that a picture is a real sensation unless you keep telling the public that.

Slides should be used in your house well in advance. Before the showing you should use special slides coupling the picture up with the news events of the day. These you can make yourself, and the more that you associate the film with the things that are happening in Europe today and tomorrow, the greater interest you are going to arouse.

For selling lines we can offer you no better lines than to keep the picture as closely associated with the events that we have indicated and to keep the human element always at the top.

It is a picture that will sell itself on just what it does contain, and that is all you have to tell the people.

Another thing that you can assure the public is that this is a most dramatic picture, that it is splendidly made and that it will surprise everybody by the turns that the story takes. There have been no productions anything like this, because it deals with the events of the war only incidentally and with the consequences of the Hun's acts as the main theme.

Here are some lines that will help you if you want others than those contained in the lavish exploitation campaign that Argosy has arranged:

"She had a child that she loathed, and it kept her from marriage with the man she loved because a Hun was its enforced father. And when her suitor begged for her the Hun returned and showed himself the same creature that he was during the war."

"Vengeance came to the Hun who sought to repeat the horrors of the war at the hands of his own wife. And she saved the girl who had become his victim that she might enjoy the life of true love."

"After the war scores of women of France and Belgium and Italy have cause to remember the Hun. And what of their children, fathered by force by these Huns? What will be the answer from their lips to the suitors who courted them before the war? And what of the men who loved them and find them the victims of the Hun terror?"

Remember to play up Grace Cunard strong. She has a great following and though it has been quite a while since she has been seen on the screen, that should increase the desire to see her. She has never had a more brilliant and powerful role than she has here.

Get into your advertising that she plays the part of an opera queen worshipped by Paris; that she wears wonderful gowns and is the center of an intense drama of events after the war.
In "A Romance of the Air" with Edith Day and Lieutenant Bert Hall, Carl E. Carlton presents a War Picture That is Decidedly Different

Romance of the Air Plays the Rivoli

The pre-release at the Rivoli theatre in New York of November II of Carle E. Carlton's "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American aviator of the Lafayette Escadrille, and Edith Day, the prima donna, proved one of the big surprises of the film world, according to reports. With practically no heralding this seven-reel production drew good houses at the Rivoli and it is reported that exhibitors all over the country have been keeping the wires hot in Mr. Carlton's offices in the Times Building.

It had not been intended to release "The Romance of the Air" until a careful advance publicity campaign should be worked out, but such favorable reports of the pictures were circulated that it was given a showing for S. L. Rothapfel even before the last title had been written. Mr. Rothapfel booked the picture immediately, leaving only two days for the final cutting and assembling.

"A Romance of the Air" was personified in this form in two hundred newspapers of the United States and is fast rivalling in popularity Guy Empey's "Over the Top." Many of the amazing and tremendously exciting true experiences related by Hall in his book have been skilfully reproduced in the picture which is by far the most faithful portrayal of actual air fighting ever shown on the silver screen.

An exhaustive publicity campaign is now being planned by Mr. Carlton and an announcement of the plans for releasing this production will be given out by the En L'Air Cinema, Ltd., this week. The business offices of the En L'Air Cinema, Ltd., are on the 12th floor of the Times Building.

Influenza Hampers Much Studio Work

The influenza epidemic has greatly hampered production of the several companies who have continued at work owing to an order of the health department of Los Angeles, which provides that masks should be worn by all members of the producing organizations, and that no producing unit should consist of more than sixteen people working together at one time, unless a special permit for use of a greater number was issued by the health department. The wearing of masks must be complied with both at the studio and on exterior location about the city or county, at all times except when the players are appearing before the camera while the actual scenes are being made.

All companies working on exterior location within the county have been required to notify the police department, and have a member of the police force accompany the players. This step is taken to insure that an officer will be present to prevent the gathering of any crowd during the epidemic, and thus aid in preventing the spread of the disease.

Sylvia Day Returns to the "Frolic"

Sylvia Day, ingenue lead in a number of comedies produced on the Coast, has returned to New York and to her old love, Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," although she is doing some film work the other twenty-three hours of the day. Miss Day's first picture was with Bill Parsons, the Goldwyn comedian, in "Birds of a Feather." Subsequently she attracted Henry Lehrman's attention, and so she joined the Fox comedy company, appearing in "Roaring Lions on a Midnight Express" and "The Fatal Marriage," among others.

E. and R. to Sell Foreign Rights

Announcement was made this week by Messrs. Edwards and Rouman, owners of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company with studios, office and laboratories in Los Angeles, that they will dispose of foreign rights on twenty single reel comedies featuring Napoleon and Sally, the chimpanzees. The list includes such well known subjects as "From Jungle to Trouble," "Two Chimps and a Chump," "Teacher's Pet," "Jungle Brats," "Haunted," and others.

All of these comedies have been remade to a more or less extent, with many new scenes. The titles and sub-titles have all been remade and brought up to date. When E. & R. Comedies were first introduced, they made a very satisfactory impression on the entire trade. There is nothing like them on the market to day, inasmuch as they feature the only educated chimpanzees that have appeared in pictures. The two chimps, Napoleon and Sally, impersonate people in all of the films.

Desmond Begins Work for Hampton

William Desmond, who has been in the East for the past month and a half, has returned to Los Angeles to commence work under his new contract with Jesse D. Hampton.

R. William Nell, who directed most of the Dorothy Dalton-Paramount pictures for Thomas H. Ince will direct Desmond's first product which carries the temporary title of "For the Love of William."

The Desmond pictures will be distributed in this country, as well as abroad, by the Robertson-Cole company.

Jesse Hampton has just put the finishing touches to a big special feature with J. Warren Kerrigan in the chief role. It is called "The End of the Game."

Lee A. Ochs Returns to New York

Vice-President of United Picture Theatres of America Reports Excellent Success on His Pacific Coast Tour

HAVING completed a tour extending to the Pacific Coast in the interests of the exhibitor-members of United Picture Theatres of America, Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of that organization has returned to his executive desk in the Mecca building.

"In the three months that formed the period of my tour," said Mr. Ochs, "much of importance has transpired in the film world and it has been an enlightening and extraordinarily interesting experience to gather the views and different shades of opinion entertained by exhibitors in general on those topics throughout the breadth of the country.

"United is now not only vigorously strong from the point of membership but, and as a result of that strength, already has a splendid nucleus of stars under contract and pictures on the point of release. To have organized United into its present position, to have brought together our present strength of exhibitor members and already to have in readiness to serve those members such product as "The Light of Western Stars," and "Adelie" and "A Man in the Open" about to be completed by Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum respectively—all this progress is regarded by the many exhibitors whom I met and talked with as no mean accomplishment in the young history of United, and as a gratifying indication and sign of United's success.

"In the list of theaters—and it is a long one—that have embraced United principles and United membership during the past three months appears the new 'California' theatre to be opened this month in Los Angeles, and the Rialto theatre in San Francisco, and Turner & Dahmen's 3500 seating theatre in Oakland.

"A visit to the Brunton studios in Los Angeles showed Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum hard at work upon their United superpictures under the personal supervision of Mr. Brunton."

Brunet Praises Director of Gaby Deslys Film

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., declares that Louis Mercanton who directed the Special Feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, has reached an artistic achievement in presenting this picture, produced by the Eclipse Film Company.

Pathe has planned a specially active campaign for "Infatuation," which will be released the week of December 1.

The advertising material includes posters, one sheet, two 3 sheets, six and 24 sheet; portrait slide in colors, two 2 column scene cuts, line cuts, ad sheet, two 1 column portrait cuts, Gaby Deslys and one 2 column cut of the star; sets of 12 black and white photographs of star and scenes, 22 x 28 sepia of star, lobby display in sepia, 3 styles of large hand-colored portraits for lobby use.

The campaign book of "Infatuation" will have a cover design in three colors, the portrait of Gaby Deslys in the 24 sheet being reproduced. In it will be bound a one sheet, four-page insert on calendered paper, made up of half tone cuts of Gaby and selected scenes from the play.

Los Angeles Sidelights

CHARLIE CHAPLIN began work on his new production Monday, November 4, a title for which has not yet been selected. The picture will be of the rural order, however, and Chaplin spent several days in the farm lands of Southern California making friendly advances to the cows, horses, chickens and ducks as well as establishing friendly relations with the pump handle and farming implements. At the Chaplin Studio work is progressing rapidly on the many sets required in the making of this picture, which will require many weeks.

Charles H. Christie, general manager of Christie Film Company, will leave in a few days for a trip, which will include all the principal cities of the country, in the interest of Christie comedies.

There were some wet and chilly actors around the Henry Lehman Sunshine Comedy studio the first few days in November. A company under the direction of William Campbell had been working on a water comedy which required the players to work in water for several hours each day. During the hot spell work was generally sought by the members of the cast, but with a sudden drop in the temperature of Los Angeles water scenes were far from popular. Billie Ritchie was among the lucky ones. The comedian completed his aqualiary work before the cool weather appeared, but some of the supporting cast were not so fortunate.

Henry Lehman, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, has engaged George Ovey to enact leading roles. Vera Stedmam will play opposite to Ovey in his first comedy. Work will be started shortly by Charles Avery and Billy Watson, who will co-direct the farce. Hampton Del Ruth cooperated with Mr. Lehman in the preparation of the script.

Alfred Reeves is again the manager of Charlie Chaplin's interests. Years ago Reeves, who came from England with Chaplin in Fred Karno's "Night in a London Music Hall," became manager of the company while Chaplin played in the cast. Later Reeves, who is a brother of Billy Reeves, came with Charlie and after a visit to his home in England returned to America and again became the emporium of the comedian. On November 1 Mr. Reeves was made manager of the Chaplin studio.

Tom Mix, who has been a patient at the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, returned to his home, 5841 Carlton Way, on Thursday, November 7. Mix had an operation performed on his left knee. Years ago while in Texas he was shot and the bullet flattened against the bone. The wound healed and for a long time the actor suffered no inconvenience. For several months the knee began to give trouble and early in October he decided to have the cause removed. He went to the hospital where he spent several weeks.

Metro Announces Plans for New Studio

Announcement has been made of the completed plans for the big new studio to be established at Hollywood, Cal., by the Metro Pictures Corporation, and work on its construction was begun this week. The new studio will be situated at Romaine street and Cahuenga avenue and will occupy an entire block. The site for the new studio is diagonally opposite the present studio, which is to be retained by the company. The two big studios will give ample facilities for all of the Metro forces, as all of the pictures of this concern are to be made in Los Angeles hereafter.

The administration building will be erected on the new site and will front on Romaine street. It is to be of Colonial style of architecture and impressive in appearance. There will be three large stages, two open and one enclosed. The open stages will be 70 by 100 feet and the enclosed stages, for "light effects," will have an area of 70 feet by 195 feet. There will also be four projecting rooms.

Arrangements will be made for fifty dressing rooms, including the elaborate apartments to be occupied by the stars to the less pretentious rooms used by the extra people. An important feature will be a complete carpenter shop and mill, electrically equipped. For the technical department and scenic artists there will be ample accommodations with huge paint frames.

One of the first sets likely to be built upon the new site will be an elaborate Asiatic market place and street scene, as a background for Mme. Nazimova's first picture to be made on the West Coast. This picture is "The Red Lanterns." A restaurant of the cafeteria style will be built and equipped by the company on the new site, so that executives, stars, players and other employees will not be obliged to leave the grounds for meals.

Entirely Different Ones

Owing to confusion that has arisen in the past, Elliott J. Clawson, scenario editor at Universal City, has issued a formal statement to all screen writers that the Universal Scenario Corporation, a Los Angeles enterprise, has no connection whatever with the scenario department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Robertson-Cole Closes Foreign Deal

Robertson-Cole closed a deal last week for the series of eight J. Warren Kerrigan pictures for France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt.

Norma Talmadge Returning to New York

A message received at the Norma Talmadge Studios, at 318 East Forty-eighth street, this week stated that Miss Talmadge, her director, Sidney A. Franklin; Thomas Meighan, Gladden James and other members of her company would start for New York on November 12th, having finished "The Heart of Wetona," Miss Talmadge's next production.

Miss Talmadge intends to stop off at the Grand Canyon a day or two to get one or two location scenes for the following picture, "The Probation Wife." She will produce in the East for the winter, and following "The Probation Wife" will do a series of original stories by Eugene Walter, the playwright.
Re-Made Film Deceptions Scored

Adolph Zukor Scores Deception of Public in Exploiting Re-made William Hart Films as New Productions

As an evidence of the extreme lengths to which certain unscrupulous purveyors of re-made film productions will go in order to humbugg the public, and as an example of the effect such methods have upon those whose confidence they have outraged, a letter published in the last issue of Photoplay Magazine without comment is deemed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be worthy of attention.

The letter in question is signed by a St. Louis man, S. M. DeHuff, who evidently has been sadly deceived by mis-representations concerning some of William S. Hart’s pictures made before Hart became identified with Artcraft Pictures. The letter, which are now being put out as new pictures in the face of every kind of protest from Mr. Hart himself,” said Mr. Zukor.

Mr. DeHuff’s letter follows:

Have the photoplay industry’s gigantic breakers of success petted out into rivulets of a catch-penny affair? Is it possible that producers have reached that point where it becomes necessary to fleece public out of a gullible public by deliberate misrepresentation, or, to use a more applicable term, by false pretense?

“Permit me to explain my ravings.

“Some evenings ago in our little city (which is not too small) where we are not accustomed to the best in moving pictures) I paused in front of one of our theatres to study the posters. A canvas flashed across the entrance bearing the following inscription:

“Wm. S. Hart Pictures Corp. present Wm. S. Hart, supported by all star cast including Robert Edeson and Rhea Mitchell in ‘The Preacher and the Bandit.’

“Puzzled, yet interested in the incomparable cast, I was possessed of a vague feeling that something was amiss. And at some time in the distant past I had seen that picture before. The feeling could not be dispelled, yet, curiously, I was unable to resist and entered, incidentally paying twenty cents for that privilege. After witnessing two reels of the picture I left the theatre. Just two, or possibly three years previously I had seen the same picture: only that at that time it was produced by Triangle and entitled ‘On the Night Stage.’

“At another in our city there is advertised for production in the near future a picture entitled ‘A Lion of the Hill,’ with a cast consisting of Hart, Markey, Mitchell and Swayne and sponsored by a concern calling itself The Sunset Pictures Corp. I fear I shall have to do my bit toward defraying the rental of said picture if only to learn just when, under what title and how many years previous I have seen the same picture.

“Again, Mr. Quirk, is it possible that a concern that has been in existence but a few months (The Wm. S. Hart Pictures) would be so unscrupulous as to lend its name to a picture several years old and masquerading under a second title with no other object than to deliberately mislead the public to whom it owes its welfare?

“Is it possible that Hart and Inc., themselves, have arrived at that stage where they are deluded into believing the public wants them at any cost or under any conditions?

“That expression of Barnum’s about the great American public taking delight in being humbuggged doubtless still holds good but there arises in my swelling apparatus an unwelcome obstruction when I think to what a plane the greatest of all American amusement institutions has deteriorated.

“But perhaps, my dear Mr. Quirk, like a well-known cereal, ‘there’s a reason’ for it all.”

Commenting upon the above letter, Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said: “If the statements made by the writer are correct — and I can see no reason to doubt what he says — certain parties are guilty of flagrant misrepresentation. Mr. Hart has suffered probably more than any other star in pictures from this form of piracy, for while the industry generally is aware that he is being victimized, it is a difficult matter to acquaint the public with the truth. Mr. Hart wired me requesting that I deny for him any connection on his part with the distribution of the pictures in question. Moreover, I can say the same for Mr. Inc. The presentation quoted — if correctly quoted — is manifestly an attempt at cheap deception through playing upon the name of Mr. Hart’s present producing organization. If any such company as ‘Wm. S. Hart Pictures Corp.’ exists, Mr. Hart has no connection with it. The name of his producing organization is ‘William S. Hart Productions, Inc.’ I trust that exhibitors will help us in our efforts to wipe out this evil practice. They can at least decline to pass along the deception to the public, and by so doing will enhance their reputations for honesty and fair dealing with their patrons.”

Three Misses in New([])

Sylvia Day, Formerly Ingenue in Fox-Lehman Comedies, Now Returned to Work in the East
J. S. Woody Promoted by Select

Former Field Manager of Select Pictures Corporation Is Made General Sales Manager, with Offices in New York

J. S. WOODY, former field manager for Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed by General Manager Arthur S. Kane to the more important position of General Sales Manager, with offices in the Home Office at New York. Mr. Woody is a Seattle man and is known to many motion picture exhibitors and producers of the country, having had a long career as a distributor.

New York exhibitors will recall Mr. Woody as Sales Manager of the New York Triangle Branch, while the Chicago trade will also remember him, as he managed the Triangle Branch in that city.

Out on the Pacific Coast, which is Mr. Woody's old stamping ground, he is perhaps better known than in any other place. In 1912 he started with the General Film Company where he worked in varying capacities from salesman to District Manager, changing later to Mutual where he held the same office, that of District Manager.

It was while he was working with Triangle that General Manager Kane appointed him Pacific Northwest General Manager for Select. It was only shortly afterward that he was made Field Manager, and then comes his latest, jump to General Sales Manager.

“Collier’s” Confirms

FROM the Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West 42nd Street, New York, the publicity department points to a statement by President Paul H. Cromelin printed in last August which Collier’s Weekly, in a special article on the international value of the motion pictures, sees fit to verify as it stands.

Mr. Cromelin’s August statement in this paper was occasioned by the remarks of Chairman Hurley of the U. S. Shipping Board before the National Security League of Chicago. Commenting on this speech, Mr. Cromelin said in Motion Picture News:

“Chairman Hurley declares that this merchant marine must not be allowed to go to rot in peace time. He told the assembled business men that they must plant American wares so successfully in the foreign market that all the new ships would keep busy. Meanwhile the American film is acting as publicity agent for this superb idea. It is showing in all neutral lands, familiarizing them with American success tools. The demand for these tools exists wherever ambitious men are forging to the front. This, I think, takes in every land! Establish American supremacy thus and the orders for American goods will flow in. And what channel other than our films could get such a result? A paid advertising campaign that would attain anything like it would cost our manufacturers a billion dollars.”

This point is taken in its entirety by Mr. Woody broke into the motion picture business back in 1911, under the direction of Mr. Kane, when the latter was Special Representative for the General Film Company in Seattle. His present field of endeavor will carry him to every Select Branch in the country, although six months of the year will be at his desk in the Home Office. The remainder of his time will be divided equally among the different branches.

Declares Custom House Should Be Thanked

“The export division of the New York Custom House deserves a vote of thanks from the film exporters of America,” declares one of the officials of the Department of Motion Pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company.

“General war conditions had necessarily made the work of the Custom House one beset with tremendous difficulties and problems. The restrictions which were made were, of course, necessary to the conduct of the war. The enemy might easily have obtained valuable knowledge through films, for instance. That was but one of the many problems of the Custom House.

“But, through all the months of our participation in the war, the New York Custom House has gone about its business thoughtfully and understandingly. I wish to especially compliment Deputy Collector Lamb. He is entitled to a great deal of credit for the admirable handling of the film export problem. In the days when the war-time rules made the conduct of business irksome Mr. Lamb always did his utmost to facilitate matters and aid the exporter.

“He has met the exporter fairly and squarely. Never once has he deviated from his policy of making the exporting of films as easy as possible. The Robertson-Cole Company has appreciated Mr. Lamb’s handling of the situation.”

Inter-Ocean Corrects an Error in Sales Item

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation recently notified Motion Picture News that Messrs. Brock and Schlesinger of its sales staff had sold “Inside the Lines” in England.

This was due to a typist’s error, Managing Director John H. Taylor of London Inter-Ocean having really handled the negotiation with Gropper’s Exclusives, purchasers of the British rights.

The Fifth Rainbow Comedy Is Released

With a new subject every other week, the Rainbow Comedies, made at the United States Motion Picture Corporation’s studios in Wilkes Barre, have now reached their fifth release as a General Film offering. The current Rainbow picture is “The Camouflaged Baby,” and the favorites of this series, Lillian Vera and Eddie Boulton, are in the leading roles.

Production of Rainbow Comedies is said to be well ahead of schedule, since the next November subject and the first December subject are ready and only await the date of release.

Reports to General Film Company indicate that the nature of the Rainbow single-reels already distributed makes them very acceptable to exhibitors. The titles are: “Nearly a Slacker,” “Some Judge,” “My Lady’s Slipper” and “How She Hated Men.”
“Let the people know about the Lusitania. Made wonderful record Sunday. People more than satisfied.”

The YELLOW DOG

Produced Direct From Henry Irving Dodge's Great Saturday Evening Post Story

In the greatest patriotic drama ever produced you'll see the fiend that takes American pay by day and earns his German master's filthy murder wage by night.

You'll see the slackers and the klackers—Americans. You'll see the spies and the incendiaries—Germans. You'll see the man who knocks Liberty Bonds and defends the sinking of the Lusitania. You'll see the man who tells tales of the Government that he cannot prove and idle, gossiping women—their tongues klacking poison. You'll see them all woven into a vivid drama that for sheer human interest has never been surpassed. The story of a 100% American who routed the yellow dogs in a 25% American town, the most realistic picture ever screened.

The Most Talked of Picture in America

This tremendous photodrama will make you swell with pride, and droop with shame; it will make you laugh for joy and grit your teeth with rage; it will convey its triumphantly patriotic message to you by telling a big dramatic story in a manner that will grip and thrill you to the core.

What Goldwyn Is Doing

SEVEN producing units will be at work making Goldwyn productions by November 18, according to plans perfected by A. Lehr, vice-president and general manager of the Goldwyn Film Corporation, who with many of his producing staff, numbering thirty in all, has arrived in Los Angeles. As recently stated in Motion Picture News, the Goldwyn Company has leased the Culver City studios built by Thomas H. Ince, from the Triangle Film Corporation, and took possession of the plant on November 1. Preceding the arrival of Mr. Lehr and party, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore arrived in Los Angeles. The Moore Company has been at work two or more weeks, and have produced, under the direction of Harry Beaumont, the first western made subject titled “The Tenderfoot.”

Owing to illness of Mae Marsh no work has been begun by the company which she heads.

The officers accompanying Mr. Lehr are Hugo Ballin, art director; Mason Liston, manager of Production; Joseph Cohen, business manager; Leon Britton, assistant to casting director Clifford Robertson; Director Reginald Barker, who has just completed filming four Goldwyn plays starring Geraldine Farrar, and Clarence Badger, who has been directing Mabel Normand.

Tom Santschi arrived early this week and Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Milton Sills and others are expected within a few days. J. G. Hawks, recently engaged as head of the scenario department, has taken up this work and will have plays for all companies in readiness within a week or ten days.

Brunton Studio Notes

CHANGE of title for the first Matzene Production starring Mme. Vorska has been announced, and this photoplay will be named “The Infernal Snare” instead of “The Infernal Net.” Story for this was written by Mme. Bernhardt in French, and the French word in her title means either net or snare. The former was preferred by the producer, but on suggestion from Mme. Bernhardt the name has been changed. Continuity was written by Jack Cunningham. The producing company, which is under the direction of David Hartford, expect to complete work this week.

Filming of the second Kitty Gordon play for United, adapted from a story by William Anthony McGuire, with continuity

ACTIVITIES in production work generally were under way in Los Angeles studios about November 18, but the complete producing organizations will not all be working until early in December, according to plans of practically all of the studios who closed down recently pending the opening of theatres throughout the country. By extending the time to this date, it will be possible for all units to delay production at least one month. In the meantime, the technical staffs of the several studios will be put to work so that everything will be in readiness for production.

The close-down has not affected the producing organizations of the Thomas H. Ince studios, the Mack Sennett Paramount Comedy plant, Griffiths organization, the Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet companies. With but one or two exceptions the several companies working on leased space at the Brunton studios continued activities. This list includes Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon of the United, Bessie Barriscale, Mme. Vorska and the Mission Productions, Inc. The Vitagraph Company closed its plant for two weeks only, and eight companies resumed work Monday of this week.

by Jack Cunningham, was put in production by Director Wallace Worsley this week. Mahlon Hamilton plays the role opposite the star in this drama of society and the underworld and W. Lawson Butt has been cast for the third point of the triangle.

Vitagraph Close-ups

A NOther bright, animated spot in the Hollywood film colony is the Vitagraph plant on Talmadge avenue. Eight companies begun work Monday, November 4, after several weeks suspension.

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond have gotten started on their new vehicle, "The American Ace." Nell Shipman is working on the continuation of the two-reel Wolfville pictures under her new director, Otto Lederer. William Duncan has started his new picture, a title for which has not yet been selected. Antonio Moreno and Carol Halloway have begun to film the new serial, "The Iron Test." Bessie Love and Frank J. Glendon are very busy in the midst of making "The Enchanted Bond," which will be the next release of M. P. M.

There are three comedy companies hard at work. Montgomery and Rock will shortly announce the title of their new production, while Larry Semon is shooting "Pluck and Plotter," which will be completed about the middle of December.

Paramount-Arcraft

CHARLES RAY, under the direction of James Storm, is putting the finishing touches to "Greased Lightning" at the Thomas H. Ince studios. This production may not be released until January, but preliminary exhibitions of the film will be arranged the latter part of November.

Dorothy Dalton is busily at work under the direction of Victor Schertzinger at the Ince studios, on a new picture, the title for which has not been announced. The story is by John Lynch and concerns a woman of the large city with an insatiate desire for clothes, who lives beyond her husband's means. She finally brings about his ruin. A dream forecasts for her the crisis and thus warned she fortifies herself for a supreme sacrifice. Thus in her husband's eyes she redeems herself for all her past selfishness. In the supporting cast are Charles Clary, leading man; J. Barney Sherry, Donald Macdonald and Phil McCullough.

At the Griffith Studios

A CHANGE has been made with respect to the release of D. W. Griffiths Aircraft subjects, and now it is definitely stated that "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be the next release, coming early in December, instead of "The Romance of Happy Valley." The former subject has Lillian Gish and Robert Harron as principals.

Mr. Griffith has begun work on his fourth Arcraft contribution, as yet unnamed. This will be a noteworthy release inasmuch as Mr. Griffith promises that it shall contain the first pictures made under the new process which give a stereoscopic effect on all close-up scenes. His experimental laboratories have been working on this process for a long time and now have it so well perfected that the producer feels certain of the results, and will introduce effects made possible by these experiments.

The propaganda film on which Mr. Griffith has been working for months is not to be an Arcraft release because it became known this week. How it will be handled is yet to be decided. The subject will consist of probably eight reels, and a unique feature is that every member of the cast has brown or dark eyes. Included in the players are Robert Harron, Richard Bartholomus, Carol Dempster, a Los Angeles girl; Claire Seymour, who has been in comedy; George Fawcett, Kate Bruce, Adolph Lestine, Syn de Condi and others.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE exact date for the postponed meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has not yet been definitely set. Due to the influenza the meeting in Cleveland scheduled for October twenty-first and twenty-second was cancelled. The original plans will be carried out during the latter part of November and it is hoped that the Society may benefit by the postponement by having a larger attendance.

There is one question of considerable importance which will be taken up at the coming session. This deals with the appointment of a committee to wait upon the Fuel Administration. This committee is an important one as it can be of active and immediate help to the Government purely in an advisory capacity as fuel saving will be as necessary for a considerable time after peace is declared as it is now.

The Society in the past has been quietly working within the industry for improvements which, though coming slowly, are bound to be brought about in the end. Now is the time for us to show to those on the outside that the society is an organization which is in a position to do things—with a membership which, through its trained and technical men, can be of service to the Government in a way which is impossible of accomplishment through any other branch of the industry.

This committee must be composed of men versed in illumination—current control—and other technical branches which fall directly under and relate to the Fuel Administration’s activities.

Motion Picture News, under date of October 19, published a list of recommendations for the saving of current which in turn if carefully carried out will have a far-reaching effect upon the fuel supply. These recommendations were sent to the Fuel Administration and from acknowledgments which have been received were considered timely.

The Fuel Administration has gone further and expressed a desire to go into the matter more exhaustively. This can and will be done though we personally feel that here is an opportunity for the Society to take hold of an important question and cooperate in such a way that it will rebound permanently to its credit. One thing, however, must be remembered and that is that any committee which is appointed must be named with the idea of including only men fitted by training directly for the undertaking. The committee must not be cumbersome as the recommendations which it will be called upon to make will be definite, and only certain branches of the membership are in a position to make them, with a minimum of waste energy.

The tendency of the motion picture industry is to pull out the “old axe” and “have a grind” every time the opportunity arrives. This, thus far, has not happened in any way in connection with the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and we feel sure that if it will not, therefore, we hope this committee will be elected or appointed with all possible haste, in the regular way, in order that it may be organized and in working order with the least possible delay.

Another matter of interest to the industry at the coming meeting of the Society is that the annual election of officers will be held. For this reason it is our hope that every member of the Society will be present. The plans for the coming year will be discussed at length, and should prove not only interesting but of the utmost value.

The papers which are to be presented at the coming meeting will be presented and distributed by the President of the Society, C. Francis Jenkins, 712 Eleventh Street, Washington, D. C., prior to the meeting so that all members should come to the meeting prepared to discuss the various subjects from every angle. We would suggest that this be done carefully by all, for by this method alone can the full value be gotten out of them.

Special Notice

Although it is above stated that the Cleveland meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers had been indefinitely postponed; we learn, at the instant of going to press that the meeting will be held on Monday and Tuesday, November 18 and 19.

The Society’s headquarters, during the Cleveland meeting will be, as previously announced, the Hotel Winton, and in addition to its executive sessions the Society will be entertained by the National Lamp Works and the National Carbon Co., whose vast plants will also be open for the inspection of the visiting members.

Operators

Thus far since announcing the prize competition for articles on various subjects connected with projection we have had several letters and the assurance of considerable interesting data.

These letters, however, have not been as numerous as we would like and we feel sure that there is much latent ability which has not as yet come to the surface. We suggest that every man in the industry who feels capable of handling these subjects at once sit down and prepare the data in the form of an article and send it in.

Communications of this kind should be sent to Mr. A. S. Cory, Editor of the Projection Department. If any one has any questions to ask as to added details he should write at once.

E. K. Gillett.
Perplexities of Projector Optics

Mr. A. G. Smith, Dresden, Tenn., propounds the following series of questions:

"I use 110 volts from the line through a compensator with no name plate and five throws, which, I judge, range from 20 to 60 amps, and I have to use it on the last two throws to get enough current. No amper or volt meters in town, so I can't make a test. The house meter reads 100 V. 50 Amp. 60 Cycles."

"The throw is about 64. The distance from front condenser lens to aperture plate is 20½" and the lamphouse as far back as the frame will let it go. I use two 65½" plano-convex condensers and it is about 3½" from the center to base condenser. Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens 4" E.F. Diameter of lens about 2". Shutter 2¾" from front of objective. The shutter has two blades. Size of picture about 11' wide. Powers 6A machine.

"Question: When I hold a card in front of the lens about 3" away from shutter I seem to get the smallest circle of light; shall we then shut the whole to there? And why is it smaller than right at the lens? I get more flicker than I like. Can you suggest any changes? I get pretty good light on the screen when the current is good. Have a bought screen, which looks like it was painted with aluminum. What is a good thing to dust or clean it with? There are two splines in it and they show plainly. My pictures move sideways at times, like it was in the film. I have lined everything up and intermittent sprocket seems tight enough sideways, allowing for expansion. Now the tension shoes can be shaken from side to side quite a little, and it seems to me dirty film might cause them to shift from side to side. Outline the number causes me much worry. I publish a diagram of the light from the arc to the screen, where it crosses the image, etc. I have talked to several operators in these small towns and not one could tell me for sure if the light crossed itself between the condenser lenses and aperture, or if it was crossed between the two condensers. Where and what is the aerial image, and where and how do you find the dissolving point. How do you find out how far the lamphouse should be from the aperture? What is a multiple reel?"

In reply: Our correspondent has favored us with well nigh complete information concerning the present adjustment of his projector optical system, and we are therefore enabled to set him right without indulging in extensive conjecture or the base assumption of some weird assumptions regarding optical action, which are not at all in conformity with the laws and facts of the subject.

When the condensers are sufficiently close to the aperture to supply the maximum illumination which can be collected and transmitted by the objective, it will be frequently found that the rays issuing from the front of the objective are diverging, and in these cases the same result is produced, for any correspondent at a short distance in front of the objective, with his present arrangements, will not longer be in evidence. We will return, further on, to the consideration of the best distance from the objective at which to locate the shutter, but in reply to the correspondent's query as to how he can regulate the flicker in his picture; this results from the use of the two-wing shutter and would not be improved by the installation of a three-winger when the current is 60 cycle A.C., because the three-wing shutter gets in synchronization with the current alternations at most every useful projecting speed, and a stroboscopic pulsation results which is even worse than the flicker with the two-wing shutter. The only methods by which the correspondent can, therefore, reduce the flicker, so long as he uses the A.C. arc as light source, are (1) to increase the projecting speed, which is not conducive to a proper interpretation of the action in most pictures, or (2) to reduce the brightness of the projected picture, which may or may not be admissible, according to the circumstances.

Not knowing the make of the metallic coated screen used, we could not definitely advise as to how it should be refinished, but any attempt on the part of the correspondent to recoat it would probably end in disaster. It is claimed, however, by the makers of most all types of metallic-surface screens, that these surfaces may be cleaned by washing with soap and water. If the screen appears to be dirty, we would suggest the experiment of carefully and evenly washing the surface, which should considerably increase its reflecting power. Unless the washing operation is painstakingly and slowly carried out, the screen will show dirty streaks, due to uneven application of the soap and water.

Regarding the occasional sidewise movement of the picture on the screen, this could fairly be blamed upon the films, if of rare occurrence, but if it is frequently noticeable, the adjustment or mode of installation of the projector is surely at fault. The correspondent's report of his intermittent movement adjustment appears rational, and we can assure him that sidewise play in the tension shoes would hardly be responsible for sidewise movement of the picture on the screen, as the forward pressure (exerted by the shoes) on the film is, in general, the only function of the gate tension devices which has appreciable influence upon the projected picture. However, it may be that the correspondent's machine is not entirely anchored to the floor of his projection room, or that the floor itself is subject to vibration, and we recommend that he investigate these matters.

For the present we decline the invitation to publish a diagram showing the passage of the light rays from arc to screen, as it occurs in projecting motion pictures, but the exact characteristics and mode of action of optical projection systems have been the subject of our recent and precise investigation, the results of which will appear in due course, prefaced by a sketch of the real properties and action of lenses, which have not been taken into consideration by the majority of "light ray artists" who have published diagrams in the past.

Coming now to the "aerial image" and the "dissolving point," these delightful conceptions of the amateur theorists, these are, in a sense, one and the same thing, as the "dissolving point" of the projected beam is situated at the plane of the "aerial image." In simple language the facts are as follow:

For any object on one side of a positive lens there will be formed a corresponding real image at some distance from the other side of that lens. In the case of the motion picture projector the object is the bright surface of the front condenser lens (or some portion of that surface), as seen by the projection objective through the rectangular opening in the aperture-plate. An image of the bright forward condenser surface, as seen by the rear element of the projection objective, is therefore formed on the other side of the objective; that is, in space, out in front of the objective. As it is a real image, it can be received upon a screen, such as a white card or piece of paper held in the light beam, and the image thus thrown on the paper screen will be a faithful picture of what the rear component of the objective sees, looking backward through the picture aperture. In studying the form and size of the image received upon the paper in front of the objective, the diffused and scattered light surrounding it should be left out of consideration. This scattered light is due to reflections from the lens mounting and surfaces, and plays no part in the formation of the image under observation (the so-called "aerial image").

Now, according to the optical laws of conjugate foci or distances, the size of the "aerial image," and also its distance in front of the objective, will be governed by the distance between the front condenser surface and the objective; thus, the shorter the distance between the condensers and the objective, the further out in front of the objective will the "aerial image" be formed, and, likewise, the larger will the "aerial image" become.

It is, therefore, frequently not feasible to place the revolving shutter so that it cuts the projected beam at the exact position of this "aerial image," or "dissolving point," of the beam, but when the shutter is placed at this point the interesting effect is noted on the screen that, as soon as the shutter blade commences to cut the projected beam, the illumination commences to be reduced simultaneously all over the screen, and is so faint that the picture is not distinguishable before the shutter blade has passed entirely through the light beam. Thus the light is not cut off abruptly from one side of the picture to the other when the shutter blade intercepts the beam, but is diminished gradually in a manner similar to the dissolving action of an iris diaphragm, hence the origin of the term "dissolving point.

The reason for the simultaneous diminution of the screen illumination at all parts of the projected picture, when the shutter blade intercepts the projected beam at the plane of the "aerial image" (the so-called "dissolving point") does not appear to have occurred to the various experimenters on this dissolving effect, but we supply the explanation here, as it will doubtless interest all students of projector optics.

It is a fact readily capable of experimental confirmation that any single point on the front surface of the condenser system can project a complete image, or picture, of the entire arc crater, this picture of the crater being, in the case of the motion picture projector, the true spot, which, of course, is formed somewhere in front of the condenser system, and is a magnified picture of the arc crater. When such a spot, or true image of the entire arc crater, formed by the rays proceeding from but a small point or element of the front condenser surface, is examined, it is seen to be very feebly illuminated, as might be expected, since the light projected by all of the rest of the condenser surface has been sent off, and cannot contribute to the formation of the spot.

The ability of any small element, or point, on the surface of a lens to form a complete, although feebly illuminated, image of an object situated on the other side of the lens is a general and fundamental property of all lenses, and is not merely confined to the condenser system of an optical lantern, which is the case here under consideration.

Optics further shows us that the image of a luminous object formed by an optical system will be endowed with the characteristics of the object itself, so that we can expect the image of the front condenser surface which is formed in front of the projection objective (the "aerial image") to be possessed of all the characteristics of the luminous front condenser surface itself. Thus, as it is known that stopping down, or reducing the area of, the front condenser surface does not prevent it from forming a complete image, but merely lessens the intensity of the resultant image in exact proportion to the manner in which the operative lens surface is diminished, it is apparent that any point or portion of the "aerial image" (which behaves the same as the front condenser surface), can likewise form a complete picture on the projection screen, which picture will vary from the maximum brightness to vanishing intensity, according as the entire area of the "aerial image," or only a portion of its area, is sending rays to the screen. The shutter blade passing through the projected beam at the plane, or position, of the "aerial image" is thus seen to act the same as would a gradually closing iris diaphragm before the front condenser surface, and a complete image is still formed upon the screen so long as any portion of the "aerial image" is still unmasked by the shutter blade, but as the illumination of this screen image diminishes in direct proportion to the reduction in

DIRECT CURRENT Motion Picture Carbon

The Silvertip is the standard negative carbon for direct current projection. It is of small diameter and is heavily plated with metal to give it a high current carrying capacity. When used with the Columbia upper it gives a pure white light of high intensity.

The illustration below shows clearly the difference in size of the Silvertip negative and the old negative carbon. The great improvement in positive crater is also shown.

effective area of the "aerial image," the screen picture is so faint as to be hardly observable by the time the shutter blade has passed two-thirds of the way through the projected beam at the plane of the "aerial image," and the analogy between the action of the shutter blade cutting the beam at this point and the action of a granulator in fine disintegrating the condenser system completely accounts for the dissolving effect.

A study of the foregoing will convince the correspondent that the answer to his question as to how the proper lamphouse distance is determined will be best learned by experiment, and, as for his second query, "a multiple reel" is the highbrow term for a film subject which is in excess of 1,000 feet in length, and is therefore supplied on two or more film reels.

Movies Essential to Happiness of Men at Front

On November 6 the members of Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. had the pleasure of listening to an interesting talk by William Horton Foster, vice-president of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which organization has charge of all motion picture activities in the various army camps in this country and overseas. Mr. Foster is making an appeal for experienced operators for this service, as more are required in addition to the several hundred already employed.

Mr. Foster has a most intimate and complete knowledge of the overseas work of the Motion Picture Bureau, and he related a host of extraordinary experiences which befall the motion picture operators in the vicinity of the front line trenches, but the most convincing proof of the value of motion picture exhibitions to the jaded fighters is given by the boys themselves, as they are always hungry for new pictures and cheer the operator to the echo when he makes his regular appearance.

A letter recently received from one of these overseas operators, Mr. Harry E. Southard, who is a member of Local 306, gives an insight into the character of this work from the viewpoint of the operator. Mr. Southard's letter says:

"As to our work, there is no end of it. I am in charge of what is probably the largest area in France and am going night and day. We have no use for watches or clocks and though I am working harder than I ever did before, I enjoy it and would not change jobs with a bank president. That we are doing the most important work (aside from actual warfare) that is being done here, is pretty thoroughly recognized over here, though from letters I got it does not seem to be at home."

"I am going tonight to a little island where a few hundred men are without a canteen, without a 'V,' in fact, with nothing except my weekly visit. I must drive over the most impossible roads for hours to reach them, and tonight the trip will be made in a pouring rain and through mud hub-deep, but if you could see my reception when I arrive and they know they will get their movies, if you could see the send-off I get in leaving, you would know what appreciation really is and you would envy me my raincoat and my wet clothes, and you can well believe that when I feel those wet clothes off about 4 o'clock tomorrow morning and turn into my bed, I can go to sleep with a smile of real happiness. So if anyone tells you that there is anything more important to the soldier than his movies, you will know it isn't true."

"In closing I can only say that my one regret is that you and all my friends can't be here with me."

Cleveland Operators Active in Fourth Loan Drive

MOTION picture operators of Cleveland, no less than other members of the industry, devoted all of their time, during the recent Liberty Loan campaign, to stimulating and acquiring subscriptions. Frank Masak, Harry Holmden and Jack Pendergast constituted a committee of operators, which saw to it that ten operators were appointed every evening to direct the ten community shows that were given from the backs of army trucks in the different neighborhoods of the city. The men went on at 6 P. M. and worked under the most disadvantageous circumstances. They had to put up and take down their shows after each performance. They were salesmen when the occasion required, and they even took the stand and made speeches when the regular speakers failed to appear. Mr. W. E. Lusk, who had charge of the distribution of Liberty Loan films for the Fourth Federal Division, was enthusiastic in his praise for the help rendered the committee by the operators.

Local 306 Has New Headquarters

We are advised by Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., that they have vacated their former office in the Columbia Theatre Building and are now located in the Gaiety Theatre Building, No. 1547 Broadway, New York

A large suite of rooms has been acquired by the organization on the sixth floor of the Gaiety Building, which will greatly facilitate the transaction of its business affairs, this step having become necessary on account of the steadily increasing number of new members recruited from all over Greater New York.

The Reticulation of Gelatine

By S. E. SHEPPARD and F. A. ELLIOTT

Experimental Production of Reticulation

A TYPICAL case, which has the advantage of following ordinary photographic procedure, is as follows: A Seed 23 plate is "flushed," developed in a standard pyro soda developer for 4 min. at 80° F., then rinsed, and fixed in a standard hypo-bisulphite fixing bath at 80° F. Reticulation was then found to depend upon the temperature of the wash water as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Temperature</th>
<th>Reticulation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>70° F.</td>
<td>None</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80° F.</td>
<td>None</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>90° F.</td>
<td>Faint</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>100° F.</td>
<td>Strong</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Instead of water, stronger and more definite results were obtained by an after-treatment with the following solution:

- 50 cc. 95 per cent Ethyl Alcohol
- 40 cc. 5 per cent Formaldehyde
- 110 cc. Water

In this case the following factors may have played a part:
1. Prehardened gelatine in the emulsion.
2. Tanning agents produced in development.
3. Excess swelling pressure in hot developer, etc., and particularly in washing.

That reticulation can be produced by the combined action of both a swelling or softening agent and a hardening or anti-swelling agent to restrain this is shown by the production of reticulation by the following combinations:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Hardening Agent</th>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1.</td>
<td>Tannic Acid</td>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>3.</td>
<td>Chrome Acid</td>
<td>Hot Water</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4.</td>
<td>Mercuric Iodide</td>
<td>Potassium Iodide</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

All of these combinations produce reticulation, but 1 and 2 have only a theoretical interest, as they are difficult to control. The other two pairs are more susceptible of control, although it must be emphasized that in any case the balance between hardening and softening agents must be delicately adjusted, and that the measure of control is limited. Further, the occurrence or production of reticulation is in a very large degree dependent upon the nature of the gelatine. The so-called "hard" gelatines tend readily to reticulation, while the "soft" ones only give transient signs of it.

An experiment on this point gave the following results:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

The following results were obtained with combinations of softening and hardening agents 3 and 4:

| Chromic Acid and Hot Water | The solution of chromic acid is, of course, a well-known hardening agent for biological tissues. Working with 8 per cent hard gelatine, machine coated on glass, a 10 per cent solution of chromic acid at 20° to 22° C., followed by washing with water at 50° C., was found to afford the best conditions. Potassium Mercuric Iodide—The solution of mercurel iodide in potassium iodide known as Brücke's reagent was found to be a convenient starting point for use. According to the formula for this, 120 g. of mercurel iodide are to be dissolved in a solution of 50 g. potassium iodide in 500 cc. of water, and the whole diluted to 1000 cc. We found, however, that under these circumstances only about 72.6 g. of mercurel iodide could be dissolved at room temperature; nor was this result much affected by heating to 50° C. It should be noticed that these quantities are near to those necessary for the double salt, 2KHgI₂ or K₂HgI₄. In this combination, the softening agent is the iodide, or, more specifically the iodide, while the hardening or coagulating agent is the mercurel salt; or, again, the mercurel ion Hg²⁺. Attempts made to increase the proportion of mercury were without success. A saturated solution of potassium iodide at 18° to 20° C. was made, containing 128 g. of potassium iodide to 100 cc. of water, or 56.2 g. in 100 g. solution, which agrees fairly with the value 59 per cent at 20° C. given as the solubility in Landolt-Börnstein. This solution was saturated at 20° C. with mercurel iodide, taking up 64 g. In this the ratio of 2KI to HgI₂ is 0.69, whereas the actual double salt would call for 0.73. This solution was used as a saturated stock solution and Brücke's reagent is equivalent to 10 parts stock saturated plus 90 parts water.

Working with the 90 per cent saturated (Brücke's reagent) and hard gelatine, 8 per cent machine-coated, the following results were obtained:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Duration of Treatment</th>
<th>Effect</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>24 sec.</td>
<td>Small pock marks about 1 mm. apart produced in 24 sec. followed by reticulation which was much less on drying.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3½ min.</td>
<td>As before, but reticulation somewhat more persistent on drying.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 min.</td>
<td>As before, but with continued treatment reticulation became fainter and vanished on drying.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 min.</td>
<td>As before, but the whole surface finally softened and could not be dried, softening and running.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 min. After treatment</td>
<td>As chills 15 min. on ice, then immersed for 2 min. in 3 per cent formaldehyde. This conserved the reticulation.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

The formaldehyde after-treatment seems generally unnecessary with this agent to "fix" the reticulation. Using soft gelatine, 6 per cent solution machine-coated, and a wide range of concentration of the potassium mercurel iodide solutions, only slight and transitory reticulations were observed in the higher concentrations, giving way, however, to a general softening and liquefaction. Attempts to overcome this by preliminary hardening with formaldehyde were not successful. Prehardening with chrome alum showed better results. In the case of the mercury-potassium iodide combination, while it is not possible to increase the mercurel iodide ratio above a certain limit, other permanent or temporary hardeners may be added. In particular it was found that Brücke's reagent with the addition of 6 per cent of saturated Na₂SO₄ solution gave very fine, uniform reticulation.

Sodium sulfate used in the reticulation process makes the "grain" finer, while after-treatment with formaldehyde increases or conserves the depth of the wrinkles. An important conclusion from these experiments is that apparently reticulation may start in more than one way. Thus with the Brücke reagent, and with chrome acid followed by hot water, reticulation proper was generally preceded by the appearance of small pock-like markings of about 0.2 to 0.3 mm. diameter. These would sometimes align themselves in "streaks," and in any case spread the foci of the subsequent reticulation. On the other hand, in the reticulation produced by the use of hot water after development and fixation, these initial markings did not appear.

It is noteworthy that when the reticulating film contains developed silver particles—as in negatives after fixation—there is an apparent migration of the silver particles, the ridges becoming denser, the valleys much less dense or even quite clear.
The question arises, whether reticulation is simply a puckering of a sheet grown larger by lateral dilation, larger than the support boundaries, but retained on this by local adhesion, particularly at the edges, as is indicated in Fig. 4, or is a mosaic-like alteration of hardening and softening effects, the ridges being more swollen, the valleys more tamed, as suggested by Fig. 5.

It is evident that in the first case the excess in the ridges is simply due to the total thinning (by the lateral dilation) plus local thickening due to folding of the increasing sheet. In the other case, the greater density in the ridges would be due to an actual migration of silver due to tension, similar to that occurring on the drying of moisture spots, when the tension in drying softens the gelatine and forces the particles into the periphery of the spot. This effect is shown in Fig. 6, a drawing made by Mr. M. B. Hodgson from microscopical observations. In the latter case we should have in reticulation a great and increasing number of microscopic replicas of such "moisture spots," tending to run into each other and form one system, like cracks in a drying mass.

The theory of alternate softening and hardening, or of differential swelling, couples up readily with the fact already noticed that in many cases reticulation starts from a number of isolated points. When softening and tanning agents are present together in a gelatine gel, a certain amount of selective adsorption and differential diffusion will occur. A molecule or ion having a tannining action will tend to be adsorbed or fixed in situ, and its own specific diffusion will be hindered. Molecules or ions having a softening action may modify the action on tanning agents, but their diffusion will be facilitated by their hydrating and softening action on the gelatine.

It is easy to see that we should have then a condition of rhythmic coagulation of the gelatine very similar to that shown in the well-known Liesegang rings. In this latter case, when two salts which react to form a precipitate are allowed to diffuse together through a gelatine gel, the precipitate, such as silver chromate or silver halide, is not deposited uniformly, but rhythmically, in alternate rings or layers.

Actually it is observed that reticulation generally starts in one or more regions and fills up by the spread of these; in some cases from isolated foci. It seems then that reticulation in its earliest stage involves something like the nucleation of a crystallographic solution. In such a solution, crystallization may start either at nuclei already present in the solution or by the formation of new ones, but in the latter case there is required a higher degree of supersaturation for crystallization to start. At what point in such a solution or melt the first nuclei appear is a matter of pure chance and it is apparently much the same with the start of reticulation.

The Connection Between Reticulation and the "Graininess" of Negatives

In one important case where it is very probable that incipient reticulation is at work, foreign nuclei are available. This is in the case of the ordinary development of a photographic emulsion.

It is known that, apart from differences in emulsion, different developing agents and treatments affect the "graininess" of the developed image. By this is not to be understood the elementary plate grain, but such lumping in second order aggregates as is liable to be objectionable in projection. This granulation depends upon development, and in the same way, resolving power depends upon development and the developer.

It is hardly to be doubted that we have in this case a selective adsorption and differential diffusion of developers, producing what amounts to incipient reticulation, nuclei being formed by the developed silver particles, with their tendency to adsorb the colloidal reaction products of development, which have tanning or coagulating properties. Consideration of the great change in the swelling equilibrium shown on passing from an alkaline to an acid condition (Fig. 2) shows also that the operations subsequent to development are very likely to develop still further any sub-microscopic reticulation, and again to coarsen the "grain" of the image. It is hoped to follow this up experimentally when time permits, instruments having been devised for measuring both granularity and minute swellings.

The Sun-Light Arc

By J. Justice Harner

FROM time to time, we hear it said by producers, directors and cameramen, that while the Sun-Light Arc is a beautiful Light with an immense volume and value of color, having all the wonderful effects of pure sun-light, that it is good for exterior lighting only.

This wonderful Sun-Light Arc that illuminated Madison Square Garden, can also be used in a small set and for close-ups, with most wonderful artistic effects. This light can be shaded or directed from one source into many directions.

It is not necessary to use other lights for diffusing this light in either small or large sets. For this reason the volume of light is so vast that by placing a shutter over the face of the lens of this light, would cut out every particle of light. But having eight shutters on this light, which work independent of each other, these shutters can be opened at several different angles in order to direct a certain quantity of light on the subject desired or on a number of subjects at the same time.

The Sun-Light Arc Company extends an invitation to all producers to visit the Sun-Light Arc Company's office, and have their cameramen and director direct a scene in this small studio, which is 12 x 38, and make a test of close-ups and the various gradations of light obtained through this method of illumination.

It is bad policy to rely on hearsay. Test and give yourselves a practical demonstration of the workings of this light, and the results that may be suggested to you by this test, will set forever set all your doubts aside as to the efficiency of the Sun-Light Arc, in all kinds of lighting effects; interiors or exteriors.

Call up or write and make an appointment when you would like to make tests in our studio. Some of the illuminating successfully accomplished with most pleasing photography. Hotel Biltmore, M. P. D. C. Ball, 2 lights. Hotel Astor, 2 lights. Annual Pageantry Ball, showing 300 couples dancing. Metropolitan Opera House, 2 lights, used by Famous Players in Caruso picture.
What Is a Real Music Cue Sheet?

The experience which these men have gained cannot be duplicated by any other man claiming to be a musical film expert. By this statement we solely mean that they have the experience and ability to compile such a cue sheet of material that is available, practical for all combinations, and is not confined by personal tastes or limitations.

All musicians are aware that time and again the music which has been suggested by certain so-called experts can never be obtained for the combinations they desired, and as a glaring example, a certain ballad was suggested and when an effort was made to obtain same from the publisher, it was then learned that it was for voice only. Nevertheless, the gentleman had suggested it as the THEME for the picture to be played by the orchestra solely because he liked the ballad and made an orchestra for his own use, not even taking the trouble to find out whether it was published for orchestra or not.

Another example of gross incompetence in the preparation of musical cue sheets has just come to hand in Douglas Fairbanks's latest picture "HE COMES UP SMILING." It is suggested at the opening of the picture that "MARCH BIZARRE," by Walter Simon, be played for nine minutes. This composition consists of about eighty measures, the tempo being an allegro 2/4 which would possibly take about one minute and a quarter to play. Still we are told to play it for nine minutes. Later in the picture we are to repeat it for four and a half minutes and again for six and a half minutes. The projection of the entire picture is fifty-four minutes, so that we shall practically have twenty minutes of "March Bizarre," or play this number nearly twenty times during the performance of one production. Such is another example of why these pseudo professional music cue experts should be eliminated. It is logical to surmise that the gentleman who made this suggestion was not even acquainted with the length of this number, but perhaps might have heard it played at some time or other, thought it was a good composition and took a chance and stuck it in.

The majority of those compiling music cues are daily, like the horse race sport, taking chances, suggesting music from a catalog without having the ability, knowledge or opportunity of acquainting themselves with the compositions, and hence tearing down instead of building up an absolute requirement in the film industry, the association of good music with good pictures.

"Nipponese" Published by Fischer

"NIPPONESE," the Japanese dramatic theme writer for Sessue Hayakawa by Joseph O'Sullivan, Director of Music Service of Mutual, will be published by the Carl Fischer Music Publishing Co. of New York. Orchestrations, both full and small, will be available at an early date.

The piano transcription of two movements of this theme was used as a special insert with the press-book issued by Mutual on "His Birthright," the first Hayakawa Production. That this service was appreciated by exhibitors throughout the country was evidenced by the numerous letters received by Mutual requesting that orchestrations of the theme be sent without delay.

On account of the lack of characteristic Japanese music of dramatic mood, these dramatic themes should find a place in the library of every orchestra making a sincere effort to interpret motion pictures.

"Nipponese" was dedicated to Sessue Hayakawa by the composer, who has completed a Japanese Elegy, scored for full orchestra, which will be published in the near future.
Review of Latest Compositions

—"Kathleen," an allegretto, by S. M. Berg, might aptly be described as a surprise Waltz. The first movement is marked molto lento and is constructed to a recognized form of French waltzes. There is a pleasant surprise which occurs in the second movement and the trio from which the composition derives its name. The counter-point in the opening movement is of considerable interest to the musicians. Played in straight tempo, it is an excellent dancing waltz and with the markings noted, an entertaining concert number. It is also published for piano solo. This can be obtained from Belwin, Inc.

2—"Prudence" (Entr' acte) by Ernst Luz. A number in gavotte style, effectively arranged. Illustrates romance. Lends itself easily to different tempos, making it valuable for playing to the photoplay. A melodious number throughout. (Published by J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., New York City.)

3—"Source dans Le Desert," Idyl by Marguerite W. Horton. Some most interesting songs by this composer have already been published, and this new Orientea1 for piano is worthy of them. It is one of those exotically colorful bits of Eastern impressionism which, without making too great demands technically, allows intelligent interpretation and a skillful use of the pedals on the part of the pianist to secure a maximum of effect. (Published by G. Schirmer, 3 E. 43rd St., N. Y. C.)

4—"Love's Melody" (Reverie) by Shannon. A charming slow movement with a most delightful melody, most appropriate for love scenes. (Published by Vandersloot.)

5—"Astralita Serenade," by Mabel A. Whaley. A number which deserves to be owned by any orchestra leader or piano player. (Published by the Red Star Music Co., Red Star, Ark.)

6—"After the War Is Over," by James A. Casey. Leaders who are in search for something distinctly novel and pretty should send for this number which in its typical march rhythm is a sure success with any audience. (Published by the Echo Music Co., New York and Seattle.)

7—"Over the Top, Boys!" Patriotic march by S. M. Berg, found for its origin the well known adage, "Necessity is the mother of invention." When the musical expert made the score for the picture "Over the Top," in which Arthur Guy Empey starred, he found it necessary for the latter to have an original theme and so the above was created, which is an excellent allegro march theme, portraying plenty of enthusiasm and whole-hearted action to characterize the daredevil, Empey. (Published by Belwin, Inc., Columbia Thea., Bldg., N. Y. C.)

9—"When the Yanks Come Marching Home," One-step by Jerome and Furth. A worthy song to go with our great hit, "Over There." A wonderful over-night success. You never played a better dance for orchestra. (Published by Jerome Pub. Co., New York City.)

10—"Dramatic Recitative," by Sol P. Levy. One of the finest compositions recently published for heavy and dramatic situations. (Published by Crespi Music Co., Columbia Thea., Bldg., New York City, or Belwin, Inc.)

11—"At the Yankee Military Ball," fox-trot, by Harry Jenette. The most popular and most often requested fox-trot and exquisite dance number which every music lover will appreciate. (Leo Feist, 44th St., N. Y. C.)

12—"Blue Devils," by Sol P. Levy. One of the finest French patriotic marches that has ever been published. It is an exceptionally effective composition and a real "Waltz of the Flowers" number. It is also published for piano solo. This can be obtained from Belwin, Inc., Columbia Building, 47th St. and 7th Ave., N. Y. C.

Chicago House Buys Bartola

It was announced this week that the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of Chicago, has sold a large Bartola to A. Zilligen, Jr., at the Rosewood theatre, Chicago, and it is taking the place of a five-piece orchestra. The Bartola Company also sold a Bartola new style Grand to Neal Duffy, of Appleton, Wis. The latter is installing his instrument to take the place of a six-piece orchestra which he has had in his theatre for several years.

"UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE"

22—"Value Montgomery" (Valse Lent) by Rossy; T—"With recovered calm" (3 minutes, 5 seconds until) —T: "Don't you really know.

23—Theme (2 minutes, 30 seconds until) —T: "I am that very poor" —until END.

THE BARTOLA

Balaban & Katz of the Riviera and Central Park Theatres, Chicago, say every wide awake exhibitor should have a Bartola. Investigate it. Send for catalogue.

If you like the "News," write our advertisers: if not, tell us.
Gentlemen;—

Let me express my appreciation of the "Plan Book" department of the News. It is the most splendid aid ever offered for the intelligent billing of pictures.

Yours truly,

Geo. A. Bleich

Owensboro, Ky. Oct 22nd, 1918

Just One Reason Why Motion Picture News Dominates the Field
EDITOR’S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer’s opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of all exhibitors who have seen the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the “Flash-Backs,” being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ALL NIGHT (BLUEBIRD) CARMEL MYERS (NOV. 25) NOV. 2

“An out of the ordinary comedy drama that satisfies.”—M. P. News.

ANIEL CHILD (HODKINSON) KATHLEEN CLIFFORD (SEPT. 2)

APPEARANCE OF TIL THE (WORLD) JUNE EDG (OCT. 2)

“Excellent snapshot runs straight through.”—M. P. News.

ATOM, THE (TRIANGLE) PAULINE STARKE (SEPT. 15) SEPT. 21

“This is just an average subject.”—M. P. News.

BATTING JANE (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH (OCT. 6) OCT. 19

“Story appears to be a good plot lacks handling.”—M. P. News.

BEAKY (BLUEBIRD) EDITH ROBERTS (SEPT. 16) SEPT. 14

“Swift moving comedy, drama with fine suspense.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Good picture but business was poor.”

Consensus—“Excellent picture with good drawing power under normal conditions.”

BEHIND THE LINES IN ITALY (KLEINE) OFFICIAL (OCT. 7) OCT. 5

(Six Parts)

“Interesting film and shows what Italians are doing in industrial way.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“On second and last week, average business; picture good education, attracting big percentage of Italians.”

Consensus—“Satisfactory propaganda film.”

BELLS, THE (PATHE) FRANK KEENAN (NOV. 17) OCT. 5

“This shows Keenan in strongest part of his career.”—M. P. News.

BETTER HALF, THE (SELECT) ALICE BRADY (SEPT. 16) SEPT. 28

“Star in dual role of average picture.”—M. P. News.

BONNIE ANNIE LAURIE (FOX) PEKKY HYLAND (SEPT. 28)

“This will please at home story is original.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Did not please.”

“Did not even get film rental. This star is a loser.”

Picture satisfactory. Better than average program picture but epidemic has made accurate estimate of business impossible. Best work star has done yet.

Border Raiders, THE (PATHE) BETTY COMPSON (OCT. 4) OCT. 5

Border Wireless, THE (ARTCRAFT) W. S. HART (OCT. 4) OCT. 12

“This picture will surely add to star’s popularity.”—M. P. News.

Borrowed Clothes (JEWEL) MILDRED HARRIS (NOV. 28) NOV. 2

(Six Parts)

“Director Lois Weber scores again with this production.”—M. P. News.

BRAZEN BEAUTY, THE (BLUEBIRD) PRISCILLA DEAN (SEPT. 9) SEPT. 21

“This is truly a splendid production.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Priscilla Dean is to be reckoned with as a coming star. Her assets are brains, beauty, intelligence and personality. Liabilities, ‘scrambled’ hair that kills the effect of an otherwise beautiful woman. Slick it down Priscilla, there’s a good girl.”

Consensus—“Excellent production with big drawing possibilities if properly exploited.”

BURDEN OF PROOF, THE (SELECT) MARION DAVIES (SEPT. 21) SEPT. 21

By Hook or Crook (WORLD) CARYLE BLACKWELL (SEPT. 16) SEPT. 14

“Fine burlesque with thrilling stunt climax.”—M. P. News.

BY THE WORLD FORGOT (VITAGRAPH) NOVA-GLENDON (SEPT. 16) SEPT. 21

“Only an ordinarily good program offering.”—M. P. News.

CAILLAUX CASE, THE (FOX) TRAVERSE (SEPT. 15) OCT. 19

“Sensational French murder case treated intelligently.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Exceptionally good picture. Had no pulling power.”

Consensus—“Satisfactory production but theme has no great drawing power.”

COME ON IN (PARAMOUNT) SHIRLEY MASON (SEPT. 23) OCT. 5

“Half of feature is a scream and the other half a thriller.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Very good picture but poor business.”

DAUGHTER ANGELE (TRIANGLE) PAULINE STARKE (AUG. 23) SEPT. 1

DAUGHTER OF THE OLD SOUTH, A (PARAMOUNT) FREDERICK (NOV. 25) OCT. 26

“A well produced tale of the ‘wronged girl.’”—M. P. News.

DIPLOMATIC MISSION, A (VITAGRAPH) WILLIAMS (SEPT. 30) OCT. 5

“A fast one with a zippy hop to it.”—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—“Big picture. No plot and no business.”

Consensus—“Entertaining picture with only one bad report.”

EMBARRASSMENT OF RICHES, THE (HODKINSON) WALKER (SEPT. 21) OCT. 5

“A clean picture that should please star’s followers.”—M. P. News.

Consensus—“Average.”

Consensus—“Most excellent production with strong drawing power.”

"WOMAN"—MAURICE TOURNEUR

Artistic, Surely; But Maybe "Over Their Heads"

THAT this is an artistic production no one will deny. It is a tribute to the vivid imagination and unting seal of its creator, Maurice Tourneur.

Judged solely as an illustration of the technique and art of the motion picture it is a contribution worthy of unstinted praise. But, as explained in the Advance Review on page 2896, in the issue of November 9th, it is doubtful whether the story will prove popular. The story is episodic, and the theme consists in showing five arguments to convince the spectator of the bad influence of Woman, and a closing one in her favor.

Pretty women, beautiful scenes, and direction, which is that of a master, are the points that impress one during the seven reels of the production.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

George Moore said: "We men forget women for a little while, when we are thinking about art, but only for a little while. The legitimate occupation of man's mind is woman.

Maurice Tourneur, producer of "The Blue Bird," "Sporting Life," and "The Whip," has turned his hand to an entirely different picture in "Woman." "Woman" is his contribution to screen literature just as "The Birth of a Nation" was Griffith's. There are few pictorial gems such as those in this Picture. Women! See yourselves as others see you. You are weak, wicked, frail, vain. You are exposed in "Woman".

It took courage to produce "Woman." Maurice Tourneur did it. You will believe him courageous after seeing "Woman." "Woman" is destined to rank as a real screen epic. It was produced by Maurice Tourneur, master of his art. It is without a doubt the most beautiful picture even screened in any theatre.

AD TALK

Maurice Tourneur, that highly artistic director who gave us such fine pictures as "Sporting Life," "The Whip," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," with Mary Pickford, and the first series of Eiko Ferguson pictures for Aircraft, is the producer of "Woman," the feature which the theatre will offer on 7th of the week. Let it be said here and now that "Woman" is by all odds the most unusual feature ever offered by the management of the theatre. And it is unusual in more ways than one. Mr. Tourneur has taken for his principal character a woman. Woman from the beginning of the world to the present day. He has exposed the frailties and shown the power. He both condemns and praises. It is not possible for us to relate the story here. Our stories, we should say. Such a task we will leave to the more artistic story teller, Mr. Tourneur. Because he has surpassed himself in striving for and achieving artistic effects. Some of the individual pictures in "Woman" are superior to those painted by the artist's brush. But is not only in this respect that Mr. Tourneur has scored. He has scored the notable success with "Woman." In mass effect, in pageantry and in his conception of the various scenes, he has scored a decisive record for himself that his name will go down in the pages of the films for all time.

In no small measure was Mr. Tourneur assisted by Charles Whitaker, who prepared the manuscript on which the picture was based, by a pair of cameramen who were able to secure the best of photographic effects and by a cast that is appreciative from first to last.

THE STORY

The opening episode of the picture is the oldest story of the world, the story of Adam and Eve. Eve tempted Adam and they ate of the apple, to be driven from the Garden of Paradise for ever more.

Next there is the less known, though vastly interesting story of Messa.lina, wife of Emperor Claudius of Rome. It is also Messa.lina, the woman, who caused the ruin of Claudius. After a riot of pleasure she takes another man to herself and literally snips her fingers at Claudius. But there is retribution for her. Too weak to take her own life when so commanded by her husband and mother, she is pushed on the sword by the emperor's soldiers.

Again does woman, this time a woman of un-doubted purity caused the downfall of a man. She is Heloise, he Abelard, sworn to the church. His vows are forgotten in pleasure.

And then there is bleak woman portrayed. Cyrene is and is married to a young fisherman of Brittany. But there is a longing in her heart for freedom, for something else than her rather dull married existence. And once while her husband is away she takes the form of a seal and joins the others in the water.

Woman's vanity is told in a story of Civil War times. A younger in her teens hides a Union soldier, but when a Confederate officer, in search of the man, dangles a watch before her eyes she immediately points him out. She relents only after she has heard the shots of the firing squad.

But the woman of today is noble and heroic in the work of war.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture demands high class, impressive exploitation. Don't try to pull a "Woman" stunt you might use on a howling sex picture. For advertisements for your lobby and front, we would suggest that you use just the title and the name of the producer. The former certainly will awaken curiosity in the passerby—in any passageway. It is a name that might imply anything and for this reason it might be well just to let it go at that. Curiosity will be aroused to such an extent that people will want to come in and see what it is all about. As for Tourneur's name, that certainly carries weight after all the magnificent things he has done for pictures.

In your lobby use stills of the picture which the exchange handling "Woman" will be ready to supply you. They will have a full line of these stills and as they are some of the most beautiful photographs ever made try to get a lot of them and make your display in this line as liberal as possible.

Your musical presentation will count a lot on this production. In MOTION PICTURE NEWS, issue of November 9, page 2846, you will find some (Continued on page 3130)

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES"—FOX

If Your Patrons Like the Lee Kids This One Will Please Them

If offerings starring the Lee children have pleased your patrons in the past, "Tell It To the Marines" will also please them. The little stars are made to portray the same kind of a mischievous nature, the same inclination for deviltry. Most of the picture depends on that element to amuse.

The most entertaining part of the contribution, however, is the last two reels. It is the enactment of the present war in miniature, signifying the struggle between the Huns and the Allies, in which the combatants are puppets, or animated tin soldiers, their different movements being ingeniously co-ordinated.

The battle in the air, in particular, which aeroplanes as well as Zeppelins participate, is very realistic. This part of the picture was reviewed on page 206, in issue of July 13, of this year, under the title, "Outwitting the Huns." Apparently Harry Raver, who owned it, having imported it, has sold the rights to the Fox Corporation, who have joined it to this picture instead of releasing it individually.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Story and direction by Arvid E. Gilstrom.

THE STORY

It may be a perfect day for theLee Kids, but there’s nothing perfect about it so far as the grown-ups are concerned. Nothing short of modern warfare, with skyrockets and fire crackers as ammunition, could lure Jane and Katherine Lee in "Tell It to the Marines." Their perfect day consists of the two little rascals trying to lure their brother, Lee, out of the house. The dummy is, they imagine, a lot of fun.

Daddy has guests, and the children see to it that they are well dressed and well fed when they leave. Then the two young rascals have a wonderful ride in an automobile to complete their fun.

Such a "perfect day" creates all sorts of suspicion in the mind of Jane. Dreams are about the day’s fighting—about two mechanical toys, Trik and Trak. It is the head of the Allied army; Trak is the Hun leader. Every incident of the present war, including Hun atrocities, the dropping of bombs from Zeppelins, the Kaiser reviewing his troops, is faithfully reproduced by these doll armies, in mechanical work that is required months to perfect and photograph. And then Jane wakes up to find it all has been a dream.

AD TALK

The Lee children, Jane and Katherine, come to the theatre on the opening night of their latest Fox comedy entitled, "Tell It to the Marines." This is a picture which combines those outrageously funny pranks for which the Lee children are famous, with some of the most remarkable trick camera work ever presented on the screen. Jane and Katherine, after having fought a hard day of it playing pranks on the servants and their guests, finally decide to keep to sleep and dream of the war.

Their dream is subsequently pictured. They see two entire armies advancing against each other, battling, firing cannon, fighting in the air, constructing bridges, in fact, doing everything that one of our soldiers does over there. But all this is pictured by doll-like mannikins. The armies are under the leadership of Trik and Trak. These little puppets have been made to move with marvellous co-ordination. They are next to being human.

It took much patience and finally six months’ work for the director to perfect the scheme whereby the mannikins were made to act life-like. It is probably one of the most amazing accomplishments of the picture. And, of course, there are the Lee children themselves! So with this combination of the man or woman who comes to the theatre during one of the days that "Tell It to the Marines" is playing, will have an extra fine treat. Arvid Gilstrom, producer of the previous Lee picture, was in charge of the direction of this one and the supporting cast includes Charles Slattery and Edward Bagley.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course if your patrons take delight in Jane and Katherine Lee, bill these little actresses heavily. There are hundreds of homes, however, offers some unusual advertising possibilities in the trick mannikins that are used in the picture’s dream. If you want to get the new angle into your advertising play up these mannikins. For a lobby decoration you might have your artist draw a map of the European battle ground and have Jane and Katherine on either side, sitting and watching the map intently.

If you play the attraction specially for children, which will be a specially good practice to follow with the production inasmuch as it is novel, you can use toy soldiers in lobby decorations or you might go further and present some cheap toy soldiers to the purchaser of each ticket or else make a lottery out of it.

CATCH LINES

Jane and Katherine Lee in their latest Fox comedy, "Tell It to the Marines." A most remarkable display of warfare conducted on a miniature scale.

The supporting cast in "Tell It to the Marines" make Jane and Katherine Lee look like giants!!

More playful pranks from the Lee children.

The whole war enacted in miniature, puppets acting as soldiers and moving as smoothly as any human being could.

Jane and Katherine Lee have the most remarkable toy soldiers in "Tell It to the Marines," that any girl or boy ever had. Better come to the theatre and see them!!

It is, however, an extremely complicated one, members of the Rivoli musical staff having in many instances arranged special music for it. However, you should be able to get at least a good idea of the music needed by referring to the issue and page mentioned.

"His Bonded Wife"—Metro

Average Dramatic Offering of Program Type; Depends on Plot

This is only an average dramatic offering of the program type. It depends a great deal on the plot action, also on the fairly tense element of suspense, to hold the interest. There are hardly any situations in it with heart interest.

The basic idea of the story is the aversion of the heroine to marry any man who is after her money; also the disinclination of the hero to marry a rich girl.

The heroine, a young wealthy girl, stops at a summer resort. She meets the hero, a young construction engineer, spending his vacation, and they fall in love.

Their meetings continue after their return to the city. They decide to marry, but, being informed that his sweetheart is a wealthy girl, the hero nearly breaks the engagement. The father saves the situation by evicting his daughter, in pretense.

The young folks marry, but shortly afterwards friction arises as the wife, unable to any further tolerate want, spends the money her father gave her. This results almost in a break up of their home, but the situation is saved as the hero earns a large amount of money by drawing certain engineering plans. Thus he is able to provide for his wife with his own money.

The picture is clean. Released Oct. 24.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Doris Morse, daughter of a copper king, tires of her existence, particularly as she is sought by men only for her money, and as a result takes a room in a cheap boarding-house at Atlantic City under an assumed name. Here she meets Philip Hazard, a young architect, and the two are soon in love. In order to carry the deception through she says that she is a clerk in Macy's. On their return to the city they keep up their acquaintance. Doris meets the people with whom Philip lives, Tom Lloyd and his widowed sister, Kate. One night when she dines with them she learns how strongly Philip is opposed to a poor man marrying a rich woman, because this situation happened to bring on a tragedy in the lives of his father and mother.

Philip eventually discovers that the girl he loves is none other than the daughter of the copper king. He hastens to her home and denounces her. Her father, a wise man, assumes great anger, and gives Doris to understand that if she is not low enough to meet Philip clandestinely, she is no longer a daughter of his. This has the desired effect, and soon after the two young folks are married. Leedes, president of a big milling firm, comes to Philip with plans for a new factory to be prepared. He is so happy working on them that he keeps the news from Doris, as he wants to surprise her.

Doris' existence begins to pall on her. She accepts some bonds sent her by her father. Philip, believing that they will interfere with their happiness, attempts to steal them. He is shot. In Kate's apartment he receives attentions for his wounds, and, while at first Doris believes him unfaithful to her, everything is soon straightened out. The plans are later successful, and the young couple is the happiest in the world.

Advertising Aids

Paper: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, all in colors. These give portraits of star as well as scenes in which the star is prominent.

Lobby Display: Sets of photograph are provided in sepia 8 x 10; in sepia 11 x 14 and in color 22 x 28. This constitutes the usual lobby display provided on all Metro features and makes an attractive lobby advertisement when mounted in a frame.

Cut and Maps: The only cuts that are obtainable from Metro exchanges on this feature are the stock cuts of Miss Wehlen, provided in both one and two-column size. A slide and music cue sheet are also available at all Metro exchanges.

Suggestions

This is essentially one of those pictures in which the dominating note is heart interest. Make your appeal by bringing out this note in all advertising that you do. This type of story has always been and ever will be one of the most popular, so be sure to strike its essential line of action somewhere in your announcement.

For starts you have both the featured player, Emmy Wehlen, and Creighton Hale, long a serial leading man. If you have played any of the Father serials of the past you might play Hale up big, for he has undoubtedly gained a good reputation for himself in this line of work.

Emmy Wehlen
Star Cut

Emmy Wehlen, star of "His Bonded Wife." This is an original story prepared particularly for Miss Wehlen by Lois and Arthur Zeiler, and has as its central figure Doris Morse, the daughter of a copper king. She tires her existence as a society butterfly, and the man that seeks her apparently only for her money disgusts her, so after a while she takes a retreat to Atlantic City, and there under an assumed name sets out on a modest existence. The plot comes through Philip Hazard, a young architect. And Philip comes just in time to save the young lady from perishing in the waves.

A rescue from drowning at Atlantic City is always the prelude to romance, and so it happens that Doris and Philip fall very much in love with each other. Later they are married, but not before Philip has discovered who Doris really is, to her dismay and displeasure.

While they are married, however, Philip meets her father, and the plot is at a standstill because of his opposition to her marriage. However, Philip shows her his love and eventually convinces her father of his worth.

The plot is a study in romance, and is well suited to the Metro exchange.

In Spokane Theatres

THE American Film Company will pay big money for scenarios suitable for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell or Margarita Fisher, W. A. Coughlin, personal representative of President S. S. Hutchinson, said to a representative of the press in Spokane on a recent visit to that city.

"OUR company will pay from $1,000 to $25,000 for scenarios suitable for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell or Margarita Fisher. We want sweet, wholesome stories, free from anything morbid, for Miss Minter. As for Miss Fisher, we wish stories of light comedy drama, bubbling over with laughter. For Mr. Russell, he has forsaken the deep drama and now is giving the public comedy drama, full of romance and 'pep.'"

FRED STONE'S initial screen appearance in "The Goat" packed the Clemmer theatre at every show. Stone in "The Goat" heads a liberal program. "Smiling Billy" Mason and Eleanor Field appear in a Christie comedy, "Just Like Dad and William Farnum is presented in the first Liberty loan "trailer" to be shown at the Clemmer.

NORMA TALMADGE in her latest Select offering, "The Safety Curtain" had a four-days' engagement at the Liberty.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE in their patriotic photoplay, "Swat the Fly" had a three-days' engagement at the Class A.

MME. OLGA PETROVA was the stellar offering at the Majestic, being featured in "The Light Within," which is having its second run here.

"CHASE ME CHARLIE" is the Chaplinesque offering starring Charlie Chaplin, featured on the screen program at the Lyric. Alice Howell in "Hoot Toot" rounded out the program.

EUGENE H. ROTH, manager of the California theatre, recently returned from a trip to New York and immediately made arrangements for the first showing of "The Forbidden City," the much heralded initial production of Norma Talmadge in the Second Select Star Service. This will be given its premier at the California during the week beginning November 3.

ANOTHER important move of Mr. Roth soon after his return was the increasing of his orchestra from 21 to 31 instruments. This orchestra, under the leadership of Herman Heller, is said now to be the fourth largest in the United States, the three larger ones being located in New York.

THE COLUMBIA THEATRE at Phoenix has signed a contract with the Mutual exchange for all Hayakawa productions and also the Outing Chester series.

Bershon Signs Up Theatres for Smilage

DAVID BERSHON, Los Angeles branch manager of the Universal Film exchange, and chairman of the committee appointed by the Army and Navy Department on Training Camp Activities, to line up the theatres of Southern California on the new plan of having the theatres donate a part of their receipts on certain dates to be given over to the Smilage book fund this week, announced the names of the theatres signing the pledge up to the time when the theatres were ordered closed because of the influenza. The list shows seventy-two signatures, or 25 per cent of the theatres in Mr. Bershon's territory. He estimates that if the theatres had not been ordered closed he would by this time have secured signatures of 90 per cent of the theatre managers in this section.

Leonard Meyberg, national chairman of the new theatre plan for smilage book funds, was in Los Angeles this week and conferred with Mr. Bershon at length on the various phases of the Southern California campaign.

Girard Leaves Vaudeville to Direct Orchestra

SPOKANE is soon to have the pleasure of greeting Harry Girard, actor, singer, author, producer, composer and all-round musician, who comes as the new musical director at the Clemmer theatre. He was last seen here in his sketch, "The Wall of an Eskimo," at the Pantages in June and it was then that Drs. Clemmer and Lambach of the Clemmer, made arrangements for his return and appearance here under their management for a limited season. Girard says it is like a home-coming to him, he has played here so often and has so many real friends here.

As soon as the quarantine is lifted Mr. Girard will present recitals twice weekly at the Clemmer, at 12:30 noon on Sunday and 7 p. m. Wednesday.
What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

INFORMATION was received last Saturday by C. J. Marley, branch manager of the Triangle exchange, that the theatres in Nogales, Ariz., will be reopened the latter part of this week.

A LETTER from Charles Alden, owner and manager of the Dime theatre at Globe, Ariz., to the Triangle exchange this week announced that motion picture houses in Globe will be reopened November 6.

THE Los Angeles Triangle offices were closed all day last Monday out of respect to R. W. Lynch, vice-president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, who was buried that day at Asheville, N. C. Mr. Lynch died in San Francisco of influenza. All Triangle offices in the United States were closed last Monday, it was announced here.

JAMES W. EDRINGTON, manager of the Gaiety theatre at Santa Maria, was a visitor at the Vitagraph exchanges this week.

R. M. TAYLOR, owner and manager of the Garrick theatre at Pomona, spent a few days in Los Angeles last week.

H. D. NAUGLE, western division manager of Vitagraph, after a brief visit in San Francisco last week, left for Salt Lake and Denver. He is expected to return to his headquarters in Chicago before again visiting the Pacific coast.

THE Rex theatre at Gallup, N. M., is open again and it was provided with a show this week by the Vitagraph exchange, according to announcement by Branch Manager, W. H. Hepburn.

WILLIAM C. WHEELER, Vitagraph salesman attached to the San Francisco exchange, was in Los Angeles this week. He said he had been waiting for an opportunity to visit Los Angeles for several months.

THE George Kleine System removed its offices on Monday from the Knickerbocker building to the General Film offices at 730 South Hope street. Guy C. Gunderson will remain in charge as manager, and the booking system of the exchange will be maintained as heretofore, it is announced. However, the general business of the exchange will hereafter be conducted by the General Film organization. The affiliation with the General Exchange offices was made for economic reasons, it was announced.

ALL theatres in Needles, Cal., were opened last Saturday, according to information received at the General Film offices.

PAUL C. MOONEY, former division manager for the Middle Western states for William Fox exchanges, with headquarters at Cleveland, arrived in Los Angeles this week to become Pacific Coast district manager for Fox. His headquarters will be maintained in Los Angeles. His first announcement was that when all theatres are reopened in the United States the motion picture fans will be more enthusiastic about their favorite pastime than ever before.

A PRIVATE preview of "The Midnight Patrol," a Thomas H. Ince production, was given this week by B. E. Loper, branch manager of the Select exchange. Because of the ban on public gatherings, only a few friends of Mr. Loper's were present. Thurston Hall is the star in the filmplay.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Pacific Coast manager of United Pictures exchanges, returned to Los Angeles this week after a visit to the San Francisco and Seattle offices. He announces that United is working out a booking system that will mean a great saving to the exhibitor.

GEORGE J. EKRE, branch manager of the General Film exchange, received a letter this week from his brother, Arthur Ekre, who is a member of the American Field Artillery in France. "The Kaiser is talking his head off about peace," the letter says, "but we do not intend to quit until we have entered Germany. A German plane flew near us a few days ago and a bomb fell about fifteen feet from our tent. Aside from blowing us all over the adjacent landscape everything is all right. We are getting plenty of clothes and many good things to eat."

THE Community Motion Picture Bureau, affiliated with the Army and Navy Department Training Camp Activities committee, has established its Los Angeles branch in the building occupied by the M. & R. Features exchange under the general direction of George E. Withey, of San Francisco. A branch manager had not been named this week. The new exchange will devote its time to supplying films for the Liberty Theatres in the big cantonments, being operated as a part of the Army and Navy plan for entertainment of soldiers in the camps. It will also cooperate with the War Work Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Frank Duffy, special representative of Pathé exchange, and confirmed by G. R. Sirwell, branch manager of Hodkinson interests, that the W. H. Hodkinson productions will after November 25 be released by Pathé. Mr. Duffy left Los Angeles last week for San Francisco and Seattle on his return to New York, but he hurried back to Los Angeles to assist in completing the local end of the new deal for Pathé. Under this new arrangement the Hodkinson system will release pictures with the following stars: Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Lillian Walker, Anita King, Kathleen Clifford and the Frank Powell productions starring House Peters. The First House Peters subject to be released will be "The Forfeit," the first of eight features in which Peters will be starred by Frank Powell.

WEST COAST—What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing M. H. KUHN, formerly chief salesman of the Triangle exchange in Los Angeles, now acting branch manager of the Salt Lake City exchange, was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He said that before the theatres were closed in Utah that all exhibitors in his territory were doing better business than at any time in the history of the industry. He announced that the State Board of Health of Utah is watching the influenza situation very closely, and that all theatres will be opened in the state as soon as possible.

THE new vault of the M. & R. exchange, begun several weeks ago, has been finished, and Manager H. W. Stubbins spent much of the time this week in removing all films to the nearby installed vault.

Seattle Film Circles

MANAGER Joseph Muller, of the Palace Hip, has taken advantage of the "Flu Ban" by altering and rehanging his theatre. He has made it as sanitary as possible. One of the features of the alterations is the placing on the floors of a material that is noiseless when walked on, but has about the consistency of linoleum. Carpets have been removed and this put in its place. The new covering is to be washed each day and no dust allowed to lodge.

"SMILING" Bill Drummond, Northwest representative of the Geo. Kleine System, has moved his office from 2012 Third Ave. across the street, where the offices of the General Film Company are also located.

H. G. ROSEBAUM, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company's productions for the Northwest, has returned from a tour around a section of the Northwest, which includes Spokane, Wash., and Portland, Ore.

MANAGER Luken, of the Pathé Film Co., has returned to his desk at Seattle, after a month's trip to New York. Since the Pathé-Heearst Service has been changed to the Pathé Service, Mr. Luken has made complete new contracts with his customers.

THE Famous "Wallace on the Wurlitzer," who attracts crowds to the Liberty, has recently composed a very popular song, together with Harold Weeks, a Seattle song writer. It is called "Hindustan." A phonograph concern has already placed it in film form.

What the Studios Are Doing

BILLY GARWOOD writes from San Francisco, where he is appearing in Crane Wilbur's new stage production, "The Common Cause," that the play looks like a big winner to him and he is delighted with the role he is to portray. Garwood was a stage leading man long before he went into pictures, and was just as popular behind the footlights as he was on the screen.

CLAIRE DU BREY has worked harder on her present feature at the Diando studios than she ever has on any other film since she began her motion picture career. Claire finished work on her five-reel picture in two weeks and worked ten nights during that time as well as in daylight. Many a night she didn't get a chance to go home at all and stole what forty winks she could in her dressing room, as time was too precious to spend in traveling home and back.

WILL M. RITCHERY'S new articles on photoplay writing are gradually being published all over Europe, as well as the United States, wherever motion pictures are shown. Two papers in Australia are publishing his series of talks, as well as one in England and Japan. Ritchey does not write them for pay, but merely to encourage new writers and point out to them the mistakes to avoid. Mr. Ritchey, who is with the Famous Players-Lasky forces, declares that good material for photoplays is sadly lacking and the demand is greater now than ever before.

HERBERT HEYES completed his feature with Helen Keller, the famous deaf and blind woman, at the Brunton studios this week, much to his regret. Heyes believes Miss Keller to be the most remarkable person he has ever known or heard of and enjoyed every moment of his engagement with her.

GEORGE HOLT is seriously considering giving up acting in favor of directing. Holt, who is one of the best known screen villains, has always had a strong desire to forsake his acting for directing, and this week was approached with an offer to produce, and he is thinking strongly of doing so. He has been in the game for a number of years and understands it thoroughly, and there is no reason why George Holt, director, shouldn't become as well known as George Holt, actor.

THOMAS DIXON'S latest photoplay spectacle, "The One Woman," is soon to be released. It is already being largely advertised and exploited and will soon be on view in the leading theatres. Adda Gleason, whose Ramona in the play of that name was so well remembered, will play the title role in the new Dixon production and her work is said to surpass any of her previous successes.

THERE have been many rumors going the rounds that Clara Horton had left the Triangle, due to the fact that she was playing in a picture for another concern. Clara states emphatically that she was merely loaned by the Triangle for one picture and has a long-time contract with that concern.

LEATRICE JOY received two telegrams last week at the Strand theatre in San Diego, where she was playing in stock, to come to Los Angeles for screen engagements. Leatrice replied that she is perfectly contented where she is and doesn't intend to return to the films until she has completed her contract at the theatre, her contract still having a little while to run.

THE Helen Keller Company, which has been working for almost three months at the Brunton studios, will within the next week make the final scenes for the twelve-reel film at present titled "Deliverance." The picture will show the life of Helen Keller. Managers of the company plan to complete the editing in the east and the company will leave for New York within the next ten days. At present it is expected the premier will be given the latter part of February.

ALBERT SHELBY DeVINO, Metro scenario writer, returned Monday from New York, and he is at work on some new stories that will be produced at a later date when the studios are reopened, it is announced.

WHAT EXCHANGES AND THEATRES ARE DOING

THE M. & R. exchange will distribute in Southern California territory "The Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Stubbins. The exchange will also handle Hall Caine's "Deceiver," with Derwent Hall Caine as the star, and the two-reeler, "Who's Afraid of the Hun?" Derwent Hall Caine is now touring the Orpheum circuit.

MORE than 150 prints of feature subjects, some old and some not so old, but all without proper titles, were thoroughly inspected last week at the Triangle exchange, and these subjects will be ready for showing when the closing ban is lifted. Thereafter the theatres in this territory, according to announcement by Branch Manager C. J. Marley, a number of new titles were written and then filmed at the Triangle studios at Culver City.

WILLIAM DESMOND'S last production with the Triangle Company, "The Pretender," has been booked by the Victory theatres on Broadway for opening week when that house is again allowed to open its doors.

THE Triangle exchange this week received numerous inquiries from exhibitors relative to bookings of Hart, Fairbanks, Talmadge and Keenan reissues, with the result that nearly 75 per cent. of the Arizona territory has signed for these subjects. Branch Manager Marley announced. Mr. Marley believes the sudden demand for these subjects is explained in the fact that exhibitors are planning to fill in their programs with subjects they were unable to book heretofore because of a full program of new pictures.

H. D. NAUGLE, western division manager of the Vitagraph Company, left Los Angeles Saturday for a visit to San Francisco, Seattle, Tacoma and Salt Lake City. He expects to return to Chicago within the next three weeks, he announced.

W. B. WALKER, owner of the Liberty theatre at Needles, Cal., was a visitor to film row last week.

J. W. EDRINGTON, owner of the Gaiety and Grand theatres at Santa Maria, Cal., was a Los Angeles visitor this week. He predicted big business in Santa Maria when the influenza closing ban is lifted.

C. J. MARLEY, branch manager of the Triangle exchange, went duck hunting last week, but he returned without any ducks. He then embarked on a fishing trip, coming back with even less luck in this adventure.

C. B. GARRISON, one of the New York representatives of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, will take up the Triangle Distributing Corporation's work, succeeding Vice-President R. W. Lynch, who died last week in San Francisco. This information was made known here this week by C. J. Marley, branch manager of the Triangle exchange. Mr. Marley, incidentally, will be in charge of this work until Mr. Garrison arrives. The death of Mr. Lynch cast much gloom over film row in Los Angeles.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, despite the fact that a majority of theatres in Arizona were reported closed this week, left Los Angeles for that territory to distribute a few Kleine contracts.

A FEW of the towns in Southern California that were still with open theatres early this week, and were being served by the Los Angeles exchanges, were Pomona, Santa Ana, Holliville, Taft, Maricopa, Ventura and Santa Maria.

H. D. NAUGLE, Western division manager of the Vitagraph Company, plans to leave for Chicago next week. His stay on the Pacific Coast has been extended about two weeks because of the inactivity of Vitagraph exchanges in his territory due to the prevalence of influenza.

H. F. MOORE, assistant manager of the George Kleine System, returned to San Francisco this week after spending a week at the Los Angeles office.

M. J. COHEN, manager of the George Kleine System, was in town for a day this week. Mr. Cohen says that just at present he is commuting between Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. He expects to leave for the latter city immediately, but will only spend a few days there before he rushes South again. All this activity is in connection with the great war pictures he is promoting.

M. J. COHEN, manager of the George Kleine System, has just received a memorial of "Thanks and Appreciation" from the officers and enlisted men of the U. S. Marine Corps at Mare Island, in recognition of the services he rendered in helping the marine band to secure new instruments, and also for helping secure instruments for the Navy and Marine Scouts of San Francisco, of which organization he has been officially appointed major. Mr. Cohen has had the memorial framed and will hang it in his office beside his framed commission as major of the Scouts.

C. H. DOUGLAS, manager of the Elite theatre, Merced, paid a short visit to San Francisco this week.

FRED FINK, JR., manager of Fink's theatre, Gridley, Cal., is now at Berkeley, attending the aviation school at the University of California.
In and Around Denver

AFTER practically five weeks' suspension on account of the influenza epidemic, Denver theatres were given permission to open for business on Monday, November 11. There is considerable improvement in the situation in Denver and in Boulder, which is also permitted to open on the same date and under the same restrictions that accompany the order lifting the ban in Denver. The conditions in other sections of the state do not yet warrant resuming of the closing order. The official order is as follows: Motion picture shows, theatres and schools were allowed to open at 7 o'clock Monday morning, November 11, upon permission from the department of health and under certain restrictions which that department may see fit to make.

THE influenza epidemic has claimed Mrs. H. D. Lorenzon, wife of the owner of the Star theatre at Silverton, who died Tuesday, November 5. She is survived by her husband and two minor children.

R. H. McCLUSKEY, who recently resigned a road position out of Denver for Mutual to take over the management of the Strand theatre at Holsington, Kansas, was stricken with influenza upon his arrival there. His condition is reported as much improved and he will recover.

E. B. REMINGTON has resigned as road salesman for Mutual to engage in other lines.

W. A. ASHBURN, manager of the Princess theatre at Sterling, has returned home following a week's vacation in Denver.

DENVER Pathé headquarters is being remodeled to make room for the local force of the American Film Company, Inc., and the W. W. Hodkinson service. Hodkinson transfers from General in this territory November 25.

CHARLES R. GILMORE, local manager for the United Picture Theatres of America, has left for Deadwood and Lead, where he will meet the members of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League.

G. W. WHITNEY has resigned his position as local manager of the General Film Company.

What Butte Is Doing

THREE Montana towns, after shutdowns of about a month, have permitted theatres to reopen. They are Plentywood and Scobie, in Sheridan county, and Denton, located near Lewistown. In these three towns the disease has run its course and it is thought that everyone liable to get the "flu" in those places has had it.

IN Butte, and in fact throughout the state, it is believed that the peak has passed. When conditions show a tendency toward permanent betterment it is thought the health boards will permit the reopening of theatres. The prolonged shutdown is proving a heavy burden on the showman.

THE show houses continue to "doll up" and there is nothing else to do. All the managers are figuring that the public will be "show hungry" and so they are planning on offering the best programs possible, so as to reap their share of the promised harvest.

MERLE DAVIS, the new manager of the Antonia Amusement Company, and prominent Montana cartoonist, this week took up his new duties. He will have his office at the Broadway theatre. The assistant general manager, Marshall Taylor, will have his office at the Ansonia.

MANAGER Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto, is viewing the situation in a spirit of reconciliation and he is injecting a little mirth by displaying the following rhyme on a placard in the theatre lobby:

When the Spanish flu,
Goes up the blue,
Then I'll come back to you.

THE closing picture at the Rialto, by a strange coincidence, was "Till I Come Back to You."

GEORGE BOURKE, of the Universal exchange, is paying a visit to Bozeman, Livingston, Billings, Miles City and other Yellowstone valley towns. He will also visit Sheridan, Wyo. While the houses are all closed he is making the trip to get acquainted with the exhibitors, and to cheer them along.

What the Studios Are Doing

D. W. GRIFFITH has announced a number of people who will be cast in the big propaganda picture which is now in the second week of production and which is yet unnamed. They are Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess, Carol Dempster, Clare Seymour, Adolph Lestina, George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Syn de Conde. The latter will play the part of the villain. This latest Griffith production is a story dealing with the great national draft, and among the scenes will be pictures taken in the various cantonments.

A FEATURE of D. W. Griffith's new propaganda production is the fact that in it are two leading men—Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess. In the making of this film Mr. Griffith had the cooperation of the army and navy departments, and for the first time portions of Uncle Sam's fighting equipment will be shown on the screen. A recent parade staged by the officers of March Aviation Field, near Riverside, California, in connection with the Los Angeles Liberty Loan Drive, consisted of one hundred and fifteen airplanes in bombarding formation which flew over the city of Los Angeles, a distance of nearly sixty miles from the aviation training camp. Mr. Griffith was permitted to secure scenes of this, and his cameramen were furnished aircrafts so that close-ups could be filmed. The machines flew at a height of about four thousand feet. Up until the time of this flight, the greatest number of machines in the air at one time in formation was sixty-seven, so that the Griffith propaganda film will show a new record in aviation.

THE Dorothy Gish Company having releases far ahead, has closed and members are enjoying a vacation of four weeks.

Additional Exchange News

THE Tulare theatre at Tulare has passed from the ownership of S. J. Greenwood to Sol Slayback.

BOB McNEIL of San Francisco is rapidly expanding into a Napoleon of the Motion Picture house. For some time he has owned the Mission, the Lyceum and Panama theatres in the Mission district, this city. Now he has just bought the 600 seat Strand formerly owned by C. Hellman and also the Clairmont a 750 seat house formerly owned by H. Henderson. Both these houses are situated on Telegraph avenue, Oakland.

THE Rialto theatre at Vallejo has been sold by J. Marsh to W. P. Maupin.

THE California theatre has booked the Mutual film "Temple of Dust" for the week of October 20. According to advance notices the play has a grip which will appeal to the fans.

D. S. MARKOWITZ, has resigned as manager of the Western Feature Film Co., and has made connections with the Fox Film Co.

P. H. STEVENS of the World Film Corporation has been entered in the "America's Answer" contest, and is making a hurry-up trip through the State of Nevada.

"HAPPY" J. H. KNOWLES, the smiling impresario of the Sonora theatre, Sonora, Cal., is visiting film row and bringing sunshine with him on every visit. No out of town theatre man is more welcome than "Happy" and no film man can say that he ever saw him without a smile.

THE twenty-eighth star on the service flag of the Strand theatre was added this week when Jefferson W. Asher, treasurer and director, left for Pittsburg to enter Carnegie Institute of Technology for a course in military aeronautics, where he will specialize in aerial radio work for the flying arm of the service. It was at the behest of the Government that Asher enters this intense course, for he is already qualified as an expert radio operator. When wireless telegraphy was in its infancy he rigged up his own apparatus and at the age of 15 was a licensed radio expert, later handling ship service for wireless companies.

THE Coliseum theatre in the populous Richmond district of San Francisco, is rapidly nearing completion, and the American Photo Player company's mechanics are busy installing the Robert-Morton Orchestral organ especially designed to furnish the sole musical accompaniment to photoplays.

W. F. CHARLES, the Southern California representative of the American Photo Player Co., reports the sale of a Fotoplayer in El Centro, Cal. Mr. Baron, sales manager for northern California, reports an organ of the Robert-Morton type has been sold to a new house in Napa county and a Fotoplayer in Alameda.

ENA BROS., owners of the Palace theatre, Pittsburg, Cal., have purchased two lots on Railroad street on which they expect to erect a new theatre in the near future. Plans for a theatre and two story store building are now being drawn.

J. E. TRIGUERIO, owner of the Mendocino theatre, Mendocino, Cal., is visiting San Francisco. He reports that he has bought the Rex and the Union theatres at Fort Bragg from P. W. Brubeck, the latter having been called to serve in the United States army.

GEORGE R. TEMPLETON has bought the new Sixteenth Street theatre in this city from L. J. Levin, and has rechristened it with the name "Rex"

THE many friends of J. S. Woody are congratulating him on his promotion in the Select Picture Corporation from Field Manager to General Sales Manager. Mr. Woody has many friends on this Coast and the letters of congratulation which are going hence to him will help to swell the San Francisco post office receipts.

THE OLD ESSANAY MOTION PICTURE STUDIO at Niles has been taken over by the Bonnie-Reed Film Mfg. Co., and work has already begun on a reel comedy. It is the intention of the new company to specialize on one reel comedies.

THE DUHEM MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO. has recently taken several pictures of more than passing interest. The company made an educational film of about 1,000 feet of the salvaging of six immense boilers from the steamer Bear which was wrecked near Eureka, Cal., about a year ago. The boilers weighed about 45 tons each, and besides taking them from the water they had to be rolled 28 miles over the sandy beach to the place where they were loaded on a motorship for shipment to China. A number of unusual engineering feats had to be accomplished in moving the boilers and these are well shown in the film. The final disposition of the boilers to the China government, which will put them in pairs in three gunboats, adds an interest to the film. The same company has completed a three-reel film staged by the Liberty Film Co., a San Francisco concern, entitled, "Where Is Your Registration Card?" Sol Lesser viewed a run-off of the film and may decide to push it for the Liberty Co.

THE UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY will display the film made by the Duhem Company of the recent launching of the "Avenal" at the Schaw-Batcher Shipyard in South San Francisco. The feature of this launching is that it was the largest vessel ever launched sideways.

STILL another recent film by the same company was the bayonet drill of the troops at Camp Fremont. It will be shown by one of the Pictorial Weeklies.

WHEN the Allied officers passed through San Francisco recently en route to Russia the mayor of the city presented them with a beautiful silk Czechoslovak flag. The ceremony took place in the Civic Center, and the picture was taken by the Duhem Company.

THE suspension of business is having serious effect on some of the smaller exchanges and some have already gone out of business. If the situation continues for many weeks more it is feared that others will have to close their doors.

THE Sunset and Western Film Exchanges have closed their doors and it is reported have permanently gone out of business.

THE PAREX FILM CO., which has been furnishing the Sherry Service, has taken quarters in the General Film Exchange. The George Kleine Service has also taken quarters in the General Film and are sending out notices to the effect that the physical handling of their films will in the future be taken care of by the General.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY is mailing its new booking chart to all its patrons. Mr. Quive is looking forward to a booming business as soon as the theatres are permitted to reopen.

BERT VAN VAULKENBERG, designer for the American Photo Player Co., arrived here recently from the company works at Van Nuys. He has been designing some new improvements on the photoplayer and came to the company headquarters to talk with them over. Some of the plans he has in mind are said to be far reaching, if actual experiences demonstrate their practicability.

"I will not remove the wounded English! But I will care for the Germans, also."

At this moment, when the responsible heads of the Allied governments are weighing scrupulously the charges against Germany, the name Edith Cavell is on the tongue of every guardian of Justice and the Cavell Case is being cited as an historic example of the Hun's wanton cruelty. The interest in this picture will never die!

THE GERMANS SHOT

Directed by John G. Adolfi

"The Cavell Case" is in six reels. Its action is tense, direct, compelling. The interest never flags. When presented at the Strand Theatre, New York, for the week beginning October 27th a new Sunday turn-away record for that theatre was created. Every critic who has seen it has praised it. Not a line has appeared that has not been a boost.
Distinctly different is this story of a breezy New York shop-girl and the rich fellow who kept asking her to marry him and whom she would not accept because—she loved him truly! The people in the picture are so many creations from real life, they are so wholly human and understandable. Audiences will chuckle over them, and they will love Alice Brady in the role of Lola Gray as they have never loved her before—for this is a picture to warm up to!

Larded with humor from end to end—"Her Great Chance" has caught and crystallized on the screen the American trait of seeing the happy side even of Life's most tragic moments.

"Do you know why I refused you, the other night, Charlie?"
As a Select star Alice Brady has been seen in eight productions prior to this latest of her pictures. These offer the Exhibitor a brilliant group of attractions of high merit, splendidly produced and presenting an artist of international repute on both stage and screen. Show these pictures at short intervals, and benefit by their value as a patronage-building series.

David Powell as Charlie, Alice Brady as Lola, and Jefferson de Angelis as the genial Innkeeper, in "Her Great Chance."

"Alice Brady was always the sincere and emotionally effective actress on the screen, but better productions have made Miss Brady greater than she was a year ago."

"4,000 SHOWN!"

When the St. Joseph (Mo.) Civic Festival Association featured "America's Answer" at the Auditorium, not long ago, they had 1,000 people at the matinee and 3,000 at the evening performance!

This is typical.

From all over the country come reports of packed houses, thrilled audiences and storms of applause bestowed on this marvelous war picture, which was filmed in France by the U. S. Signal Corps and sent to this country under the direction of General Pershing.

When you book "America's Answer," you do two things:

1—You sell out the house, automatically, for each showing of the film.

2—You render the Government a distinctly patriotic service by giving the people of your city an opportunity to visualize this nation's glorious part in the great war, through the medium of the People's Films.

If you have not yet booked "America's Answer," you had better do so right away. The rental has been figured on a basis that will permit of showing at regular admission prices.

All film is made of the same stuff. The celluloid of one picture is just as good as that of another.

It's what's put onto the film that counts. Fox Films are impregnated with the Fox Idea.

There are three links in the chain of picture values—story, direction, and acting.

The Fox Idea emphasizes all three—insures the quality of all three.

Fox stories are given first consideration by a Fox reader, must pass the Fox scenario editor, then obtain the endorsement of the Fox advisory board, and finally are accepted, if at all, by Mr. Fox personally.

Weeks are given to the consideration, rewriting and re-arrangement of every Fox story.

The Fox Idea places responsibility upon the director for dramatic construction and interpretation, for photography, for settings, for costuming—for all the multitudinous details of filming.

But—

The Fox director is not the final authority.

The Fox Idea provides for critical and minute reviewing of the director's work—first by the director and the star, then by William Fox, then by the Fox Film editor, then by a Board of Review, and again and again, after every change, by Mr. Fox and the reviewing board.

Thoroughness is a fundamental phase of the Fox Idea.

Fox Films do not happen—they are evolved.

The Fox Idea is producing a uniform product—a steadily improving product—pictures that the most of the people want.

The Fox Idea is making more money than ever before has been made for the most progressive and biggest exhibitors throughout the civilized world.

The Fox Idea offers you the same opportunity it offers these other exhibitors.

It has provided VICTORY PICTURES—the only distinctively new series of productions put on the market this year, —pictures that are radically different and yet of a uniform quality,

—pictures featuring TOM MIX, GLADYS BROCKWELL, and GEORGE WALSH in the most wholesome, most spectacular, most absorbing, most profitable photoplays ever screened.

William Farnum
in "FIGHTING BLOOD"
This picture has played a greater number of days in all parts of the world than any other that William Fox has released. It is a thrilling lumber camp and mining town story of a battling clergyman—the man who came back after unjust imprisonment. It has swift, tense action and a popular theme and is typically Farnum. It has done a record-breaking business and will repeat.

Theda Bara
in "UNDER TWO FLAGS"
The picturized version of Ouida's most famous novel. The most popular production in which Theda Bara has appeared in a role not of a vampire. It is a rapid-fire picture with a 100 per cent. record for box-office hits—undoubtedly the best photographic version ever made of a big stage success. On past performances alone it should be played to win at a walk.
Rudolf A. Walsh: First William Fox Picture
"REGENERATION"

A great, vibrant, colorful, spectacular production that is ablaze with thrill, action and romance. You will recall the big scenes of the steamboat fire, the rescue of the children, the fights between gangs of water rats and the regeneration of the hero. You will recall the success of this picture when it was first released—and look it with the assurance of turn-away business.

William Farnum
in "THE BROKEN LAW"
Love, romance and conquest are the themes of this colossal picture of the free and easy life of the highway. It is a thoroughly typical William Farnum subject and has a truly great cast, ranking in all respects among the most successful and satisfactory pictures that William Fox has released. It will be one of the biggest revenue producers of THE GREAT NINE.

Theda Bara
in "THE SERPENT"
It is Miss Bara's opinion that this is her greatest picture. Hundreds of exhibitors are of the same opinion. The big battle scenes—the bonfire—the surprising climaxes—all contribute to its wonderful popularity. The production was directed by Rudolf A. Walsh, and among those in the cast is George Walsh, one of the greatest favorites in filmland today.

"INFIDELITY"
Based on George Ohnet's Novel, "Dr. Rameau" A great melodrama, throbbing with sobs and tears, ripling with comedy and tense with human interest—a wonderful all-star cast, including Frederick Perry, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sutherland and Kittens—undoubtedly the best production of its sort ever released by William Fox or any other producer.

Valeska Suratt
in "THE SOUL OF BROADWAY"
THE GREAT NINE would not be complete without this remarkable picture with its wonderful aeroplane scenes and fashion parade at Atlantic City, and its exposure of the night life of Broadway. It is the result of the box-office success of "Infidelity," and will be as great a sensation today, because it is the type of thrilling picture in which public interest never wanes.

Theda Bara
in "THE DARLING OF PARIS"
This, perhaps, is the most gorgeous, costly and spectacular production of THE GREAT NINE series. It is based on "Tha Hunchback of Notre Dame," the world-famous novel by Victor Hugo, is Parisian in atmosphere and notable for the thrilling action and scenes of breathless suspense that spell profit.

William Farnum
in "HOODMAN BLIND"
Like "Infidelity," this production has been revised. It is founded on the famous stage success of the same name, "Hoodman Blind," by Wilson Barlow. It is one of the most powerful, thrilling and dramatic photoplays ever evolved. It certainly shows William Farnum at his best, and it will be one of the foremost box-office successes of THE GREAT NINE.

Our justifiable pride in the Pathe News after a career of nearly ten successful years, causes us to think not of discontinuance but of development on a scale hitherto unthought of.

The thousands of exhibitors who show the News twice a week; the many who have shown it ever since the first number was released, may well be pleased that the one reel feature that the business has produced will continue, better than ever, and under the PATHE name.

Big pictures of established value

Eight de luxe features will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America, his coming year, with Billie Rhodes, christened by T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, "the screen's daintiest star." The initial picture has just been completed, "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS," of which the Los Angeles 'Examiner' said —

"Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, historically, pictorially and financially. There has been greater premiers in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World"), but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary."

Henry B. Walthall, the undisputed premier dramatic artist of the screen, will appear in a series of eight special photoplays produced by the National Film Corporation of America. The first "AND A STILL SMALL VOICE," contains every element that made Walthall famous in such productions as "The Birth of A Nation" and D. W. Griffith's picture "The Great Love." No portrayal before or since has so endeared a player to the American public as Walthall's "little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation."

The Cannibal pictures, photographed at the risk of life, according to Frederick James Smith, in the October issue of the Motion Picture Classic, have "ten times the grip of an average photoplay." S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres in New York, says "The Johnson pictures will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first-class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return."

They are an extraordinary feature attraction.

"TARZAN OF THE APES" and "THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN"
Eight new and distinctive pictures are to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton with William Desmond in the stellar roles. The first of these big productions will be ready for release in January. No screen star has the youth, the magnetism, the virility, the force, the romantic charm of Desmond. All these qualities will shine out of his new subjects.

J. Warren Kerrigan as a young versatile player portrays the best in American life. His new pictures produced by Jesse D. Hampton, from big stories by prominent authors, will all be clean in conception, clean in production and powerful in theme. Five of Kerrigan's latest triumphs at the screen are ready for immediate release. They are "A Burglar for a Night", "A Dollar Bet", "Prisoners of the Pines", "Three X Gordon" and "The Drifters." All territory including Canada, except United States.

"The Prodigal Wife," a feature of distinction, is the first of twelve annual exceptionally dramatic photoplay productions to be released by Screencraft Pictures. "The Prodigal Wife" is from a story masterpiece by Edith Barnard Delano, published by Harper's and has been produced with a notable cast headed by Miss Lucy Cotton and Miss Mary Boland. THE HEARST NEWS REEL ORGANIZATION (INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE CO., INC.) HAS BEEN THE MAKER OF NEWS REEL HISTORY IN THE PAST AND HAS THE STAGE ALL SET FOR EVEN BIGGER EVENTS IN THE FUTURE

Mr. C. F. Zittel, Vice President and General Manager of the International Film Service Co., Inc., quotes the following extract from a conversation he had recently with Mr. J. A. Berst, formerly Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., now President of the United Pictures Corporation:

"The connection of the Pathe Exchange with the Hearst organization, through the International Film Service, was a most beneficial one for Pathe, and the turning point which led to Pathe's great success. The contract made by me with the International, which went into effect December 24th, 1916, was considered a great victory for Pathe, and from that moment the profits of the Pathe Exchange began to accrue very largely, and the Pathe News, combined with the Hearst International News under the title of the Hearst Pathe News, showed a profit that it had not shown for three years previous to the combine. In fact, for some time previous to the combination the Pathe News was not a paying venture."

The International Film Service Co., Inc., has purchased the Universal Current Events, the Universal Animated Weekly and the Mutual Screen Telegram, and the gathering forces of all these organizations are now being molded into the greatest news film amalgamation that has ever been in existence.

After December 24th, 1918, the name of Pathe will be eliminated from the Hearst Pathe News and this famous reel will be released under the title of the Hearst News. The names of the Universal Current Events and the Mutual Screen Telegram will also be retained, making three news reel issues a week to be made by the International Film Service Co., Inc., and released through the countrywide exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. The unequaled facilities of the Hearst camera forces, augmented by the forces of the other recently acquired companies, will mean the furnishing of news reels of a magnitude never before attempted. A unique and novel advertising and publicity campaign in the Hearst newspapers, magazines and affiliated papers, has been arranged for the promotion of these reels.

Does the Exhibitor Know?

This week Samuel Goldfish earns the honors of mention right at the start of this pinch-hitting editorial page.

Mr. Goldfish gains the place by an exclusive article he has contributed to this week’s issue of Motion Picture News. And because that article states some interesting views in a candid, straight-from-the-shoulder manner.

Summed up in a few words for the purpose of a headline the Goldwyn president’s article might say, “Does the exhibitor always know what he wants? Or what his patrons want?”

And that summary isn’t a whit more frank than every word of the article itself.

Read every line of it—and between the lines—and you will feel yourself grasping the producer’s viewpoint and seeing how things look through his spectacles.

We enjoyed the process—and we feel certain our exhibitor readers will also.

“Starting Something’’ Our Delight

We like to publish articles that “start something.” We hate to devote valuable white space to a statement of obvious conclusions, no matter how interestingly put.

That is why we take particular delight in giving you this article by Mr. Goldfish.

We know that several exhibitors are going to “come back” with views of their own.

And when they do we will have a discussion going that will help all concerned. For you have to get people scraping in this game before they will let anything but the trite and time-worn get into print over their signatures.

Mr. Goldfish’s article, by the way, is based on his reading of our Exhibitor Service Bureau.

Which leads us to thank the influenza epidemic once more for having given the “big fellows” time enough to read and study the picture trade papers.

This reading—so they tell us—has shown them that there is a trade paper keeping pace with the problems of the industry, and papers that keep pace with the press agents.

The Good Old Days

How glad we are that the “good old days” have long since flown. Those good old days when, if you ever hinted that the executive of a film company ever made a mistake you lost the organization’s advertising for a year.

We have that pleasant thought every now and then—particularly on the day the paper is published.

And we recall it now as we think of a couple of exhibitor letters that break into our “Reader Has His Say” department this week.

Both are rip-snorters and don’t mince words in expressing their opinions on a particularly timely subject—the First National—Mary Pickford—Famous Players, et al.

But—such are the vagaries of this giant industry—each takes a different side of the controversy. And the two letters reached the News office within a space of two days.

Now if J. D. Williams, Adolph Zukor—and you, too, Friend Reader—will only jump into the fight we’ll have still another battle on our hands.

Those “War Pictures”

Perhaps more candidly than wisely, we must admit that we are not among those who shy at the mere mention of “war pictures” now that peace is here.

We are with those who ask, “Where is the picture ‘Shenandoah’?”

For it will be remembered that “Shenandoah” was a twenty-year success, that it swept the country and piled up bank balances—and yet it was a “war play” and the Civil War had ended.

It all depends on what you want by “war picture.”

The producer and the exhibitor who thinks that anything which even mentions war is now dead as a door-nail as a box office attraction and entertainment is blinding himself to stage experience.

The bells may have tolled for the trash war picture, for the “jazz” war picture, for the picture that counted solely on the waving of the American flag and denunciation of the Germans for its earnings.

These pictures have earned big money, yet it is possibly true that their day has passed.

But—now—today—is the day of the real war picture, for the picture that is big in drama, big in conception and construction—big, because of and despite the war.

Perhaps it is on the market now, perhaps it is to come—but don’t let it get by you just because it is a “war picture.”

Judge the “war pictures” as pictures—from the standpoint of entertainment, on the same basis as you used in former peace times.

And you may find the—“Shenandoah.”

When the Yanks Come Home

In a few weeks the men from the fields of France and the boys in the camps will start back to their homes. In a few months the greater share of them will be back in civil life.

When they went away, you complained—Mr. Exhibitor—that your business had been badly damaged, that your best patrons had been taken out of the community.

You know what a big element they formed in theatre patronage.

And now they are coming back—coming back with new converts made to the screen by the Liberty theatres throughout the country and the Y. M. C. A. huts behind the lines.

What preparations are you making? Are you preparing to sense the desires of this new—yet old—element in your patronage?

What effect are the three million and more going to have on future pictures?

We are trying to help you find out.

In this issue Edward L. Hyman, director of the picture division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, gives his idea of the influence the returning Yankees are going to exert.

Mr. Hyman has been manager of two of the Liberty theatres and was promoted to the selection of all the films shown. He sums up his conclusions in an article that both manufacturers and exhibitors will do well to study.

It's in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Dame Rumor Says

DR—you meet her frequently on Broadway—whispered last week to all who would hear that the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films has seen fit to take up an analytical study of the film industry.

And our friend the garrulous Dame goes on to say that recommendations have been made to Washington which if carried out would find the Division in charge of a reorganization and efficiency program in distribution and production circles.

As usual we don't like to believe Dame Rumor.

And especially this time—for we don't imagine the Division desiring to enter or to precipitate the Administration on so dangerous an undertaking.

Dangerous, even if carried out by experts in motion pictures; and more so if placed in the hands of Washington appointees.

Dangerous to the industry—and risky to official Washington.

No—we don't believe Dame Rumor this time.

Captain William E. Blaisdell

We didn't have the honor of knowing Captain William E. Blaisdell—who made the supreme sacrifice on September 29 on a Flanders field.

But we have the pleasure—and the honor—of knowing George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World.

And in the words of sympathy that we would write here there is mingled a sacred envy of the father who can feel that his son's life was given so gloriously to the Cause.

The condolences of the entire News staff are extended to George Blaisdell, thoroughbred newspaper man, true-blue American.

Dealing in Personalities

GRACING the top of this eminent column this week is none other than J. D. Williams. J. D. talked shop—trade papers and film shop—with us for a whole hour last Tuesday while we held down a regular chair.

Such are the seats of the mighty! It begins to look as though anyone foolish enough to talk to yours truly is sure of getting "his picture in the paper." But that isn't our reason for this paragraph.

It is to tell what happened on our way to the First National offices at 6 W. 48th St.

Absentmindedly we turned from Fifth Avenue into 47th Street and entered No. 6 on that block. The surroundings were unfamiliar. To the darkey elevator runner we said, "Is First National in this building?"

"Deed, no, sah! But there's a bank right 'cross the street, sah!"

Wonder if "Little Mary" got her cue from that darkey?

We have felt for many weeks that exhibitors should meet the guiding spirit of the Robertson-Cole Company’s film activities. For each week has brought a new and bigger announcement from that organization—culminating in this week's Mutual story.

So we introduce you to Walter Hoff Seeley.

Robertson-Cole, by the way, is a name to bow to in financial and mercantile circles. With headquarters in New York and London and a network of connections covering the globe, they stand ace high as international exporters.

And though their reel film debut didn’t happen so many months ago they have surely landed on the lot with both feet firmly planted.

But why wonder when you add to the distributing experience of Walter Hoff Seeley the showmanship he displayed when managing Rochester's Piccadilly?

So—now that you have met him—

Hats off to Walter Hoff Seeley!

Charles C. Pettijohn—the Hoosier lawyer, he was once called—gave the trade paper boys a lunch last Saturday at Mrs. Rector's. The purpose was to explain the new Affiliated-Mutual combination.

And while Charlie may have been a lawyer, and still is a speechmaker, he made the explanations in such plain, unvarnished language that it was a treat.

We didn't hear a succession of superlative adjectives or naive buncombe—but just frankly stated facts.

The boys were so absolutely flabbergasted that they drank a toast to—

"A new kind of film speech."

And when Charles C. Pettijohn...
What They Say About the Quinn Letter

Here is the solution of the whole problem if it could ever be realized.

Sell a picture to the exhibitor on its own dramatic and box office value. Write and rewrite the stories until they are in such shape that it is felt that nothing more can be done to better them. Don't let these literary guys who hold down most of these scenario department jobs do this, but get showmen. Make the director responsible for the production and base his pay for every particular production on the kind of picture he turns out. Quit paying big salaries to actors who aren't known off Broadway. John Smith on the billing means just as much to the average patron of the picture theatre as a near star. There are a few people in the business who are worth all they get however much it is. The others aren't. Release enough prints of the good ones to cover every town hall in the country and go out and sell the production. And, if possible find some means of modifying the prevailing opinion of every man in or connected with the film business, that he knows all there is to know about the game and that everybody else is a nut.

I thank you.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) J. S. Dickerson.

P. S.—Eleven years an exhibitor with showshops at Watkins, Montour Falls, and Odessa, N. Y. Tanks? Yes, but we make them pay a profit.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen—

At your solicitation, here are my sentiments regarding QUINN'S COMMENT. It's the best thing you ever put in print. If all this looking facts in the face has come to the surface because of time for thought given us by the "flu" shut down, then let's have a month of epidemic of thought each year and make the other eleven months worth while. As a small town exhibitor, where a change of program each day is the rule and there's a haw to Rome by the every-night stand-bys when you put on a two-day run, I can truly and sanely say that given a "Rebecca" or a "Revelation" and I will make a two-day run on them, save 50 per cent of my advertising material and in two months' time men them back for another showing, purchase no additional advertising to that saved from first run, and still do far more business than I could on an ordinary program feature. You bet, yours for the conservation that cuts out the poor and the mediocore. I've never found out yet how to keep from getting them once in a while after they've been produced and I never know what to do with them when I see them coming my way.

Respectfully yours,

Earle S. Nesbitt.

Nation Gains Over Influenza Evil

Some Sections Report Relapse Because of Peace Celebrations — Whole Cities Disguise Themselves with Masks—Towns in Michigan Face Reclosing Order

The peace celebrations were almost too much for influenza-striken America, and various sections of the country have reported slight relapses owing to strenuous rejoicing and attendant ills, but on the whole steady progress was noted during the past week in the situation. Whole towns and cities are reopening, and in most of these business has picked up remarkably, according to the exhibitors.

Several cities are living under a mask rule, and no people are permitted on the streets without having the face covered. This rule was broken many times November 11, as celebrators could not blow horns with their faces muzzled. This is said to be responsible for some reclosings in Michigan. Other places have not reported ill effects that would create pessimism.

Michigan Cities Undergo Inspection by Officers

According to advice from Detroit, the State of Michigan is once again in danger of an influenza epidemic that may lead to state-wide closing. On November 15 the question was being seriously discussed by the State Health Board authorities, and Dr. R. M. Olin, the state physician, is personally making an inspection of various cities. It is probable, of course, that the ban will only be placed on those cities where the conditions are considered serious.

New cases reported to the state health authorities on Wednesday were 689, or 30 more than the day before. In fact, the number of daily reports has been growing. Bay City, Saginaw, Grand Rapids and Pontiac are all reported in bad shape. In Bay City 60 new cases and six deaths were reported in one day.

There was great rejoicing in Detroit and elsewhere in Michigan when the state ban was lifted. Business did not, however, pick up as much as the exhibitors anticipated and they do not expect to make up the losses. During the peace celebrations the downtown theatres in the larger cities did a big business. The downtown theatres, generally, have done a better business proportionately than those in residential neighborhoods.

Business Starts Well in Rochester Houses

Business started with a rush in the picture houses of Rochester, N. Y., when the closing ban was lifted. While there was a slight falling off on the following day, the average for the week was satisfactory. Peace celebration day was another boon for the business, and several of the downtown houses had crowds standing in line before the opening of the doors at five o'clock in the evening.

The sudden arrival of peace prospects has been causing managers considerable speculation as to what the tax situation is to be.

Twin Cities Slow in Getting Started

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Twin City theatres are now open and business is starting off with exceptional vigor, though a few people who have heard so much of influenza and worried so much about it are still a little hesitant about going to the theatre.

The influenza ban was lifted in St. Paul November 14, just eight days after the lid was clamped on, and, although the downtown theatres in that city did not open until Friday, many of the suburban theatres were in operation Thursday. The action taken by the St. Paul health authorities, who deserve credit for the business-like manner in which they handled the influenza situation, prompted the Minneapolis exhibitors to demand Dr. Guilford to give them a factory report.

Mayor Thomas Van Lear championed the cause of the exhibitors at the health council meeting and urged that the theatres of the city be opened immediately and without restrictions. It was pointed out that conditions in Minneapolis were not so bad as they had been painted and that Minneapolis would undoubtedly appreciate a little freedom and take good care of themselves.

The lifting of the ban in Minneapolis will mean that a hundred cities of the Northwest will follow suit within the next three or four days. Newspapers of Minneapolis showed that they favored the reopening of the theatres.

"Gas Masks" Come Into Their Own

Cloth masks are being worn in greater quantities throughout the United States on account of the influenza than they ever were before. Although they have not become very popular, the orders in the various cities are nevertheless very stringent in regard to their distribution, and many stores have adopted the masks, and it has not been unusual to see companies on the “lot” equipped with masks while shooting a picture.

An order calling for the universal wearing of cloth masks in all public places in Indianapolis, and closing the Indianapolis public schools November 19, was made by the Indianapolis Board of Health on November 18. The mask-wearing order became effective immediately and was in full force before another twenty-four hours had passed. The order requires the wearing of the masks in business houses, theatres, churches, factories, offices, street cars and other public places.

Opening Reports Fewer

Reports of theatres reopening following the lifting of the influenza ban throughout the country were less in number this week than formerly, probably owing to the fact that over eighty per cent of the motion picture theatres of the states are again in (Continued on page 3195)
Los Angeles Film Board Elects Officers

The recently formed Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, which numbers among its membership practically all of the exchange managers in Los Angeles, has perfected its organization.

Members of the new board held a meeting early in November and elected the following officers: President, David Bershon; manager for Universal; vice-president, T. E. Hancock, manager for World Film; secretary, A. P. Michael Narlian, a Los Angeles attorney.

Norbert Lusk Goes West for Goldwyn

Norbert Lusk, for more than a year a member of Goldwyn’s publicity staff, is on his way to the coast to take charge of publicity at the company’s Los Angeles studios. His duties there will include the preparation and placing of newspaper material in Los Angeles and the handling of special feature material for the motion picture magazines.

Headquarters of the Goldwyn publicity department will continue to be maintained at the company’s home office, 16 East Forty-second street, New York City.

Reports on the Influenza Situation

operation. Michigan seems to be the only doubtful spot, with the exception of the West Coast, where some of the houses were still closed at last reports, but entertaining prospects of opening very shortly.

Ogden, Utah—Ogden motion picture houses will open November 25, it is expected, although no definite date has been set. The celebration caused a set-back here and the situation has grown more serious.

San Diego, Cal.—The influenza ban has been lifted here and all motion picture theatres have reopened. Big business has been the rule.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Health Board here decided to permit theatres to open November 16, excepting in parts of Mission and the North Beach district. The latter will probably reopen about November 25.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Board of Health recommended the setting aside of the ordinance closing the theatres, to become effective November 25, on condition that gauze masks worn by employes and patrons. Compulsory wearing of masks is not enforced here in any other respect. to do in the influenza situation.

Hot Shots from a Hot Town!

JOHN H. KUNSKY’s name is known in more cities of these U.S.A. than Detroit has streets, but we’ll have to give the Henry Ford town credit for being the home of the Kunsky chain of theatres and Kunsky logic.

But to try and magnetize a little of the attention paid Kunsky from Detroit to New York, we publish below a few bright hits dropped by Mr. Kunsky in conversation with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. Some producers will probably refer to these as pertinent paragraphs—or impertinent. And others will say: “Well, there’s always two sides to—but here they are.

“National advertising by film producers or distributors as it is done today is money wasted. It no longer impresses the thinking exhibitor, or the public. It does not accomplish its purpose of impressing him with the quality of the production. His greatest criterion of successes is the results from the first runs in each local territory.”

“Detroit has had many syndicated advertise and publicity campaigns for alleged special features. They fooled both the public and the exhibitors first and second times. Now they discourage both of these elements.”

“National advertising prepared by producers and distributed for publication in local newspapers is so similar to the fake patent medicine copy we used to read, that it might be prepared by the same agencies. And the results are the same.”

“Producers seem to think more of themselves in their prepared ads for exhibitor use, than do they of the products they are advertising and the exhibitor to advertise. Does the public attend the theatre to see the ads?”

“The first-run account in any territory decides for at least eighty per cent of the other exhibitors whether the current product is what the producer claims it is, or whether it is what the exhibitors hope it is.”

“If producers and distributors would apportion their appropriations for national advertising on productions among their first-run accounts, and let the individual exhibitors do the local newspaper advertising, they would show remarkable common sense, and four a precedent which is almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry. The local newspapers are almost as old as advertising, but brand new in the film industry.”

“Many Beautiful Photographs are sent to exchanges by producers for exhibitor use in local newspapers. Few Practical Still is ever available to hand on any producers.”

“A manufacturer who persistently advertises himself, in newspapers or trade journals, gains little prestige with exhibitors, and makes his product of secondary importance. The exhibitor book pictures, not the so-called production executives.”

“Few exhibitors are favorably impressed with the propaganda publicity in the trade journals. They maintain that there is no better definition of individual ability and properly maintenance in what they see on the screen, and the treatment they receive at the exchanges.”

Health Officer May Be Ousted

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Have Declared War Against Acting State Health Commissioner for Rulings During Recent Influenza Epidemic

WHILE efforts of the Western Pennsylvania Motion Picture Exhibitors League, composed chiefly of exhibitors of Pittsburgh and vicinity, to induce Governor Brumbaugh to remove Acting State Health Commissioner B. Franklin Royer, on the strength of his incompetency in handling the influenza epidemic in Pennsylvania, are making absolutely no impression on the Governor, who has sustained the State Health Department throughout all the controversies that arose during the prevalence of the plague, it is said to be practically certain that Dr. Royer will lose out for reappointment when Governor-elect Sproul assumes office at the first of the year.

If Dr. Royer is bowed out, however, it will be because of his being allied with a different faction of the Republican party than that to which Sproul belongs, and will not in any sense be because of what the doctors for his health have done or may have failed.

The Western Pennsylvania League, of which M. Fietler is president, went so far as to accuse Dr. Royer of “gross incompetency” because “it would seem to all thinking men that preventive measures intelligently applied” would have kept down the death rate in the Legislature in action in sending this protest to the Governor was taken during the heat of the controversy between the Mayor of Pittsburgh and State Commissioner Royer when the mayor sought to open the Pittsburgh theatres before the date authorized by Royer.

The apparent bitterness felt by the Western Pennsylvania exhibitors toward Dr. Royer does not, however, seem to be shared by the exhibitors in the central and eastern sections of the State, who endorsed his action in closing the theatres as an entirely proper one in view of the necessity of conserving the public health in every way possible.

So while Governor Brumbaugh hasn’t the slightest idea of firing Dr. Royer in response to the Western Pennsylvania exhibitors’ request, their wish is likely to be granted ultimately through entirely different circumstances. Dr. Royer, while in no sense a politician, is a close personal friend of Governor Brumbaugh, and therefore was in entire sympathy with the present Governor, who tried in vain to prevent the nomination of Sproul—the present Governor-elect—at the Republican primaries last spring.

William Fox and George M. Cohan Accomplish Great Things—Brilliant Ball at Astor One of Outstanding Features

NOW that the United War Work campaign has drawn to a close the record made by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team under the direction of Chairman William Fox and Associate Chairman George M. Cohan, looms up as one of the real marks of the three week of wholesale canvassing for the common cause. Messrs. Fox and Cohan, together with Benjamin M. Kaye, treasurer, and C. D. Kempner, campaign organizer, were untiring in their efforts to make the theatrical and motion picture end of the drive the great success it turned out to be.

A peep into the comprehensive organization instituted by Mr. Fox to carry on the work is not amiss. Profiting by his experience in the drive of three years ago, Mr. Fox was able to gather a more complete working force and this only on two weeks’ notice. For it was not until a fortnight before the drive was inaugurated that Mr. Roekefeller persuaded the film executives to again take charge of the campaign work. Floor space was then immediately commanded in the new building at 110 West Forty-second street and two days before the drive opened a large force was working there.

In the short time given the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team to make ready something like 125 desks, 53 typewriters, 225 chairs, 100 tables, three sales, a telephone switchboard with 28 trunk lines and 50 office files, besides countless other accessories of a busy office were installed. And when the drive opened the office force under the direction of the various twenty-six committee executives was busy at work, while on the streets something like ten thousand workers kept the Theatrical and Motion Picture Team ever among the leaders of the city’s canvassers.

As was the case with the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, Mr. Fox’s team had charge of the theatres and restaurants and a most complete system was inaugurated to enable theatre managers, speakers and collectors to co-operate. The efficiency of it may be suggested by the statement that every day at one o’clock at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon Mr. Fox was able to state the sum total of the receipts of the day before to the very penny. It was the marvelous work of co-ordination between the collectors, theatrical managers, bank cashiers (expert accountants) and the head accountant at headquarters that made it possible for Mr. Fox to accomplish this. Probably one of the most efficiently organized departments in the whole office was that under the direction of May Upshaw, in charge of the Speakers’ Committee. “Tammany Hall is so complete in its organization,” said Miss Upshaw, “that we decided to model the Speakers’ Committee on the same order. As a consequence, we divided the city and its boroughs into forty districts. In each of these districts two women were appointed, women well known in their portion of the city, who were responsible for funds collected in their districts. These women in turn appointed campaigners, speakers and collectors. By working on the Tammany plan we thus secured workers fully familiar with the temperament of the people they were obliged to deal with. It proved vastly successful.”

Miss Upshaw’s department was also in supervision of restaurant collections, collections made at the two expositions, the opening and the Victory show ball of Saturday night and the combination Friars’ Frolic and Lambs’ Gambol on Sunday night, which wound up the work of the Theatrical and Motion Picture Team in the drive.

A.S. Kempner was general campaign director and organizer under William Fox’s direction. Under him the twenty-five departments were organized and each put into motion by still another competent executive. Some of the most important of these executives and committees were: James E. McBride, War Relics Committee; Charles Harvey, Sports Committee; Sam Harris and J. J. McCarthy, Benefits Committee; Walter Moore, Outdoor Advertising Committee; Samuel Berman, M. Khashin, John Wittman, R. Sanders, Samuel Sheer and Charles Moses, Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Committee; Theodore Mitchell, Publicity Committee; W. F. Hamilton (loaned by the Committee on Public Information), in charge of war exposition relieves; John Zanf, in charge of arrangements for Victory ball.

Film Notables Fled to Atlantic City

During the latter part of the influenza scourge many of the film notables took advantage of the enforced inactivity and were much in evidence at Atlantic City.

A survey of the boardwalk revealed the presence of Madame Petrowa, the Polish star, accompanied by Mrs. Clifton, scenario author; Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company, and McClure Productions, Inc., accompanied by Mrs. Ennis; William L. Sherry, of the Sherry exchanges; Regina Ward, Ethel Barrymore, the Metro star; George Le Guerre, of World Pictures, and several others.

Arthur H. Sawyer, one of the prime movers of the Western Screened S-L Pictures (Sawyer-Labin), was also observed busily at work in a private suite at the Traymore hotel on the first scenario of the new company. He was accompanied by Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, author of several photoplays, who is loaning his assistance to the story which will feature E. K. Lincoln under the direction of Ralph Ince.

W. H. Productions to Defend Suit

The following statement was issued by W. H. Productions Company concerning the proceedings instituted by the Federal Trade Commission:

“It is true that a proceeding has been commenced against us by the Federal Trade Commission, charging us with stifling and suppressing competition in Hart pictures. We believe that this proceeding has been instigated by business competitors who have misled the Federal Trade Commission with respect to the actual situation. The formal defense of the proceedings was placed before the court by our attorneys, Messrs. Seligberg, Lewis & Strouse, who advise us that we have a complete defense on the merits to the proceeding.

As a business matter, every one in the trade knows that we have not suppressed competition, but that our handling of the Hart re-issues increased competition and was a Godsend to many small exhibitors. The charges of fraud and fooling the public are ridiculous, because if our re-issues were not popular the theatres would not take them, and therefore the state rights buyers would not patronize us, whereas the same people who are now buying our new re-issues have bought our original Hart re-issues. We are, therefore, convinced that we are stimulating a fair competition to the benefit of the whole industry, and we are prepared to fight this proceeding to the last ditch in the interest of the rights of producers to re-issue popular pictures and the rights of exhibitors to show them, and in order to prevent the attempts of stars from monopolizing the market for their new and high-priced pictures.”

Players Organize Union at Los Angeles

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor at Laredo, Tex., Tuesday granted a charter to the Motion Picture Players’ Union of Los Angeles. Seymour Hastings, secretary and treasurer of the union, was the representative of the Los Angeles film players at this session.

Work has been progressing for the past two months looking to the organization of a union. First, three mass meetings were held, at the third of which a committee on organization composed of fifteen were named, and officers were elected as follows: J. B. Laffin, president; Phillip Gastrock, vice-president; B. C. Apling, second vice-president, and Seymour Hastings, secretary and treasurer. It is planned that the charter will be held open until January 1st. The membership rules provides that members shall have at least two years experience in work before the camera. Now that the charter has been granted, constitution and by-laws will be adopted by the thousand or more members, and the working of the members will be specified in these.

The purpose of the union, it is stated by the officers, is to eliminate the undesirable classes which are a discredit to the industry. Later it is expected a wage scale to fix the minimum salary will be adopted.
Charles S. Hart, Director of Division of Films, Committee on Public Information

Official War Review Will Be Continued

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, makes the above five announcement that, despite the close of the war, the Official War Review, released through Pathe, will be continued indefinitely, and that all other Government pictures, now issued, or being assembled, will be released according to schedule.

"It is only fair to exhibitors and the motion picture interests generally," says Director Hart, "that they should know just what to expect in regard to the war pictures that have been announced by the Division of Films. The progress of events in Europe—the evacuation of the various invaded territories—the reconstruction of devastated France and Belgium—the ferment in Germany—the meeting of the peace commission—these are all matters of tremendous historical and news interest, and they will be fully covered by the Official War Review.

"Under Four Flags" will probably be the last big, war picture to be issued by the Division of Films, but several two-reel pictures are now being assembled—notably those included in the U. S. A. series, and they will be issued as announced. The present activities of the Division of Films carries its work up to June 1st.

"America's Answer" Is Shown in Philadelphia

"America's Answer," the second U. S. Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, was released in Philadelphia at the Palace theatre, November 18th, for one week.

The week of November 24th will be split between the Strand and Germantown theatres, in the Quaker City.

WANTS A KIND WORD FOR AMERICAN
Fred S. Meyer Gets Back in Harness and Loosens Up With a Barrage of Interesting Reading

THERE following letter needs no explanation other than that it is from Fred S. Meyer, with the American Film Company offices in Minneapolis, Minn.:

"Back in my old camping grounds once again, as the local Representative of AMERICAN FILM for this territory.

"It feels mighty good to be back home, after so long an illness, and this, by the way, in the state where yours truly put the NEWS over the top some few years ago.

"I read with a great deal of interest ANONYMOUS' letter a few weeks ago, also the one in this week's issue. The NEWS has always been fair, so let's give the devil his dues, without in any way commercializing an act of philanthropy, or trying to get some free publicity, too.

"AMERICAN not only kept its employees on the payroll during this crisis, but actually engaged new help in spite of the hull, as in the case of the writer. In view of the fact that this is the fifth week that Minneapolis is closed up tight, and but few theatres open in our territory, I think this is saying a great deal for AMERICAN and President Hutchinson.

"In view of the fact that you mentioned GOLDwyn in your last number, please mention AMERICAN. I think they are entitled to a kind of recognition by getting a lot of contracts during this forced semi-vacation.

"My experience as an exchange manager has taught me that with but few exceptions, it has always paid to be with the underdog, and the firms who so nobly stood by their help in the past month, will not be the losers in any way.

"I dare say, that when you refer to the personnel of these firms in a year or two from now, you'll still find the same employees, with but few exceptions. Possibly if other exchanges were to give little more thought, they would not be prompted to change their Representatives every two or three months.

"You may use any part of this letter you see fit, and I know of no better way of showing that I am truly sincere in what I have said, than by signing my name. Why this letter?

"Are your contributors afraid to let the exhibitors know that they are working for a WHITE firm, or do they figure that they may be 'let out' on that account."

The above letter has not been considered hereafter. An occasion presented itself, and THREE firm (to the best of my knowledge, Goldwyn, Pathe and AMERICAN are the only firms) showed for their films, with critic's opinions showed for their films.

"The party who wrote that first anonymous letter hit the nail on the head. Why did not sign his name? Not quite clear to me, but perhaps had his reasons for his own.

"Nevertheless, the fact remains that employees who were retained on the payroll during this crisis, will show their appreciation and reciprocate a thousand fold."

Chas. S. Hart Sails for Europe

Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information Is Bunketeed Before Departure

CHAS. S. HART, director of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, was a passenger on the Baltic, of the White Star Line, which sailed for England Tuesday, November 19th. He will be absent several weeks, and during his sojourn abroad will visit France, Italy, Holland, and Sweden.

Director Hart's trip is made for the purpose of looking over the film situation in England and on the Continent, and studying the possibilities of the motion picture in assisting President Wilson in carrying out his idea of a closer cooperation between the various nations. It is believed that the films, which, through the Government war pictures, did so much to create a united America in favor of the war, will be equally effective in creating a sympathetic interest between the United States and the countries of Europe.

Director Hart, it is announced, will endeavor to give the plan a practical test, and will not only arrange for the presentation of the U. S. Government pictures overseas, but will also make it possible to exhibit in the United States foreign official films that have not hitherto been released.

Mr. Hart will also arrange for the taking of pictures of the peace parliament and the work of reconstruction in the war area.

The foreign Division of the Committee on Public Information has already established offices in London, Paris and other European centers, and through them the film work on both sides of the water will be co-ordinated, and A. J. Baynes again will be the acting director of the Division of Films during Mr. Hart's absence.

Carl Byoir, associate chairman of the Committee on Public Information, also sailed on the Baltic with Mr. Hart.

A farewell dinner was given to Director Hart by his associates in the Division of Films, Monday evening, November 18th, at the Hotel Chatham.

Rufus Steele, scenario editor of the Division of Films, was the toastmaster, and the others present, in addition to the guest of honor, were: Carl Byoir, Associate Chairman of the Committee on Public Information; Manager Marcus A. Beeman, E. M. Anderson and T. T. Bartelme, of the foreign picture section; Capt. G. McLeod Baynes and Charles Urban of the Department of Distribution of British films in the United States; Lieutenant Prohet, of the Italian mission; T. S. Barrett, comptroller of the Division of Films; Denis J. Sullivan, George Meeker and Edward L. Stodard, of the Department of Distribution; C. S. Trobridge, manager of feature films; W. J. MacInnes and Willard D. Corey, of the advertising and publicity bureau; Robt. D. Rinheart and M. E. A. Tucker, of the bureau of film production; L. B. Bassett of the motion picture of Philadelphia; Gardiner W. Wood, Washington representative of the Division; Carlyle Ellis, D. K. Niles, J. S. Flynn and Louis M. Hammerling, president of the American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers.
Goldfish Writes About Roth Letter

[Editor's Note—Eugene H. Roth, manager of the California and Portola theatres at San Francisco, was the author of a very comprehensive article written especially for MOTION PICTURE NEWS and published in the November 16 issue. This article was entitled, "Check Up Now. Everybody," Says Roth.

The important theme was brought out forcibly also in the same issue by J. A. Quinn of Quinn's Rialto at Los Angeles, who dwelt to considerable length on statements made by George Kleine and commended very strongly Mr. Johnston's editorials on the same subject.

J. D. Williams, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, then replied to Mr. Quinn's many assertions in a forceful and lengthy communication to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which was published in the November 23 issue.

Now Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, comes back at Mr. Roth along the same very interesting theme as is evidenced by the following:]

Editor, Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Dear Sir:—

I WONDER how many exhibitors of motion pictures there are in the entire United States who really know what kind of stories, themes and productions their audiences—the public—really like and desire to see on the screen.

My desire for information is not merely a personal one; it is the desire of all producers of the better class pictures.

Exhibitors large and small are constantly finding voice in the trade journals to tell the producers the kind of pictures they do not want. Please note that I say they, the exhibitors. They do not say their public does not want this or that kind of picture, and if they did say so I seriously and directly challenge their accurate understanding of the public they serve as the retailers of screen amusement.

Exhibitors not only do not understand what their public wants; they definitely and obstinately obstruct the producer in his efforts to supply it. For one of the greatest troubles the producer has is getting to the public itself through the Chinese wall of the exhibitors' personal prejudice. This wall is composed of the exhibitor who says: "I don't like comedies" and "I don't like operatic stories," and all of fifty other narrow-minded, fixed ideas.

In the Motion Picture News of November 10th Mr. Eugene H. Roth, of the California and Portola theatres in San Francisco, gives voice to the opinion that the recent suspension of releasing and producing has given the producers time to "take stock" of themselves. Now Mr. Roth represents the very best type of American exhibitor. He is a man of real intelligence; he serves a large clientele with entertainment. He is the kind of man to whom the producer would naturally gravitate for advice. Some advice he gives the producer in his article.

But it consists entirely in telling the producer what not to do. In not one single paragraph does he give us any specific or definite hints what we should do. He tells us what the public does not want—for instance, fairy tale pictures, biblical pictures, costume pictures, underworld and licentious pictures—but when it comes to telling us what the public does want he confines himself to the generalization, admirable but vague: "Good, wholesome stories with a heart interest and appeal."

Mind you, Mr. Roth is unquestionably right—as far as he goes. Especially with regard to licentious themes. But I wish Mr. Roth had to sit in my chair for a short month and listen to the tale of the endless bias of exhibitors. If they were all of the same calibre as himself he would not complain.

But it is the host of exhibitors who mistake their own arbitrary dogmas and prejudices for the public taste who constitute the greatest stumbling block in the producer's path. Not so much as one in five hundred can tell the producer accurately what the public does want. With all their opportunities for face-to-face contacts with their clientele they rarely find out.

Mr. Roth says the producers have not encouraged writers sufficiently to incite them to bring out the best they have. Now, that, to put it bluntly, is absurd. I am afraid Mr. Roth knows very little about writers, their problems, their conditions. For example, absolutely the cheapest price for which any of the larger companies can buy a creditable scenario—an original and hitherto unpublished story—is one thousand dollars.

I know the magazine market in America and I know that the man who sells us a scenario for a thousand dollars could not get one cent over $500 for the same story from any American weekly or monthly. In other words, the standard price for a scenario is $1,000. The standard price for a short story, demanding the same amount of care and ingenuity, is from $150 to $500—and I can assure you that the writer who gets $500 is exceptional.

But that is only one shallow channel of the literary market. Let us talk plays: The lowest asking price and about the lowest selling price of any play actually acted that a producer of pictures can buy is from three to seven thousand dollars. And recently producers have been coming the field, willing to pay double that amount for appealing material of established reputation. A few days ago $40,000 was paid for the picture rights to a successful play.

Personally, I am completely convinced that many of Mr. Roth's assertions should have increased the currency of this baseless canard. It is evidently a popular error that he does not understand writers. He does not realize that it is that same Chinese wall of exhibitors' prejudice that does more to discourage writers than all other factors put together.

It is the restrictions that are put on their imaginations that discourage them. It is the innumerable prohibitions that confine their brains. I know writers some of whom are among my best friends. If they could write what they liked, if they were free to choose subjects unhampered by the uninformed, monotonous cry that "producers do not encourage and develop authors or get the best they have." The motion picture is paying more money to the good writers of America than the printed magazines. I am surprised, and a trifle hurt, that a man of Mr. Roth's I should have increased the currency of this baseless canard. It is evidently a popular error that he does not understand writers. He does not realize that it is that same Chinese wall of exhibitors' prejudice that does more to discourage writers than all other factors put together.

Permit me, if you please, to give you a couple of instances:

I do not mind being specific. When Goldwyn was started we were just entering the world war, now happily and victoriously ended. We felt that we had a skillful approximate of public feeling in America. We determined to produce some unusually fine comedy-dramas. We persuaded Madge Kennedy, one of the most successful American stars, to quit the stage for the screen.

She appeared in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married," "Our Little Wife" and three or four other excellent comedies. Instantly there was an exhibitor chorus: We don't want comedies. "We don't want nice little stories, we don't want soft stories, but stories with plot and backbone." And again this experience showed us that it is only in the teeth of the most violent opposition that a producer can introduce new personalities to the public.

The exhibitor says: "Give us fresh faces, new people." And when we offer them fresh faces and unacknowledged personalities they say: "Why, I never heard of her." "We never heard of her." I call it infernal arrogance in any man to assume that the public at large is as ignorant as he is. Sometimes I am inclined to think most exhibitors never go outside their theatres, never read anything but the trade papers and have absolutely no contact with any part of the world that does not come within a radius of ten yards of the box office window.

General Reopening Is At Hand on West Coast

The near approach of a general reopening of motion picture houses in Southern California and adjoining states is indicated by the numerous inquiries received by managers of Los Angeles film exchanges. Exhibitors during the past few days have displayed so much interest in the film market that several groups of salesmen started from Los Angeles to visit the theatres of Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico.

Needles and Whittier authorities raised the theatre ban on Monday, November 11, and there was an exodus of film salesmen from Los Angeles to the latter cities on Tuesday. Harry Ballance, manager for Paramount-Artcraft, ordered Charles A. McVicker to start for the Arizona territory on Wednesday, November 13.

W. H. Hepburn, manager for Vitagraph, is preparing for action with exhibitors of his territory. D. S. Mitchell of the Vitaphone offices, started Wednesday, November 13, for San Diego, the Imperial Valley and Arizona. Robert Armador has left his home office in Los Angeles for a trip through Southern California.

New California Opens at Los Angeles Soon

The managers of the New California theatre to be opened in Los Angeles December 2, have sent out invitations to prominent people to act as guests of honor at the opening of this large house. Governor Stephens of California has been chosen to make the opening address.

Other invitations have gone forward by wire to Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News. The Actraft subject, "Arizona," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, has been booked for the opening week, and with this in addition to a news weekly and comedy will be shown the Burlington Travel series.

The officers of the California Theatre Company are Fred Miller, president and general manager; Harry Leonhart, director of presentation; Bert Bertelson, business manager; W. A. Bishop, managing director, and Roy Miller, director of publicity.

Ten Government Showings for "Under Four Flags"

There will be ten direct Government showings for "Under Four Flags," the latest U. S. Official War Picture issued by the Division of Films. The "official" cities are New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Dayton, Philadelphia and Chicago.

The release of the picture to exhibitors throughout the United States will follow. The demand for "Under Four Flags" is reported to be remarkable. In order to meet this demand seventy-five prints of the new film are being made at the laboratories of the Division of Films, and this number, it is expected, will be greatly increased.

Film Folks Entertain Soldiers

Members of Los Angeles Film Colony Entertained Soldiers by Giving Vaudeville Program Every Evening

SOLDIERS in training at Camp Kearny, near San Diego, were given every evening a vaudeville program of two hours' duration by members of the motion picture colony in Los Angeles, through arrangements made by the Motion Picture War Service Association. The entertainment program began on the evening of November 8, when members of the Lasky studio were in charge of the program. Those taking part were Wallace Reid and Dorothy Dalton; Hughie Fay of Sunshine Comedy studios; the vaudeville team of Trimmings and Gore, and the Lasky studio orchestra and Jack Bills.

On Saturday evening William Duncan and Vitagraph Company were in charge of the show. Bill Murphy gave a lariat act; with Wallace Callis as an Indian stuntman; William Duncan as a magician, and came back in a black-face sketch, and a number of songs acts were given by the quartet.

At Christie staged the show on Monday evening, and was assisted by the Christie new leading woman, Dorothy De Vore and Bobbie Vernon. He took with him a chorus of six dancing girls, and a jazz orchestra of six pieces. There was a sole dance by Marjorie Carville; George Beban told stories, and a monologue was given by Dick Coborn. Major General Shanks, commandant of Camp Kearny, was guest of honor, and following the show the several bands of the camp rendezoned the Christie players for a half hour.

Tuesday night Charles Murray was master of ceremonies, and put on a program made up by the Keystone comedians and dancing girls. Ben Turpin was there with both his legs, and Chester Conklin proved he could do more than merely pull up his trousers or wipe off his mustache.

Wednesday evening a program was given by Ruth Roland, Harry McCoy, George Beban, William Desmond and four acts from Pantages theatre, which is closed. This program was arranged by Jeanie MacPherson.

The programs will be given each evening at Camp Kearny until the influenza quarantine is lifted. The audience each evening consists of from five to eight thousand men who occupy seats in an amphitheatre built within the confines of the camp, while the stage upon which the entertainment is given is on the outside. Thus the quarantine rules are strictly complied with. All soldiers wear influenza masks during the time they are in the amphitheatre.

Six More Companies Joined National Association—Exhibitors to Get Fifty Per Cent Representation

Six additional members were received at the quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held November 14th, with President William A. Brady in the chair.

The following companies were elected to membership: Triangle Film Corporation, Photoplay Magazine, Apeada Studios, U. Olo, John Olsen & Co., Robertson-Cole Company, and the Triangle Distributing Company was reinstated.

It was decided to send a committee of five representing the Association to the reconstruction convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which is to be held at Atlantic City, December 4th, 5th and 6th. Mr. Brady appointed the following committee, composed of a representative of each division of the association: Adolph Zukor, Peter J. Schaefer, Richard Gradwell, Jules Brulatour and James Hoff. All of these gentlemen accepted the appointment and agreed to attend the convention.

One of the most important actions taken was the agreement to amend the by-laws of the association so that the recently amalgamated organizations could receive a 50 per cent. representation on the board of directors and all of the standing and special committees of the association.

As the by-laws can only be amended by a meeting of the members of the entire association on receipt of a twenty-one day notice, it was moved that Peter J. Schaefer be empowered to draft the necessary amendments, which on approval would be submitted to a general meeting of the association to be held on or about December 10th.

Alfred Black of Maine requested the association to go on record as being opposed to the action of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in discriminating against the motion picture theatres of the country in favor of the vaudeville theatres.

Mr. Black described the history of the actions of the society in this respect and was empowered to draw up a resolution condemning the discriminatory action of the society, and it was then adopted.

Chaplin Sues Promoters of Alleged Imitator

Charlie Chaplin has filed an action in the Federal court of New York to prevent the exhibition of a picture called "Charlie in the Trenches." He asks that Yvon Potash and Isadore Peskov be restrained, by an injunction, from exhibiting the subject at the Crystal Hall Photoplay theatre.

In addition, he is suing the two for $50,000 in damages for the insult to his own name and character. The organization refuses to discontinue the pictures if it agrees to the appointment and agreed to attend the convention.

As the by-laws can only be amended by a meeting of the members of the entire association on receipt of a twenty-one day
Airman Killed After Making Scenes for Rapf

A few days after he had completed a series of daring stunts for the Harry Rapf production of "Once Upon a Helter," shortly to be released, Allen Adams, a United States Government air pilot, attached to the ordnance department, was killed at Central Park, L. L., Monday, November 15. Adams, 21, had just started on a flight, became unmanageable and crashed to the ground.

Elaine Hammerstein is featured in the Rapf production and Frank Crane directed it.

When Madge Kennedy took the stage and joined the Goldwyn forces she was already one of the most popular personalities, one of the best distinguished American comedians. But some of these exhibitors who have been seen on this stage have never heard of her, and it is possible for them to give her a chance to decide for herself.

The exhibitors they are talking about. They had never asked their public what she was, and it was not even the opportunity to let their public determine for itself what it wanted. And to prove how little they knew about it, within a short time the studio had to increase the number of its prints on all Madge Kennedy productions. The exhibitors were already aware she was firmly and permanently established in pictures.

And within six months the tide had definitely turned in favor of comedy dramas and not less that four producers were breaking the necks to find comedy-drama stories and to develop comedies in the United States. Had we taken exhibitor personalities as accurately representing popular public opinion, we should have had no business with Madge Kennedy, for she would have returned to the silent screen, and the different audience element maintained her high favor for the rest of her natural life.

Not only that—there would be no the drama funny, no Marquise Clark—the public would not have been aware. It works out favorite of ten years ago, the hackneyed blood and melodrama, if we had listened to the exhibitors.

By the way, Senator Roth, who has also developed the musical side of motion picture presentation to its highest stage, cannot overcome the feeling that the film has been musically influenced by musical brilliances.

There is nothing fundamentally or generally wrong with the large producers in the motion pictures industry, and there is a great deal of what is basically and drastically wrong with the exhibitors, and excluding some of the largest ones—as large as Mr. Roth.

A number of the large exhibitors have, indicated this or that, determined to see if they have the power to produce. If they succeed, the picture business will be in a national pastime and amusement. In certain cites, they have determined what amount to control of his town; he has obtained the three or four, or the two leading houses where first-runs are presented.

And in many other cases, they have this town sewed up producers will get $25 or $50 a day for pictures and no more. If you are twenty or thirty strong, you seek to choke off the first-run revenues of the picture business to a minimum.

In the course of time—and not a very long time—many exhibitors will be getting $25 and $50 pictures in quality in place of the expensive productions they are now receiving.

The producer who has been making these exposes has found that his product is not going to sell unless he puts it into a pattern to fit the cloth; he will make, from the point of cost, and expense the kind of pictures that he can rent to the exhibitor at his favourable prices or choose the movies to date he will show himself will starve to death from his ignorance.

You cannot permanently feed appetites that demand the best food on course, cheaper food—not in that corner of the world.

I have in mind two such towns at the present moment. There would not be one between Madge Kennedy men; they are in business for a quick clean-up at the end of the week, and everybody, especially at the expense of their fellow exhibitors.

But for the few producers of the costlier, better qualities pictures there would not seem a motion pictures industry and there would be only theatres like the New York Rialto, Rivoir and Stravitz, and Mr. Roth's colony. Therefore, The United States would be a nation full of and not a nation of small buildings. Glamour and thunder entertainment in the same degree of excellence that has never been heard once before.

Exhibitors cannot fill theatres and make a profit with the little so-called "stars" and with the trite pictures. If the four largest producing companies at present in the industry did not produce a single picture in the next few months and the stars whose services are controlled by them, there would be indicated that any middleman was active for the same period of time there would be from the collapse of exhibitors cases of exposed bankruptcy in the United States.

Their business would die out and disappear overnight. They couldn't exist on the average pictures and on personalities created by publicity instead of by popular reception.

SAMIUL GOLDFISH.

"Czar" Censor May Come Back

Pennsylvania Exhibitor and Distributors, Fear That Recent Election Results May Bring J. Louis Breitinger Back

HARRISBURG, PA.—The chances for the return of J. Louis Breitinger as head of the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors seem stronger since the election of Senator William G. Sproul as Governor of the State in the November voting. Indeed, representatives of the picture interests in Pennsylvania are agog with speculation as to whether the former chief censor, who was criticised so widely for his arbitrary methods and who was deposed by Governor Brumbaugh, in connection with the factional fight within the Republican party, will be able to get back into the harness, with the Sproul-Brontmng censor, with which he is so strongly allied, has got back into control.

It is pointed out in this connection that Breitinger is an out-and-out Penrose man, with respect to politics, and that United States Senator Petrose is the head of the Republican faction that fought the Brumbaugh wing of the party and succeeded in electing Sproul as Governor this fall. Moreover, Breitinger is said to be a close personal friend of Penrose, in addition to being a political ally, and there isn't any disputing the fact that Governor Brumbaugh ousted Breitinger as chief censor be-

Rights to "Mickey" Sold in Many Territories

The rights to "Mickey" for the New England territory have been bought by the Boston Photoplay Company of Boston, Mass., and for Wisconsin by the Wisconsin Film Company of Milwaukee, Wis.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New Jersey have acquired the rights to "Mickey" for New Jersey, and Magnet Film Exchange of New York City control the rights to "Mickey" in New York State, includng the Tri-State area.

On Monday night, November 18th, "Mickey" was shown for the first time, at the Regent theatre, Paterson, N. J. In spite of unfavorable rainy weather, it is declared that the Regent theatre did the biggest business in the history of that theatre. The theatre was said to be filled to capacity all day, and "Mickey" was shown to over eight thousand people—a record that not even the Chaplin productions has equaled, according to an official of the W. H. Company.

Bushman and Bayne in a Romantic Drama

Unusual interest has been manifested throughout the entire industry in the Vitagraph announcement that it will release early in January a picture starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. The name and character of the production has not been announced, but it is intimated that it is a romantic drama.

The play was written by Albert E. Smith, cause of the latter's close relations with Penrose. Breitinger is known to have a strong ambition to get back into the position of head censor, and in fact in the last session of the Legislature he tried to have a law passed that would have created a State Bureau of Amusements, in the hope that he would be made the head of it, but the measure was defeated.

It is practically certain that at least two of the three members of the present censorship board will be ousted when Sproul takes the gubernatorial chair. These are Chairman Frank R. Shattuck and Dr. Eds P. Oberholtzer—both Philadelphians and both close personal friends of Governor Brumbaugh.

While the appointments of these two men never were looked upon as political appointments they have, nevertheless, been classed as distastefully Brumbaugh men and there have been several occasions, since they have been members of the board, that the board has openly clashed with interests known to be friendly with the Penrose faction. It is probable that, therefore, that when the Governor-elect, who won with the Penrose backing, begins to seek places as rewards for men of the faction that elected him, Shattuck and Oberholtzer will be among those numerous friends of Governor Brumbaugh, among the present State office holders, who will be listed for the discard.

Vitagraph Announces Its December 2 Program

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of December 2 has been scheduled as follows:

Blue Ribbon feature, five parts, "The Dawn of Understanding," featuring Bessie Love. "From Romance to Production," a mapmade by Modern, adapted from Burt Hare's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains," directed by David Smith.

Serial, two parts, "The Whirling Trap," epispo Number 7 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Chaplin Plays Opposition in Atlanta to Tune of a Lawsuit

Atlanta, Ga.—While Charlie Chaplin was delighting thousands of Atlantians in his latest release, "Shoulder Arms," at the Criterion and also the Forsyth theatre, the managers of these two houses were in Judge Pendleton's court where a legal fight was being waged over the double showing.

The fight was caused by Jake Wells, lessee of the Forsyth, applying for an injunction to prevent the picture being shown at the Criterion theatre and also to prevent future Chaplin releases being shown there.

The action was brought by Mr. Wells against the First National Exhibitors' Association, the Criterion theatre, Sig Samuels and W. C. Patterson. All were made parties to the suit. Mr. Wells set forth that he was being injured financially and that his contract, which read for the city of Atlanta, gave him the exclusive right to play the picture. His contract was made last March, while that of the Criterion was made in August. Affidavits were presented from distributors to the effect that custom and rules, the contract that Mr. Wells had for the Chaplin releases entitled him to the first run privileges in Atlanta.

On the other hand, the management of the Criterion held that while Mr. Wells had a contract for these releases, that it was not a contract for the exclusive showing and that the Criterion had the right to run these pictures as soon as released.

Southern Officials View "Beyond the Law"

Many applications have already been received for "Beyond the Law," according to Emmett Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, producers of that picture which was made for the state rights market.

The premiere showing was scheduled for Wurlitzer hall, New York City, November 26. The picture was in eight reels originally, but has been cut down to six fast moving reels.

At a private showing of the picture before officials of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, favorable comment was made on the production. The officials express themselves as highly satisfied with the work of Emmett Dalton, who not only appeared in the leading role, but also supervised the production under the direction of Theodore Marsten.

Mildred Evelyn Wetherell Dies in Canada

While M. P. Wetherell, manager of the Rex and Auditorium theatres at Cranbrook, British Columbia, recovered from an attack of influenza, his little ten-year-old daughter, Mildred, succumbed to pneumonia.

Mildred Evelyn Wetherell passed away November 3 and is mourned by not only the father and mother, but by a host of friends in the theatrical and motion picture profession.

Frank Keenan Forms Producing Company

Frank Keenan, who for the past year has been making features for and under contract with Pathé Exchange, has inaugurated his new company, the Keenan Productions, Inc., and will, in future, produce independently.

During the coming year he plans to make eight pictures and has already entered into an arrangement whereby Pathé will distribute these pictures. Mr. Keenan entered the field of independent producers convinced that under his own management he could make better pictures.

Various drawbacks that attend the star and producer who produces on a time basis will be dispensed with, according to Mr. Keenan.

Mr. Keenan will leave New York for the coast immediately, where he will begin work at the Robert Brunton studios.

Ernest Warde will be his director while Jack Cyniman will head the stage department. The first picture made will be the first in the series of the preparation of scenarios. Both these men have been affiliated with him in the production of his Pathé pictures. His first effort in the independent field will be "The Wild Cat," a Saturday Evening Post story.

All companies have their leading character is a crude Cumberland mountaineer, a man whose patriotism and love of country is awakened through a peculiar series of circumstances. The role is said to provide Mr. Keenan with wonderful working material.

In an interview to the trade press previous to his departure for the coast, Mr. Keenan told his plans in full. They are plans which, faithfully carried out, will tend to the general betterment of motion picture production. "I am willing to make less money at the start," he said, "rather than injure my reputation by haphazard production by working for a company that demands pictures on schedule. The average program producer will sacrifice half its chances of being a success when the producers rush it through on schedule.

It shows none of the forethought or imagination that comes with the revamping and revision of the script that it is the prerogative of the independent producer to give to it. With my own pictures I intend to work them through on no schedule. Not one of them will leave my hands until it measures satisfactorily with expectations entertained for it before it was put in production."

Mr. Keenan complimented Pathé Exchange on its system of distribution, saying that he was glad his product would go out through a house that did not demand of the exhibitor that he take his whole program or not view it. "In all my dealings with Pathé," he said, "I have never had occasion to complain. It is only that I believe by being my own boss in the production end of the art that I can better both myself and all those with whom I am associated either in the distribution or the exhibiting end."

Neilan Directs Pickford

Mary Pickford has leased space at the Sunset Studios in Los Angeles and has begun production work on "Daddy Long-Legs." Marshall Neilan is directing the picture.

Fairbanks in Four Days Gets $26,000

When Douglas Fairbanks, the acrobatic Artcraft star, pledged himself to raise $25,000 for the United War Work campaign, there were some skeptics who thought he became a little over-enthusiastic. However, on the fourth day of his transcontinental tour in behalf of the War Work drive, he exceeded the amount pledged by a million dollars, according to telegraphic information released by the campaign officials in New York City.

Fairbanks started his personal drive ahead of the official opening, opening at Washington on Friday. Here he received a special message from President Wilson, to deliver to the people along the route of his tour. After the opening ceremonies Doug addressed a large meeting and then started for Charlotte, N. C., where he arrived Saturday. Spartansburg, S. C., was the next stop, then Greenville, S. C., and Atlanta, Ga., all on Saturday.

At each city military bands and special police details met the Artcraft star and local civic officials conducted him to specially erected platforms near the train depots. One of the most notable demonstrations to which Doug was invited took place at Atlanta on Saturday night.

In rapid succession he covered the following cities in much the same manner until at the end of the fourth day he had passed the $25,000,000 set for himself, New Orleans, Tucson and Los Angeles.

Little Anna Mead Active in Patriotic Work

Little Anna Mead, called the world's youngest heroine and picture player, feels that she has surely done her bit after appearing at thirty-two benefits for soldiers, sailors, Red Cross, etc., and then marching in the Lambs' Club.

She is said to have been one of the star collectors for the Lambs and Friars in the great United War Work drive and will take up her picture work again after the holidays.

Hart Studios First in Bond Drive

The announcement was made this week from Los Angeles that the William S. Hart studio was the first of the Los Angeles colony to be 100 per cent American in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. Every employee bought bonds even before Hart came East in behalf of the drive. The star purchased $30,000 worth of bonds in Los Angeles and $48,000 worth while on his speaking tour.

Influenza Claims Two

Influenza again entered the motion picture industry last week and claimed additional victims.

It was reported by wire from Los Angeles that Weyland Trask, Mack Sennett's big comedian, died November 18 of influenza.

Charles Gregg, owner of four principal theatres at Bakersfield, Cal., died on November 17 of the disease.
Here's Impetus For Small City Managers

By H. J. Thacher
Manager, Strand Theatre, Salina, Kan.

In your letter in which you have asked what I think every exhibitor should do to do more for his theatre and what he is lacking, I am going to give you what I think is my idea of an practical exhibitor.

First permit me to state that every exhibitor should be in a position to know just what his class or clientele demand in the way of entertainment. By this I mean he should know just what type of photo-plays that are in demand.

After the proper selection of the class of photo-play required he must not stop, thinking that he is through as far as he is concerned.

He must next turn his attention to the publicity matter furnished with the photo-play and give the production the right publicity, and should he find that the exchange has not furnished the right kind of material to gain the right publicity, it is up to the exhibitor to obtain the right material even if he must go to the expense of making his own cuts and posters.

Prepares His Own Posters

Many a time the writer has been thoroughly disgusted with the material sent out as “publicity matter” by the exchanges, and has gone to the expense of making up cuts and posters of my own design, and I can say that in every instance I have been surprised at the wonderful results thus obtained.

After the proper attention to the exploiting of the picture in the newspapers, the next step must be to the musical setting and also the stage setting for the presentation of the picture. I know that there are many of the exhibitors in the small towns that would not want to go to the expense of special stage settings for many of the bigger productions; however, I have found that by either purchasing the setting or making one myself that I can charge higher admission prices, which will more than recompense me for the amount expended for these settings.

With the display of the setting for each presentation there of course should be the proper musical theme to give the patrons the atmosphere of the story soon to unfold before them.

H. J. Thacher

It is the duty of the exhibitor to see that the picture must have absolutely the very best of projection and the proper musical program, and even though the writer is not a musician, I have always made it a point to select the proper music to accompany the picture. While I trust the judgment of my employees, there are times when you cannot permit such an important matter to be handled other than by yourself. And always on such occasions I have had complimentary remarks from my patrons stating how well the music blended in with the picture.

Spending Money Brings It

You will find that many of the exhibitors will say that the added expense of the newspaper cuts, the expense of stage settings, and the fact that they are not musicians will not permit them to do these things.

The added cost of the making of special newspaper cuts will take care of itself. If an exhibitor cannot afford to buy special stage settings let him make them himself. The most striking setting that I have had was used in conjunction with "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and at a cost of about $5. The idea used in this was a tableau of the finish of the picture, presented “Liberty” in the center, with four soldiers on each side, while in the back a huge flag (which I borrowed) dropped from the top and formed a background for the group, accompanied by "The Star Spangled Banner." The matter of selecting the musical program is up to every exhibitor; he can tell just what sort of music must accompany each scene, and there are times when this cannot be trusted to anyone else.

And back of all these little things he must see that each and every one of his employees must be courteous.

Your Idea and Ours

A n opportunity overlooked. That is our only conclusion of this five inch double column advertisement of the Republic theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. Here the manager used part of an advertisement prepared by the Goldwyn offices, carefully trimming off the sales argument on the picture and then, through contrasty type, actually playing up the Bill Parsons picture.

With all due regard to every one who had anything to do with this, we believe that the line "Tremendous drama of redemption" means mighty little. The way it is used here, and with nothing more to it, it is likely to scare a lot of people away from the theatre. There are a lot of the hoi polloi who will conclude that this is "high brow" stuff and they will hit themselves away to the next house down the street. Where is the real selling argument of the picture? "When in danger he always smiled." Why not tell something about the picture itself? It is not "high brow"; there hasn't been a more human creation on the screen. Why hide the fact?

Put "pep" in every show and your theatre will digest more patrons.

SAY, friend, you overlooked something here. There was a little space just above the knot in Mac Marsh's hair and below the word "Picture" where you might have crowded something in. Otherwise you did a mighty good job in filling it up. And with all of that we'll have to admit that it isn't such a bad advertisement.

The sales talk on excellence, the house idea is kept dominant, the rule work is well done and the cut is attractive. The worst thing that mars the general appearance is the Bert Lytell announcement in the lower left hand corner. That space should have been left clear by all means.

We would have much preferred to have made the entire display on the Mac Marsh picture and to have mentioned the other two attractions in very small type at the bottom. We would also have pulled the rules in at the top and the left and so allowed the lines to stand out all the more.

But, all in all, it is a display that proves the exception. We wouldn't advise following the example, but it is really a good example of using every bit of the white space and getting away with it. Isis theatre, Houston, Texas, did this in six inches across three columns.

A ham sandwich may not be as heavy as a banquet, but it can be as appetizing; and so can your theatre be as interesting as the biggest.

INCE the advent of the war pictures there has been a lot of "playing with titles." There have been any number of cases where theatres have used the titles of other pictures than the one that they were playing. Of course, they fit more or less with the offering. Here is a case of it.

The Bridge theatre, Baltimore, was showing "To Hell With the Kaiser," but yet it used at the end of the display the line "See America's Answer and the Kaiser's Finish," thus taking in the names of two other productions.

The entire design, made up of a mass of American soldiers with a flag in the foreground, is mere camouflage. Every selling argument of the production is entirely passed up. There is plenty of material to use legitimately with this offering and that will put it over to big crowds. Here the theatre ignored all of them, and the result was a display that barely catches the eye and means nothing after one has stopped to read it.
WAR IS OVER

WAR in Europe is over and the American soldier has had a very large share in bringing about the speedy end of the war. But everyone knows that at the time America entered hostilities she was not prepared.

She was in the same position that most of the exhibitors of the country insist on placing themselves. They are not prepared to take advantage of the opportunities that come to them. They deliberately pass up the chances that they have to be ready for “eventualities.”

In these pages each week there is included a large amount of work and considerable expenditure of money. It is all done for you—for the exhibitors. Are you taking advantage of them to the extent of reading every line of matter about how others have scored such pictures?

And if you are one of the few wires that are doing that, let us hear, in turn, of the things that anyone doing it is doing. It will help others.

The third episode pictures the battle at Chateau Thierry and some of the incidents connected with it. There are some striking views of the fighting and we see the Germans driven back and the last of the song comes at one of the field hospitals with Red Cross nurses at work and right here there is an impressive incident with the quartet (Gree Evans at the Rialto) singing “Rose of No Man’s Land.” The last of the song comes with the screen bare and the curtains down.

Episode No. 4 is devoted to the English army and the first title tells us that the Kaiser said them “The contemptible little army,” “Rule Britannia” is the music at the start and it “Sons of Britain” prevail through this episode, with “Tipperary” brought in at the end. A few bars of the “Marcelaine” are thrown in at a scene where Clemenceau appears on the screen. There is a clever little touch here with the French villagers who had been a week in the dugout until the British came up here “Pack Up Your Troubles” adds to the appearance and persuades the audience to laughter.

The fifth episode is devoted to Italy and the selections employed are “La Forza del Destino,” “Marche Reale” and “Garibaldi.” These are probably the most vivid pictures of the whole feature. In fact, a number of Italian cameramen are said to have met death during the making of these pictures. We have reproduced here the battle of the Piave, some remarkably fine shots of charging soldiers and we are brought face to face with death.

“Battle Hymn of the Republic” starts off the pictures of the sixth episode, which deal with the battle of St. Mihiel, where the Americans, as an army of their own, were in action for the first time. There are many views of the wrecked city and then a bunch of prisoners with the caption: “They all belong to us,” with an organ solo used at the end of the episode.

The seventh episode includes the review of the American and the French troops by Gen. Pershing and various Allied officers and with the city “To This City Came Gen. Pershing” we get “When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Voux” “Battle Hymn of the Republic” is used as “Old Glory” passes in review, and then with the title “The Victory of Democracy” we have the scenes on the river at the end of the war came.

In all the arrangements that we have known Mr. Rothapfel to make none has been so wonderfully effective as this. He arranged to have these pictures of the celebration of New York’s wild time made especially for this picture and they could not have been more vivid. And the effects that went with it. One would have thought that celebrating crowd of millions had broken loose for there were every one of those horrible noises that we heard all day and night long on that Monday none of us will ever forget, with “England Rules the Old Town” being played. There are pictures of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince, warmly hissed at first, melting away and a tableaux of the Allied nations end.
Boy Scouts and Government Airships Aid Horater in Putting Over "America's Answer"

REOPENING week was celebrated by Manager H. C. Horater of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., with the plan that he followed in putting on "America's Answer," the second of the Government official war pictures. It was originally scheduled for an earlier showing, but the shut down on account of influenza interfered with these plans.

Interest in the production was aroused far in advance, since a private screening was given the picture on October 13 as a benefit for the city's letter carriers, parochial and public school teachers. Leaders in various patriotic organizations were invited. One can imagine the word of mouth publicity that came from these postmen and teachers and even though the regular showing had to be postponed, there was eager expectancy everywhere for the announcement of the picture.

Heavy newspaper advertising was used in advance of the first public showing, ranging from quarter pages down, and the most of them bearing a cut showing the marching Americans with the nation's flag at their head. When the engagement began on Sunday the theatre was unable to accommodate the crowds. In connection with the feature, Miss Margaret Thojomos of Chicago, sang "Columbia," and when a tableau showing Pershing, Foch and Wilson was shown on the screen the audience went wild with applause.

In connection with the engagement there was a clever stunt used with the placing of a coin prominently labelled "Kaiser Bill" in the lobby. Boy Scouts were in attendance offering the privilege of driving a nail in the coin to every purchaser of a Thrift Stamp. The stunt not only drew crowds to the theatre but earned notices in all of the local papers.

But Mr. Horater was not content with half way measures in advertising the picture. He went all the way to the Government flying field at Mount Clemens, Mich., to get the participation of aviators. Permission was granted for five of them to fly to Toledo and then to circle the city dropping announcements of the showing of "America's Answer." This, of course, got front page space in the papers, the total result being that there was probably never a picture shown in the city that was so constantly kept before the public.

Accounts of many of the things that Mr. Horater has done in boosting various attractions have been printed in these pages, but this exploitation of "America's Answer" probably breaks all of his own records. The picture was shown after peace was a certainty, but it seems that instead of that the attendance was larger than it had been with any of the other war pictures that were shown at the Alhambra.

Mr. Horater reveals the secrets of his exploitations when he says that he always starts out several weeks in advance to lay the plans for the way that he will put over his pictures. The closed period, of course, gave him unusual opportunity for this, but he makes it a practice to begin to think several weeks before the showing starts and that is the reason that he has been able to give many pictures unusual runs in his city where the custom formerly was a change at least twice weekly.

Pathe Supplies Big Campaign on Gaby Deslys

Pathe promises that with the release of the special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, the exhibitors will be supplied with every possible method for exploiting the noted French star and the feature.

For use of the exhibitor there has been prepared a plan book that covers a wide field of advertising and general exploitation hints. It is pointed out that the pictorial possibilities are very large, for there are many photographs showing Miss Deslys wearing the gowns and the millinery creations for which she is famous. Pathe has also prepared a series of hand colored show cards which are obtainable at the various exchanges. Complete newspaper advertising is provided.
Will the Soldier Revolutionize Pictures?

By Edward L. Hyman
Director Picture Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

The soldier who returns, "from where the poppies blow," promises to revolutionize the industry of motion pictures. So will the officer and doughboy whose wartime experience has been confined to home cantonments.

The soldier and sailor back from the Great War is the man of the hour, and his opinions, demands and ambitions will sway America for years to come.

His influence in the world of motion pictures—theatre and producing field—will not be negligible, and will be felt as no other factor since the inception of the cinema. In fact, the soldier-war time influence has already been felt.

The Liberty theatre of the cantonments, north, south, east and west, has fingered the pulse of the future for producer and exhibitor. And the pulse-reading has been startling and most pleasing.

This is not a theoretical treatise on the evolution of the motion picture through wartime-cycles; it is not a philosophical dissertation upon the "perhapses" and "maybes" of the movie's prospects. It is what I believe is a sound analysis and wide conception of conditions that have developed during several years of war.

The soldier's span of life has been drawn-out several lengths by his experience in camp and in the fighting areas. He is more matured, looks at life from a different angle; has sound convictions and absolutely KNOWS the kind of motion pictures he wants to see—and wants his wife, his relatives—and friends to view those of the same type.

Underneath the mask of gayety and seeming carelessness he has nurtured and borne a new character that is bound to at least improve the policy of both producer and exhibitor.

Pals with the Soldier

The Liberty theatre has been able to "pal" with the soldier. The boy in the camp has sidled up to the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities cantonment playhouse as a wanderer would greet a back-home acquaintance in a foreign land.

To this American manhood were upset in camp and reared anew with the apex of their ambitions more towering and lofty than ever before.

The Liberty theatre had to keep step or straggle a bad last along with those effeminate things which died a natural death when the Yanks took up soldiering.

The Liberty theatre did keep step, I believe, and as a result the producer and exhibitor, has an authority now to which they may refer in relation to after-war problems.

What They Don't Want

The soldier and sailor really began to live as nature and the rules of health meant he should soon after he entered the service. Naturally his mental attitude changed. No matter how lacking in education he might be, he gradually gained a wholesome dislike for Sham Weaklings Insincere Society The Grouch Cheap Sentiment Social Mockery Sex Rot —and an unlimited number of other elements, which before the war characterized the very core and heart of the picture producing industry.

"Keep the men satisfied in camp and you make true soldiers," said the commander of a vast military reservation.

He made this observation to me while impressing upon me the need of diversion for the soldier who is in camp.

The Liberty theatre, healthy child of the War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, has in great measure kept the soldier satisfied.

It has seen the khaki-clads crystallize and bloom from the dominated picture fan to the dominant film devotee. At first he sat meekly and suffered the sex plays of the day, the social nests of suggestion in film form, and the milk and water comedy.

But as his military training progressed, his heart and soul and his mind grew. And he arose and demanded his rights as the picture fan of the future.

Wants Healthy Action

He "hood" the mawkish scenes alive with slender hero chaps in dinner duds. He sneered at the cheap conventionalities and impossible situations. And he applauded healthy, on-the-level action and sentiment.

The Liberty theatre soon learned what he wanted and booked only those pictures, and will continue to book them as long as they are available, and there are soldiers in camps in America. Exchanges and producers took the tip in considerable number. Apparently they thought it worth while to take note of the brand of pictures that the soldier liked.

At any rate current releases show an unusual change in titles and the nature of subject matter.

These are but a vagrant few. I am of the sincere opinion that the Liberty theatre has been instrumental in finding out just what the soldier wants in the way of films, and the up-to-the-minute men of the industry made good by providing them. In other words, they profited by the findings of the Liberty theatre.

The Liberty theatre, I feel, was a God-send to the greatest industry in the world. It has been a living link between the public and the military as represented in the manhood of the nation.

Filth and superficiality will disappear from the living screen. Real men and women are due to appear in shadow form as sponsors of a new era in the making of pictures. They will stand for plays that are big and sweet and clean, and as cheerful as an early morning in early June.

Those are the plays you will have to buy—the smile plays, the joy plays.

THE SOLDIER DEMANDS THEM.

He has told the Liberty theatre so, AND YOU WILL ABIDE BY HIS DECISION.

Matthew H. Whitham, director of films for the Liberty theatre in the Southeast, summed it all up, when he, after a wonderful experience in booking for seven soldier theatres, said:

"The impossible situation in motion pictures is as lifeless today as the Sphinx to the new American—the soldier. He has bayoneted it. He has crossed it off the lists of elements necessary to a good motion picture. Upon that list he has left these component elements:

"Sincere heart atmosphere,

"Love that is LOVE,

"Joy built on foundations of smiles,

"Comedy that whirpools eddies of gayety."

"The soldier has seen enough of the drab. He wants the sunshine of hope that will erase old visions of trench cruelties and sacrifices that have made his heart as tender and receptive as the heart of a child."
Two Newspapers Show Cooperation with Theatres When the “Flu” Ban Is Lifted

EVERY week there come along new evidences that the theatres of the country are being more and more converted to advertising, and there are more evidences of the fact that progressive newspapers are trying to cooperate for the benefit of all concerned.

Within the past few weeks we have printed a number of evidences of advertising that houses in various sections of this country and Canada did during the time that they were closed. Now come along at least two cities where it is shown that the newspaper and the theatres cooperated in taking full advantage of lifting the “flu” ban. These are Denver and Topeka, Kan.

In Denver the Post grouped all of the motion picture advertising possible on one page and across this was run the line, “Hurrah! The Flu Ban Is Lifted.” Directly under this followed a statement of the fact that all of the houses were to be opened Monday, and then mentioning some of the attractions. An especially good sentence used in this connection was: “Off with the bedroom slippers and on with your wraps, out of the world of drab existence into the world of life—the world of music and wholesome entertainment.”

This, of course, saved the individual theatres the necessity of making reference to the opening order in their displays and so they could use all of their customary space to covering the attractions themselves.

In Wichita the Daily Capital had drawn especially a seven-column design showing the curtain of closing being pulled back, revealing a lighted theatre. The greater part of the type is devoted to telling how willingly the theatres cooperated with the health authorities, and even announcing that if it was necessary the houses would be willing to close voluntarily for another four weeks.

Only a small portion of the space was used to give the names of the theatres and under these were the names of the stars and the titles of the pictures in which they would be seen. The fuller announcements of the pictures, vaudeville and legitimate offerings were carried in the usual section of the paper.

While we are without the details, we’d stake a lot on the statement that the newspapers themselves are responsible for the insertion of these displays—that is, it was done on their initiative. It is an unfortunate fact that the exhibitors in most cities are so jealous of each other that they cannot get together on cooperating advertising of this sort, but an enterprising newspaper can get them in.

Such things as these seem rather local and unimpressive in passing, but when one considers that more and more such things are being done all over the country week after week there is certainly a lesson there.

If the advertising managers of every newspaper in the country could see such items as this which are appearing in the Motion Picture News from time to time we believe that there would result a greater effort on their part. They would lay constructive plans for interesting the motion picture manager in advertising and they would provide the proper sort of cooperation so that all parties concerned would make money from the venture. More and more newspapers are coming to realize that the initiative rests with them.

The enforced closing of the theatres made the newspapers realize that the motion picture advertising meant something to them in the way of revenue. Most newspapers have taken this advertising as a matter of course, but when it was absent it hurt. And then, too, many managers took stock of themselves while their doors were shut and we expect the “flu” to have had one good result—the conversion of more exhibitors to the necessity of intelligent advertising.

If the Allies had been like the fellow who stops advertising when he does not get immediate results, where would they have been now?

“Talk of the Town” Made Real Talk of Town in Atlanta

WHEN “The Talk of the Town,” the Universal special feature starring Dorothy Phillips, was shown at the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, it was made the real talk of the town. The result was record booking business, and the advertising campaign that was followed is held largely responsible.

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor, was confident of doing big business with the pictures and he was up against unusually strong competition that week, and so he started with an unusual advance campaign, following the “teaser” idea as suggested in the special service section on the picture printed in the Motion Picture News.

One of the things that he did was to send out a squad of young lady cards showing the picture of a scantily-clad girl and bearing the words, “The Talk of the Town—Who is She?” These cards were hung on every automobile parked on the downtown streets during the week preceding the opening of the film.

Manager Jackson then proceeded to run the line, “the talk of the town” at the bottom of every Tudor theatre advertisement that appeared in the daily papers before the opening of the Dorothy Phillips production. The picture was shown for the first time on a Monday, and on the Sunday preceding Monday he inserted extra-large advertisements in the three Sunday Atlanta papers, the Journal, the Constitution, Georgian and American.

Result: “The Talk of the Town” opened to big business. It had good crowds every afternoon and every evening and the house had ‘em standing out several nights when there were vacant seats in many of the other theatres.

War Service Curtain Adorns Maryland Theatre

Probably the first “service” curtain to be used in any motion picture theatre in the country is the work of C. S. Cheadle, manager of the opera house at Havre de Grace, Md. During the closing period he had a curtain painted which bears 119 stars, representing the boys from that section who went to serve Uncle Sam. Advertisements on the curtain bore its cost. In addition he has organized a movement to build a monument commemorating the patriotic lads of that section.

Another Big Cleveland House Turns to Pictures

So successful have been motion pictures in Cleveland, O., that another house has switched to films. This is the Miles, which has abandoned vaudeville and announces that it will run only the biggest film attractions that can be secured. An orchestra of twenty-five pieces is furnishing the music, and Santrey, who made such a big hit in Detroit and other cities is leading in the "victory singing." Florence Reed in "Wives of Men" is the current offering.
Branham Makes His Newspaper Cuts Work Overtime for Him by Helping in His Displays

CHARLES G. BRANHAM, manager of the Strand and Lyric theatres, Minneapolis, has adopted an interesting method of Hooverizing, since it has become the fashion those days.

Now Mr. Branham has been up against a peculiar situation in Minneapolis, and the same state of affairs prevails in a number of other cities, unfortunately. For some time the newspapers there have been charging for the cuts that appear in the layouts in the Saturday and Sunday issues. The charge for these runs from five to fifteen dollars, depending, of course, on the size of the cut used.

Formerly it has been the custom to destroy these layouts when they had appeared in the papers, but Mr. Branham is now saving a lot of expense by using these again in his advertising on the current attractions or in later attractions featuring the same star. Of course, extreme care has to be used in selecting the photographs that are used in the newspaper layout as strictly scene or costume pictures would not be of use in advertising other attractions.

The result of this policy has been to build up a "morgue" that is probably not equalled by any theatre in the country. Mr. Branham has now a wide selection of actual cuts of the various stars playing his theatres regularly, in various sizes and styles, and these can be used again in his displays. One result has been that when an attraction is changed at the last moment he doesn't have to worry whether the engraver can finish a cut for him on time, but he merely goes to his "morgue" and digs out a cut, with the result that the copy can immediately be placed in the hands of the printer.

For instance, the cut of Mabel Normand which is used in one of the advertisements reproduced here was originally used in the newspaper layout when she appeared at the Strand in "The Venus Model." So it came in handy when she came to the Lyric in "Peck's Bad Girl." The cut of Viola Dana in another display has been used several times, but not enough to become too familiar to the patrons.

In one of the first issues after the establishment of the Exhibitors Service Bureau, we urged that every theatre, no matter how small, should establish itself as a "morgue" such as this. It is mighty little trouble, and if you can afford no better way a series of drawers for the different letters will suffice. The exhibitor will be surprised at the saving this will result in and the variety of appeal that you will be able to give your advertising.

Walk into the average theatre and you will see cuts scattered around everywhere. They are used as paper weights, stacked around in corners and in the way generally. And you will usually find that the manager of that house is a careless advertiser and that he gets about half of the pulling power out of the space that he does use.

Then walk into the average composing room and you will find that most of the theatres are accustomed to leaving their cuts to the tender mercies of the printer, who will sometimes file them away, but who will most generally consign them to what is known in printers' terms as the "hell box," meaning that from there they go away to be melted up or junked.

Mr. Branham's plan is just another evidence of progressive management. It is not merely saving of money, but it is an evidence of the desire to equip the theatre with the material to meet all sorts of emergencies. We are sure that many an additional patron has been brought into his theatres through the very fact that he has preserved this material until the right day to use it comes.

Theatres Celebrate Victory with a Single Word

On both coasts there were exhibitors who took advantage of the chance to celebrate the defeat of Germany with a single word over their theatres.

Detroit Manager Cleverly Arranges “Sister Against Sister” in His Advertising

A CLEVER plan to “put over” two Talmadge pictures was employed by John H. Kunsky in Detroit last week. Mr. Kunsky had Norma Talmadge in “The Forbidden City” at the Madison, and Constance Talmadge in “Mrs. Leffingwell’s Boots” at the Adams. Both houses are a block apart.

Mr. Kunsky advertised the two stars and theatres jointly and asked Detroit film lovers to visit both theatres the same week and to let him know which star they liked best. As both have long and loyal followings the theatres were packed and many hundreds of answers to the request were mailed in.

Reports from Detroit are that this caused all sorts of excitement and good-natured arguments among the followers of the two stars, and resulted in a jump in attendance because the admirers of Constance brought along the Norma fans to “see how much better Constance is” and vice versa.

It is a plan that can be followed any place where there are two theatres under the same management or where you show one picture the first half of the week and the other later, or even where double bills are used. But of course the chief value of the stunt is its novelty. It makes people talk about your theatres, and that is the main thing that you are looking for.

Theatre Helps Newspaper in Celebrating Election

Albany, N. Y. election crowds sang patriotic songs between the receiving of the returns without knowing that the enterprise of an operator at one of the motion picture houses made it possible. There is said never to have been such a demonstration in the state capital before.

Clifford Hoffman, operator of the Beaver theatre, had been preparing the slides that he receives from the song publishers, and he conceived the idea of turning some fifty of them over to the Albany Journal. They were thrown on the screen and more than 5,000 people sang them to the accompaniment of a thirty-piece band. And inasmuch as the theatres were closed at the time the event was all the more enjoyed.

FINDING THE PUNCH

Another One of McCormick’s “Zero Hour” Articles Next Week

WE have had scores of commendations on the “At the Zero Hour” articles published here and written by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. The “zero hour” is the moment just before the soldiers go over the top, the time of the attack and wonder whether what they have done is right and what is to eventuate. And so it is with the exhibitor.

Next week Mr. McCormick will tell of the methods he uses in analyzing the productions that he is to play and the processes he follows in the production of the advertising for the Circle theatre. Scores of you have read with interest of his advertising. Now he is going to take you behind the scenes and show you how he does it. Mr. McCormick is doing wonders in helping other exhibitors to advertise and there is no one who will fail to derive benefit from reading these articles carefully.

“Under Four Flags” to Boost Fifth Liberty Loan

Indianapolis means to use “Under Four Flags,” the third official War Picture issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information for the purpose of boosting the Fifth Liberty Loan which is scheduled to come about the first of the year.

This picture is to be shown at the Circle theatre during the week of November 24, and the Marion County Legion, which is in charge of the various loan drives, has issued a call to everyone of its 6,000 members throughout Indianapolis to see “Under Four Flags.” Further than that the tenants are urged to act as boosters for the picture and get the public to attend.

This Manager Uses Peace and Closed Period Both in Boosting Picture

MANAGER HERB JENNINGS, of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, employed many methods of showmanship to boom the presentation of “To Hell with the Kaiser” in his theatre during the week of Nov. 11, which was reopening week in Ottawa after five weeks of darkness.

Jennings had a special lobby display, consisting of a representation of Hades with the Kaiser in the very thickest of the heat. Hanging suspended in the lobby was a periscope, and a passkey, taking a look, discovered the Kaiser’s portrait and a line advising the people to see “To Hell with the Kaiser.”

To one side was a small table on which was placed thousands of cards enclosed in envelopes, bearing the words “Good Dope—Dr. Joy.” On the cards was the printed advice “Keep Your Feet Dry; See ‘To Hell with the Kaiser’ at the Strand, week of Nov. 11, and then Buy Victory Bonds.” The crowd made a great grab for the envelopes for two days before the picture opened.

Jennings also built a horse-drawn float showing the Kaiser behind the bars of a cage and the inscription of the picture’s title. He held this in reserve until official word that an armistice had been signed would be received. Then he used the float for the peace parade and demonstration.

Jennings also secured the endorsement of the Ottawa branch of the Army and Navy War Veterans, and secured the free service of the band of the organization for a demonstration.

On the Saturday night before the opening, the manager of the Strand conducted an open air “slide show,” in the wide lobby of his theatre with the aid of a stereopticon machine. Slides of various sorts, advertising both coming attractions and the theatre, were shown on a small screen.

When the theatre re-opened the doorman turned out with his白色的 opera dress uniform, while another attendant was dressed as a soldier.

Small City Manager Proves It Can Be Done

TO HIS PATRONS AT ALL TIMES.

How often do you find exhibitors doing their own “operating,” janitor work or other things that could best be handled by someone whose ability ends at the broom handle, yet these same exhibitors are doing this work thinking that they are saving themselves ten or twenty dollars a week, but in reality are costing themselves dollars. Why do they continue to repeat these facts, then they will see just what a huge mistake they have made in the past. They will do as I have done a number of times when I have tried to economize at the wrong end. They will feel as if they would be glad to have someone kick them around the block for such poor judgment.
Mandelbaum Tries New Booking Plan

Ohio Franchise Holder of First National Claims Many Good Points to Original Idea—More Money Promised to Independent Producers

LESS than $600 a week for first run in Cleveland on Chaplin comedies, with return dates rental free, and assessing exhibitor members for film rental by a method which guarantees profitable returns to independent stars and producers on larger investments of money and time for the attainment of superior quality in their releases, are some of the features claimed for a new and radical exhibitors' co-operative booking plan originated and launched in Ohio by E. M. Mandelbaum, owner of the State franchise for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Sponsors of the plan, and they are said to include many exhibitors in Ohio, claim that it is more fair and profitable for the independent producers and stars than either a program or State rights releasing arrangement, providing that their output has box-office merit.

Repay with Profit

They are said to go beyond this in their enthusiasm for its possibilities, and declare that a distributing policy is in use which enables a producer or a star to invest $75,000 or more in a quality picture with positive assurance that they will be repaid with a commensurate profit.

According to Mr. Mandelbaum, the enfranchising and booking system he has adopted for the First National exchange in Ohio was conceived and put into operation as the result of constant complaints from theatre owners about the "take-what-we-give-or-leave-it-alone" policy of some of the program exchanges, particularly those controlling the productions of big stars.

"The situation in Ohio," declared Mr. Mandelbaum, "has become almost intolerable for exhibitors, large and small. I understand that the same conditions exist in practically all territories. And the stars and manufacturers who are losing money on their productions, or failing to make a justified profit, because of it, are experiencing financial difficulties equally with the exhibitors."

Unfair All Around

"It is absolutely impossible for exhibitors, under the present systems of distribution, to keep their box offices open and give the producers a square deal. And it is equally impossible for the exhibitor to get a square deal. Knowing that program distribution will not pay the costs and show a profit on a $75,000 production, the manufacturing district, planning a series of high calibre, create special brand names for the movies and then proceed to offer them through separate departments in their own exchanges, to exhibitors who do not have contracts for their regular program releases.

"That is absolutely unfair to the exhibitor who has a program contract. He is entitled to first call on the real quality specials made by the manufacturers whose 'regular stuff' he is paying every week the year around. Does he get first call? He certainly does not. Instead, he gets up some morning and finds the opposition house plastered with six-sheet announcements of the first of a series of Masterman features. He can read over again in trade journal announcement of three or four of the profit-mulching premiums demanded weeks before that Masterman was under contract to the program company whose productions this exhibitor uses on contract. But that doesn't make any difference. The exchange promptly notifies him that he is booked solid, that he cannot cancel without forfeiting his 'good-faith-I-won't-steal-but-you-can' cash deposit, and that the opposition is paying three times as much a day for these Masterman specials as he is paying for the regular stuff. The fact that this exhibitor would have been willing to pay the same amount didn't merit consideration."

Shied at New Plan

"When our cooperative booking policy, based on the fundamental features of the franchise system upon which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is founded, was first presented to Ohio exhibitors, they looked upon it with suspicion. They had been fooled and betrayed so many times, by so many different methods, that anything new was distrusted. They admitted that there was an urgent and vital need for some system that would relieve them by exchanges for permitting them to book star productions of known popularity and appeal. They were doubtful, not of the practicality of our plan, but of the sincerity of purpose behind it."

The plan consists of making each exhibitor who adopts it a stockholder in the First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio. This is the same general relation which exists between the exchanges owning First National franchises and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., itself. The exhibitors of Ohio, similarly with the various exchanges of First National have their theatres figured on a percentage basis. These percentages vary from ten per cent down to one per cent, and as low as one-tenth of one per cent. To illustrate: one theatre, because of size, location, gross earning power and necessity for first runs, it classified as a ten per cent franchise holder. Its stock holdings in The First National Exhibitors' Company is determined by that percentage, and after the franchise is granted, it pays in on each production as it is purchased by the distributing company, ten per cent of the cost price. This sum represents its rental for the film. The duration of the run is determined by the exhibitor at the time he obtains his franchise. He plays the picture for the agreed length of time, meanwhile having absolute protection against competition, and against the possibility that another exhibitor, competing with him, may go to the exchange and have his offer of a higher rental accepted.

No Repeat Rental

"The print then goes to the Franchise holder who has second run. If the first-run account desires to play a return date, he can do so by application for the first open time which does not conflict with later run accounts in his territory. He pays no film rental for this repeat booking. The only charge made averages one dollar a reel to pay for the film, cleaning, and handling print in exchange.

"The exhibitors own the film for their territory, and by this plan of cooperation they have all the opportunity they want to make every production earn the greatest possible revenue for them, and for the star or producer who makes it.

"The dollars and cents value to exhibitors of real cooperation is shown in numerous instances which have arisen since The First National Exhibitors' Company was started. One theatre, a first-run house, is paying less than $600 a week for Chaplin comedies.

"The plan is graduated so that exhibitors with small theatres can obtain franchises for amounts as low as one-tenth of one per cent of the cost to the exchange of each print purchased."

"Consider the value of this system to stars and independent producers. It enables the exhibitors to vary their rental prices in accordance with the value, quality and box office merit of each individual production."

It is understood that a booking policy somewhat similar in application is in operation in the Dallas, Texas, exchange of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.
Paramount Gets Drew Comedies

One to Be Released Each Month Beginning in January—Three Productions Already Finished for Distribution

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced this week that it will distribute the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, beginning in January. It is the plan to release one each month, known as Paramount-Drew Comedies. The contract between Famous Players-Lasky and the Drews, or V. B. K. Film Corporation as producer, was arranged through W. E. Scriber.

Through mutual friends, Amedee J. Van Beuren, whose active connection with the Van Beuren Bill Posting Company and control of various motion picture theatres and places of amusement in the United States and Canada, has been known to the Drews, with the result that a contract was executed, the V. B. K. Film Corporation was formed and the production of two-reel comedies was commenced almost immediately.

Thus with the signing of the contract for distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is also announced that three attractions are already finished for release. They are “Once a Mason,” written by Albert Payson Terhune, an adaptation from a story published in the Green Book; “The Amateur liar,” by the same author and published in story form in the same magazine, and “Romance and Ring” by Emma Anderson Whitman. These productions, as in the case with all the pictures in which the Drews have appeared, have been directed solely by Mrs. Drew and edited by her. The interiors were screened at the Biograph studios.

In connection with the future producing plans of the two-reel comedies, Mrs. Sidney Drew said: “Comparisons are oftentimes odious, but I want our host of friends to know that we are doing bigger things than my fondest ambitions ever hoped to realize.

In the pictures to be released through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, there will be no limit to expense, so long as we get what we want. The first three releases already completed, in each instance cost more than five times what we expended on our other productions; not a single prop, whether furniture, costuming or anything that goes to an interior set, has ever been used in pictures before and not an exterior location used by us was ever photographed for the screen. This will give an idea as to what detail and originality we are employing in our new films.

“I feel that the time has come when new ideas and brains unhindered by studio traditions must be engaged and no expense has been or will be spared to realize the last word in quality of production. All our interior sets are made up from drawings, worked out by an interior decorator.”

In connection with the distribution of the Paramount-Drew Comedies, Walter E. Greene, Managing Director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of this department, said: “The contract with the V. B. K. Film Corporation for the distribution of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew’s comedies includes the foreign, as well as the United States rights. The Drew comedies are unlike anything else the screen has to offer. Their popularity as dispensers of good cheer comes as a direct result for exceptional ability backed by hard work. The comedies will be booked on our star series plan and our agreement which calls for a minimum distribution of one hundred prints in the United States gives an idea of what a great circulation these films will have. A big advertising and exploitation campaign, prepared along novel lines, is already under way based on the widely established popularity of these artists.”

Six Vitagraph Stars Complete First Cycle

VITAGRAPH inaugurated the Corinne Griffith series of nine Blue Ribbon features on November 25 with “Miss Ambition,” a modern drama based on an original story by Rex Taylor. Miss Griffith is the fifth of Vitagraph’s star sextette to appear on the program since the announcement some time ago of the company’s new booking plan whereby exhibitors are supplied with stars and release dates a year in advance.

Up to now the Blue Ribbon releases under the new system have been: Earle Williams in “A Diplomatic Mission,” Gladys Leslie in “The Mating,” Harry T. Morey in “The King of Diamonds,” and Alice Joyce in “Everybody’s Girl.”

The latter was listed for release the week of November 18, immediately preceding “Miss Ambition.”

Bessie Love, the sixth of the Vitagraph feature stars, is scheduled to make her first appearance on the Blue Ribbon program on December 2 in “The Dawn of Unwedded Slumber,” this completing the first cycle of star series releases under what has been termed a “Democratic, not an Autocratic, Booking Plan and Policy.”

In “Miss Ambition” Miss Griffith was directed by Henry-Hoursy, who directed her in “Love Watches” and “The Clutch of Circumstance,” two of her recent releases. She has with her a supporting cast which includes Betty Blythe, Walter McGrail, Denton Vane and Templar Saxe.

“Musical Comedy Picture” Next for Lee Kids

“Smiles,” described as the first musical comedy of the screen, has been started in Los Angeles by Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kids, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom.

This is the third of the Lee children’s pictures that Mr. Gillstrom has staged—the others being “Tell It to the Marines” and “Swat the Spy.” Ralph H. Spence, a special effects and sub-title specialist for William Fox, wrote the original story of “Smiles.”

Stage People Witness Houdini Serial

Officers and members of the Drama Comedy Club, the Theatre Club, Inc., and men from the State Women’s War Relief Service Club, the Theatre Assembly Service Club, and the Y. M. C. A. Eagle Hut in Bryant Park attended the private showing of “The Master Mystery” starring Houdini, at the Strand theatre recently.

Bluebird Names Its New Releases

Bluebird last week announced what its officials regard as an important schedule of films for the period extending from December 23 to February 3. The list comprises seven subjects and features six of the Bluebird stars. Priscilla Dean is featured in the productions, “She Hired a Husband” and “Miss Doris, Safe Cracker.”

Carmel Myers, in “The Beautiful Mongrel,” has also a role that calls upon her verve and dash, it is said.

“Hearts of Love” Goes on Program

The American Feature Film Corporation, New York, this week sent out notices to the effect that “Hearts of Love” is not a state rights production, as various buyers throughout the country think. The picture has been placed for distribution through the General Film program, and no territory in the States is open. Foreign rights of the picture are being disposed of through the American Feature Film Corporation.
The Master Mystery Is Novelized for Book

The book will be profusely illustrated with scenes from the photoplay.

Do You Want Foch?

No—we are not offering you the services of the distinguished commander himself, but those of his double—Captain Joseph Morrison.

With a record of twenty-four years service in the French army the Captain had been honorably pensioned when the Hun set out in 1914 to place his blood-stained mark on the soil of France. Pensions stopped when France found it necessary to pay the cost of a new war, and the Captain was not fit for active duty.

So he came to this country, where his brother, Maurice Morrison, had become a celebrated tragedian on the Yiddish stage. The Captain has acted a bit since he came here—and he is said to be a good actor.

He has taught French with considerable success.

He helped train Uncle Sam's armies.

But now the funds are low—and he is striving hard to be able to go back to France in May. He believes—and so do we—that this picture and story should throw enough work his way to chase a certain well-known wolf. The photo shows Captain Morrison as General Foch in the Goldwyn Library Loan trailer, where he appeared with such stars as Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore.

You can reach the Captain at 642 West 124th street.

Lehr of Goldwyn—Systematizer

Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn Vice-President, in Charge of Production, Makes System Rule Where Art Flourishes

In full charge of the Goldwyn studios, secured from Triangle, at Los Angeles, is a man who less than a year ago had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant. He is Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which has moved its studio and producing staffs from Fort Lee to the Coast.

In regard to this position, Goldwyn said this week: "Back of the appointment of Mr. Lehr to this highly important post is a business romance paralleled by few in the history of the cinema, famous for overnight successes—and failures."

"A year ago he was a successful business man, a friend of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. When Mr. Goldfish cast about in his mind for someone to take the then vacant business management of Goldwyn's plant at Fort Lee, he recalled that Mr. Lehr had spoken of his interest in motion pictures and his desire to enter the game from the producing end."

Presently Mr. Lehr moved his family to New York and took a desk at Fort Lee. Mr. Lehr says now that it wasn’t half as hard as he feared it might be to learn the motion picture business. "Despite assiduously circulated reports to the contrary, he observes, it is much like any other mercantile business and can be conducted on lines fully as sane and safe."

Shortly after Mr. Lehr reached Fort Lee the big studios on top of the hill began to feel the effects of his presence. A few days after his arrival he installed a system of charting production that is said to have proved a remarkable contribution—almost a revolution—in the conduct of a cinema studio.

Graphic charts of productions under way were hung on the walls of Mr. Lehr’s office, and almost without getting up from his chair he was able to tell at any moment what had been accomplished and what remained to be done if a certain production was to be finished in the time allotted to it.

American Enlarges Sales Force at Pathе

According to an announcement from the headquarters of the American Film Company at Chicago, a new arrangement has been made with Pathе Exchange, Inc., whereby the "Flying A" interests will have one hundred and fifty additional sales representatives to help push the rental of "American" productions.

President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company in conference with Mr. Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathе Exchange, Inc., stated that a clause was added in this corporation’s contract with the American Film Company to the effect that all Place selling representatives will also push sales of the American “Flying A” productions. This, in addition to the regular "American" salesmen, operating through and stationed at the various Pathе exchanges throughout the country, will make the American sales ramifications comprise nearly two hundred active sales representatives.

All of these men are to be equipped with the complete sales paraphernalia of the American Film Company, such as campaign book for exhibitors, that are issued for each feature; the general comprehensive pamphlet giving the what-is-what and who-is-who of the organization, its stars and productions, a newly issued volume entitled, "One Hundred Reasons Why Exhibitors Should Book the "Flying A" Productions, etc.

The ammunition for the first part of the campaign will be data and details of "The Mantle of Charity," a Margarita Fisher comedy, and "Wives and Other Wives," a Mary Miles Minter screen farce comedy, as well as "All the World to Nothing," the latest of the William Russell Productions’ subjects.

Many Sennett Animals in "Her First Mistake"

All the animals which from time to time have appeared in Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies are seen in the latest product of the Sennett studio, "Her First Mistake," released December 1.

Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Myrtle Lind are the featured players, and Walter Wright directed.
Cinema Gets "The Better 'Ole"

President Cromelin Tells of Acquisition of American Rights to Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's Play

ANNOUNCING its acquisition of the American rights to the motion picture adaptation of Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's celebrated play, "The Better 'Ole," the Cinema Distributing Corporation, through President Paul H. Cromelin, says that Bairnsfather and his creation, Old Bill, the character upon which the play is based, are two names to be conjured with in the United States. President Cromelin feels that Bruce Bairnsfather needs no introduction to American exhibitors, and that his work as the reviser of a war figure that has made the world laugh, is best told by Major George Haven Putnam, head of the American publishing firm, who knows Bairnsfather intimately. "Captain Bairnsfather," declared Major Putnam, "has had long practical experience in the fighting line. He has been in the service from the beginning of the War, and for a large part of that time has been actively engaged at the front. The early breaks in his service in the field and in the trenches were caused by the necessity of retiring to hospital for the healing of honorable wounds.

"The young Scotsman began his drawings merely for the amusement of his comrades in the shacks or in the trenches. The first sketches were made on the rough boards of a more-or-less ruined hut, or on the rocks which were dislodged in the digging of the trenches. These sketches were later transcribed for the amusement of the home folks to whom the artist was writing, and were passed from hand to hand in the home circles.

"One of his pictures Bairnsfather sent to the editor of The Bystander, who realized that here was value not only as a work of art, but as a means of inspiration for loyal service and for the cheerful influence with English-speaking people throughout the world. The sketches have also been reproduced in connection with French text and with Italian text.

The stage adaptation of "The Better 'Ole" continues to attract in New York at the Greenwich theatre. The Cinema Distributing Corporation expect to have a releasing announcement regarding the film ready shortly.

Captain Bairnsfather was in New York conferring with Cinema Distributing Corporation officials on plans for national publicizing of the picture. But he is now back in London, where a troublesome car must be treated by his physicians.

It can be said about the publicity campaign, however, that its slogan will be that peace and "The Better 'Ole" bid the people to forget the dispiriting side of the war from which the world is just emerging.

Paramount Studios Again Busy on Features

FOLLOWING the five-weeks' period of enforced inactivity, production work was resumed at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The first picture to be started after the long lay-off was "Here Comes the Bride," a Paramount production in which John Barrymore is starred.

The director is John Stuart Robertson, and Fair Barney, whose work in the Paramount-Archtart Special "Sporting Life," produced by Maurice Tourneur, is one of the features of that melodramatic production, appears in the leading feminine role.

Max Marcin and Roy Atwell were the authors of the play, "Here Comes the Bride," which enjoyed a run at the George M. Cohan theatre during the 1917-18 season, and Charles E. Whittaker adapted it for the screen.

Marguerite Clark made a hurried trip from California to make a scene to be used as an introduction to her new Paramount picture, "The Golden Bird," which, except for the scene referred to, was completed a month ago.

Miss Clark starts work at the Fifty-sixth street studio on an adaptation for Paramount of Alice Hegan Rice's "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Hugh Ford, who produced it on the stage a dozen years ago, will direct.

The filming of "Two Brides," Mme. Cavalieri's newest Paramount picture, which was started before the shut-down agreement was entered into, has been completed and Director Edward Jose is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film. Cameraman Hal Young is said to have obtained some artistic shots along the Massachusetts coast and in the vicinity of Huntington, L. I. Margaret Turnbull wrote the continuity from Alicia Ramsay's story.

Elsie Ferguson, whose last picture, "His Parisian Wife," was completed a month ago, will soon start on another Archtart production, probably under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Select Names Cast for Lewis Film

Select Pictures this week announced members of the cast who are to appear with Mitchell Lewis in "The Code of the Yukon," which is to be the first of that star's series for Select.

Tom Santchesi and Vivian Rich are foremost in support of Lewis. The comedy end is handled by Jack McDonald, familiarly known as "Shapjack" for his performance of that part in "The Spoilers." In addition to his acting ability, Santicesi has also had experience as a director.

Others who have not already been mentioned are Goldie Caldwell, Margaret Landis, Franklyn Hall, William Effe, and Arthur Morrison. In fact, the entire cast is one that lends itself admirably to this production. It was personally selected by Mitchell Lewis.

"Code of the Yukon," as already announced, is a story of the gold fields, in which there is a strong underlying current of love, pathos and humor. It was written by Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "Safe for Democracy," another picture in which Mitchell Lewis is now appearing.

"A Daughter of the Gods" Has Special Drive

According to reports on "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellermann production, on which the Fox Film Corporation launched a special sales drive about two months ago, nearly 200 theatres all over the country have signed contracts.

Many of these theaters, it is said, booked the picture for a second showing, and in not a few cases—especially during the no-release period—for a third time.

"Although 'A Daughter of the Gods,'" an official of the William Fox organization said this week, "is of course a sufficiently strong attraction to succeed by itself, exhibitors have found "Queen of the Sea" the latter Annette Kellermann submarine phantasy helpful to "A Daughter of the Gods."

Metro Completes Move to Coast

All Metro and Screen Classics Studio Activities Have Been Permanently Removed from New York to California

MOVING day has arrived at Metro's Eastern studios. All the studio activities of both Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., have been permanently removed from New York to California, and all actual production work will henceforth be done in the new half-million dollar plant being erected at Hollywood, near Culver City.

This will be completed within two months, until which time pictures will be made in the studio at 1025 Lillian Way now in use.

Maxwell Karger, who has long been supervising director of the firm's Eastern productions, will be director general of the entire Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., output. He will be assisted by George D. Baker, present supervisor of Western productions, and formerly director of Metro productions.

The Eastern photographic and camera departments under the supervision of Ray Smallwood, the technical department under Edward J. Shulter, and all other studio business will be transferred to the Western location, and the exodus of players, directors, cameramen and craftsmen of all departments will be complete.

Arrangement for the transportation of this small army of people has already been made by David M. Thompson, studio manager, and the Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., organization will leave at once for its transcontinental trip, headed by the director general himself.

Metro stars in the entourage will include Viola Dana, Emmy Wehlen, and Hale Hamilton, and these will be followed by others at an early date. May Allison and Bert Lytell are already in California, where they have for several months been engaged in the making of Metro feature pictures under the general direction of George D. Baker.

Directors who will accompany Mr. Karger include Herbert Blache, who has just completed the direction of "The Man Who Stayed at Home"; John Ince, whose latest Metro achievement was "Secret Strings," starring Olive Tell, and Henry Kolker, who has been associated with Charles Miller in the preparation of "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser?" The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," and who also plays the ill-fated "Kaiser" in the same super-feature.

Another Metro director, Harry L. Frank- lin, accompanied by Mrs. Franklin, left a short time ago for the West Coast. His assistant director, Fred Warren, has already arrived in Hollywood. Albert H. Kelley, assistant director connected with Viola Dana's producing organization, will go to California in the Metro party, and Directors Charles Swickard and Webster Cullison are already on the West Coast.

Ray Smallwood and E. J. Shulter will supervise the installation of their respective departments in the Western plant. M. P. Staincup, Metro's art director, will also go West, Mr. Karger considering this branch of the production work of the utmost importance.

Henri Menessier is already on the West Coast. Patrick Carey, chief carpenter of the Eastern studios, will be in the party, and will co-operate with the West Coast working crew in the handling of the arrangements for the new plant.

Interest Stimulated in "The Prussian Cur"

"WILLIAM FOX has always been known as a keen judge of motion picture values, but he never picked a bigger, winner than "The Prussian Cur,"" declared a man prominent in the Fox Film Corporation who was checking up a list of so-called war pictures.

In the conversation that followed was revealed a bit of motion picture history that illustrated the genius of William Fox for looking into the future and producing pictures that will not lose value because of a sudden change in conditions or because of the limitations of interest in the theme treated.

"The war play I think should be produced," Mr. Fox is quoted as saying, "is one that will have for its theme some phase of the struggle that will be of permanent public interest. Mere battle scenes are not enough; there have been happenings in this conflict which will always be the cause for public discussion, and which always will make this picture a great drawing card."

"The signing of the armistice and the approach of the peace conference have proved the wisdom of this course. The basic theme of "The Prussian Cur" is the frightfulness of German methods, the treachery of German diplomacy, the efforts of the German Government to debauch and corrupt the governments of other nations and to work its own will even though it had to violate the whole fabric of international law."

French Directress Blache Works on Peace Film

Mme. Alice Blache, the French motion picture directress, is working on a new feature, yet unnamed, in which she is starring Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian star, and Albert Roscoe.

"Peace" forms the nucleus of the scenario and it is built around the idea of America rebuilding the devastated parts of France and Belgium devasted by the Germans in the last World War.

"I am conceiving a film which I want to take to France myself," said Mme. Blache, "the moment that final and enduring peace is signed, and I can cross the ocean."

"I want to visualize the rebuilding of France with the aid of America—I want to picture the transformation of the ruins of Rheims—the ruins of Ypres into prosperous cities. I want to show the world how the war-ridden districts of France and Belgium, the many ruined cities, will be transformed from a smoldering heap of bricks of stone, once more into prosperous towns and villages."

"I want to show in this film how 'No Man's Land,' the barren ground filled with shell-holes where not a tree, nor blade of grass has grown for the last three years, will be transformed by the French peasants into a rich, beautiful agricultural district, where cows will once more graze on green meadows interspersed with fruit-laden apple trees."

Lieutenant Hall Tells of Aviators' Risks

Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American ace who has taken active part in his three years at the front in over one hundred aerial battles, and who is featured in Carl L. Carlton's production, "A Romance of the Air," says that the average life of an aviator is just about twenty years.

In "A Romance of the Air," which recently played at the Rivoli theatre, Franklin B. Coxe, covered a love story with the thrilling air battles and the scenes of the life of an aviator.
Industry Showed Its Strength

Pathé Official Declares That Epidemic Shutdown Was a Revelation of the Industry's Strength

"The influenza epidemic, which, while it has visited many personal bereavements on the industry and has caused severe hardship in some quarters, has brought with it a blight of many beneficial results," declares Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathé, in discussing the outlook attending the period of resumption after the five weeks' shut down.

"It was just as though a vital and overwhelming war demand were made upon a nation, sudden and imperative, and upon the response depended the revelation of the spirit of the people. We all know now how this nation has responded; and it is gratifying now, that the five weeks' cessation of production and release are over, to realize how and in what measure of unity the industry answered the demand.

"The 'shut-down' period has had a unifying effect; it has shown us our strength and our weakness; it has given us a valuable opportunity, in the midst of the headlong rush of production and competition, to pause, and take stock of ourselves," continued Mr. Brunet. "It has been both a period of survey and of reconstruction. "When the representatives in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of eighteen producing and distributing companies met and signed the agreement to suspend production and release for four weeks, beginning October 14, seventy-five per cent of the theatres of the country already had closed. That seemed to spell wide calamity. Those that remained open promptly rose to the emergency in cooperating with the health authorities and aiding the work of prevention by slides carrying official warning.

"'Put your house in order!' was the slogan all over the country, and that New York City remained open, with its teeming population, must stand as a testimonial of the intelligent professional and broad public spirited work of Sydney Cohen, New York State President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and the various members who gave the fullest cooperation to the Health Commissioner.

"This is cited as merely being typical of other sections that remained open, of which our branch has furnished the most complete data. The spirit has been to aid and to serve."

Valentine Grant to Star in Olcott Film

Valentine Grant, whose past appearances in motion pictures have been reported as very successful, is to return to New York within the near future, it was announced this week, to star in a production to be produced by the Sidney Olcott Players.

Wide publicity has not been given the proposed feature as yet, but it has been made known the picture is to be based on the reconstruction that must enter the lives of men and women after the sacrifices made during the world war. The story is said to be written from a viewpoint hitherto undeveloped.

Last spring Miss Grant suffered a nervous breakdown and was confined to her bed for ten weeks through her intensive efforts on behalf of various war funds and charities.

She had given a great deal of time to the welfare of Uncle Sam's boys at Castle William, Governors Island, and was at the same time very active with the work for the relief of the Belgian war orphans and homeless children, in connection with the Princess Albert de Ligen Fund, for the maintenance of her "Rescue Home" at The Hague. The results obtained by Miss Grant have been especially commended by His Excellency Baron de Cartier, Minister to this country from Belgium.

Not content with her other activities, she also devoted a portion of her time to aiding Lady Kingston of Roscommon, Ireland, with her Shamrock Fund for the building of a hospital in Dublin for the care of disabled Irish soldiers and sailors.

After her long illness Miss Grant, when able to travel, went west to her home in Seattle, Wash., to recuperate and immediately upon her return of her strength she plunged into the work of entertaining the boys of her own U. S. A. at Camp Lewis, near Tacoma, Wash. Not only did she become a great favorite with the men, but the officers quickly realized what a helpful influence she exerted. So welcome were her efforts that during the quarantine of the camp, owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza, Miss Grant was the only civilian possessing a pass to come and go, and many a boy was made happier for the little kindnesses.

Popularity of Hodkinson Shows in Pittsburgh

That the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are supplying a long felt want of the exhibitor is said to be fully demonstrated in the representation of Hodkinson Service in the Pittsburgh theatres a recent week as judged by the following bookings:

- Columbia, Lillian Walker's "Embarrassment of Riches," Monday and Tuesday.
- Shiloh, Louise Glaum, "Wedlock," Tuesday.
- Lawrence, Bessie Barriscale, "The White Lie," Tuesday.
- Imperial, Anita King, "Petitcoats and Politics," Tuesday.
- Crystal, J. Warren Kerrigan, "One Dollar Bid," Thursday.
- Frederick, Louise Glaum, "Wedlock," Thursday.
- Strand, Henry B. Walthall, "Hoops of Steel," Saturday.

Universal Announces Its Revised Schedule

In concluding an elaborately planned advertising campaign for their many offerings the officers of Universal carefully revised the releasing schedule as follows:

Reports were said to be at hand from many sources that "The Lure of the Circus," in which Eddie Polo, "the strong man of the screen," is starred, was in strong demand. The release dates for the first episode of this serial was set forward to November 18 instead of November 25.

The Turn in the Road

Feature Completed

The Brentwood Film Corporation has completed the filming of "The Turn in the Road," and King W. Vidor, who directed it, is now cutting the picture and personally supervising its timing.

King Vidor uses a megaphone only when directing a large number of people, but when they were filming a big cave scene at the Brentwood studios, Vidor became so accustomed to his "Shout Horn" that he materially added to the gaiety of his extras by continuing to talk through it even when making a few emphatic remarks intended only for the ear of his assistant standing close at his side.

No Change in Blackton’s Producing Plans

Though the victorious ending of the world war will materially change the plans of many film producers, it will have no effect on Commodore J. Stuart Blackton’s schedule.

At least not so far as "The Battle Cry of Liberty," which he has announced as the sequel of "The Battle Cry of Peace" is concerned.

New Distributing Company for New England

PARAGON Pictures, Inc., enters the motion picture field to distribute big pictures throughout New England States. George A. Dodge, who conceived and built Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, New England’s largest pleasure resort; the Georgian, Boston, Mass., and Pemberton Inn and Hotel Pemberton, Hull, Mass., is the President of Paragon Pictures, Inc. Stanley W. Hand, well-known to the motion picture industry through his affiliation with the World Film Corp. and Paragon Exchange, Inc., for the past several years, during which period he served the above companies in various important executive capacities successfully in Cincinnati, New York and Boston, is announced as Vice President and General Manager.

Hovey Dodge, also well-known to the New England exhibitors as sales representative of Pathe for the past two years, is Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. E. E. Weakley, former booker and office manager of Pathe Boston office, has joined Paragon Pictures, Inc., as Office Manager and will be assisted by Miss Dorothy Pearlman, also formerly of Pathe. Messrs. Dodge and Hand intend to cover the New England Territory personally in the interests of the new company, thereby maintaining a closer and more pleasant relationship between distributor and exhibitor, carrying out the policies that earned for Mr. Hand the title of “Billy Sunday Hand.”

"Stolen Orders," Wm. A. Brady’s big special, has been obtained by Paragon Pictures, Inc., as its initial release, December 5. "Carmen of the Klondike," has also been taken over from S. A. Lynch Enterprises for distribution through Paragon Pictures, Inc., which serves all existing contracts from November 20. Negotiations are under way for purchase of New England rights to other big pictures which will be announced at a later date.

Exchange and General Offices have been opened at 16 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass., with complete facilities for renting, shipping and handling film and advertising; and includes a projection theatre with a fire-proof booth and Power machine.
Dolores Cassinelli Has Patriotic Suggestion

Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian film star, is nothing if not patriotic. After her activities for the war, she is now apparently concentrating her attentions on "Peace Celebrations." She has just made the following suggestion by letter to Mayor Hylan:

"Having read your cablegram to Marshal Foch and your invitation to him, may I be permitted to make a suggestion. "Although there is no deed, there is no action too great to show our deep gratitude, it seems to me only just if the invitation you have so kindly extended to the Field Marshal should also comprise those other leaders of Victory and Freedom—Gen. Sir Douglas Haig, General Diaz and last but not least, the King of the Belgians.

My humble suggestion is that the City of New York should have an International Peace Celebration to which the above-mentioned leaders of Victory and Freedom, together with General John Pershing, should be invited.

"I should feel happy if this suggestion should meet with your approval."

Hayes Brings Experience to Buffalo Job

Edward J. Hayes, better known to countless western new exhibitors as just plain "Eddie," and who during his long film career has managed the local General Film and Metro exchanges, has now been appointed manager of the Mutual Film exchange in Buffalo, succeeding W. A. V. Mack, who takes the Gotham branch.

Mr. Hayes, though still a young man, has had much experience in the film industry, and prior to entering the distribution end of the game managed several big theatres in this part of the state, among them being the Colonial theatre in Elmira and the International in Niagara Falls. As manager of the local Metro office he made a splendid record. He has an unusually wide acquaintance and intimate knowledge of conditions in the trade. Mr. Hayes' successor at the Metro branch is H. W. Kahn, who comes to Buffalo from Albany, bringing with him E. Markins as salesman.

G. E. Dickman, who was connected with the local Metro branch as salesman, has taken a similar position with the Victor Film Exchange, handling the Universal films. The Albany Metro office has been abandoned and combined with the Buffalo outfit. Mr. Hayes has already lined up some big bookings for Mutual in his territory, according to report and anticipates a busy season.

Art-O-Graf Film Organizes in Denver to Make Pictures

A company has been formed and incorporated at Denver for the production of six or eight state rights subjects during the year, the title of the firm being The Art-O-Graf Film Company. A. B. Thayer, formerly with the Selig Company, is president and producing director, and Tom Gibson is managing editor. Gibson has written the first story which will be released under the title of "German Gold" or "Wolves in Wall Street." The studio of the National Film Company in Englewood, near Denver, has been leased and production work will be started there shortly.

Three Companies in Big Film Deal
Robertson-Cole, Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and Affiliated Distributors Corporation Agree on Long Time Contract for Film

WHAT an official declared to be one of the most significant and constructive deals in the history of the motion picture industry was closed on Wednesday, November 20th, when a long-term contract was signed between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors Corporation.

The officials of the two corporations who have been in conference in New York since Monday with Walter Hoff Seely, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company, are William J. Clark, H. A. Brink, James M. Sheldon, H. C. Cornelius and Charles C. Pettijohn.

Those who read between the lines of film announcements will realize the importance of the transaction. It is expected to be a distinct step towards eliminating haphazard methods and establishing the country's fifth biggest industry upon a sane business basis.

The Banking Affiliations

The transaction marks the entrance of staple business methods into the industry. The Robertson-Cole Company is a banking institution and was one of the country's most important exporting organizations before it became interested in the handling of pictures. Finding a steadily growing demand for American films in every part of the globe, they entered the motion picture business.

At first they were interested in the film solely for export. Realizing that, in order to secure the best in photoplay productions for the world market, they must also control them for this country, a domestic department was organized.

From the first Robertson-Cole have been applying established business methods to the exploitation of their film products. Since their entrance into the field of motion pictures Robertson-Cole have steadily demonstrated that they intend doing things differently. By the terms of the new contract, Robertson-Cole will furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. They have in full operation twenty-six exchanges in the United States and three in Canada, which is expected to guarantee a consistent distribution.

Will Not Produce

"The Robertson-Cole Company is not going into the producing or distributing business," said Walter Hoff Seely, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company. "It is determined to act solely as banker and exclusive agent for manufacturers of high-grade pictures who are worthy of the support and co-operation which the Robertson-Cole Company are able to offer through this splendid organization and offices throughout the world.

"We have made a contract with the Mutual and a contract with the Affiliated because we believe they represent the best thought in the industry, and have the most comprehensive plan of distribution and operation."

By the terms of the contract, the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which is reported to be owned and controlled exclusively by exhibitors, will maintain a committee, which will select from the pictures furnished by Robertson-Cole those best suited and adapted to be marketed as distinct Affiliated products.

The Robertson-Cole Company are now prepared to furnish to the exchanges of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation at least one feature a week. They have acquired control of the world's rights to the series of de luxe features starring Billie Rhodes, of which eight will be produced in the next twelve months, eight with Henry B. Walthall; eight William Desmond productions, eight features starring Bessie Barriscale, eight with Susse Hayakawa, besides Martin Johnson's remarkable feature, "Cannibals of the South Seas." News of the transaction whereby Robertson-Cole control the rights to the Barriscale and Hayakawa pictures came to light yesterday.

Several other contracts of reported significance are now pending, including the release of a number of super-features. One of these agreements, one which was authorized yesterday by Robertson-Cole, is Hallie Ermines' story, "Long Lane's Turning," which the National Film Corporation of America is producing, with Henry B. Walthall in the stellar role.

New Releases Scheduled

According to Mr. Seely, definite plans have been formulated for the following releases:

Robertson-Cole announce that the deal will not affect its foreign business, which will continue to be expanded along the same lines as formerly.

James Sheldon, former president of the Mutual, and now chairman of the Board of Directors of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announces that the status of the Mutual Film Corporation has not been changed, except in the name, and will continue to handle the product of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation and the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in their various units.

William J. Clark, the new president of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announced likewise, and H. A. Brink, president of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, declared as follows:

"The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation having organized its five unit corporations, and effected satisfactory distribution arrangements with Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, is pleased with the arrangement made with Robertson-Cole Company, who will act as bankers for Affiliated and the independent producers of this country."

W. H. Official Talks on Williams Letter

"There is a great deal being said about the wastefulness and consequent bad business in the industry," says an official of W. H. Productions Company, in a noteworthy and interesting message, "and the blame is being placed to a great extent on the producers.

"Producers are no doubt doing everything possible to remedy these discrepancies, and, as Mr. Williams points out in his letter to Motion Picture News, in the issue of November 23, the exhibitor has not been looking far enough ahead in some cases, than the actual dollar he can get today. He has not felt himself sufficiently important and active enough part of the actual producing of motion pictures."

"He has forgotten that the public will pay up to $2 to see a really good motion picture. Give the public a good show, and give it to them consistently, so that you will warrant their confidence in the dependability of your program, and they will pay a little more to see it."

"If the exhibitors have the courage of their convictions as to the proper method of motion picture exhibiting, and if they will require and get only the best pictures made, we will have less third-rate productions 'tried out' on the public at the actual expense of the exhibitor."

Charles Raven Lead in Rapf Picture

Charles Raven will soon be seen on the screen in his latest role in Harry Rapf's production, "Wanted for Murder." Mr. Raven, sometimes known on the stage as Charles Romeo, is well known in pictures, having played leads and juveniles opposite many of the prominent stars.

In one of the scenes in "Wanted for Murder," Mr. Raven goes up in an airplane. His pilot on this occasion was Allan Adams, who last Monday was killed when executing the dangerous "tail spin."

Screen Color Work in Pathe’s “Infatuation”

THE colored scenes in the Pathe special offering, “Infatuation,” starring Gaby Deslys, is said by them to mark the highest point in the achievement of chromatic cinema display, in which the house of Pathe was the pioneer more than twenty years ago.

At the Pathe Color Studios, where this latest achievement was made, there are said to be employed nearly 1,500 persons. The structure is now imposing six-story building and there are still in service there some of the workers who were with Pathe twenty years ago, when, seeing the great possibilities of the cinema, work was begun on the first colored film—work by hand, a tedious, painstaking process, which is declared to have justified all of the labor in the results, which pointed the way to ultimate perfection.

To this end Mr. Charles Pathe enlisted the services of chemists, engineers and specialists—trying and accepting, trying and rejecting various media—until thirteen years ago, when the first machine for color printing of film was perfected.

There has since been made frequent innovations, until now the process has reached a degree of perfection said to be unequalled by any other. It makes a quick production as well as absolute perfection in printing and registering.

And, in “Infatuation,” it is said to show Gaby Deslys as a veritable rainbow girl.

Director Stahl Enthuses on New Reed Picture

John M. Stahl, who is directing the first picture Florence Reed, the emotional star, is making for United Picture Theatres of America, has nearly completed the production and is so sure of its great possibilities that he is unusually enthusiastic.

“One of the greatest characterizations ever seen on the screen,” Director Stahl’s reported as saying, “will be revealed by Miss Reed in the details of cutting and practically completed superpicture which Tribune Productions, Inc., is furnishing for the United.

“That popular star has accomplished such great work in the past, that we are confronted with the difficult task of reaching and of surpassing the high standard of artistry she has established.”

Gordon’s First United for Early Release

With the practical completion of production and the details of cutting and titling already in hand an early release of the Kitty Gordon first superpicture is promised by J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres.

The production is adapted from the Red Cross romance, “The Nurse’s Story,” written by Adele Blenauer.

Motion Picture News

“After the War” Opens at the Broadway

M. H. HOFFMAN, sales manager of the Argosy Film Company, announces that, after much consideration, it has been decided to give the premiere showing of the film, “After the War,” at the Broadway theatre. The picture will open at the latter theatre Sunday, November 24, for an indefinite run.

So much interest has been aroused in this subject, it is asserted, that M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway, contemplates breaking a rule to extend the run of “After the War” beyond the usual seven-day showing.

Mr. Hoffman, in the meantime, has had advance inquiries and proposals from state right buyers scattered over various important sections of the country for an early distribution of the picture. He asserts that the territorial film men recognize this subject as one of the timeliest on the market today.

“For those who wish to know the trend of expert opinion on the kind of pictures wanted now,” said Mr. Hoffman, “the letters I have received would prove enlightening to the last degree. These letters prove that exhibitors and distributors are keen for subjects that take up the skein of human events from the finish of the war. The latter marks a starting point for all things that must arrest public attention.”

Nathanson of Canada Boosts Houdini Serial

S. NATHANSON, managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., of Canada, on the occasion of his recent visit to the B. A. Rolfe Studios, where the Houdini serial is being filmed, is reported to have said:

“At last exhibitors have a box office insurance, fifteen consecutive weeks of big business.

“Take the star, in this instance Houdini was the inspiration for the story. In him we have a showman with predominant drawing power, a man who stands alone in his work, who has practically mystified the entire world, whose name is a household word.”

New Interest Created in Patriotic Films

DEVELOPMENTS growing out of the signing of the armistice which suddenly closed the world war, are reported by Jewel Productions to have created new interest in its chief patriotic films.

The latter are said to have been automatically converted by public sentiment into victory pictures. “The Yellow Dog,” in particular, is declared to have accrued renewed value as the result of the sensational development of Bolshevism and post war propaganda by the enemy.

This is said to have been to a large extent disclosed by the activities of the boy detectives comprising the Anti-Yellow Dog clubs of the country.

These clubs, as a direct outcome of the belief that the Hun influence has come to life again, have adopted a new slogan, “The Dogs Are At It Again!”

One report was to the effect that the United States Secret Service had increased its forces nearly fifty per cent since the negotiations for peace began.

In “Bad Men and Good Scenery,” the second in the series of ”Yellow Dog” pictures produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company and released through Mutual, is shown the “Jackson Hole,” the former rendezvous of the gun-men and outlaws of the bad lands of Montana.

UNIVERSAL SPEC
Special Service Section on
Mary MacLaren in "Vanity Pool"

This is melodrama, pure and simple, and as such it should be advertised. Do not attempt to make it a problem play, an "expose of society" or anything of that sort. Base your whole appeal on the interest the plot holds, the thrills your patrons will get and on the strengths of the cast.

It always pays to be honest with the public. And there is a big element of the public that likes melodrama, especially when there are six noted players in the cast. It likes to feel the heart strings pulling, to get a tear now and then and to be kept up in the clouds so far as the next developments are concerned.

There are times when "Vanity Pool" bears the daring, but it is really clean throughout. It might be called in your advertising a realistic story of a poor girl's adventures into the maze of politics and the shams of the upper strata. And by such exploitation you can make it appeal to all of those who haven't reached the top of the social ladder—and most of us don't want to get there.

There is plenty of "story" here. Let's look at the human appeal of it. Gerald Harper and his wife, married fifteen years and childless, lives on the edge of Vanity Pool. Gerald wanted to be governor for the power that the office would give him and his wife wants him to succeed because she envies the social position that the mistress of the state would give her.

Drew Garrett is a "friend of the family." At the start of the picture we are led to believe that he is a little more than a friend of one of them, but that part is carried just far enough to heighten the plot without being suggestive. Diana Casper is in love with him and Diana has great influence with the political boss whose support Harper needs to win success. And so Mrs. Harper persuades Garrett to play his end of the game so that Diana may bring the boss around to Harper's support.

But while Mrs. Harper plays her part of the game in the political tangle, Harper takes her place for the moment as a social investigator and it is then that he meets Mary Harper, a pure woman-child of seventeen, the daughter of a down and out stage couple, the wife still believing herself beautiful and the father a drunken non-essential.

At first Harper is moved by pity for the girl whom he sees gold amid the clay of her surroundings and he provided elegant things for her, under an assumed name. There is nothing improper in her relations, for really Mary believes that the man is in love with her and when he yields to the temptation to kiss her, she believes it a promise of marriage.

Through a chance observation on the street Diana is given cause to suspect Harper and follows him to Mary's house and there through the gossip of the neighbors learns that he and Mary are expected to marry. With this information Diana confronts Garrett and declares that unless she marries him she will take the information to the political boss. Flint, Garrett spurns her and then Flint is set on the trail.

But here the plot takes another turn. Mrs. Harper is willing to make any sacrifice to win the social position of governor's wife and with the aid of Garrett Mary is introduced into her home as her friend that she is about to adopt. The girl agrees to live there to silence the tongues of slander, but quickly a love affair with Garrett begins to develop.

The climax comes when Flint denounces her as a woman of the streets and then she returns to her tenement home, where Garrett goes to seek her. In the meantime, Flint finds that it is impossible to win the favor of Diana and after a scene in the private room of a restaurant she pulls out her gun to her death.

In the meantime the sacrifice that little Mary has been willing to make have persuaded the Harpers that life on the edge of Vanity Pool is not worth while and they are won back to love for each other, while Garrett and Mary find true affinity.

The ending will entirely satisfy the audiences. It comes as the logical finale of a series of quick moving incidents and the best part of it is that one does not know until almost the end of the picture what is to be the fate of the little girl of the tenements, for it is not until the latter part of the picture that it is shown that the only interest that Garrett has in Mrs. Harper is in bringing her and her husband closer together again.

Strength of the cast is one of the chief points to be brought out. In another article in this section you will find additional matter about the players who take part. We would advise not only featuring the star, Mary MacLaren, but playing up the names of Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum, Martin Sais, Virginia Chester and Thomas Holding Strong. In this way you are going to get a mighty wide appeal.

There is another strong point in the lavish scenes that are shown in the picture, especially as contrasted with the tenement settings. Beautiful gowns always appeal and there are some striking ones worn by Misses Nilsson and Sais, some especially daring ones by the latter in her role as more or less of an adventuress.

But all in all the proper appeal to give this picture is that of one full of thrills, of unexpected turns in the plot, of good, old fashioned melodrama of the cleaner sort, with a kick in it and plenty of heart interest.

"Melodrama" is too often used in criticism as a reproach, but as long as people are human it is going to have an appeal and a big one with the masses.

We wouldn't try, therefore, to make anything of a class appeal with this production. We would go out into the highways and byways and try to get them all in. We would give it a straight heart interest and talk about that all the time.
Straight Heart Appeal to Be Your Main Reliance With This

There are plenty of individual striking incidents and a lot of side-lines to talk about in advertising "Vanity Pool," but the wise policy with this picture is to appeal directly to the heart interest. When you are able to do that you do not need anything of the sensational in your exploitation.

We are all too familiar with the poor girl of the tenements who is forced by starvation to the brink of the precipice or who yields to the lure of society and the love of fine clothes. But there is nothing of this sort to this picture, except a few threads of the plot that lead up for a few moments in that direction, only to let us find that we are going the wrong way.

You do not need to be told that the women are the ones on which you center your main drives. When you get the women to your theatre they are pretty sure to bring the men folk along with them. And for this reason we would make the appeal directly to the woman element here.

And remember that the millionaires and the leaders of society who come to your theatre are few as compared with the other classes. This is a picture with which to put over a strictly popular appeal.

Here you have an excellent title and one that should be used in big letters in all of your advertising. We would advise playing it even stronger than the name of the star, but we would use it so that the public would gather immediately what the title means.

For one of the first displays there could be an excellent effect achieved by using immediately at the top of the advertisement in, say, 24-point type, the words, "Are You Living on the Edge of (and then in large type) Vanity Pool," and under this, again in smaller type, the caution, "Don't Fall In."

If teaser campaigns go well with you, this will form an excellent one.

But we would not advise running a teaser campaign on this picture in the newspaper displays. If you can give a considerable volume of advertising to this in advance, we would rather touch on the interest in the story and on the noted players in the cast.

You don't need anything of the trick advertising here. It might only serve to mislead, while if you want to get over the heart appeal you ought to tell the real truth.

To get back to the story: As soon as you mention the poor girl of the tenements a lot of people are going to jump at the sex stuff, and that's the reason why you should tell more about the production than you usually do—to let the public see what sort of a story it really is.

Now suppose you have used the general lines that we have just suggested for one of your displays, or merely the title of the picture with the name of the star:

"She loved her husband, but she loved the glory of society the more. She was willing to connive that he might be governor and she become the first lady of the state, but it took the purity and the innocence and the self-sacrifice of the girl of the tenementsto show her the gold in the dross of life and the happiness of true devotion."

"He kissed her. He didn't mean it, but she thought it a promise of marriage. That came the truth—that he was married—but she made a sacrifice for him until true love stepped in and she hurried back to her home in the tenements where the real man came for her and led her into the life of ever happiness."

"There are three women in this story, none of them really bad, but two of them trying to use each other and the innocent girl of the tenement for their own ends. Yet her purity won the dominant man and he straightened it all out, too late to save the life of one, but in time to bring happiness to the husband and wife and to himself—and the girl."

Of course, you are going to take advantage of the name of the star in putting over this picture. She is well known as an actress who came up from the bottom very quickly—as one of the finds of the screen. In some of your advertising you will find it to advantage to use striking pictures of her, but where the space is available we would certainly mention the names of the five leading players in her support—Anna Nilsson, Franklyn Furnam, Marin, Sais, Thomas Holding and Virginia Chester. On another page we are giving you some facts about these players for use in your newspaper stories.

You can achieve a splendid effect in

WOMAN APPEAL
Director Helps You Put This Picture Over with the Fair

Elsewhere we have suggested that you play up the woman appeal strongly in advertising "Vanity Pool." There are three strong woman characters in this picture and it is from them that the chief part of your word of mouth advertising is coming.

You have another strong point in this picture by calling attention to the fact that it was directed by one of the most successful of all directors, and a woman, Ida May Park. "Broadway Love" and "The Grand Passion" are among the greatest of her recent successes.
At the left Thomas Holding as the ambitious husband, Anna Nilsson as the wife and Franklyn Farnum as the friend of the family. In the right Mary MacLaren as Mary Royal, her father and mother.

Bringing out the woman element in this picture by using pictures of the three leading women characters. In this case we would take scene pictures (and let us say that they are unusually good in this case) and block out the figure desired, running a picture of Miss MacLaren in her dress as a girl of the tenements in the center and one of Miss Sais and of Miss Nilsson on either side.

Then either draw in or use in type form captions under each picture, with the name of the player at the top, something in this order:

ANNA Q. NILSSON
As Carol Harper—She lives at the edge of Vanity Pool. She wanted her husband to be governor because of the position in society that it would give her.

MARIN SAIS
As Diana Casper—She plotted to win the politician's support for the society woman's husband so that in turn she might win the man she sought.

MARY MACLAREN
As Mary Royal—She was only a girl of the tenements, but the innocence of her brought husband and wife to know true love and herself real happiness.

FURTHER benefit can be had of this all-star cast by using in the corners and at the sides of the advertisement pictures of the various players. Some theatres find this a most impressive style of advertising. Be careful in doing this not to get a messy effect, but make each one of the players stand out for themselves.

It is not often that you have such an opportunity and while this sort of advertising is not a good thing to follow regularly, it is mighty good once in awhile. Everyone of these players has a following in your community and you certainly will not be doing the most possible with the picture unless you take advantage of that fact.

One trouble with many exhibitors is that they have either not analyzed the drawing power of certain players or they merely pass up the knowledge that they have gained. It is only too true that in many cases the patrons know more about the players than do the managers of the theatre. You have, then, a right to bank on a certain knowledge of the artists. We are generally opposed to the use of a series of names in a display, but this is a case where every name will be read with interest, and the effect upon the reader will be to convince him that this is a picture that he cannot afford to miss.

Leave out the adjectives. The names will do the biggest share of the work.

We would carry this element of the picture still further and make some showing on it in the lobby. You are provided with large pictures of Miss Mac-Laren which can be used, and you can doubtless obtain pictures of the other players, but if you cannot there are scene pictures in two sizes, and these admirably picture all of the players.

Go to a little trouble here and make a different sort of display than you usually do. Instead of merely putting these pictures all together in the frame that you usually use, mount them on heavy cardboard and then have your artist put on them in letters large enough to attract attention the name of the player, at least, and better still, something about the character that each one plays in this picture. For instance, in connection with the newspaper advertising we have made some suggestions as to the lines for three of them.

In the scene pictures that we have reproduced in these pages we have shown all of the principal characters, with separate pictures of Misses MacLaren and Nilsson.

Now under this matter use with each picture the words: “In ‘Vanity Pool.’” Now you may think that it is repetition to use this in poster after poster, but you are seeking to impress the public with the unusual quality of the cast, and this is the best way to do it.

By the simple use of the scene pictures or stills you can have a lobby display that will cause more comment than a dozen freak things that you might do.

You won't need to use "magnificent" or "wonderful," or any such expression. The people will stop and look at the pictures, they will read the captions and will "buy" the picture.

Referring back to advertising, if you can afford to have your cuts made and want to put on a real advance campaign on this picture there could be nothing better than to than to follow this same plan, using each of the characters separately in one column advertisements, with the captions as indicated below them, with the addition of the name of the theatre and the date.

Remember that here you have a story and a star PLUS the supporting cast.
Use All of These Players If You Would Get Full Action

USE of the expression “All Star Cast” has been so abused that it is almost meaningless now unless you back up the statement. You have a notable array of players here, and we have already made some suggestions for taking advantage of them. But let us add here the warning not to use that “All Star Cast” expression and let it go at that.

In all of the exploitation be sure to give the names of these players, and if you can add a few lines about what they have done in the past you are going to get more people into your theatre. And the unusual part about these players is that you have an opportunity to appeal to the followers of various sorts of motion pictures with their presence here.

Now by making reference to the supporting players we do not mean that Miss MacLaren should be played down. Use an attractive picture of her in all your advertising, but that does not keep you from using the other matter too. Where you have an attractive title such as “Vanity Pool” you get the attention to your displays quickly and you won’t have to worry so much about crowding up the display. Miss MacLaren has had one of the most meteoric careers in the history of motion pictures and the story of it makes mighty good reading matter for the papers. Most of you remember that she was discovered by the celebrated woman director, Lois Weber, when she had the part of the maid in “Where Are My Children?” Miss Weber saw in her a real star and since then her has scored some big successes. Her most recent pictures were “Bread” and “A Model’s Confession.”

We mentioned the appeal to lovers of various classes of motion pictures. Now watch it and use it.

Marin Sais, who has the part of the woman lobbyist, is best known for her serial work. She is one of the most darling actresses on the screen, and if you are in a section where serials are popular it will be well to feature her strong. Her last work of this sort was with Kalem in “Social Pirates.”

If you have a serial night in your theatre use a special slide that night saying that Marin Sais is to be seen in support of Mary MacLaren in “Vanity Pool.”

Franklyn Farnum has been a star in his own right in many pictures. He has a strong following in many sections of the country and the mere mention of his presence in the cast is going to bring a lot of his admirers. In this picture he is the man who sets things straight and wins the love of the girl of the tenements.

Thomas Holding will appeal to an entirely different element. He is an actor of the more dignified type. He is an Englishman and has had a long stage career and has appeared in motion pictures since the days of “Bella Donna.” He is probably best known to the public as the leading man for Mme. Petrova, and that is probably the best way to feature him.

VIRGINIA CHESTER has been a favorite with motion picture followers since the days of the Bison 101 Ranch productions and was long considered one of the best riders among motion picture players. She has been with Pathé, Universal and Mena Films.

Anna Q. Nilsson has lately been featured by Metro in big pictures. She is one of the most beautiful women on the screen and undoubtedly has a big following in your community. In this picture she plays the part of the socially ambitious wife and wears some wonderful gowns. She came to this country from Sweden in 1907 and has been in motion pictures since 1911.

Frank Brownlee is one of the best known of character men or heavies. Recently he has been playing with Universal, but he made many friends in the old Ince-Triangle days when he appeared in many productions with the Ince stars. He has the part of the political boss in “Vanity Pool.”

We would strongly advise one newspaper story devoted to the supporting cast. We would a great deal rather use this than a story of the production, for the interest in the picture depends largely on the suspense of it, and when you give the plot away you to a certain extent weaken the appeal.

We have already referred to an advance advertising campaign that would play up emphasis on each of the players mentioned, but if your newspaper is very liberal in the way of reading matter we would try to use a cut of a different player with each day’s story.

WITH A SONG

It will naturally occur to the manager to introduce a phonograph here and play this selection. We wouldn’t do that, because the stunt is becoming too old and tiresome. Instead of that have a good singer render the selection from the back of the stage and you will make a hit.

Better still if you have this selection rendered just before the feature. If you can have your stage band with roses to give the garden effect it will be most attractive. Don’t think that your audience won’t “get” the point.

Lobby Should Be Simple With Vanity Idea and Cast Featured

THERE is a chance for a novel lobby display on "Vanity Pool," either as a teaser in advance of the production or during its run. It is very simple and if you have sufficient space in your lobby it is likely to create a bunch of laughs and cause talk about the attraction.

Take a mirror and place it on a table, draping the sides or building it up with rocks so as to get the necessary height. Around this you can use potted plants or the plants themselves to form the rim, and if you can build this sufficiently strong to prevent leakage it would be well to put it in water. Above the whole display hang a sign, "Vanity Pool." Of course, the person looking into the "pool" simply sees a reflection of themselves.

The idea might be elaborated still further as an advance advertisement by using a series of mirrors in the lobby with the word "Vanity" painted on each one in white letters. It is an old saying that a woman cannot pass a mirror without looking into it.

If your lobby is too crowded for this you can get a good effect by using a cut-out of the three-sheet, which shows a picture of Mary MacLaren standing beside a pool. Other cut-outs could be made from the twenty-four-sheet.

*Repeated Selections.

There is a most attractive one-sheet which carries a large head of the star, and this would be attractive in any lobby, and if a couple of these were used with the scene pictures in the manner that we have suggested you will attract plenty of attention.

Don't get too much paper in the lobby on this production. Use it on the outside stands, but keep your lobby as simple as possible, and it will be all the more striking.

At night we would have the front of the theatre brilliantly illuminated with many colored lights, for this carries out the idea of gaiety, or, by allusion, vanity.

Additional Live News from the Producers

R. R. Nehls of American Film Company is back at the corporation's executive offices in Chicago after a month's trip to the Pacific Coast, film country in general and the "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara in particular. Mr. Nehls followed suit with other producers and decided to close up the "American" studio for five weeks. William Russell Production's activities and Margarita Fisher's company ceased operations at once. Being in the middle of a picture, so far unnamed, the Mary Miles Minter company continued until the termination of the task.

Paramount Has Changes at Kansas City

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has announced two changes in the managerial personnel of its Kansas City District, P. C. Wreath becoming manager of the Kansas City branch office and George W. Weeks of the St. Louis office.

Mr. Wreath, who has been branch manager at St. Louis for some time, returns to his old position at Kansas City which he occupied for several years.

Frank Lloyd Returns to California

Having completed another William Farnum production at a studio in New Jersey, Frank Lloyd, director of "Les Misérables," "Riders of the Purple Sage" and other Farnum pictures given to the film world by William Fox, has returned to Los Angeles. Mr. Lloyd came East for the sole purpose of making this one picture with Mr. Farnum. He is accompanied on the trip West by his assistant, Scott Dunlap.

Return Dates on Chaplin Said To Be $20,000

Twenty thousand dollars in contracts for return bookings on "Shoulder Arms" is said to be the record obtained without any selling effort by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of New York on the second million dollar Chaplin comedy.

Other First National exchanges throughout the country report a phenomenal number of applications from exhibitors for return dates. In many instances, according to the managers, exhibitors have voluntarily offered to double and treble their rental prices on the comedy to continue its original run without interruption.

Exhibitors in small towns are said to be amazed at the manner in which "Shoulder Arms" is breaking house records for the duration of runs. Theaters that previously played attractions for two days as a maximum, because of limited population, are now said to be using the second Chaplin comedy distributed by First National for three and four days.

Harry Levey "Discovered" by Federal Employes

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal, was surprised on last Tuesday to receive a special delivery letter postmarked New York, simply addressed "The Griffith of Industrial Pictures, America."

Not another name or word appeared, except Uncle Sam's official cancellation stamp. Enclosed was an appreciative letter from a big firm for whom Mr. Levey had finished an industrial picture.

"A Fascinating Widower"

Julian Eltinge is launching the production of "A Fascinating Widower," the scenario of which is by June Mathis, at his own studio.

"A Fascinating Widower" is said to be the antithesis of "The Fascinating Widow," as the name suggests. Robert Thornby will probably direct the picture, and the cast will include Sylvia Ashton and Charles Butler.

Sweet Picture Comes Through

"Flu" Restrictions Did Not Deter Garson and Neilan Securing Last Big Scene of "The Unpardonable Sin"

Despite the stringent influenza restrictions placed by the health authorities at Los Angeles, Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan found a way out of the difficulty and succeeded in securing their last big scene of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet.

During the rage of the influenza epidemic no more than ten persons were allowed to appear in any one scene. This ruling was disastrous to the prompt completion of "The Unpardonable Sin," which still had several very big scenes to take.

By considerable wire pulling and eloquent persuasion, Mr. Garson succeeded in securing permission for Marshall Neilan to picture the last big scene. But one policeman from every precinct in the city was present, and ten doctors with twenty-five nurses were deemed essential by the authorities.

And everybody had to wear a gas mask.

Blanche Sweet mournfully declared that she had never before appeared in a production where one of the biggest scenes was produced under such weird circumstances.

Messrs. Garson and Neilan, after viewing the final results, enthusiastically declared that the big scene was remarkable, and made a fitting climax thoroughly in keeping with the high standard set by them throughout the entire production.

They immediately entrained for the east with the negative. A stop will be made at Washington to permit an official review of the feature, and then the New York public will be afforded many opportunities to witness "The Unpardonable Sin," as a long run is planned at one of the large legitimate theatres in the metropolis.

This eight-reel production shows Blanche Sweet in a dual role. The story opens in Los Angeles and the scene of action quickly moves to Belgium. It is described as a powerful melodrama of high calibre with a very pleasing and happy ending.

Walter Beery is cast as Colonel Klem, the German officer who imposes "Kultur" upon a helpless American girl. The distributing plan of "The Unpardonable Sin" has not yet been announced.

U. B. O. Contracts for Red Cross Films

A deal is announced by which the United Booking Offices, Vaudeville Circuit, will program the American Red Cross war work films in hundreds of theatres. This arrangement is dated to begin generally at once, and is due to the active interest of John Murdoch, manager of the U. B. O.

Mr. Murdoch and E. F. Albee of the U. B. O. have joined in co-operation with the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures.

“Retribution” Depicts Downfall of Kaiser

GEORGE EDWARDES-HALL, a director and scenario writer, since the earliest days of the photoplay, is reappearing as the author and producer of “Retribution,” a six-reel feature offering depicting the downfall of William Hohenzollern.

“Retribution” is said to have been under way for some time, and when the news of the downfall and abdication of the Kaiser came Mr. Hall reconstructed his script, and “Retribution” now reaches its climax with the flight of ex-Kaiser Wilhelm across the Dutch border to Maastrichten.

Care and expense, it is said, are not being spared to make “Retribution” historically correct in every detail.

Aside from presenting in spectacular form the events leading up to the collapse of the Kaiser’s grandiose dream of being a world conqueror, “Retribution” tells a melodramatic story of an American girl’s plucky fight against Hun trickery.

“Made in America” Will Be in Eight Reels

“Made in America,” the eight-reel film production, soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is said to tell for the first time the complete story in pictures of how the victorious armies of America were trained.

In its story of strong dramatic incident is declared to be blended with historic incident, so that the total ensemble is a series of pictures replete with human interest. It is the story of the experience of three American boys who don the khaki as the result of the first draft.

Two of them, John and Jimmy Evers, are typical young Americans—eager and ready to serve their country. The other, Joe Nelson, who represents the slacker type, is one of the few who have the wrong viewpoint and hope to evade military service by resorting to subterfuge.

“Made in America” is being produced by Ashley Miller, with the co-operation of the Government through the Division of Films, and published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathé Exchange, Inc.
National Enlarges Studio for Walthall

The Hollywood studio of the National Film Corporation is to be enlarged and improved to take care of the Henry B. Walthall company, which is to start work shortly. The studio space is to be doubled and will occupy an entire block. A big outside stage is to be built, which is to be 250 by 100 feet, and will be 24 feet at the lowest point and 34 feet at the highest point.

A new administration building will be erected, which will contain executive offices, directors' room, scenario writers' room and offices for the technical department. William Parsons, "Smiling Bill," president of the National Film, will have his offices and dressing room in the building. Twenty new dressing rooms will be erected for the Walthall organization.

Mr. Walthall will return to Los Angeles about December 1, when he will start work on his new picture, which will be the film version of a famous book, negotiations for the picture version of which are now in progress.

Billie Rhodes' next vehicle will be the screen version of "In Search of Arcady." The National Film Corporation has engaged John B. Clymer, who wrote "Poppies," "The Moth," and other screen plays, to prepare the scenario for Miss Rhodes.

"Too Fat to Fight" Stars Marines

Counting themselves fortunate in obtaining the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps, Rex Beach, as author of "Too Fat to Fight," and S. L. Rothafel, who directed certain of the trench scenes, took full advantage of the aid offered them. The "soldiers of the sea" responded magnificently under the direction of Mr. Rothafel, managing director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres and himself a lieutenant of marines.

"Too Fat to Fight," in which Frank McIntyre is the featured player, is in no sense a war drama, but it is a patriotic story with trench scenes in it, and the background of battle is seldom out of the picture.

It was in connection with the trench episodes that the help of the Marine Corps was sought.

Maciste Appears in a Serial

Giant Star of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior" Completes Twenty-Four Reel Serial—Harry Raver Has Rights

CONFIRMING

Harry Raver's denial some time ago, in which he asserted that "Maciste," the D'Annunzio star of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," had not been killed in action on the Alpine front, according to Associated Press reports, the announcement has been made that "the Douglas Fairbanks of Italy," as the New York Times describes the herculean comedian, has just recently completed his third production, "The Liberator," a serial in twenty-four reels, and the picture is in Mr. Raver's hands ready for the North American market.

In August, 1917, the first scenes were taken, leaves of absence from war duty being obtained for "Maciste" and the male principals in the cast. Reverses at the front necessitated calling every available man back to service within a few weeks, and the work had to be abandoned.

Mr. Raver had sent over the story of "The Liberator," and he wanted to see the finished picture. Three times the production was given up as impossible. Each time Gabriele D'Annunzio used his influence in behalf of the producers, and the players were allowed to return to the studio at intervals until the production was completed.

Writing to Harry Raver concerning the difficulties, Carlo Sciamanga said: "We are keeping up a brave heart and hope to dispatch a positive of 'The Liberator,' by the next boat. Ittalia Manzini lost her brave father and brother in the last engagement with the enemy. Bianca mourns a husband. Pastore, the director of 'Cahiria,' 'The Warrior,' and 'The Liberator,' returned from the front wounded, but courageously sat in his invalid chair and directed the last scenes. 'Maciste' has many times proved his valor, keeping up the morale of his regiment by his bravery and good cheer. Italy is proud of 'Maciste.'"

"The Liberator" will be distributed in America without delay. Harry Raver would not state under whose auspices the release would be made. A private showing of the picture was given the press on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Francis Ford Busy on the New Serial

Hiller and Wilk of the Longacre Building, New York, announce that Francis Ford is very busy on his new serial, "The Silent Mystery."

They declare that Mr. Ford gathered a large and well-known cast of players with him in a new brand of successful thrillers.

Mr. Ford, in addition to assuming the direction, plays the male lead, with Mae Gas ton and Rosemary Thyne opposite.

"Upon the arrival of each new episode from the studio in California," said Mr. Wilk, "it reveals, in addition to many of the elements of popularity which have put Francis Ford among the leading serial stars and directors of the entire industry, an unlimited amount of thrilling stunts that have never been attempted before."
Lasky Outlines His Producing Activities

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, has outlined for Motion Picture News the future producing activities of that organization and announced productions to be expected from his department within the next few months. Among these new films are a number of subjects that have up to this time not been made public.

"At the Fifty-sixth street studio, Elsie Ferguson has started on a new Artcraft picture after an absence of several weeks. This photoplay, under the direction of Emile Chantard, is temporarily titled 'For Sale.' Marguerite Clark also returned to the studio and started on her Paramount Picture, 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' under the direction of Hugh Ford.

"Douglas Fairbanks's picturization of Augustus Thomas's play, 'Arizona,' is already finished. Miss Ferguson has two vehicles completed. They are 'Under the Greenwood Tree,' an adaptation of Henry V. Easmon's comedy drama, and 'His Parisian Wife,' from a novel by Andrew Soutar. 'Captain Kidd, Jr., from Rida Johnson Young's comedy, it is expected, will be acclaimed as one of Mary Pickford's most delightful pictures.

"William S. Hart will next be seen in 'Branding Broadway.' Two additional Fred Stone subjects are also finished. They are 'Under the Top,' by John Emerson and Anita Loos, and 'Johnny Get Your Gun.' Caruso makes his screen debut in 'My Cousin,' his second Artcraft picture, 'The Splendid Romance,' also having been completed.

"Cecil B. De Mille has brought together an all-star cast in his Artcraft Special, 'The Squaw Man.' Following that, we have another De Mille production now being staged, 'Don't Change Your Husband.' D. W. Griffith has completed his second and third Artcraft offerings. The first is 'The Greatest Thing in Life.

"In the Paramount series, John Barrymore is now at work on another comedy, 'Here Comes the Bride,' from the play by Max Marcin and Roy Atwell. He will next do a story by Maximental Foster, 'Something to Do.' 'Good Gracious, Annabelle!' from the Clare Kummer play, with Billie Burke, has been finished and will follow 'The Make-Believe Wire,' released this week. Madame Cavalleri last week completed 'Two Brides,' by Alicia Ramsey, and we also have ready for release 'The Rose of Grenada,' which the operatic star made in Italy. Before 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' Marguerite Clark has two Paramounts finished. They are 'Three Men and a Girl' and 'Little Miss Hoover.'

"Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex will soon be seen in their second John Emerson-Anita Loos production, 'Good-Bye, Bill!' which I might best endorse by saying that it is even better than 'Come On In.' We also have ready for the distribution department two Pauline Frederick films, 'Out of the Shadow,' from a story by E. W. Hornung, and 'Paid in Full.'

"We are equally well prepared in the matter of productions made by our West Coast Paramount stars. Ethel Clayton, 'The Mystery Girl,' 'Maggie Pepper,' from Charles Klein's popular comedy-drama, and 'Vicky Van,' by Carolyn Wells. She is now making 'Private Pettigrew's Girl,' from Dana Burnett's Saturday Evening Post story.

"Dorothy Gish's second picture, 'The Hope Chest,' is ready for release at an early date. Lila Lee is ahead of the game by two productions, 'The Secret Garden,' by Francis Hodgson Burnett, and 'Puppy Love,' by Monte Katterjohn. Three Vivian Martin films are now ready for release and the scripts of three others are prepared. Those now ready are 'Mimi's Smile,' 'Jane Goes a-Wooping' and 'You Never Saw a Girl.' Walter Reid pictures now completed are 'Too Many Millions,' from Porter Emerson Brown's comedy; 'The Dub,' by Edgar Franklin, and 'Alias Mike Moran,' from Frederick O'Brien's sensational Saturday Evening Post story, 'Open Sesame.' Bryant Washburn, whose first Paramount picture, 'The Gypsy Trail,' is released this week, has finished two others, 'The Way of a Man with a Maid' and 'Venus in the East.'

"From the Thomas H. Ince studios we have Dorothy Dalton in 'Quicksand,' Charles Ray in 'String Beans' and 'The Girl Dodger,' and Enid Bennett in 'Fuss and Feathers' and 'Happy Though Married,' all completed.

"In our series of Paramount-Artcraft Specials, in addition to Maurice Tournier's 'Sporting Life,' we have Thomas H. Ince's production of 'The False Faces,' starring Henry B. Walthall, and 'The Silver King,' with William Faversham, supported by Barbara Castleton, now awaiting release. The John Emerson-Anita Loos production, 'When the Boys Come Home,' has been started and we are planning six others for this great series to follow the pace set by 'The Huns Within' and 'Private Peat.'"

Heffron Directs Desmond in "Deuce Duncan"

Thomas N. Heffron, who has directed "The Painted Lily," "Madame Sphinx," and "Tony America," has just finished his first Western picture, "Deuce Duncan," presenting William Desmond as the star, and it will be released by Triangle for the week of Nov. 24. It was written with scenario by George Hively of Triangle's literary staff.

"Deuce Duncan" presents Desmond a wild and reckless cowboy who fears neither God, man nor the devil. But he yields to the appeal of a little woman who is being persecuted by an escaped convict. Her gentle personality and soothing influence awaken his arid and this wild bad man of the West is regenerated, as he turns his strength to good account, when in a man to man conflict he rescues the girl he loves from the villainy of her supposed brother. Then Ann is only too glad to permit Deuce to take her into his arms.

Big Poster Demand on "Kaiser's Finish"

One half of the total quantity of posters ordered by A. Warner for the entire United States and Canada on "Kaiser's Finish," has been requisitioned by the Emancip Film Company, 145 West forty-fifth Street, New York, to meet exhibitor demands in New York City, New York state and northern New Jersey, the territories they are booking on the production.

With this order as an indication of a greater demand than was anticipated in the forecasts by Mr. Warner and his associates, the quantity has been trebled not only on posters but for window cards, press sheets and cuts and mats.

The exhibitor requests for advertising material are taken to indicate that they are planning extensive local campaigns to tie up the production and its title with the timeliness of the events it pictures.
Patriotic Film Changes Its Title

William Fox Announces That "Why America Will Win" Becomes "Land of the Free" and Ready for Booking

"THE LAND OF THE FREE," a special production which not only shows the close of the Great War, but also, it is claimed, gives a vivid, moving epic of American heroism and sacrifice, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as having been completed and now ready for bookings.

This picture, including the epochal events that occurred up to and through the signing of the armistice, is described as showing one of extraordinary timeliness and authenticity, and affords exhibitors a unique opportunity to give their patrons a photodrama that pictures the closing chapters of the Allies’ and America’s triumph, including the capture of Sedan.

"The Land of the Free," it is stated, is based on "Why America Will Win," the William Fox photobiography of General John J. Pershing; but the revisions made in this picture have converted it into what is announced as the first picture that brings the war up to the minute.

With the announcement of these changes and additions, it is explained that in producing the original Pershing picture William Fox took care that it would be so arranged that important developments in the war situation could be satisfactorily met by revision of the film. Recognizing that the war was constantly changing conditions, and that the conflict might end at any moment, Mr. Fox prepared for any emergency. The result was that signing of the armistice found alterations already planned and new scenes prepared to bring the picture actually abreast of history.

"The Land of the Free," said an official of the Fox Film Corporation yesterday, "is another example of the policy of Service First which actuates everything planned by the William Fox organization. Many exhibitors had already contracted for "Why America Will Win" and were preparing to show it.

New "B. B. Features"

B. B. Features is a new Arizona Corporation of which Howard Hickman is president and J. L. Frothingham of New York is treasurer.

Bessie Barriscale is called "The Big Boss" of the concern, and the features are being produced at the Robert Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, under Mr. Brunton’s supervision.

Having a free hand in the selection of her vehicles, Miss Barriscale will go in for stories in lighter vein and her first offering under the B. B. Features banner will be a western comedy in which the star rollicks in cowboy regalia.

W. H. Hodgkinson Corporation will release all B. B. Features through Pathé.
Wright Aims to "Open" Mexico

Educational's Director to Lay Before Mexican Authorities Plan for Safeguarding American Film Rights

- Leaves Soon

G EORGE D. WRIGHT, having completed assembling for the Educational Films Corporation his "Mexican Topicals," expects to return to Mexico next month to put before the Administration the draft of a law for the proper protection of American film products in the South country.

The importance of this step may be gauged from the fact that hitherto Mexico has been the customer of European film houses almost exclusively or else of duping thieves who stole the American product.

Mr. Wright says: "The only American stars who are at all well known in Mexico are Charley Chaplin and Pearl White, the former as a film comedian of world-wide vogue and the latter because the French Pathé, of which the American Pathé is a branch, distributes her releases. On the other hand, the names and histories of leading French and Italian stars are known to all Mexican fans. The reputation of the American films in Mexico has been ruined by the practice of duping.

"Most of the dupes come from Central America and Cuba. They often arrive ahead of the buyer of the authorized rights and cut the ground from under his feet. A rich banker told me he could not understand why Geraldine Farrar in 'Joan the Woman' should be great in the United States and rotten in Mexico. Of course, the Mexican version was a dupe, and the result is that 'Americans' down there are considered inferior to any of the European makes. Poor, inaccurate Spanish titling gives them a further black eye.

"I have already sounded out President Carranza's government as to what can be done to stop the illicit traffic. That government is willing to consider an arrangement with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry whereby Mexican exchanges who buy from bona fide producers will be safeguarded. I have taken up this with representatives of the Association, and I hope to carry back with me to Mexico the draft of a law to abolish duping which shall be satisfactory to the Carranza government. If this can be done I predict for American features and shorter productions an era of unexampled prosperity in the southern republic."

Selig Polyscope Sells Mix Reissues

It was announced this week that Exclusive Features, Inc., of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has bought outright all negatives of the Tom Mix comedy dramas formerly owned by Selig Polyscope Company.

It is expected by Exclusive Features, Inc., that the two-reel productions to be regularly released will prove very popular among exhibitors and fans.

In an announcement this week Exclusive Features said: "Tom Mix is the last of those picturesque riders of the range who formerly were a sore necessity part of the atmosphere of the great West.

"Since civilization has reached out and set its hand on the open plains, the cowboy of tradition has gradually disappeared, or so changed his appearance that he is hardly recognized in the modern product of today. No longer is seen the picturesque chaps and the wide sombrero. No longer is it considered necessary to be able to outride the daring Arab or the famous Cosack in order to dry-nurse a herd of cattle. Instead the more workaday overall and the omnipresent flannel have usurped their place."

The Path To A Rich Market

Motion Picture exhibitors and operators do not only prize MOTION PICTURE NEWS for its valuable help in the practical solution of their many problems—they read its advertising columns for the same practical help in solving their buying problems.

Tell them about your goods through the medium which has their confidence—the one medium which is read by the exhibitor.
Your interests are protected by films wisely selected and Simplex projected.

The Screen is the Vital Spot of the House. It is what people pay their money to look at, and its attractiveness determines the number that come back for another look.

And there's no other way of making and keeping the Screen one-hundred-per-cent attractive than to employ the Simplex in the Projection Room.

The design of its Intermittent Movement, the excellence of the materials used, the lightness, large bearing surfaces and extreme accuracy of the intermittent parts, the manner of lubrication—these and other factors contribute to a permanent steadiness that leaves the wise Exhibitor no other choice.

YOU are a successful motion picture theatre owner. The grade of productions you exhibit, your theatre itself, and the progressive policies on which you are conducting it, are all sources of pride.

You are proud of having built up a patronage: yet, you realize that the things on which you pride yourself are absolute necessities to any successful theatre enterprise. You are therefore on the alert for any opportunity to further elevate the standard of your theatre. Now let us consider your projection.

Gain Knowledge

The following letter was sent in to Motion Picture News by one of the operators from the Province of Alberta, Canada, with the request that he be sent a copy of any of the transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers which are available. These have been sent.

We might state here that following each meeting of the Society, Motion Picture News publishes in its Projection Department the various papers which have been presented at the meeting for the benefit of the operators and theatre managers, all of whom can benefit greatly by carefully reading them.

The letter is as follows:

GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF ALBERTA
DEPARTMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY
OFFICE OF THE
CHIEF CENSOR MOVING PICTURES
EDMONTON.

Dear Sir:

In view of the present scarcity of competent projectionists, and of the necessity of filling vacancies with inexperienced men, the Alberta Censorship Board has deemed it advisable to classify all motion picture operators throughout the Province.

A new set of examination questions has been compiled which covers the most practical phase of the profession as it stands today. It is the aim of the Board of Censors to improve the standard of motion picture projection as much as possible, and to elevate the industry generally with a view to giving it the position before the public to which it rightly belongs.

It is realized, however, that the point from which this must begin is the operating room; and the deciding factor is the operator, or projectionist. You are, therefore, urged to improve your present knowledge of the work by a careful study of the latest findings and standards of the New York Society of Motion Picture Engineers, as well as kindred publications connected with the industry, and to prepare yourself for a classification examination in January, 1919.

Motion picture machine operators in the Province of Alberta will be classed as first, second or third; and those holding third class licenses will not be allowed to operate in cities.

Your obedient servant,

Ralph R. Kiefer, Esq.,
Alliance, Alta.

It will not be amiss to call attention of the entire trade to the fact that the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers contains detailed technical data which cannot be had from any other source, and that this data is of the utmost importance to every man interested or connected in any way with the problems which surround the proper projection of motion pictures.

Any one wishing the latest transactions may receive them by writing to Mr. A. S. Cory, Technical Editor of Motion Picture News, and send in with his letter 25 cents (which goes to the Society).

It is indeed pleasing to note the growing interest which is being shown in the activities of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. You may remember that this organization was started on July 24, 1916, at a meeting called in Washington, D. C., by C. Francis Jenkins.

Since that time it has grown till now have a membership of sixty active men from every line of endeavor which help Motion Pictures to prosper—Electrical—Optical—Mechanical and Theoretical—all working for a better, bigger, broader, healthier Motion Picture industry.

This letter merely points toward the fact that the work which is being done is appreciated. Here is an official of the Canadian Government sending out a letter to all operators and theatre men in his province telling them that they should obtain a copy of the transactions of the Society, in order that those who put the picture on the screen may prepare themselves to pass an examination and qualify as operators worthy of holding down responsible positions.

The classification of operators according to their ability to produce results and in accordance with their actual technical knowledge has been advocated strongly by Motion Picture News in the past. It is the only way in which we may hope to ever have a differentiation between the operator who deserves no more dignified title and the projectionist, as the real men in the line are so rightly called by Mr. Richardson.

Not only does the Society of Motion Picture Engineers aim to help these men improve their knowledge, but likewise does Motion Picture News through its Projection Department under Mr. Cory aim to assist all those men in our industry who wish to help themselves.

We are here to answer all the questions you can fire at us. Mr. Cory is at liberty to use all the space which is necessary in any issue of the News in answering your questions, therefore come in and flood us with inquiries. Your names and initials will be entirely eliminated in the News in answering your questions if you wish. Try to ask some practical question you think Mr. Cory can't answer. I would like to see you stick him.

E. K. Gillett.
The Conservation of Projection Apparatus

The war situation and activities of the past year have resulted in attention being directed to the conservation of resources in many directions, and in the motion picture industry the question of economy in electrical power and various accessory commodities has been investigated, with the result that numerous articles have been published on the subject.

In the field of motion picture projection great changes have occurred within the past two years, and it is a conservative statement that at least fifty per cent of the men engaged in projecting pictures two years ago are now with the colors or in some other branch in the industry. Information collected throughout the United States by Motion Picture News would, indeed, make it appear that even a higher percentage of former operators than that mentioned above are now following some other occupation.

It is reasonable, therefore, to infer that a high percentage of the projection mechanisms and accessory appliances throughout the country are now in the hands of new operators, and also that a large number of these newcomers in the field of motion picture projection are comparatively inexperienced in the manipulation and maintenance of projection apparatus, but it must be assumed, in justice to these men, that they are anxious to master projection in all its details, and that the majority of them will study hard to that end.

Under the circumstances it devolves upon the Projection Department to give sympathetic attention to the requirements of all elementary students of motion picture projection, and to bring before them suggestions and instructions covering the fundamentally important requirements for the successful projection of pictures and the maintenance of their apparatus, which requires us sometimes to retrace our steps, and to dwell upon matters which, while very elementary to experienced projectionists, and to our older readers, are entirely new to recently fledged operators.

While the conservation of electrical power and of cine film, as used in motion picture projection, has been dwelt upon at considerable length of late, there does not seem to have been much attention devoted to the care and conservation of projection machinery, in spite of the fact that the large number of inexperienced men now practicing as operators must require some preliminary advice and instruction in the proper care of such appliances.

In the engine-room of a factory or steamship, or in the dynamo-room of a power-house, the greatest care is exercised in keeping the ponderous machinery in perfect condition and immaculately clean, because it is well appreciated that the full efficiency and proper performance of the apparatus cannot be otherwise maintained. But in motion picture projection, where a delicate mechanism is employed containing adjustments of the order of one ten-thousandth of an inch in fineness, it seems to be the opinion of many operators, if they ever think of the matter at all, that the projector mechanism should continue to deliver first class screen results, and give no trouble in operation, in return for a complete lack of care and attention.

Thus it occurs that breakdowns occasionally interrupt a performance; screen results are in some instances miserable; and an excessive and unnecessary amount of money has constantly to be spent upon repair parts, whereas, none of these contingencies would arise if each operator gave five minutes of careful and intelligent attention to each of his projector mechanisms each day.

It has been found by the repair department of the Nicholas Power Company that as high as 90 per cent of the Cameragraph mechanisms turned in at their factory for repairs have been incapacitated for use by accumulations of dirt or by the failure of the operator to lubricate them properly; some mechanisms, in fact, not having been lubricated at all. The failure to clean the projector mechanism each day, including a thorough, over-all cleaning at least once each week, is not only on the part of the novices in motion picture projection, but some of the best known operators in large cities habitually allow their projectors to remain in a disgracefully dirty condition. On the other hand, there are, of course, theatres where great pride is taken in the projector installation, and where the operating-room and its appliances are maintained in immaculate condition at all times.

As it remains, however, a stubborn and indisputable fact that numerous operators and especially newcomers in this line of endeavor, are prone to neglect the proper daily care of the mechanism, we would like on the present occasion to lay all possible emphasis on the fact that a high-class, consistent performance, free from interruptions and annoying breakdowns, cannot be expected from a projector mechanism unless it is kept scrupulously clean and properly lubricated in all its running parts.

In the case of the motion picture projector mechanism the questions of cleanliness and lubrication are closely allied, since the manner in which the mechanism is lubricated, or oiled, has a direct influence upon the amount of dirt which will collect upon the mechanism when it is in operation.

As previously stated, many operators expect their projectors to consistently maintain a good performance without any attention or oiling at all, but when we have the other extreme—the operator who oils his projector as if it were a locomotive, and pours quarts of oil upon its defenseless head, where a few drops only are required.

The intermittent movement of a projecting mechanism consists of delicate and accurately constructed members, which operate at high velocity and perform a heavy laboring task, and this movement should therefore be provided with a never failing supply of lubricant. This is facilitated in every modern projector by enclosing the intermittent movement in a metal casing, which latter is intended to serve as an oil reservoir. Every user of a modern projecting mechanism should, therefore, see to it that a sufficient amount of suitable lubricant is at all times contained in the intermittent casing, to insure that the intermittent movement is always properly lubricated, and not running dry, as a dry and bound-up intermittent is a prolific cause of breakdowns in projector mechanisms, and is entirely chargeable to the negligence of the operator. A somewhat heavier oil is required by the intermittent movement that is desirable for the general oiling of a projector, and every maker of motion picture projection machines can supply a suitable lubricant for this purpose, or will be glad to advise any user of a machine as to what is a suitable grade of oil to use.

While the intermittent movement of a projector is provided with a reservoir for holding a quantity of lubricant, this is not the case with the other bearings of the mechanism, and the procedure of oiling the numerous other revolving members must, accordingly, be different from that followed in lubricating the intermittent. In going over a projector with the oil-can it is the common and indifferent practice of too many operators to supply each oil-hole with a copious flood of oil, whereas, most every bearing on a projection machine will function perfectly if supplied with just one or two drops of the proper grade of oil, applied at least once each day. When the lubricant is supplied in just the right quantity it is retained by the bearings and utilized in facilitating the easy operation of the rotating parts, but when the bearings and mechanism frame are flooded by injudicious use of the oil-can, the surplus oil runs down and spoils itself over the mechanism, and all of its component parts, and then becomes the resting place for countless particles of floating dust, as well as for myriads of chunks of dirt and fragments of celluloid thrown off by the film in its rapid passage through the projector.

In any case, all too frequently, the accumulated dirt and grit is permitted to accumulate upon the projector mechanism, and to remain thereon, the moving parts of the machine are of course subjected to its abrasive influence, and are soon worn out.
Equipment

the result being the failure of the machine to perform its work, and the necessity of costly repairs.

Though it is seen, for the above reasons, to be highly undesirable, to neglect lubricating a projecting machine, the cardinal mistake is neglect on the part of the operator to thoroughly clean the mechanism each day, because the grit and dirt collected by superfluous oil does more harm to the mechanism than the mere existence of the oil.

It frequently takes a factory mechanic more time to remove the grit and dirt from a mechanism sent in for repairs than it takes to actually execute the required repairs, and, in fact, the majority of mechanisms turned in to the repair shops are in a disgracefully dirty condition which is usually the origin and main cause of the trouble encountered in their operation. Indeed, the average operator can expect to combat troubles which could be entirely eliminated by a few minutes spent daily in oiling and cleaning, and it cannot be denied that a properly cared for mechanism presents a much neater appearance, and is far easier running, than one which receives this attention only occasionally, or perhaps not at all.

In the cleaning of projector mechanisms kerosene is a valuable ally of the operator, and in addition to his cans of proper lubricant for the intermittent and the mechanism in general, the operator should have handy a supply of kerosene and an oil-can for applying the same to the various bearings. By washing out the bearings at least once a week with kerosene, the life and smooth running of the mechanism is promoted, and there is no better way of cleaning up a badly fouled head than to remove the lenses and immerse the same in a pail full of kerosene, operating the mechanism to insure that the cleaning liquid penetrates to all bearings, and washing off the scum and dirt collecting in the parts of the mechanism and frame. After such treatment the mechanism should be wiped free from all surplus kerosene, inside and out, and then lubricated in the proper manner for use.

Such drastic methods will be seldom necessary, however, if the machine is properly (springly) oiled each day, and also given with a cloth to remove surplus oil and the inevitable daily accumulation of dust. When this is conscientiously done by the operator, no large accumulation of dirt and gummed up matter has any chance to accumulate, and hence the machine troubles due to these causes, which are the principal causes of projector trouble, are removed; the result being increased life of the machine, better screen results, and greatly lessened effort in the use of the projector.

Picture Moves Sideways

Mr. S. T. Stanley, Darlington, S. C., inquires: "When the picture moves from side to side on the screen and the sprocket is in good condition, the tension springs tight, and the rollers good, what causes this sideways movement of the picture on the screen?"

Febr. 24: The correspondent had given us further particulars as to the type of projector used, and the character of the side-wise movement of the picture on the screen, we could advise with more certainty as to the exact cause of the trouble.

The movement of the correspondent's picture from side to side on the screen is, however, very likely due to:

(1) Excessive end-play of intermittent sprocket, or:
(2) Swaying of the machine, due to same not being anchored firmly enough to floor of projection room.

To ascertain if excessive end-play exists in the intermittent sprocket, set the movement on lock and grasp the sprocket between thumb and forefinger. Then attempt to move the sprocket sideways, first to one side and then to the other. If the intermittent sprocket can be shifted sideways to any very noticeable extent it is evident that there is end-play, and that the sprocket can, therefore, shift back and forth laterally during the operation of the machine, thus causing a magnified sideways motion of the projected picture upon the screen.

Should end-play be found in the intermittent sprocket, this may be remedied in the manner directed by the makers of the projector (correspondent does not mention make of his machine, hence further particulars are not given); but in eliminating the end play from the intermittent spindle, or from any other spindle on a projector mechanism, the operation should not be carried to the extreme of removing all play and making the shoulders on the spindle bind against the bearings, as this would cause the machine to run hard, and might also result in undue wear of the parts in question.

Considering next the case when a projector is not firmly anchored to the floor of the projection room, or when the floor of the room is flimsy and liable to vibration, the projected picture will then sway on the screen in concert with any swaying or vibration of the projector, and by reason of the screen being a considerable distance away the movement at the screen will be much greater than it is at the projector.

In the case of a hand driven projector which is not properly secured to the floor, the machine will sway periodically with each turn of the crank, as may be readily noted by the projectionist. Whether this is the cause of the correspondent's trouble is merely a matter of conjecture, however, as he has neglected to state how his machine is driven.

An Opportunity

The attention of persons experienced in the motion picture supply business, who may be desirous of forming a new connection, with prospects of steady advancement, is directed to the advertisement of the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., of Atlanta, Ga., which appears in this issue.

Wants to Be Cameraman

Mr. R. C. Bell, Charleston, S. C., writes as follows: “I am twenty-five years old and have been operating movie machines for the past five years; at the same time I have studied the technical end of projection. What chance would I have if I went to the West Coast to take up the profession of cameraman? How shall I proceed after having arrived there? If it is practicable, could I set to work to locate from this point? If so, how?”

In reply: It is the ambition of many young projectionists to eventually become a cameraman, and we are glad to encourage this aim because a well-trained, experienced projectionist brings to the work of cinematography an appreciation of many fine points in connection with its requirements which are not possessed by some cameramen who have been recruited from the ranks of still photographers. Moreover, preliminary experience in projection gives the prospective cameraman a knowledge of cinematographic mechanisms, which are all fundamentally similar, and a familiarity with the physical characteristics of film.

In the case of the present correspondent, we think, however, that it would be a rash experiment for him to go to the West Coast prospecting for a cameraman’s position, without having first gained a fair mastery of cinematography. There are already more cameramen in California than there are berths to be filled, and in the event of the correspondent’s failure to connect with one of the producing organizations, he would probably find himself unable to fall back upon projecting as a means of support, on account of the thorough manner in which operators are organized in the large cities of the Golden States. As we do not, therefore, advise the correspondent to take the step he suggests, it is unnecessary to go into further detail on this phase of the matter, but we will point out in the best possible way the method of effecting the transition from projectionist to cameraman.

Although friendship has been the means of getting many a man his chance as assistant photographer in a studio, the majority of aspirants are not so fortunate, but the man who has mastered cinematography has a fighting chance with other cameramen in securing any position which may be open, his chances of connecting depending upon a certain extent upon his ability, which he will at once have to demonstrate in the event of his being hired.

We think, accordingly, that projectionists, still photographers, and all others anxious to become movie cameramen, will be promoting their desires in the most direct and effective fashion, by securing a cine camera and film and devoting their spare time to familiarizing themselves with the operation of the camera and the actual exposure of negative film. Cameras of moderate price may be obtained, and are suitable for this experimental work, while many a now successful cinematographer constructed his first camera with his own hands.

New Floodlighting Booklet

X-Ray Floodlighting is the name of a new booklet recently published by the National X-Ray Reflector Company of Chicago.

This booklet explains at some length the important part flood lighting is playing in the winning of the war. Protection lighting as well as outdoor lighting for light work is being especially well cared for by the X-Ray projectors.

Several new silver mirrored reflectors for projectors and three new X-Ray projectors are featured in this bulletin. These additions make the X-Ray line of flood lighting units extremely comprehensive.

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive Motion Picture Film

[Latest instructions issued by the Eastman Kodak Co.]

IN the production of motion picture film it is becoming more common to vary the color of the film either by tinting or toning or by a combination of the two processes. Toning consists in either wholly or partially replacing the silver image of the positive film by some colored compound, the clear portions or highlights of the image, consisting of plain gelatine, remaining unaffected and colorless. Tinting, on the other hand, consists of immersing the film in a solution of dye which colors the gelatine itself, causing the whole picture on the screen to have a veil of color over it.

PART I—TINTING

In "tinting" the following factors must be taken into consideration:

Nature of the Dye Employed

Dyes are chemically of two different types, acid and basic; so-called acid dyes are the alkali salts of organic acids, while the basic dyes are the chlorides, sulfates, etc., of organic bases.

For the tinting of film only "acid" dyes have been considered since it is not possible to make a complete selection from basic dyes alone, which would necessitate the use of acid and basic dyes in admixture—a procedure highly undesirable and in many cases impossible.

Any dye suitable for admixture with others to produce intermediate tints should possess the following properties:

A. The dye should be inert and not attack the gelatine or support. This is of fundamental importance as the gelatine coating of dyed film in many cases has a tendency to lose its flexibility, giving rise to what is known in the trade as "brittleness."

Several dyes when employed at a concentration of 1% attack gelatine readily at 70 degrees F. and vigorously at 80 degrees F., especially in presence of small amounts of acetic acid and acrolein, producing a marked softening and often partial dissolution of the film. The effect is roughly proportional to the concentration of the dye and to the temperature, and varies with each individual dye.

Experience has shown that the gelatine coating of film which has been softened in this way by the dye becomes "brittle" on subsequent projection.

The actual factors in the production of brittleness are:

1. The hydrolysing action of acid which in many cases is added to assist dyeing. In case a solid acid is employed the heat encountered during projection will greatly accelerate this hydrolysis.

2. The corrosive action of the dye itself. Dyes vary considerably in this respect according to their particular composition. So far, it has not been possible to make any general classification of dyes in this connection, although nitro compounds appear to be particularly corrosive in theme.

3. The presence of impurities in the dye. These take the form of excessive amounts of loading material such as sodium sulphate or chloride, or small traces of iron, the latter having a tendency to harden the film considerably.

In all the above cases, the physical nature of the gelatine is altered, whereby it loses its property of remaining resilient under normal conditions of temperature and humidity, resulting in "brittleness."

A suitable test as to whether a dye has any propensity to produce brittleness is to incubate a sample of film, half of which has been dyed, for about 48 hours at 212 degrees F. If any difference in brittleness is noticeable between the dyed and undyed portions so treated after the film has been allowed to stand in the air for some time, the dye is unsuitable for tinting.

Apart from the above, most dyes when used at a concentration of 1% and at 80 degrees F. produce more or less softening of the gelatine, which may be prevented by:

(a) Use of only dilute solutions. Except in very special cases, a dye solution stronger than 0.5% is seldom required, the usual strength employed being about 0.2%, at which concentration softening is unusual.

(b) Use of a minimum amount of volatile acid in the dye-bath or omission of the same whenever possible.

(c) By working at temperatures not higher than 70 degrees F.

(d) By slight hardening of the film before dyeing and subsequent softening by glycerine, as described below:

The dye should not "bleed" to any considerable extent when the film is washed; in other words, the rate of removal of the dye should be slow and only a slight amount should wash out in a period of, say, five minutes.

In tinting, bleaching is of very considerable importance, since, during the periods between loading after dyeing and the placing of the film on the drying rack, any drops of water on the surface of the film become more or less saturated with dye, and these after drying remain as spots and irregular markings which are very apparent on the screen.

It is possible in some cases to modify this bleeding by an acid "stop bath," or by adding acid to the dye-bath; though it may be considered a general rule that the bleeding of a dye is a property peculiar to itself. In making a selection of dyes therefore, it is necessary to choose only those whose propensity for bleeding is a minimum.

C. The rate of dying should be only slightly affected by the addition of acid to the dye-bath, although most acid dyes are more or less sensitive to acid.

In case the rate of dyeing is appreciably affected by the addition of acid it is possible to take advantage of this fact since a much weaker dye solution may be employed to obtain a given tint, while an apparently exhausted bath may be revived by adding a small trace of acid.

Only a volatile acid such as acetic acid should be used since this will evaporate on drying, while the strength of the acid in the dye-bath should not exceed 0.05% or one part in 2,000, otherwise softening of the gelatine is liable to occur, especially if the temperature exceeds 70° F.

In the case of a bath containing a mixture of dyes, owing to the fact that acid affects some dyes more than others, as the dye-bath becomes exhausted and the acid content changes, the tint obtained will gradually change also. It is only possible therefore to use acid with any degree of certainty in the case of dye-baths containing a single dye.

D. The dyes should not fade on exposure to heat or light and should not be "dichroic" or change color on dilution.

Moreover, the wear and tear of the film should not be impaired in any way after dyeing, and even after incubating for 48 hours at 212 degrees F., afterwards allowing the film to humidify; no difference should be discernible between dyed and undyed film so treated.

E. The dye should not be affected by the acid fixing bath, since any fixing solution accidentally splashed thereon would destroy the dye immediately.

In view of the large number of tints required in commercial work, it is undesirable to keep a separate dye-powder for the preparation of each particular bath, but rather to prepare the same by admixture of three or more dyes. If three only are employed, mixing must be conducted with great precision in order to produce any given tint, but this difficulty is removed by the use of intermediate colors.

The following six standard dyes have been chosen as fulfilling

These dyes are obtainable from the National Anilin & Chemical Co., Inc., New York City.

The strength of the dyes may vary slightly from batch to batch, but this variation is usually so small as not to materially affect the nature of the tint obtained from any particular formula.

The Cine Blue dye appears much redder by artificial light than by daylight, especially before drying the film, as do all tints containing Cine Blue.

The following formulas are given merely for guidance and should be altered to suit individual requirements.

When matching any color view only by artificial light.

Method of Mixing

Dissolve the solid dyes in as small an amount of hot water as possible, and filter through fine muslin. Pour hot water over any residue remaining, which should only be slight, in order to ensure thorough solution of the dye, and dilute the solution in the tank to the required volume at 65 degrees F.

Nature of Positive Film

Only good, snappy positive film may be successfully tinted, since tinting tends to reduce contrast.

The depth of the tint obtained depends on the following factors:

Nature and Strength of the Dye-bath

Except in special cases such as fire scenes, sunset and moonlight effects, and the like, it is very undesirable to employ strong tints, since apart from the displeasing effects and irritation to the eye, the dyes produce a slight softening of the gelatine film when used at 80 degrees F. in 1% solution. Should it be necessary to employ concentrated baths in summer, either cool the dye-bath or use a suitable hardener. This will be unnecessary if hardener is employed in the fixing bath after development, but otherwise if formalin (40%) be added to the dye-bath to the extent of 1 volume to 400 volumes of dye solution, no trouble will be encountered. During the winter months, when it is advisable to treat all film after developing and fixing, with glycerine, the latter may be incorporated with the dye-bath, thereby eliminating an extra operation. The strength of the glycerine should be 2%, or two volumes per one hundred volumes of dye solution. In most cases, however, the addition of glycerine considerably retards the rate of dyeing, so that in order to obtain the same degree of tinting within a period of ten minutes, the concentration of the dye-bath should be increased accordingly.

When delicate tints are employed, the effect is both to remove the contrasty black and white effect, and to add a touch of warmth to the black deposit of silver, even in cases where the highlights are insufficiently stained to be noticeable. The result in many cases is equal to that obtained by partial toning, for example, tint No. 11 gives the effect of a blue-black tone.

Temperature of Dye-bath

Although temperature has little effect on the rate of dyeing with the dyes recommended, when used without the addition of acid it is advisable in all cases to work at 65 to 70 degrees F. in order to produce uniform results and remove any danger of softening the film.

Time of Dyeing

In order to duplicate any particular tint with a given dye-bath the film may be dyed either by time or by inspection. Dyeing by time is reliable if the dye-bath does not contain acid, though if acid is present, in time the acidity decreases, causing a slowing down of the rate of dyeing so that it becomes necessary to judge the progress of dyeing by inspection.

If two or more tints of the same color are required, in order to reduce the number of individual dye-baths to a minimum, it is better to vary the time of dyeing rather than to vary the dilution of the bath, providing the time of dyeing for the lighter tint is not less than one minute, which time is considered a minimum for the production of uniform results and for complete control of the dyeing operations.

The time of dyeing also depends somewhat on the previous handling of the film. Film which has been fixed in a bath containing ordinary, or chrome, alum dyes more quickly than that treated with plain hypo and hardened with formalin.

It is probable, therefore, that small traces of alum are left in the film even after prolonged washing, which serve as a mordant for the dye.

Should the film for any reason be over-dyed, a small portion of the dye may be removed by washing for 10 to 15 minutes, though the nature of the dyes will permit only slight mistakes to be rectified in this manner.

Life of the Dye-baths

This averages about 40,000 feet per 50 gallons of dye-bath. The baths may be revived at intervals by the addition of more dye, though this procedure is uncertain and it is generally advisable to mix fresh solution.

The addition of a trace of acetic acid (1 part in 1000) will revive an apparently exhausted bath, though, as stated above, it is only advisable to do this in the case of baths containing a single dye.

Method of Procedure

Either the "drum" or "rack" method may be employed, and in either case after dyeing for ten minutes (during which time the drum or rack should be agitated to ensure even dyeing and prevent accumulation of air bubbles) the film should be given a thorough rinse in plain water.

Before drying films on racks it is advisable to set the rack at a slight angle for a few minutes, to enable the surplus water to drain off more readily through the perforations. If drums are used for drying it is advisable to remove the surplus water by whirling the drum previous to drying.

If uniform results are to be obtained, film should never be passed through the projector before either tinting or toning.

How to Obtain Intermediate Tints

The twelve tints above are given merely as examples; other tints may be readily obtained by making a trial with a small amount of solution on a short length of film, taking care to match the tint in artificial light and not by daylight, since any dye containing Cine Blue appears redder by artificial light than by daylight.

When matching think of the tint as being made up of one or more of the colors, red, yellow, and blue. Colors such as orange are made by mixing yellow and red, violet by mixing red and blue, and green by mixing yellow and blue. Browns are obtained by mixing all three colors, red, yellow, and blue.

When comparing any two particular tints, it is usual to say that one is redder, yellower or bluer than the other, and the two may therefore be matched accordingly.

Choice of Tint

Almost any tint, if delicate, may be employed with advantage, though for general use those ranging through pink, rose, orange, yellow, pale green and pale blue are to be recommended; others are for special purposes.

It is always desirable to obtain harmony in color, especially when combining tinting with toning, so that the combination is pleasing to the normal eye.

For local tinting and hand coloring, the above dyes are likewise satisfactory.

TROUBLES IN TINTING

Streaks and Uneven Coloring

Cause:
b. Slight bleeding and insufficient squeegeeing when on the drying rack. Always carefully remove any surface moisture from the film with a damp chamois before drying.

Importance of the Organ in Motion Picture Theatres

I HAVE said this and will repeat it that a successful musical interpretation is as necessary to a picture as good projection, and this cannot be denied. I also reiterate that music is the only means of providing suitable atmosphere and of enlivening the mute action of the motion drama with life. I would again emphasize that music means to the silent drama what the spoken word means to the legitimate stage.

Now that music for the film is an established factor, we will now deal with a phase of the matter which will enhance the musical interpretation of the screen. There is no question that the organ employed as a lone instrument is just as indispensable as an accompaniment to the orchestra. The lone organist is only a single person, an individual, and yet he has at his instant command the resources of a wonderful instrument with a great variety of stops and the true tones of every conceivable instrument employed in Ghosts. He can set a moment's scene: sorrow, joy, tense dramatic emotion, agitation or any phase of emotion displayed by the characters on the screen.

As an orchestral accompaniment, I believe that there is no other instrument which can support the orchestra in a more artistic and effective manner than an organ. One of the main reasons why the organ is better than the piano as an accompaniment to the orchestra is that the organ has the power of sustaining tone indefinitely and is equipped with the so-called damper used for binding tones together and for furnishing harmonic background.

It is most natural that an organist playing with an orchestra must use discretion and common sense and must be extremely careful not to allow the tremendous volume of the organ to drown the orchestra. In most cases, organists are using the bass too loud and heavy. At times this will not be noticed by the player or even the leader, but a heavily predominating bass can easily be heard in the back of the theatre and hence an effective, well-rendered selection will be spoiled by the organist being careless in this respect. Many of the publishers are now including harmonic and organ parts with orchestrations, and the organists playing with orchestra should therefore not experience great difficulty in following the orchestrations correctly.

Organ accompaniment for the orchestra demands more accuracy and more musical skill than any other instrument for the reason that the organ is situated so that it is not easily heard by the organist. Therefore, his technique must be clean and his harmony perfect, for unlike other instruments, the organ depends entirely upon sense of touch instead of sound. Inexperienced organists are sometimes inclined to play piano parts as written including variations and the parts of other instruments or to express my opinion a little better, they are striving to be the whole show. The fact of the matter is, as previously mentioned, it takes good judgment and great care to correctly accompany an orchestra with the organ.

I have had the occasion at various times to observe organists at their work and in nearly every instance I have come to the conclusion that when exhibitors condemn their organ as a surplus, unnecessary instrument, it was in every case, the organists who created such an opinion. I therefore earnestly suggest that every exhibitor who has an organ irrespective of what the purpose, whether he employs it as a solo instrument or as an accompaniment to an orchestra, to see to it that the man manipulating it is capable of handling the instrument perfectly.

An organist who is a real master of the keyboard is master of every situation portrayed on the screen. He is the living interpreter of every shade of emotion registered by the silent players. He can express the sorrow of the life stories enacted through heart-rending melodies of the organ's great voice, or he can add life to a comedy film with an accompaniment which puts a spirit into the fun making of the screen comedians.

I hope that the above will sufficiently prove that the organ in the motion picture theatre is the best investment and one of the greatest assets to the exhibitor.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"There's a Light in Your Eyes."—There's Life in the Old Dog Yet.—Some Day Waiting Will End."—The three song hits from Klaw & Erlanger's phenomenal Broadway Success, "The Girl Behind the Gun." Music by Ivan Caryll. (Chappell's, 41 E. 34th Street, New York.)

2—"If You Hear Them Calling Clancy, He's My Boy."—The new patriotic song hit. A natural overnight song hit! The title alone spells success. Now is the time to play it. A record smashing New York hit. (Chas. K. Harris, Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York.)

4—"Hindustan," fox trot. It's exactly what I predicted—a sensational hit on both coasts. There isn't a better fox trot published and you'll say so, too, once you play it. (Forster Music Pub. Inc.)

5—"We're Bound to Win With Boys Like You."—Great one step. On the reverse side you will find the "jazziest," of all "jazz" fox trots. "Face Jam Making Time."—The whole world will tell you it's a "peach" of a peach this great double number for band or orchestra. (Kendis, Brockman Music Co., 145 W. 45th St., New York.)

6—"Bleeding Hearts." Musical geniuses are never judged by their brilliant works, but always by the simple, beautiful melody handed down to posterity. For example, Schuman's "Traumerie," Rubenstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" and later works such as "Hearts and Flowers" which of course all musicians know is really Czibulka's "Love and Roses." Mr. Sol. P. Levy, a musician of ability and reputation, has just finished a composition which those musicians who have tried it in manuscript form believe will be a future "Traumerie" or "Hearts and Flowers." The title of this composition is "Bleeding Hearts," a floral poem, and it is one of the simple, broad, beautiful melodies which however frequently repeated, seems to fascinate and charm the listening ear more and more. (Belwin, Inc.)

7—"Geo. M. Cohan's Historical Medley."—One step. Here's combination which always makes a big hit with the dances. Geo. M. Cohan's three favorites in a medley one step. The numbers which are really characteristic of our own Geo. M., full of Geo. M. Cohan "Yankee" pep. It introduces "Yankee Doodle Boy," "So Long Mary" and "Stand Up and Fight Like Hell." (Richmond, 147 W. 45th St., New York.)

"Comedy Allegro." It is oft times said that "a rose by any other name smells just as sweet," but a Comedy Allegro by any other name would not imply what is meant by this term. If our readers had been in the Strand Theatre and seen the presentation of Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, "Shoulder Arms," in the scene where he was chasing the Huns, and had heard the Symphony Orchestra playing "Comedy Allegro," they would then have realized that correct music for the film can and does interpret the actions depicted on the screen. Tinting and Toning of Film

Sludge in the Dye-bath
This is due to the precipitation of the dye by small traces of alum or iron in the water supply. In many localities water is purified by adding alum, but only the smallest trace need be present to throw some of the dye out of solution.

Frothing of the Dye-bath
This occurs only when tinting on the drum with Cine Scarlet, Cine Orange, and Cine Green, but no inconvenience will be caused if the drum is revolved slowly.

Elgin Theatres Raise Admission Prices

meet increased cost of operation, for the first time since the beginning of war, managers of the Temple and Star theatres, Elgin, have raised admission prices.
Excepting the required additional war tax of one cent, the two houses have been charging 11 and 6 cents. They have increased to 15 and 7 cents for evening shows, keeping the same matinee prices.
Several weeks ago the Grand adopted a fixed afternoon and evening price of 15 and 17 cents. When the two other houses raised their prices, the Grand came up again to 17 and 20 cents for all shows.
The Orpheum retains its past prices, 11 and 6 cents.
The Temple reports an increased patronage since the “ flu ” closing, despite the price raising.
Manager Crocker of the Star states that while

He argues that, could there be great danger of the spread of influenza in crowds, Elgin’s two wild peace orgies would have brought unlimited spread of the disease. As it is, the most severe cases and the greatest spread has been in rural districts, far from the theatres and crowds.

“FAN FAN” — FOX EXTRAVAGANZA

Artistry Is Chief Asset, But Film Claims Little More

The chief asset of this contribution is artistry. As a rule, in portraying Chinese atmosphere, most of the directors have shown great aptitude towards that end, especially when climate and natural scenery, such as California is blessed with, are at their disposal.

Outside of artistry, however, there is little else that would commend it to a critical audience.

The plot of the story resembles greatly that of the opera “Mikado.” In fact, some of the situations are identical. The hero’s attempt to hang himself to a tree, for instance; the appointment of the villain as chief executioner by the Emperor; the decision of the Emperor to have him executed for his failure to find some one to behead; his pardon at the last minute, for consenting to marry the Emperor’s ugly daughter, etc.

Barring the role of the Emperor, all other prominent parts are played by juveniles.

The picture is clear, but will hardly have universal appeal.—Released Nov. 17.—Length, 5 reels.

—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Fan Fan..........................Virginia Lee Corbin
The Ancient and Honorable Lady Shoo.......................Carmen DeRue
The Chief Executioner...............Violet Radcliffe
Head Collector........................................Bud Messenger
The Emperor..............................................Joe Singleton Scenario by Bernard McConville.

THE STORY

Hanki Fan, Prince of old Japan, looks up into the face of little Fan Fan, lovely as any cherry blossom. He forgets that his honorable name has decreed that he marry the Ancient and Honorable Lady Shoo— forgets all save fair Fan Fan. Desiring his high station he seeks Fan Fan in disguise, but her father on his death bed has prescribed her marriage to the Chief Executioner with her bride.

Nothing loath, Fan Fan elopes with Hanki Fan and, confronted with necessity, they obtain employment at Winter Tea Garden entertainers. Misfortune overtakes them and they are discovered by both Lady Shoo and the Executioner.

Fan Fan is dragged off to duration vile and Hanki Fan is relentlessly pursued by his intended bride.

The Executioner must furnish a star performer for an execution that is scheduled for that day, and he selects Hanki Fan for the job. Royal father arrives in time, however, to postpone the performance and the Executioner is given the choice between his own sword and the Lady Shoo as a bride.

Hanki Fan and the two brides are made happy through the peculiar administration of law in the Ancient Land of the Rising Sun—law which royalty was wont to apply, if not to invent, to suit the royal purpose of the moment.

AD TALK

The management of the theatre will present on each of the week the Fox extravaganza entitled “Fan Fan.” This is a fantasy of old Japan and is enacted by the Fox child players who appeared with such a signal success in “Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp,” “Jack and the Beanstalk” “Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp” and “The Babes in the Woods.”

Headed by Francis Carpenter, Virginia Lee Corbin, Carmen DeRue and Violet Radcliffe, these little players perform the principal roles of the old legend with a charm that is not to be denied.

“Fan Fan,” made into a scenario by Bernard McConville and produced by the Franklins, is a lavish production from first to last. The sets made to represent the Japan of old form background of the finest atmosphere for the actions of the little people who portray the principal roles. This collection of children, is, without doubt, the brightest group that ever faced a battery of motion picture cameras. Golden-haired Baby Carpenter is one of those kiddies that will cause the feminine portion of any audience to exclaim “oh” and “ah” whenever he appears. In “Fan Fan,” however, his golden curls are well covered up with a silkier black wig. But Mr. Carpenter is still his same little self.

The story of “Fan Fan” has to do with the romance of Fan Fan and Hanki Fan, the two youngsters, each ordained by their elders to marry others whom they do not love. After many wonderful adventures, two little people are united and receive the blessings of the selfsame elders who previously had striven to keep them apart.

CATCH LINES

Enacted by the same cast of little people who appeared with such signal success in “Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp,” “Jack and the Beanstalk” and “The Babes in the Woods.”

A fantasy of old Japan, laid in the richest of settings and played by a cast headed by those adorable little folk, Francis Carpenter, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe and Carmen DeRue.

An amazing extravaganza—something new in motion pictures—see the wonderful scenes laid in old Japan and the thrilling romance played by the leads of “Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp.”

There are extravaganzas of the stage, “The Winter Garden” and “The Folies” shows. Here is an extravaganza of the films, more wonderful, more gorgeous, more pretentious than any stage production could ever hope to be. See “Fan Fan” and be convinced.

ADVERTISING AIDS

ADVERTISING CUTS—Fox publicity department has supplied some attractive art cuts for this production, all of which serve to bring out the Japanese atmosphere contained in the picture. In three-column size there is one containing girl holding a fan over part of her face (in the accepted Japanese style) on which appears the title in characters resembling Japanese writing. Space for announcement is left in mortise below. A circular art cut (two-column size) is dressed in similar display type while there is a novelty one-column cut.

TEXT CUTS—Six two-column; four one-column. All cuts contain interesting scenes from production with the child players prominently displayed in the majority of them.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course there is the usual opportunity to play this as a children’s matinee attraction. But the aim of the producers is not to cater to this particular “class” audience but to make its appeal universal. To let the people know that you have something different to offer, it would be well to decorate your lobby if you plan playing the picture for any length of time. As a rule lobby decorations, that is, appropriate decorations, are rather hard to find. A domestic drama offers little material with which to work. But with the cast of “Fan Fan,” you have something different and something that immediately suggests an attractive display. Your decorations are, of course, anything Japanese. Lanterns in front of the house would be attractive and any Japanese banners for the lobby would be appropriate. There are a variety of other ways to bring out the proper atmosphere, all quite obvious to the exhibitor. Such things as rickshaw and dressing the ushers up entice expense and should not be turned to unless the feature is due for a long run.

"FAN FAN"

WILLIAM FOX PRODUCTION

All cuts on this production, both Advertising and Text, Bring Out the Japanese Atmosphere of the Story to a Marked Degree. There are a Number of Cuts Producible in which the Child Players are Shown as the Various Characters They Portray. These are Unusually Good from All Standpoints and Should Be Utilized if the Exhibitor Aims to Get the Full Worth of the Picture
"EYE FOR EYE"—NAZIMOVA PRODUCTION

Metro Subject Has Many Good Advertising Aids

Posters that instantly attract the passers-by and hold their attention undividedly. Unusual care is said to have been taken in preparing this line of paper on "Eye for Eye," in view of the worth of the production and the star. Here are three and six sheets.

Above is a twenty-four-sheet stand on "Eye for Eye" that stands out much more prominently than it would appear from this cut. Nazimova, the star, is pictured at the left, and the star's name and title of the production are played up across nearly the whole of the board. This stand is depended upon by Metro to give much aid to the exhibitor, accountable mainly through the box-office.

Here's One Ace High for Artistry; Nazimova Good

IN "Eye for Eye," you again come upon a production whose artistic merits stand high. These merits are so distinct that no one will fail to recognize them at a glance; but the story is untimely; consequently, not what the majority of pleasure seekers want; it has so proved in the past, by the continued failure of this sort of subjects. In this case, however, the star will draw.

It is evident, in this picture, that the artistic effects have been considered of supreme importance. At the same time, of the other entertaining elements, some have been entirely disregarded, while others, given a subordinate position.

To use an illustration: In the written or spoken word, poetry is divine; it is the surest means of reaching the emotion; but the number of those who understand and appreciate poetry, when compared to the opposing number, indeed is small; since pictures are made with the express purpose of reaching, if possible, all pleasure seekers; since chiefly commercial success, not art, lies underneath all picture production, it stands to reason, then, that it is unwise to disregard or subjugate such elements as are necessary to help make a picture entertaining to the great majority.

The story is based on the book L'Occident, by Henry Kistemaecker. The hero is a captain of a French battleship; the heroine, the daughter of a tribe chief; the place, Tangier and the deserts in Morocco.

Above all other factors, one stands out—the acting of Madame Nazimova. Possessing agility, graceful flexibility of body, personal magnetism and the all important ability to express all emotions, she is, without the least doubt, an artist.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE STORY

The Comte de Cadierre, Captain of the French battleship Fraternité, is aiding the authorities in spreading the tribes of Morocco when he is captured by a band of Arabs and sentenced to die. Hassouna, the Sheikh's daughter, falling in love with him at first sight, aids him in his escape during the night. For this she is driven out of the desert by her tribe and later is made captive by a band of hostile natives. They take her to the slave mart at Tangier, where she is sold to Rambert, proprietor of a French circus. Cadierre attends the circus with his wife Helene, who has been unfaithful to him. The feature of the circus is Hassouna, now a dancer. When she sees Cadierre she swoons. Cadierre takes the girl into his home. Later she discovers the disloyalty of Cadierre's wife. To get rid of her, Helene accuses Hassouna of an attempt to kill her husband. She is sent to a convent but shortly makes her escape. Returning to Cadierre, she discovers that Helene has eloped with her lover. She conspires with him. Enraged Arnault, Cadierre's son, as yet unaware of the stainless name she bears, arrives. And then comes Taieb, of Hassouna's old tribe, to tell her of the death of her mother and little sister through the meddling of the "Christian dogs." Infuriated, she strives to kill Cadierre, but something within her holds her back. When he goes to look after his dying wife, now deserted by the false lover, Hassouna swoons. Cadierre recovers and strike Cadierre through him. He is near public disgrace when Cadierre accuses Hassouna of his wife's death and informs Hassouna that she is mistaken regarding her father's death. And so the two are happy in their love.

AD TALK

"Oh, East is East and West is West
And never the twain shall meet
Till earth and sky stand presently
At God's great judgment seat.

So sang Ripling in one of his poems of India, and that there is truth in the statement there is no denying. But there are exceptions to every rule, no matter how bound it be by conventions of race and section, and in "Eye for Eye," the special production which will be revealed at the theatre on Friday, one of those exceptions is set down in startling and vivid scenes.

First of all it is to be noted that Mme. Nazimova is seen as the star in this production. From the very first picture this actress made, "War Brides," a brilliant career on the screen was predicted for her, and the prophets of the trade and press who doth on her praises then have had no cause to regret their enthusiasm. Mme. Nazimova's wonderful self was means in it might seem, specially for the screen. And certainly in "Eye for Eye," in which she essays the role of an Arab girl, Hassouna, she surpasses all former performances.

The story of "Eye for Eye" was based on Henry Kistemaeckers' drama entitled "L'Oc- cident," and tells the story of Hassouna, the Captain de Cadierre of the French battleship Fraternite. It is filled with color, life; it is situations that were created by a skilled dramatist. The story is unfolded on the screen with compelling force. There are Charles Bryant, Donald Gallagher, Sally Crute and E. L. Fernandez, who add to the merit of the production by skillful playing in supporting parts.

BIG HOUSES

HERE is a chance to arrange most impressive settings, stage, musical and incidental.

A man to recite Ripling's poem, the inspiration of this play, while you show a stage setting typical of some portion of the far east and dimly illuminated.

A dancer to perform the dance of the veils also before some similar lighting.

Either or both of these acts will help a long way toward creating the proper atmosphere for the picture.

Audiences will be put in the right frame of mind!
"THE ONE WOMAN"—SELECT

Production Is Excellent; Entertainment Depends on Politics

FROM a production angle, "The One Woman" is excellent, as it has been handled well. From an entertaining, the satisfaction it will give depends on the political views of the individual.

The subject is strongly anti-Socialistic. It will divide people into two distinct factions: those who oppose Socialism, will enjoy it; those who favor it, will be highly offended by it.

As this is a SECTARIAN subject, however, and as it is within our province—our duty—to help you determine whether a certain picture would or would not suit your particular audience by explaining the most important points, we may impartially say this much about it: that the picture condemns Socialism simply by building its arguments on individual passages taken from Socialistic literature.

The non-Socialist, in all probabilities, will offer no objection to this procedure. The Socialist, on the other hand, may advance this reasoning: that Socialism is not a creed; nor a belief; nor a party; nor is based on the savings of a book, or the acts and sayings of any one individual—it is a philosophy; and as such, it should be praised or condemned as a whole, because only so it can be understood. Besides, although it condemns, it offers no means of defence; it presents, therefore, a one-sided argument; to him, then, such a procedure will appear unfair and not becoming free peoples. Clemenceau, he will point, and Vivian, and many other high French personalities, are Socialists. So is our own Charles Edward Russell. New Zealand has had a Socialistic form of government for a long time; but their homes are models. —Length, 5260 feet. —P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK
Are you a Socialist? Are you a Democrat? A Republican? No matter. Whatever your political affiliations and feelings may be you will be interested in the picture which the management of the ——will present on ——week for an extended run. This picture is entitled "The One Woman" and was written by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Dixon, to let you in the secret, has a real flair for his work. Do you think the cast is up to its work? Well, we will have to err on the side of generosity. You will be surprised at the acting. Come and see for yourself.

THE STORY
Frank Gordon, a brilliant young clergyman, becomes imbued with the spirit of Socialism, until finally the members of his church take steps to have him resign. Gordon refuses to give up his new career and in a final speech from the pulpit of his church he calls for aid in building the proposed "temple of man," Gordon's wife is heartbroken, as she sees in his actions the influence of Kate Ransom, a beautiful woman, whose wealth and sympathy gradually win Gordon away from his God and home. At last Gordon divorces his wife and enters into a common-law agreement with Kate Ransom.

His former wife still struggles along with the hope that some day Gordon will return to her. Finally his colleagues take steps to vote against the government's order for conscription. Gordon refuses to enter into their plan, and as a result he is voted out of his own temple. Despondent and broken-hearted, Gordon goes home, to find that his common-law wife has become the mistress of another man. Gordon, in a furious fight, manages to kill the man with his own hands. He is found guilty of murder and sentenced to prison for life, but his former wife comes to his rescue and pleads for his pardon.

SUGGESTIONS
Inasmuch as Socialism is growing day by day and inasmuch as Thomas Dixon attacks it roundly in "The One Woman," you should be able to get a lot of advertising out of this picture and advertising that is different. If you are acquainted with Socialists you might get one of them to write a scathing and denouncing letter to a newspaper while you are showing "The One Woman." It will certainly bring replies in favor of your picture and there you will have a storm of public opinion centering around your picture. You might even run a slide inviting (Continued on page 32732)
"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

Government Picture Shows Improvement Over Former Ones

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS" is the third film released by the Committee on Public Information. The picture is a vast improvement over the previous releases, both in regards to photography and subject matter. Some of the scenes are really marvelous. One can't help wonder at the courage and disregard for danger of the cameramen. At times it is apparent that the cameras have been set up in the battlefields during the thick of the fight.

The need for stimulating our will to victory not existing now, due to the ending of the war, the films have been titled and edited with a new, but none the less interesting, object in view, to present a summary of the most notable events as concern ourselves and our Allies since our entry into the war. A few of such episodes are: an attack on American transports by German submarines; the battle of Chateau Thierry; with Field Marshal Haig on the British front; the battle of St. Mithiel; review of American troops by General Pershing and other officers, etc. Worthy of special mention is the fight on the Piave; the scenes taken there are very exciting as they are photographically clear and taken from vantage points.

Not being fiction, this recapitulation of the most prominent points of the war since our entry should prove interesting to the matter of past history.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK
The third official war film released by the Committee on Public Information, entitled "Under Four Flags," on the eve of Armistice day week. The process of filming, editing, and assembling, "Under Four Flags" was started by the committee previous to the signing of the armistice between the Allies and the Central Nations, but when the news of peace was flashed throughout the world, the picture was altered in some few respects, its titles were rewritten and as a result the picture now stands as a historical narrative of the war since Foch was made commander-in-chief of the Allied forces until the end.

To say that the film is inspiring, considering it from the angle of the wonderful work done by the Allied armies and, more recently, by our own boys, is putting the case in mild terms. To watch the victors of Chateau Thierry and St. Mithiel, our own American troops, to see the dashing Italians in their last great drive across the Piave, to see the activities of the French and the British, the armies of nations that have borne the severest brunt of all when it comes to figuring in loss of men, to see this all and interfingering with it the daily routine of the soldier "over there," so interesting to the civilian, is to obtain one of the few real treats of the day.

The films have been intelligently assembled and titled by none other than Kenneth C. Beaton, whom most of our patrons doubtless recall under the abbreviated title of "K. C. B." Mr. Beaton has furnished some excellent captions for the various scenes. On the other hand, the corps of photographers who were responsible for the pictures contained in "Under Four Flags" have secured some remarkable results. Not only do the scenes show that these men risk their lives in obtaining the shots but it is noticeable that the photography is never superlative when the conditions under which the film was exposed are considered.

CATCH LINES
The sinking of a U-boat—the destruction of a German plane—the Americans at Chateau Thierry and St. Mithiel—Generals Foch, Pershing, Haig, Diaz—the reception of the American soldiers in France—the Italians in their victorious drive on the Piave—American troops brigaded with the British.

The third official war film, you remember "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the other two, "Under Four Flags" follows the war from the moment Foch took supreme command of the Allied Armies until the signing of the armistice.

The stars are Generals Foch, Haig, Diaz and Pershing—the support is the United armies of France, the British Empire, Italy and the United States—the best cast ever assembled for a motion picture.

SYNOPSIS
"Under Four Flags" is in seven parts and opens with the conference at Versailles when Foch was placed in supreme command of the Allied armies. The embarkation of American troops for France, scenes on shipboard and the destruction of a submarine are scenes that are included in this portion of the film.

In the second part the arrival of the American troops in France is shown together with the intensive training they underwent in the camps back of the lines and the royal receptions accorded them everywhere by the natives.

The third and fourth episodes comprise battle pictures taken during the Americans' victorious activities at Chateau Thierry. Views of the work done by those troops of ours that were brigaded with the British are also shown. These portions of the picture also show interesting scenes incident to the fighting, such as the transportation of supplies, etc.

The fifth episode is a vastly interesting one, knowing, as it does, the activities of the Italian troops on the Austrian front during their victorious drive which shattered the hopes of Austria.

The sixth and seventh episodes portray the battle of St. Mithiel, another fierce combat in which the American soldiers distinguished themselves before the whole world.

SUGGESTIONS
Don't fail to bring out in your advertisements that this is a review of the war since the time General Foch became Commander-In-Chief of the Allied Armies.
“MISS AMBITION” - VITAGRAPH

Lacks Heart Appeal; Action of Plot Is Fairly Steady

“MISS AMBITION” can only be classed as an average program offering. The story lacks heart appeal, and although its continuity may be called faultless, it fails to arouse strong interest. It depends on the fairly steady action of the plot, on one or two scenes of an artist’s model—not bad enough to shock anybody.—beautiful gowns, sharp photography, and splendid outdoor locations to entertain. It appeals to the senses rather than to the feelings.

As the ending can be foretold more or less accurately, the suspense is somewhat destroyed. For instance, when the heroine leaves her sweetheart in the country to accept a position as maid to a wealthy city lady who had made her the offer attracted by her beauty, you feel sure she would some day come back to him. Each subsequent situation, difficult as well as unpleasant, the heroine encounters with while in the city tends to strengthen that conviction. So it offers no surprise to you when it ends as you have anticipated.

THE STORY

Marta, a working girl, secures a position as maid to Edith Webster, a society girl and for the time being sees no more of her sweetheart, Larry Doyle, a struggling artist. Ambition asserts itself while she tends her new duties and she longs for wealth and the power that it will bring. One day she has occasion to visit the studio of Nowland Wells, a sculptor, and Edith’s fiancé. He is much taken with her and unaware of her identity, enlists her to pose for a statue of Ambition. On the day that it is completed she is so delighted with it that he seizes her in his arms. And just at that moment Edith enters. No amount of explaining will convince her that Marta is innocent of any wrong doing and as a result the girl finds herself an outcast.

But still longing for wealth she marries Dudley Kelland, a millionaire. After the ceremony she discovers that she does not love him and seeks to win his affections by tendering her a large banquet. None of his friends appear, owing to the fact that he married a woman whose name was in disrepute. Kelland seeks to drown his sorrow in drink. The statue of Ambition which he purchased from Wells, overturns and kills him.

Now a rich widow, Marta finds herself still an outcast. Larry, now a prominent contractor will have nothing to do with her. She, however, hears that he is near bankruptcy in endeavoring to fulfill a big contract for the city. She goes to his partner and makes him accept her money, at the same time exacting a promise from him to keep her identity secret. But when the job turns out successfully and Larry demands to know the name of his benefactress his partner tells him, and thus are the lovers reunited.

AD TALK

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful young Vitagraph star, returns to the motion picture theatre on — of — in her latest photodrama, “Miss Ambition.” This is an absorbing romance of the manner in which Marta, a young girl, is seduced from the right path by an insatiable desire for wealth and the power that wealth brings to its possessor. She becomes a maid to a society woman. Later she meets her fiancé, a sculptor who urges her to pose for his statue, Ambition. When it is completed he is so delighted with it that he seizes Marta in his arms and, of course, at that very moment, the other girl enters the room.

Thus is Marta’s reputation blacked for the time being, even though she is innocent of any real wrong doing. She finds herself turned down by the man who once loved her. Larry Doyle, now a promising contractor and so she marries a disreputable old millionaire, longing for money and power still getting the better of her good judgment. Soon after she is rendered a widow and then it is that she realizes her folly. She learns that Larry is in sore financial straits and that in breaking her heart she is, in reality, not letting him know who her benefactress really is. And this act of hers is the death knell of her love for Larry Doyle.

Miss Griffith is, as ever, an adorable sight in the stellar role of this feature, while she receives sterling support from such well known Vitagraph players as Walter McGrail, Betty Blythe, Denton Vane, Templar Saxe and Fred Smith.

CATCH LINES

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful young Vitagraph star in a romantic-drama of compelling interest.

Ambition is all very well if it is motivated by sound judgment. Where Marta made her mistake was in the fact that she sought wealth for Wealth’s sake alone. After she had achieved riches she realized her mistake and realized it only in the nick of time.

The tragic episode in the girl’s life who sacrificed Love for Ambition.

She sacrificed love for ambition and then, when she awoke to the wrong of her act, sacrificed wealth and position for love.

Corinne Griffith, newest of Vitagraph stars, proves her right to an advanced position in the luminaries of screendom in this, her latest feature.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature Corinne Griffith in this production. She is one of the most beautiful stars on the screen today and her every appearance is a real treat. The story, that of a girl’s vaunting ambition that truly “snaps itself,” is one that lends itself well to heavy advertising. By this we mean that you can well "ask questions" in your copy if you favor this type of advertising. Such lines as “Should a girl sacrifice Love for Ambition?” “Should a girl marry without love to gratify a vain ambition?” and others similar, will suit the action of the story.
“HITTING THE TRAIL”—WORLD

Another Blackwell-Greeley Production

THE Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley combination is again in evidence in “Hitting the Trail,” an underworld story of New York. To the reviewer it does not appear as worthy of some of the previous pictures turned out by this pair. Their recent comedies have been meritorious in many respects. “Hitting the Trail” is more “dime-novelish” in character and many of its scenes are overdue to the extent that their melodramatic values are lost in the shuffle.

There are, however, certain qualities about the melodrama presented that will, no doubt, have their desired tenacious effect on the mob audience. To wit: the factory boss who would ensnare every pretty girl employee; the reformed gangster and the settlement-working young lady who accomplishes the reformation; as well as other characters, to say nothing of situations of similar kind.

“Hitting the Trail” has little if any comedy, but the stars are altogether satisfactory in this line of work: melodrama. Roy Somerville, author, has endowed his story with an unusually realistic underworld atmosphere and Harry O. Haupt and Dell Henderson, respectively adaptor and director, have brought it out on the screen with strict attention to all important details.—Length, 5 reels.—Dec. 2.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Flo Haines—Evelyn Greeley
Rev. Thos. Roberts—Geo. MacQuarrie
Mabel Bunyan—Dabel Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley

CATCH LINES

When Kid Kelly quit his gang and his old sawdust trail to reformation there was something down to the bone in Kel Kelly’s old pal refused to believe that he had returned for the old routine of “skoat” But “skoats” cannot accomplish much as the gang dis-covered.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, that starring team responsible for so many enjoyable World Film comedies and the novel patriotic picture “The Road to France” turn to melodrama in “Hitting the Trail” with results that are strikingly successful.

Joe Carelli, factory owner, was told to go to a certain number on a certain street where he would find the girl he coveted. In passionate excitement Carelli lifted the heavy covering on the bed where, he had been told, the girl was lying. And then there was a command: “Hands up, Carelli,” and Kid Kelly poked a gun in the Italian’s face! Carelli hadn’t figured on the quick wit of the Irish!

AD TALK

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley who have jointly been responsible for so exceedingly pleasing comedy-dramas on the World Film program turn their attention to more serious work in “Hitting the Trail,” a feature to be displayed at the theatre on — of — week. “Hitting the Trail,” to be quite frank, is melodrama—underworld melodrama of the most thrilling type. Its hero is a gangster, Kid Kelly, by name, whose reformation is brought about through the love and trust of a girl. Having taken this theme on the basis of the play, Roy Somerville, author, has conceived a story of unusual interest and one which from the standpoint of melodramatic suspense has much to commend it. Mr. Somerville is one of the best known authors whose talents are claimed almost exclusively by the screen. It was with the old Fine Arts company that this writer first gained his reputation. He prepared one of the most successful earlier Fairbanks pictures “Reggie Mouses” and to say nothing of numerous scenarios for the Gish sisters and Mae Marsh. The Fine Arts school of scenario writing taught “Progressiveness” to this generation of scenarists. These pictures always kept moving ahead and this is only of the valuable technicalities that Mr. Somerville carried away with him from this studio.

Harry D. Lee, the author of the Blackwell-Greeley comedies as well as “The Road to France,” was given all the scenes from Mr. Somerville’s story, while Dell Henderson took charge of directing Mabel Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley, Joe Smiley, George MacQuarrie and Muriel Gertie are seen in support of the principals. Other features in the bill at the theatre for the same date are Kid Kelly is a leader of a gang in a tough district of New York. One night he plans to rob the store of Goldberg, the milliner. At the time set for the trick, Flo Haines, who works in a flower factory and spends her paydays helping Rev. Thomas Roberts who conducts a mission, is examining a hat that has attracted her but which she is unable to buy. When Kelly and his gang enter she hides behind a mirror. The police get wind of the raid and enter the place. The crooks escape but Flo is found and accused of being an accomplice. Kelly makes an effort to free her from the bulls but is unsuccessful and later rather than see her serve thirty days for a crime of which she is entirely innocent, he gives himself up and does the time himself.

This is the beginning of Kelly’s reformation. Another encounter with Flo who is leading her sister, workers in a strike against her employer, Joe Carelli, a lustful Italian, and Kelly is ready to set forth on the straight and narrow path. In the meantime the ex-gangster has grown to love Flo and this makes his old girl, Mamie, “sore.” Together with Joe she plans a trick. She succeeds in doping Flo and calls for Joe, who covets the girls. Kelly, however, gets wind of the game and arrives in time to frustrate the plans of the Italian.

Later, however, he sees Roberts making love to Flo and believing she loves him he writes her a note saying that he was “camouflaging” all the time and returns to his old haunts. Flo refuses to believe the note and goes to him. In the meantime Kelly has gotten into a gang fight and is seriously wounded. Believing he is going to die he confesses that he really loves Flo. And so when he recovers all ends happily.

Fans Strong for Westerns Will Like This Desmond Subject

This picture will satisfy the majority of Desmond followers as well as most of those who enjoy Western photoplays, as it has been produced well.

Rapid action of plot as well as suspense are the chief elements upon which the story has been based. To these may be included the element of heart appeal which, to a certain degree, is roused by some of the situations.

The hero awakens the picturegoer’s sympathy because he is given a human role to portray. For instance, when some intoxicated “Bad Men” annoy the heroine, he steps in and protects her. All through the picture he acts as her protector until finally, love having awakened in both of them, they marry.

As is common in all Western pictures, the usual amount of shooting, fighting and riding is done.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a western drama, purely and simply, and if your patrons are inclined toward this type of entertainment let ‘em know what’s coming. It is somewhat of an original twist to the story and you will find it a healthy hit in your advertisements. Tell part of it, chiefly, up to a certain point and be sure to highlight it in your ads. This picture is a pleasing star, possessed of an ingratiating personality and, particularly if you have played a few off this type, it would be well to bill him in stellar type.

AD TALK

Bill Desmond, popularly known as “Smiling” Bill, will be the star at the —— week in his latest Triangle photo-play entitled “Deuce Duncan.” This is a western drama written specially for him by George Hively who has long been connected with the production of western pictures and knows well how to construct them. Desmond’s peculiarly happy personality and his ability to make the most of any situation in which he finds himself is exploited in a unusually intense story that Mr. Hively has provided him, furnish a double guarantee of the true worth of “Deuce Duncan.”

The picture shows him as a cowboy on the U.R. ranch. Cattle rustlers have been making off with portions of the herd and so the cows are greased by the hands of the ranch. What is Duncan’s surprise when he goes to the girl he loves to find traces of this grease on her brother’s clothes. For love of her he makes no charge against the rustlers but keeps a close eye on all his subsequent movements. But despite the good reasons for Deuce and the girl showing the misconception, he soon shows himself in his true colors.

One day he attacks the heroine, the girl whom he has said was his sister. In a passionate rage he says that he is not her brother at all, that this man is still in prison where he served fifteen years for a crime he did not commit. Deuce arrives in time to save the situation and, incidentally, the girl, and alter that, all is happy for the lovers. Luella Maxim is a strikingly appealing opposite for Desmond in this offering while Ed Brady and George Field have other principal roles.

THE STORY

Anne Tyson, living alone in a cabin on the plains, is one day surprised by a mysterious stranger who makes himself known to her as John, her brother, who had gone to prison fifteen years previous and had now only escaped. He urges Anne to flee with him and she, sympathetically, agrees. During the flight John steals Deuce Duncan’s horse and riding outfit. Deuce is a cowboy and this theft leaves him to suspect John. Later, Anne obtains a position as barmaid in the town saloon known as the “Half Acre of Hell,” where she leads a miserable existence being subject to the insults of the various riffraff who infest the place.

After John has made good his escape, he joins Steve Clement’s gang of cattle rustlers. Deuce, who is employed on the U.R. ranch, allays the cattle in order to apprehend rustlers. He visits Anne in her cabin after rescuing her from bar-room ruffians and discovers some of the grease on John’s clothing. But because of Anne’s pleading Deuce leaves John alone. She tells him that he was innocent of any crime when sent to jail in the long ago. But despite Deuce, John is arrested along with the rest of the Clements gang. Deuce sees the sheriff and has John liberated.

The climax comes when John forces his attention on Anne. He tells her that he is not her brother at all but that he exchanged places with him and escaped. He demands that Anne surrender herself to him in order that her brother may go free, he being the one who is really at fault. But Deuce comes to the rescue and fights off John. Clements, the rustler, in the meantime, has escaped and sneaking upon the scene, shoots and kills John. And that is only to glad to permit Deuce to take her in his arms.

CATCH LINES

William Desmond in an original western picture that offers a change from the usual “bands reforms at a glance of a girl” story and gives you a virile, red-blooded tale of the type of real men and women—one that reflects the true spirit of the West.

“John” introduced himself to Anne as her brother and because she had ever waited for the return of the prodigal, joined fifteen years before, she took him under her wing. And even when he knew him for what he was, her love, to discover, to do him one day in the role of the passionate desperado, attacks him off by Deuce Duncan, the hero in this startling picture. The Play now showing at the theatre.

William Desmond, the fellow with the smile that simply won’t come off, in a western play of romance and thrills—one of the real old-fashioned sort—if that type that gave the present western picture the jump that it has today on all other productions. See it. You won’t be disappointed.

LOBBY DISPLAY.—A hand colored lobby display gotten up on the screen theme. There are 22 x 28 star photos; 8 x 10 scene photos and 11 x 14 scene photos, these last in black and white. A title and synopsis card furnished to complete display.

“This advertising material for “Eye for Eye” include special lithograph window cards, special heralds and plain heralds, slides and music cue sheet.

SUGGESTIONS

The paper and cuts, designed by Lambert Guenther, are specially attractive on this production, and these should be freely used, for it is to be imagined that the exhibitor will book the subject for an extended run. “Eye for Eye” is an extra-length production, it being in seven reels. This fact alone opens the way for advertising. While we doubt whether there are picture patrons in many large numbers who still rush to the place where quantity alone is known, make it forcible in all advertising that you do that “Eye for Eye” presents genuine pictures as well.

Mme. Nazimova is a well known actress both with parts of the screen and this is the first time she is in a neighborhood where you have a high clientele, card attention to the fact that Mme. Nazimova appeared in Isenbe repertoire last season, and also bring in the playbill. She was in the Screen Classics production, “Revelation,” was acclaimed as one of the best pictures ever made. You might use the verse quoted in the ad talk on this page in a special lobby frame, and if you want to make it the more pressuring have your artist paint as a background for it a dim and shadowy desert or any Far East scene that you yourself select. Your artist will also be able to get more good advertise material by putting his glance over the stills on the production. The attire worn by the star in the first part of this production and the locale of the story will immediately suggest some angle to him that can be brought out impressively by the brush.

One Column Coarse Screen Star Cut
“ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING”—WILLIAM RUSSELL

Reviewer Classes It Far Below William Russell Standard

This is probably as poor a contribution as any ever released with William Russell starring. It is practically a conglomeration of absurd situations placed together in the most incoherent manner.

To begin with, the story fails to appeal to the human sympathies; secondly, it contains hardly any other elements that could endow it with entertaining values; but the worst thing of all is the construction of the subtitles; the use of the Metaphor—the employment of one word to denote another—is most liberal; and being quite bombastic, the effect they produce is ridiculous. Here is one or two of them: “I’ve got you in my eyes—like the sun,” and “It was a bitter cup—but with a word—you made it sweet.” Both have been spoken by the hero to the heroine. In commonplace subjects, such as this one is, metaphor is altogether out of place.

In regards to the action of the plot, it is nil; for the reason that its unfolding depends almost entirely on the subtitles, which consist chiefly on talk back and forth.

The situation at the opening of the picture, where a bet is determined by the number of pieces a glass has been broken to, is illogical; it would have required a scientist with the most accurate microphone, to have determined the exact number; even then, there could have been a doubt.

The death of her husband and the showing of his covered remains at the hospital, certainly will not increase the entertaining values.

The picture is clean. Released Dec. 1.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Richard Chester.................. William Russell
Nora Ellis.................. Winnifred Westover
Chas. Rennalls.................. Haywood Mack
By Wyndham Martyn
Scenario by Stephen Fox.
Directed by Henry King.

CATCH LINES

William Russell in another romantic comedy-drama in which he loses one fortune in poker and gains another in marriage. But the marriage, he has nothing to do with that!

Once a gambler always a gambler. Richard Chester played cards and lost; played love and won. But he was gambling all the time. It’s a brave man that will take a chance on a wife!

That old saying, unlucky at cards, lucky in love. It fits Richard Chester’s case. He drew a queen to the middle of a broken straight and from that time out.

Of course it’s a bad thing to play poker three nights running—particularly when you can’t better a partner. Nora broke the same. Richard Chester hadn’t lost his fortune at cards he would never have won a wife. Now, we ask you, is gambling a sin?

AD TALK

William Russell’s comedies and comedy dramas have come to stand in the front rank of pictures. He seems to be able to get just the right stories, stories that fit him and give him opportunity to show himself to the very best of advantage. "Up Romance Road" and "Hobbs in a Hurry" will be remembered as two of his best subjects, and yet it remains for "All the World to Nothing," to set still a higher mark for him to strive for in future efforts before the camera. "All the World to Nothing," is written by Wyndham Martyn and directed by Henry King, under the combination that has been in evidence on previous Russell pictures.

The story opens with a three-day poker session in which the hero, Richard Chester, speaking in the vernacular, loses his shirt. A down and outer, he happens to run into Nora Ellis’ apartment while searching for someone else’s. And he is in disguise. Nora, just at the moment, is in very much of a predicament, having received word that if she doesn’t marry immediately she will lose her fortune. She takes Chester as a possibility and he takes Nora as his wife for Nora is likewise down and outer.

Now here is a fine beginning, indeed, for an author who knows how to handle romantic comedy-drama which, suffice it to say, Mr. Martyn and Miss Westover, with the romance of Richard Chester and Nora, the latter character charmingly played by Westover, with a few other ingredients, make an enjoyable "seeing" that has ever been our pleasure to watch. We truthfully that none of our patrons will overlook this opportunity of having a good time at the — theatre.

THE STORY

Strange things will happen! And a series of strange incidents leads the financially embarrassed Richard Chester into the apartment of Nora Ellis, all the time in a peculiar disguise. Nora is in need of a husband to retain her fortune, and immediately enlist the aid of Chester, who gives his name as Chester Dick. Chester is quite willing, but while the ceremony goes on, the poker makes off with the jewels. When Chester departs, a wedded man, he is suspected. This is shortly cleared up, however, for the letter soon afterwards mails to Nora his confession. Thereupon Chester gets to work and fares with moderate success. Nora has an ardent admirer, Rennalls. She tells him that she cannot marry him, but does not disclose that she is already married. He is puzzled, and believes that if he can reduce her to poverty she will listen to him. He starts to undermine her fortune by raiding "Brazilian Lead," a security on which her entire fortune rests. Chester learns of this and creates a market adverse to Rennalls’ scheme and Rennalls goes broke. When the three million mark is reached, Richard instructs his bank to credit to the "joint account of Chester and Ellis." She reveals by word and action that she loves Chester, but regrets that she is already married to a certain person by the name of "Dick." Rennalls rushes in and states that "this man is already married, and carries his wife’s picture in his pocketbook," in a momentary estrangement, but when it develops that the picture is a small photograph of Miss Ellis which Chester borrowed "off the mantelpiece at the time of his hasty wedding, everything suddenly clears up, as she recognizes "Dick" as being Chester.

"THE ONE WOMAN"

patrons to air their views on the political angle of the picture.

Then there is the free love angle to play up if one so desire. The man in "The One Woman" contracts a Common Law marriage. Certainly this angle affords something different. Here you have another opportunity to create discussion as well as to go the limit on sensational advertising if you so desire.

Then there is the talent that was responsible for the picture. Outside of his constituent, the socialism of Thomas Dixon is known from his connection with "The Birth of a Nation," certainly an advertising asset not to be overlooked. Reginald Barker, who directed it, is one of the best known men in his line and should be featured also. If you glance over the cast you will find a number of well known names and if "Hearts of the World" has played in your neighborhood don’t forget that Ben Alexander made quite a hit in it.

CATCH LINES

When is a Socialist not a Socialist? When he’s a patriot!

By Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," on which "The Birth of a Nation" was based.

Whether you are a Socialist or not you should see "The One Woman," in which this estate is the theme.

Is it to be Marriage or is it to be Free Love? Many claim that the marriage system is wrong. Few claim that Free Love is right, and Thomas Dixon gives his views in the startling photoplay, "The One Woman."

Is Thomas Dixon correct in his assumption that Socialism is to be trodden down? We might still be at war with Germany if it hadn’t been for members of this political party. And yet some Socialists believing that war is wrong, have fought in the trenches of Europe! Where do we stand? See "The One Woman."
"The Mystery Girl," with Ethel Clayton
(Paramount—Directed by William C. De Mille)

This picture has been based on the novel "Green Fancy," by George Barr McCutcheon. All those that are familiar with this author's stories, know that they are more or less of the fanciful type, in which the imagination is granted quite a few liberties. Fictitious kingdoms and princes and duchesses are the chief things dealt with. Such a one is "The Mystery Girl."

The story begins in France, where the Duchess of a little kingdom is serving as an ambulance driver, just to avoid the Huns who have despoiled her country. The Prince, who is kept as a prisoner in the little kingdom, escapes to America. The heroine, who is acquainted of the fact by a message sent to her by the Prince with a pigeon, follows him there with the Crown Jewels. The balance of the story deals with the intrigues of the pretender to the throne, who is in love with the Duchess, how he entered into a conspiracy with a notorious European Crook to help him get the girl in return for the jewels, and how he is outwitted. Of course there is a love affair between a U. S. Officer and the Duchess running throughout the story.

If you can manage to prevail upon your patrons to forget the plausibility of the plot by advertising it accordingly, they will enjoy it. In spite of the lack of convincingness, there are several highly enjoyable points in it, due to the mystery and the consequent suspense.

The picture is clean. Length 5 reels. — P. S. Harrison.

"Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas" (Distributed by the Robertson-Cole Company)

RAVELOUGES that present nothing new to the eye are very tiresome. Instead of entertaining, they bore. But when they describe regions with their inhabitants and their peculiar costumes never before explored, such as the Martin Johnson Cannibal pictures do, they arouse the interest to a high pitch; this is due to the inherent curiosity of the mind.

In taking these pictures, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson actually risked their lives. That they are alive to-day to tell the tale, it is a miracle. They were captured by the natives once, and for the sight of a British Man-of-War, which happened to approach the island by accident, they would have been eaten alive. And it is said that the flesh of a white is very delicious to them. They prefer it to any other.

The expedition started from San Francisco. After visiting Honolulu, Pango-Pango, Samoa, the most beautiful natural harbor in the world; then Sydney, Australia, where provisions were taken, they reached the South Sea islands.

Throughout the ten reels, the unfolding of many interesting and worth knowing things takes place. The real interest, however, begins not where the hand of civilization has control, but beyond those limits—where the influence of the white man is not felt. The treacherous, man-killing and very often man-eating savages, with their peculiar costumes and strange looks, are shown.

The subtitles are very appropriate. The element of humor is inserted in them in abundance, thus relieving the monotony to a great extent.

The photography is remarkable; so is the tinting and toning, which makes the sky, the sea and the scenery appear beautiful.

My understanding is that the ten reels are to be released so as to make one complete show. When the fact is taken in consideration that travel pictures, however interesting, become tiresome when too much of it is given, will be plainly seen that such a decision does not seem wise. From four to six reels, in combination with a two reel O. Henry, a two-reel high class comedy and a cartoon, would make an ideal bill. News-weekly should be avoided; while slap-stick comedy should be barred, as it would be entirely out of place.

These pictures should appeal well to high class patronage. — P. S. Harrison.

"The Wildcat of Paris," with Priscilla Dean
(Universal Special—Dec. 16. Directed by Joseph De Grasse)

This picture will rank among the best Priscilla Dean contributions. Heart interest, due to personal sacrifices for a higher ideal; mental excitement, caused by the rapid action of the plot; suspense, owing to inability of foretelling the action; these are its entertaining elements.

The Apaches of Paris, their relation to the community before the war and their conduct toward France after the memorable days of August, 1914, is the theme of the story. It is not, strictly speaking, a war subject, but one in which some war scenes have been re- sorted to in order to bring out more vividly the fact that even the Apaches, whose aversion for law and order is well known, when Paris, their home, was threatened, did not fail to rush to the rescue.

I doubt whether a real Frenchman could have imparted to this picture a more realistic atmosphere. To the great majority of us the knowledge of Apaches comes from the novels we have read. The scenes in this picture tally exactly with the images we have formed of them. As themes of this nature, in book form, have invariably proved popular, I am inclined to believe that, in picture form, they will prove equally interesting.

The acting of Miss Dean is marked by the same degree of virility, the same liveliness, as that of her past contributions. The picture is clean and, though strong, owing to the uncommonness of the subject, should appeal universally. Length, six reels. — P. S. Harrison.

Keeping Up With Dubuque

The Family in Dubuque, Ia., has changed the days for the showing of Goldwyn pictures from Friday and Saturday to Thursday and Friday. On November 7 and 8, "The Spreading Dawn," with Jane Cowl, was the feature shown. This was the first appearance of Miss Cowl at the Family, and her picture drew average houses both days.

When "The Lone Wolf," with Bert Lytell, was shown at the Grand in Dubuque about two months ago, the fans liked it so well that they had been asking Manager Lorenz for a return engagement of the picture. He was able to get it back on Friday, November 8, and presented it to full houses. Mr. Lytell's popularity here is surprising, considering that Dubuquer have seen him in very few pictures.
William Duncan says that if the Allied Governments will turn the Kaiser over to him, he will ask Albert Smith and Cyrus Towne to bring their serial, "Vindicating Valor," to the Vitagraph studio, as the novel by those authors, to write a special episode in "The Man of Might" exclusively featuring sweet Wilhelm. He promises that all episodes of all serials will pale to the shade of thin milk beside this one and that thereafter will be only a memory.

Under the direction of David Smith, Besie Love has almost completed work on "The Enchanted Barn," an absorbing love story by Grace H. L. Lutz, in which pure romance and melodramatic thrills are skilfully blended.

With an amount of subconsciousness that guaranteed its sincerity William Duncan received a high compliment on his attention to detail from a Pullman porter during the making of a train scene in the serial "The Man of Might."
Viola Dana Recover and Will Work on Coast

Viola Dana has recovered from her recent illness and her associates at the Metro studios held a joyous impromptu reception for her at the headquarters of Director General Maxwell Karger.

Miss Dana’s mother, Mrs. E. J. Flugrath, and her sister, Miss Shirley Mason, who were with her during her illness, have both gone to California to take a bungalow, where all three will be together when the Metro star joins them to make Metro features at the firm’s new West Coast studio.

She will leave with Mr. and Mrs. Karger and family when Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., move from New York to California.

"Diana Ardway" will be Miss Dana’s first production made in California following the firm’s exodus.

Pearl White Gets More Pathe Publicity

Pearl White was busy again during the United War Drive, November 11 to 17, bringing in the shekels for the campaign and incidentally creating much publicity for Pathe, which organization presents her in serial productions.

Miss White repeated her former stunt of climbing the ladders in the streets of New York, and is credited with a large amount of subscriptions to the drive.

Pathe announced this week that Miss White had interrupted the making of her next serial, "The Lightning Raider," in order to come to New York in behalf of the drive.

Harris Marriage Helps Book Pictures

The recently announced marriage of Mildred Harris, Jewel star, to Charles Chaplin, which had added a decided impetus to the bookings of "Borrowed Clothes," the latest Jewel feature in which Mrs Harris appeared, according to reports from Universal this week.

Exhibitors who have realized the value to be gained from the capitalization of the marriage have booked Miss Harris’ Jewel features and played them up, not alone on the strength of the star’s ability, but on the marriage as well.

"Unconditional Surrender" Is Ready

A. Blaiske Dick of the McClure organization announces for immediate distribution "Unconditional Surrender," a five-reel picture that is declared to be a picturization of the great events of today.

The producer states that the pictures visualize the desire that is in the hearts of all humanity, that the Hohenzollern surrender unconditionally.

Edward Barton, of North Billerica, Mass., writes that when he was convalescing in a French hospital a Chaplin comedy at the Y. M. C. A. struck him so forcibly that he could not refrain from laughing so hard that the doctors had to bring him to the hospital.

Roscoe Arbuckle’s newest, "The Sheriff," affords him the opportunity of burlesquing the stunts of other Paramount and Artcraft stars and he has gun drawings and acrobatic feats are travestied on Hart and Fairbanks.

Gaby Denlys comes back in "Infatuation," directed by Louis Mercanton, written by Marcel L’Herbier, produced by Eclipse and distributed by Pathe, beginning December 9.

"When Your Soldier’s Hit," the first of the twelve-two-reel activity pictures announced by Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films, committee on Publicity, will be released December 9.

The Arrow Film Corporation is releasing the two-reel novelty film entitled "What of Your Boy" produced in cooperation with and under the supervision of the New York Military Academy.

Director John S. Lopez completed at the Keystone studios, on East 46th Street, a six-reel feature for B. S. Moss, which is still untitled.

May Allison has completed her Metro feature, "Thirty Days," at Metro’s West Coast studio at Hollywood, in the latest show of comedy by Luit. Luther A. Reed and was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker and Thomas Jefferson Geraghty.

Edel Clayton, "The Girl Who Came Back," will again be seen in a Paramount film, the sixth of her series, entitled "Women’s Weapons."

Harold Lloyd, the chief Rollin fun-maker, recently received from the Umbra Union of Chicago, a laughing statute of himself, carved from hick water antrachite.

G. Giacomin, for years of the Craft’s Royal entertainers, and producer in Hollywood, Italy, has reached Los Angeles, where he will take part in a ten-reel producer now being produced by Henry McRae at the Cane studio.

That music hall charms is brought out in Madame Kennedy’s latest Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," the new screen sensation, which promises new exultation after Channing Pollock and Remond Wolf, to be released December 8.

Earle Williams, Vitaphone Blue Ribbon star, will be seen in a Blue Ribbon feature of which he is co-author in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, entitled "The American Ace."

Mark Lee Luther, author of "The Crucible" and other novels, is responsible for "The Hope Chest," in which Dorothy God will be starred shortly under the Paramount banner.

Gladys Brockwell has begun a new picture at the William Fox studio in Hollywood, with the temporary title of "The Framers," founded upon a story by Charles Van Dyke, and directed by Lynn Reynolds.

Marie Tournier plays the principal role for his third production, "My Lady’s Garter," adapted from the late Jacques Futrelle’s detective mystery romance. Miss Tournier’s two-woman act will be matched by a non-stop, continuous coaching completion at the Tourner Fort Lee studios.

"Camping Out" is based on "Fatty" Arbuckle’s own story of a three-weeks vacation on Catalina Island. Roscoe not only writes and acts his pictures, but also directs and cuts the scenes.

About New Pictures

Al Lichtman Tours Paramount Exchanges

Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, is now making a tour of the exchanges throughout the country, consulting managers in connection with after-war conditions and preparing for the new rush of business which is anticipated.

Mr. Lichtman was confined in Kansas City with a touch of influenza, but has now fully recovered and has resumed his trip. In his report about conditions as he found them on his tour, Mr. Lichtman said:

"While the situation has been serious I find that most exhibitors took advantage of the closing of the theatres by making improvements and preparing for the rush of business which was bound to come. Exchange managers have likewise put their offices in order and have been able to clean up a mass of detail preparatory to the reopening of business.

"With the great news of peace everyone has taken on a new spirit of optimism, and with the influenza abatement practically everywhere theatres are now opening up to patrons who are more enthusiastically inclined toward amusement than ever before."

One Hundred Cameras Used for Picture

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal and director of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," announces that this restoration picture actually used over one hundred cameras. This is declared to be unprecedented and sets a new record in picture making. Scenes were taken over a hundred different cities and places both here and abroad. It is said to be a massive spectacle which has been in the making for months with a view to releasing upon the declaration of peace, and its timeliness is expected to create much laudatory comment.

"Official War Review" Shows Final Blows

The coming of peace in the great world’s struggle gives an especial significance to No. 22 of the "Official War Review," released by Pathé the week of November 25.

It shows the blows that finally broke the Teutons’ back, how the batteries of the Allies kept the retreating Hun on the run, and Britain’s batteries speeding forward to take up new positions.

HE was only a river pirate—and he was in love with a showgirl who was "playing for big money." And when he heard of the big gold shipment headed up the river at dusk, he believed that here was his chance to make his big haul and quit the old life forever.

By a cleverly devised plan, Jerry substituted twenty kegs of sand for the twenty kegs of gold in the shipment and buried the kegs in a cove up the river. Then he started to go honest—just as an alibi, at first.

And then his big man's heart told him that it was only circumstances of environment that had ever made him dishonest. Once he tasted of the comfort and security of honesty, he knew he could never go back to the old life. But there was the buried gold shipment—what of that? And what of the money needed to buy the things that he believed his wife craved?

Here is a real screen story holding every element of human appeal. And as the rugged river pirate, Harry Morey finds a role for which he is eminently fitted by physique and screen personality.

Exhibitor's Trade Review

"THE name of J. Stuart Blackton has come to mean a guarantee of an out-of-the-ordinary feature, and in this case he has really outdone himself, for he has produced a screen offering of undoubted merit and one that should create quite a bit of sensation throughout the country. It is the sort of stuff that will "get to" any sort of an audience and hold them deeply interested from beginning to end. In short, it is the kind of a picture that we need.  For a downright dramatic feature with excellent comedy relief, nothing better than "The Common Cause" has been offered exhibitors in many months. It should do a turn-away business at the majority of theatres where it is shown."

"ONE look at the names on the program of the persons engaged in making this feature should be sufficient to interest even the most blase first-nighter.  A more striking group of talent could hardly be assembled.  Commodore Blackton's production ranks among the finest of the war pictures and is by all odds the best of his screen achievements."

WELCOME HOME!

After giving the world Peace with Victory our soldiers are coming home. The nation welcomes them with open arms.

The home folk want to know how they accomplished their huge task. “Made in America,” in a series of eight episodes, tells the story graphically, dramatically, vividly, authoritatively.

Every exhibitor should show “Made in America.” It is an appreciation of the American soldiers who won undying fame and the gratitude of the Allied World.

World’s Record—“UNDER FOUR FLAGS”

For one solid week ending November 23d, the two foremost motion picture houses in the world—the Rivoli and Rialto, in New York, played to the biggest audience in their history—packed to the doors every performance.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel says: “Even with these two great houses it proved impossible to accommodate the crowds and now—after our colossal record of attendance, I have contracted for this great film for another solid week, at the Rivoli, beginning December 1st.”

These great pictures can never be taken again, for they are the last great battles of the last great war—close up living records of the stirring scenes that really happened—thrills in the air—in the sea battling the submarines—in the front line trenches.

“Under Four Flags” is the actual, authentic official United States Government War film made at the front.

Will be released in 5 REELS—Every foot an attendance magnet!

Goldwyn to Distribute the Ford Educational Weekly

THE FORD MOTOR COMPANY, the greatest manufacturing enterprise in America, has for four years placed its tremendous resources behind the creation of a great educational film weekly.

At this moment from 3,000 to 4,000 theatres are presenting this unique and powerful screen achievement to their audiences, and have been doing so since its inauguration.

It is Henry Ford's intention to have this costly and popular weekly given the greatest volume of distribution ever attained by any feature in the motion picture industry.

In keeping with his demand that a great and stable Educational be available for the entire American public and at a minimum of cost to the exhibitors who will present it; with the intention of having such a weekly publicly exhibited in from 5,000 to 7,000 theatres each week.

Henry Ford and His Representatives have chosen GOLDWYN as the exclusive distributors of The Ford Educational Weekly

A Single Reel Weekly 52 Issues a Year

Goldwyn invites the exhibitors of the nation to write, wire or visit its branch offices to make immediate arrangements for the booking of this approved and established feature and announces herewith the first five issues to be released under the Goldwyn imprint:

Jan. 12: "What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."
Jan. 26: "Hang It All!" The story of wall paper.
Feb. 2: "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas." The story of the Hog Island shipyards.
Feb. 9: Canada's "Mountain of Tears." Mt. Edith Cavell.

A Great Imagination Has Built the Ford Educational Weekly

THERE is not in the entire industry a feature filled with such humanness, of such great range and scope as the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is both current and permanent in its appeal. It is a scenic, a travelogue, a historical record, a portrayer of industry in many of its fascinating phases; a stimulator of patriotism and good citizenship.

In Detroit Mr. Ford has equipped a plant and laboratory that take rank with the best plants in the industry. His Educational Weekly always has the distinction of beautiful production.

The men who produce the Ford Educational Weekly have entree to plants and institutions that are still barred to the inquisitive lens of other cameras. Their power lies in the tremendous power and resources of the man whose far-reaching dreams are translated into action.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in announcing the distribution under the Goldwyn imprint of this splendid product, correctly says that "Henry Ford has created the Ford Educational Weekly with no thought of profit, but because he feels that through this weekly will be conveyed a message of inspiration to the American public."

The conditions under which the Ford Educational Weekly is to be placed in increasing thousands of motion picture theatres are vitally interesting to exhibitors. The cost is to be so remarkably low that no exhibitor can afford to keep it off his screen.

Advance prints of the first five releases now announced will be in all Goldwyn offices by December 15. Every Goldwyn manager and salesman and 10,500 Ford Motor Company sales agencies in the United States in a few days will be ready to sign contracts or forward applications for service to the Goldwyn Home Office.

Another Madge Kennedy Success

The Most Favorable Notices She Ever Received Are On "A PERFECT LADY"

EXHIBITORS accept and believe a unanimous verdict on the success of a star and production. They know that it is not the function or intention of the critics to be over-enthusiastic or over-friendly.

It is therefore Goldwyn’s pleasure to stand aside while those who have seen MADGE KENNEDY in “A PERFECT LADY” by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf definitely pronounce this production to be her most successful Goldwyn Picture.

“A PERFECT LADY” is a big stage hit by two nationally-known authors, with a universally loved star of constantly increasing popularity and appeal and directed with great skill by Clarence G. Badger.

Not forgetting the nation-wide acclaim that has greeted each new picture of this favorite star, Goldwyn is proud of the spontaneous approval shown in the following reviews:

NEW YORK AMERICAN: An unusually strong and laughable dramatic comedy with even bigger appeal than the original play.

NEW YORK SUN: Madge Kennedy’s newest Goldwyn, “A Perfect Lady,” is a winner. An inimitable and bewitching star.

NEW YORK POST: “In a Perfect Lady” Madge Kennedy is an even better comedienne than ever before...Delightful...Bright.

NEW YORK HERALD: Madge Kennedy has played many screen roles delightfully, but she has never before had a finer success than in “A Perfect Lady.”

NEW YORK WORLD: “A Perfect Lady,” was a stage hit and now Goldwyn has turned it into a truly enjoyable picture.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: It would be hard to picturize a stage play more successfully than “A Perfect Lady” has been by Goldwyn....... One has to be glowingly enthusiastic in writing about Madge Kennedy.”

Too Fat To Fight

_with Frank McIntyre_

Directed by Hobart Henley

Produced under the direction of GOLDWYN

Here are the whole-hearted, approving reviews of this production’s pre-release at the Rialto, Theatre, New York:

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: “Too Fat To Fight” is a big, human drama of comedy and pathos filled with those fine “touches” that always gain popularity for the picture containing them.

N. Y. GLOBE: There are fat men and fat men, but Frank McIntyre is in a class by himself. “Too Fat To Fight” is a lovable, human story that big audiences are applauding.

N. Y. MAIL: “Too Fat To Fight” is a picture of which its author, star and director can well be proud. We predict for it great national popularity.

N. Y. POST: A most amusing and enjoyable comedy drama is Rex Beach’s “Too Fat To Fight” at the Rialto. Mr. Beach was lucky in getting Frank McIntyre for the role.

N. Y. SUN: A powerful Beach scenario, a story of laughter and tears, a most appealing star all make “Too Fat To Fight” a pronounced success.

N. Y. TELEGRAM: All those who enjoy hearty laughter will both laugh and thrill when they see “Too Fat To Fight.” It contains also just enough tears to make it intensely human.

What A Wonderful World This Is.

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS is one of the proofs of it. Less than a year ago undreamed of as a motion picture star—today one of the popular heroes on the screens of the universe.

Welcomed daily and nightly in 2,900 theatres of our own United States; enjoying a large measure of confidence and liking because of his wholesomeness and good nature.

Playing from Hempstead Heath to Peckham Rye in London, booked in the principal cinema houses of the United Kingdom, he holds the favor of our British blood-cousins.

Applauded by the French and bringing good cheer to the thousands of Americans on leave or furlough in Paris.

In Italy, in Argentina, in Scandinavia, in nearby Canada and far off Australia and New Zealand populations like and unlike our own have expressed their united approvals of

"SMILING BILL"

in CAPITOL COMEDIES
26 a Year Every Second Monday

Good nature, likability, cleanliness and popularity—he has all of these reasons for success. He has become a success by popular decision. Truly, this is also an appreciative as well as a wonderful world.

You are missing one of the screen's best elements of attraction in your theatre if you are not playing Capitol Comedies.

The William Fox Idea—

The theatre had consumption of income. From a pretentious house catering to week stands of high grade theatrical companies, it wasted away in a year to a shadow. All that remained were its physical proportions. Inwardly it was all wrong—from gizzard to garret. The management tried vaudeville, tried pictures, tried vaudeville and pictures, tried everything—then quit.

A new management repeated its predecessor’s failure, adding burlesque to the list of defeats. Other managements came and went and the house, by persistence and common consent, acquired the nickname “Graveyard.” No one seemed to know why it did not “go.” The owner of the building blamed the lessees and the lessees blamed “the town,” the location and everything else that couldn’t talk back.

Then came a man who had faith in the community and a conviction that a theatre located within two blocks of the business center of a population of 500,000 could be “put over.” He started “putting,” and his first swing almost unbalanced him. He had hit too strong. He wanted to electrify the town, but succeeded only in starting a report that he was crazy. However, he had a few dollars left when he came to his senses, and before spending them he held a commercial clinic.

He met a man at the clinic who talked reasonably—convincingly. The man told him that the theatre could be made a perfectly sound commercial enterprise; that it wasn’t a question of “pictures or vaudeville” or “pictures and vaudeville,” but of what pictures. The product offered should tempt public taste; there was no use trying to sell pate de foies gras to a foreign laboring population.
Most people know what they want—give it to them.

Why You Will Adopt It

That was a new idea to this exhibitor—his introduction to the Fox Idea. He assented to the Fox branch manager's suggestion that Fox pictures—the pictures the most of the people want—should be tried. The house then was taking in $75 a day; now it is averaging about $700. Formerly the theatre was opened at noon; now its morning receipts for six days pay the picture rentals. It is a monument to the Fox Idea.

The Fox Idea will help you. Fox branch offices encircle the world, and in every one of them are trained men—personal representatives of William Fox—who are prepared to demonstrate just how you can increase your profits. What you are making now, be it much or little, matters not to them. They know they are backed by the sort of pictures the great majority of people want. They see this proved every day, and are prepared to prove it to you.

Invite one of these experts in. Let him tell you what business CLEOPATRA has done in your territory—let him show you the number of days that LES MISERABLES has run—let him explain how THE BIG SIX has cleaned up for exhibitors at times when they most needed the money—let him give you figures on business done by THE PRUSSIAN CUR—let him show you how THE LAND OF THE FREE justifies the Fox Idea of timeliness—let him prove that QUEEN OF THE SEA is the best tonic ever administered to a failing bank account.

There's no obligation involved. Call the nearest Fox branch office today and get the proof. Fox salesmen talk facts, not theories. That's part of the Fox Idea.

"U. S. A. Series"

FACTS and figures that had to be kept more or less "under cover" until the war was won are now available to the public.

The United States Government has prepared and is now ready to show, through the Division of Films, a series of two-reel patriotic films, each featuring one phase of the war, one release to be made every two weeks.

The first film of the series

1—"If Your Soldier's Hit," released December 23rd, shows in complete detail the progress of the wounded soldier from battlefield through Field Hospital to Base Hospital and recuperation.

The other films in the U. S. A. Series are as follows:

2—"Wings of Victory"
A story of American achievement in the air—from the planning of the famous Liberty Motor to the day's work of an American Ace on the Western Front.

3—"Making the Nation Fit"
The story of how America took raw civilian material and converted it into A-1 marine and military stuff. The film shows also how this war-time physical fitness program can be employed with benefit in peace-time.

4—"Horses of War"
Despite the rapid development of the motor car for military purposes, the horse proved an indispensable factor in the Allied scheme of victory. A glorious chapter of war history.

5—"The Bath of Bullets"
This picture shows the part machine guns, hand-grenades, trench-mortars, and the artillery in general play in modern war—thrilling close-ups of how these destructive forces do their deadly work.

6—"The Storm of Steel"
$12,000,000,000! This film shows how the guns and munitions, for which this money was spent, were made. The Ordnance Department has a rattling good story to tell.

Available through the WORLD FILM CORPORATION, except FOR CALIFORNIA

FOR MICHIGAN

To Give The Smaller Theatres A Chance—

The closing date for the exhibitor advertising competition on "The Romance of Tarzan" has been advanced from December 29, 1918, to February 1, 1919.

If you have a small theatre and have had to postpone your season on the Tarzan sequel because of the influenza epidemic this is your chance to take part in the contest.

It gives you five weeks more in which to book it, advertise it and play it, and enter the contest.

Every exhibitor—large or small—who has entered the contest to date has played to tremendous business on this super attraction.

Now you have the opportunity of becoming a competitor for one of the prizes in the $1200 in Liberty Bonds offered by First National Exhibitors’ Circuit for the best local campaign.

Your chances are just as good with a small theatre as they would be with a larger house. Get busy!

"Played to 10,008 people in one day."—Dayton Theatre, Dayton, O.
To Those Who Criticise
First National’s ‘Extravagance’

“Virtuous Wives” is finished. We saw the completed production last night. It is a picture that will justify our preference for better pictures at higher prices more eloquently than any words of ours.

It is more than a month since we saw the first print. It was a good picture then. But it required additional cutting, titles had to be altered, some retakes made—in a word it had to be given the finish that marks the difference between a special and a program release.

All this takes time—the time of high salaried men—and costs money. But when “Virtuous Wives” goes to trial on the screens, with the public sitting in judgment—we have no fear of the verdict. We know that satisfaction to the public means profit to our own theatres and those of our customers.

Some exhibitors who have already contracted for it and perhaps felt that the price was too high, are going to admit that such productions are worth all they cost them—and more.

There is one angle to the matter which many exhibitors overlook: that is, that where they individually spend a few extra dollars for a real quality production, the producer must spend thousands. He takes the chance, not they. If such productions as “Virtuous Wives” fail to justify the money spent on them, it means bankruptcy to their producers. But here again “First National” is safeguarded. Our exhibitor Board of Directors, who contract for its attractions, have built their fortunes and the prestige of their theatres by experience and judgment. Their knowledge of trade conditions and composite judgment preclude the probability of unprofitable deals with stars and producers. We believe that our live and let live policy has at last won the confidence of the leading stars and responsible producers. We hope to merit their confidence.

Our hats off to Mr. Louis B. Mayer, successful exhibitor, successful exchange man, successful producer of “Virtuous Wives,” which we trust will prove one of the big successes of the year and a vindication of our theories and policies.

And last, but not least—our congratulations to Anita Stewart. We count her sweet personality one of our great assets.

You ought to know that “The Spreading Evil” is not a war picture—and yet has been given timely interest because of the war and the assembling of millions of men under conditions that threaten disaster for the future of all races.

You ought to know that the subject matter of the picture is being discussed in newspapers and magazines and from the lecture platform everywhere.

You ought to know that “The Spreading Evil” has the hearty endorsement of the HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS and scores of others prominent in the official life of the nation. These men have come out flat-footed with statements that the general public ought to flock to see this picture.

You ought to know that, aside from this unusual draft, “The Spreading Evil” is possessed of an intensely dramatic, fast-moving story that will thrill any audience.

—And you STATE RIGHT BUYERS ought to know, moreover, that we have devised many unusual aids to help you get the money.

Dear Mr. Johnston—

Your 1918 M. P. Studio Directory reached me this morning at 10:12. At 10:15 I had occasion to refer to it. It saved me at least two hours time, and an untold amount of mental grief and grouch. I thank you.

1919—BOOKER'S CALENDAR—1919

A REAL ASSET TO THE BOOKER

Here are extracts from a few of the recent letters from prominent Exchanges—from those who had last year's Calendar and had not yet received that for 1919. Scores of such letters have been received. Pretty sure evidence that the Booker's Calendar is a "hit."

WHAT EXCHANGE MEN SAY:

"It is a real asset to our booking department."

"It was a great help to us in our booking."

"It certainly proved to be one of the most convenient aids we have ever had; are going to be terribly disappointed if we do not receive one this year."

And there are lots more, all telling the same story of "service"

All the months of the year on one large sheet (33 1/2 inches high by 26 1/2 inches wide.)
General and special holidays in red.

Why All the Fuss?

The news columns of Motion Picture News for the past few weeks have reflected our attitude on the controversy raging over the admission of the Exhibitors League to equal control with the manufacturing interests in the National Association. We have said little or nothing about it. And now the climax has come.

The manufacturers failed to show enough interest to have a quorum at the meeting called to decide the point; the Exhibitors' League has withdrawn its application. All is as it was before Peter Schaefer and William A. Brady had a presidential hand-shake in Chicago. Except that—Peter Schaefer announces that he will now proceed with the job of organizing the Exhibitors' League in real strong fashion.

And the National Association members who have been spending their time in fruitless caucus over this controversy will be able to go ahead to problems more important to the industry.

* * * * *

The Facts and the Dreams

Only the most roseate of optimists could have looked forward to a vision of the National Association's manufacturing interests and the Exhibitors' League working harmoniously in double harness. The first tax question that came along, the first problem of proportions sufficient to bring about a difference of opinion, was certain to precipitate disaster.

It's great to be a pacifist, to foresee naught but peace and unity—but it is foolish to blind one's self to the fact that manufacturer and retailer interests in this business are continually on the ragged edge of opposition. True—they shouldn't be. But why borrow trouble when the evolution of a few years may bring the industry to the point where union can be secured without any necessity for danger signals? The National Association alone is not big enough now to lead us to this Promised Land; the Exhibitors' League alone has not the proportions. If each will go its own way, building slowly, surely and strongly—then we'll have a chance.

Until then, why get fussfed up to the extent of pages of white space over the proposed union?

* * * * *

It's the Same Old Story

Nine out of ten of Motion Picture News exhibitor readers don't care two rows of pins whether the Exhibitors' League becomes a part of the National Association or not.

And this includes League members. Seven out of ten Motion Picture News exhibitor readers haven't an iota of interest in the doings of national exhibitor organizations.

Why?

Because with each change in control of the League it is always some side-issue that steals the majority of the calendar months from the new president. And always organization work that suffers.

One time it may be a new trade paper; another, a new booking proposition; often nothing more important than Expositions; and this time a hair-splitting dicker with the National Association.

But each and every time it is the organization work that is neglected.

This time there is hope. We know Peter Schaefer is mad—mad at the time spent away from Chicago over this Association wrangle. We hope he is mad enough to go out and organize a one hundred per cent. Exhibitors' League. We know he is big enough to do it. Go to it—Pete.

Wasting Some Space

An Ontario official—by name M. McGarry—is considerably wrung up over the fact that motion pictures shown there invariably portray the actions of the American army both in the United States and overseas, and that on very few occasions are there any views of the Canadian army, nor is it often that one sees anything depicted on the screen here with regard to the British army.

In fact, so "hot up" has Brother McGarry become that "he will be obliged to instruct the Censors to cut out much of the material such as that which has recently been shown throughout the Province," unless more films showing the part played by Great Britain and Canada in the war are shown.

Some of our friends believe that we should say something about Brother McGarry. He really doesn't deserve it. We can think of no more appropriate comment than silence.

But since we have wasted this much space on him we might ask a question or two.

First—Mr. McGarry bases his action on solicitude for the tender feelings of Canadian patrons. Since Ontario exhibitors are in business to make money by pleasing their patrons, do they believe that any further solicitude is needed that what of the managers who book the pictures?

Second—It is true that the United States was in the war (Continued on next page)

but a short time while Great Britain and Canada bore the brunt for four years. But picture audiences—American as well as Canadian—have watched British and Canadian fighters for four years, and Americans but a few months.

And third—Does Mr. McGarry want picture producers to stage special productions for the Province of Ontario, with a population less than that of New York City?

Our Bothering Friend “Anonymous”

D o you remember that anonymous letter, signed “Exhibitor,” which we ran last week as part of the collection on the controversy started by J. A. Quinn?

We published it over editorial scruples because it poked gentle fun at the other writers. And we thought that would help “start something.”

It did—but not the right kind. For a valiant champion of First National tells us that the letter was a malicious attack on that organization. We didn’t see it then; we don’t now—but we agree with our friend who speaks up for First National.

There are no moral cowards among exhibitors.

An exhibitor would not be afraid to sign his name to an expression of opinion. So the letter must have been written by someone other than an exhibitor.

Take your pick.

TO THE EXHIBITORS AND THEATRE OWNERS OF THE UNITED STATES

As we go to press the following statement was received from Peter J. Schaefer, President of the Exhibitors Branch, N.A.M.P.I.:

At the National Association meeting it seemed to be conclusive to all the exhibitors present that the manufacturers and distributors would prefer to continue the present chaotic conditions rather than to endorse a movement that would organize the exhibitors’ branch of the industry in a proper manner. The manufacturers and distributors evidently fear that the exhibitors’ branch might not act fairly when so organized and might fail to exert the power that they would possess for the benefit of the whole industry.

Certainly the admission of this weakness on the part of the manufacturers and distributors is conclusive that it is necessary for the exhibitors of the United States to perfect an organization independent of all the others in the industry, in order to protect and encourage their business in every way possible.

The By-laws Committee of the Amalgamated Leagues will be asked to frame the new by-laws for the new Exhibitors’ League upon such a basis. It would become evident to every exhibitor and picture theatre owner in the United States that it is imperative for the future success of his own business to become identified with this movement at once.

We should control our own destinies and not be controlled. The result of these recent events must finally bring the realization to the exhibitors that they must act. I appeal to every exhibitor and theatre owner in the United States to join this new exhibitor movement—a movement that will make the exhibitors one of the most powerful organizations in the United States. It is well within their power so to be.

(Signed) PETER J. SCHAEFER.

New York, December 11, 1918.

P. S.—HOW WE ARE HANDLING THE TAX SITUATION:

A committee consisting of Alfred S. Black and myself have an appointment with Chairman Kitchin of the Ways and Means Committee, at Washington on December 13, when we shall appear especially in behalf of exhibitors to obtain reductions and eliminations on admission, reel and seating taxes as proposed in the new Revenue Bill.

Don’t forget that the House of Representatives has already passed a taxation bill that is ruinous to our business. While the Senate Finance Committee has since recommended some reduction from the tax bill as passed by the House, all pressure possible must be brought upon the members of Congress to relieve us from the burdens as proposed.

A letter from your Congressman and Senator will help. Don’t wait. ACT NOW.

Dealing in Personalities

WE could think of a lot of reasons for running this picture of Arthur James. But the actual one is that, viewing those striking inserts of “Eye for Eye” and “The Great Victory,” we thought it about time that somebody introduced the man who—

First used the colored insert in motion picture advertising week after week.

He’s guilty.

Arthur James likes inserts—and judging from the results, inserts like Arthur James. The only time Arthur doesn’t like inserts is when everybody else is using them.

Then he generally turns to something else, just to be original—and he usually is.

By the way, we have committed lese majesty or something or other all through this paragraph. We’ve been saying “Arthur James” when it should be “Captain Arthur James,” of the Seventh Regiment, New York State Guard.

Beg your pardon, Captain.

The De-Milles are in town. Jesse Lasky is in town. Material for a rumor story there. Write it yourself.

Bob Pritch will soon be found on the eighth floor of the Times Building, adjoining the National Association, “Moving to larger quarters because of expansion of business.”

Doc Willat leaves for Florida’s balmy air on December 21. ‘Sgramt to be a magnate.

Following the exclusive News story that Educational and Griffith had joined hands on a deal comes the rumor that E. W. Hammons and J. J. McCarrick are on the way East closely guarding a ten-reel masterpiece.

LLOYD WHITESIDE, who has been pounding a typewriter for Universal, left that company and New York flat last week to go searching for a pot of gold somewhere out in the Ozarks.

THE RECONSTRUCTION discussions of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Atlantic City last weekend were graced by the presence of Walter Irwin, John Flinn and Frederick H. Elliott.

AFTER stating—as usual—that we have a full and complete alibi for the unfortunate occurrence that resulted in a photo of Augustus Thomas being used a few weeks ago to illustrate a paragraph about Harry Raver, we will let you read the scorching call-down we received for the “bull”:

Dear Bob Raver:

Why illuminate my paragraph with the portrait of another?

Isn’t my old-fashioned face good enough for the occasion or were you afraid it wouldn’t lend the proper atmosphere to your highly eulogistic assault?

Thank God the crime you committed involved the man I admire and respect most in this life and I must feel complimented.

I tremble at the thought that you might have, by the same mistake, picked one of the “Harpoon” characters (disreputable things!).

Fervently,

Raver.
W. W. Irwin Resigns from Vitagraph

Retains His Stockholdings in the Organization, But Considers Starting Company of His Own—Plans a Rest Before Resuming Activities—Successor Not Named

The ever-changing tide of the motion picture industry last week witnessed the withdrawal of Walter W. Irwin from the Vitagraph organization, and later listened to Dane Gossip spread all sorts of rumors up and down the road as to who would succeed him. Up to the time of going to press a successor had not been named.

The resignation of Mr. Irwin, who was general manager and treasurer of Vitagraph, was handed in at a meeting of the Board of Directors held December 9, to take effect January 1, 1919. It is understood that he plans a rest before resuming film activities, which may mean the organization of his own company or association with a unit already on a sound footing.

The impression conveyed is that Mr. Irwin is as yet undecided which course he will take.

Business Differences

In a statement December 11 to the trade press Mr. Irwin declared continued and unalterable differences of judgment as to business policy caused him to request the acceptance of his resignation. It is understood, however, that Mr. Irwin retains his stock holdings in the Vitagraph Company.

It will be recalled that Mr. Irwin became the general manager and treasurer of the Vitagraph Company in April of 1915, opened its first branch office and continued to build the organization to its present status, with twenty-seven offices in the United States and Canada.

In a statement Mr. Irwin said: "Upon Mr. Irwin's career in the motion picture industry has been a most progressive and interesting one. In May of 1915, with the feature product of four manufacturers to handle, he introduced and developed its highest degree of efficiency, what was known as the 'open booking policy,' under which were sold the pictures of each producer, absolutely according to their drawing power or box office value, so that an exhibitor could have what he wanted, when he wanted it, for as long as he wanted it, and at a price commensurate with its merit. This open booking policy appealed so strongly to the exhibitor that many companies thereafter adopted it; but in September of 1916 when the Vitagraph Company bought the interests of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies in the sales organization, Mr. Irwin, with the product of but one manufacturer to handle, inaugurated what he termed the 'rotary star system,' but which is precisely the same as the 'star system' followed by several companies in 1917 and in operation today.

Mr. Irwin was likewise the first to create a profit sharing system, by which all of the employees of the sales organization shared in a definite percentage of the profits, and thereafter in 1917, in addition to the profit sharing, he introduced into his organization the bonus plan, by which each branch office received a percentage of the gross proceeds over and above a given quota assigned to it.

Built Strong Organization

"Upon the forming of the V. L. S. E. he began at once to build for a permanent organization by making the employees realize fully that advancement from the ranks was a fundamental principle of the company; that nothing counted but merit and that Mr. Irwin had no proteges. Prior to this time loyalty in distributing organizations had not been fostered, and almost every employee in that branch of the industry had worked at some time for every company in the business and continually jumped from one to another. The policy of advancement from the ranks, based solely on recognition of merit, together with the freedom of the organization from politics, quickly began to make for permanency, with the result that there are many branch managers today in the V. L. S. E. who have been with the company since the first month of its existence and who rose from the ranks.

"Mr. Irwin was the founder of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and of the present National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is and has been chairman of the Executive Committee since its formation.

"It was in May of 1915 that he called a meeting of producers and distributors in the projection room of his offices because of the censorship conditions then existing, and pointed out to those present that effective work for the protection and promotion of the industry could only be accomplished through co-operation brought about by a properly formed organization, and laid out a plan for a Board of Trade in which all branches of the industry would be properly represented and the right to co-operation, however, the industry was not then ready for the degree of co-operation which Mr. Irwin desired. At the time the Board of Trade was formed the producers did not know each other, and did not want to; the exhibitors, and the exhibitors considered the producers to be their natural enemies.

Points Out Mistakes

"About a year later, recognizing that it was absolutely essential for the various branches of the industry to come into real co-ordination upon censorship and other vital questions, Mr. Irwin called together at a luncheon at Sherry's eighty-five of the leading producers, distributors and exhibitors. This was the first meeting of the producers and distributors with exhibitors for the purpose of considering the protection and promotion of the industry as a whole. He pointed out the mistakes of the Board of Trade, and defined the principles upon which the National Association now exists. A committee to formulate the constitution and by-laws of the National Association was appointed at that luncheon, of which Mr. Irwin was his committee, and the working plan and constitution and by-laws of the present Association were formulated by Mr. Irwin and his committee.

In regard to his plan for the future, Mr. Irwin stated that he was considering an invitation to become interested in another organization. He also admitted that he possibly would create his own distributing organization, as he has many times been urged to do so, for the definite lines of product, a great deal of which has been offered to him.

He further said that the whole foreign market offered a tremendous field for development. That it is perfectly apparent that every producing company has practically treated its foreign business as a by-product, notwithstanding the fact that the population of Europe is so many times greater than the population of the United States and Canada, and that as a result the motion picture has not yet been adopted by all classes of Europe and other parts of the world as their chief means of entertainment and education; for in some countries only the classes enjoyed the picture, whereas the masses are almost totally ignorant of its value, while in England, for instance, it is only lately that the classes have begun to recognize the importance of the picture in motion. He pointed out that in this age of world democracy, with America possessing the good-will of all.

Plain Common Sense

And How It Changed A $10,000 A Year Fluver Into A $9,000 Winner For A Michigan Manager.

By HARRY SCOTT

Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Detroit, Mich.

He methods by which a Michigan exhibitor has converted a theatre losing $10,000 a year into a proposition which paid him $9,000 in profits for the twelve months just ended are worth the attention of any theatre owner for their lessons in common sense application of recognized business principles to the retail end of the film industry.

In this territory alone there are a score of exhibitors whom I know to be anchored to fixed policies and beliefs which are giving them profits of from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, when with a little initiative and mental effort, they could double their returns. There are other exhibitors who come into my office with the invariable complaint that they cannot make their theatres pay. They are always hard pressed to meet their film bills. Any suggestion that they book a big special attraction and put 25 per cent of the rental price into advertising and promotion work is rebuffed by their pessimistic theory that “the people in our town won't pay more than ten cents, and they'll come anyhow, whether I advertise or not.”

The man who has just completed a year's work as an exhibitor with a gross profit of $9,000 from a theatre which previously had lost $10,000 a year did only those things that any exhibitor can do to change the tide of fortune in his favor. There is nothing impossible in his accomplishment, nothing that is particularly unusual, unless it is the unfailing display of common sense he has. His house is in a typical small city, with a patronage that is equally typical of such a city. The chief difference his situation a year ago and that of the average exhibitor of today is in the public opinion he had to combat which classed his theatre as a failure and a sort of last resort when amusement was sought. This was the fault of his predecessor, who was one of the exhibitors that is always hard pressed to meet his film bills, and who could not understand the possibilities which exist in the doing of the unusual, unexpected things.

Several Managers in Three Years

Consequently, when W. S. Butterfield, head of the theatre circuit of that name, decided to buy the Garden theatre at Flint, Michigan, he did so partly through the opinions he had formed after a personal investigation, and partly on the recommendation of his general manager, Clarence W. Beatty. At Mr. Butterfield's request Mr. Beatty had thoroughly investigated local conditions, and he was prepared to back the opinion he had formed of the opportunity for progressive work. The Garden theatre had been managed by several different men during the three years prior to its purchase by Mr. Butterfield. This had not helped its popularity with local theatre-goers. And on the Saturday that the deal was consummated the house showed a loss of about $200 for the week.

The theatre was in good condition, with a choice location and a seating capacity of one hundred and two chairs. The first thing Mr. Beatty did was to examine the books—not the usual cursory examination to discover profits and losses, but with the analytical method by which he had convinced himself and Mr. Butterfield that The Garden theatre could be made to pay. He found that certain programs had been used, month after month, always at a loss. A policy of daily change had been maintained without regard for the merits and drawing power of the features used. The standing order with the exchanges for advertising matter he found to consist of two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet and one set of photographs and a slide. This order prevailed without respect to the quality and previously proven box-office value of the productions. He found, upon checking the files of every local newspaper, that very little advertising space had been used by The Garden. His earlier general survey of the situation showed him that his predecessor had done no billboard advertising, although Flint is a city of eighty thousand population, and therefore more than big enough to justify this form of publicity. Nor had the house ever boasted of a mailing list.

Briefly, he found just a theatre, with the standard physical equipment without which it could not operate, plus a good location and a reasonable capacity. But there was no motive power in it. He had purchased a rural Rolls Royce that needed gasoline of the mental kind to generate it into action. Mr. Butterfield had provided the vehicle and put it up to Mr. Beatty to contribute the power to develop momentum.

The. admission price had been ten cents straight, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays when the management had, for some unknown reason, shown sufficient nerve and courage to increase it to ten and fifteen cents, but without giving the public any better pictures at the increased price than he did for the smaller admissions during the week. Saturday and Sunday, in his mind at least, evidently cast some mysterious influence over his screen which resulted in the psychic betterment of the pictures. Of course, the public knew, understood, and agreed with this. This might be the case in New York, Boston, Chicago, or a really metropolitan city; but not in a town the size of Flint.

"Longer Runs" the First Step

Mr. Beatty is a pretty good hunter. He never pulls the trigger on his bird unless he is sure that the gun is loaded, cocked and accurately sighted. And he understands the differences necessary in powder for various kinds of game. That is why he is Mr. Butterfield's general manager. He decided that this particular local quarry could best be driven from cover by tri-weekly program changes, instead of the daily change, providing that the proper attractions were looked for, using the best available program productions on the two-day runs, and a special each week for the three-day runs. He figured that the extra day's run justified something more than the ordinary attraction. He knew this would be the psychological impression in the public mind. Prospective patrons would feel that a film shown for three days had greater quality than those used for but two days. And he did not propose to let them find out that they were anything but right in this interpretation of the reason for the three days' run each week. You see, he was digging just a little bit below the surface in his reasoning to get the relation between cause and effect.

He contracted for billboard locations by the year, made arrangements with hotels, cigar stands, ice cream parlors and drug stores for the display of neat bulletin boards announcing the current and coming programs at the theatre; new contracts were made with the newspapers which called for much greater return than this house ever had used before, and then, as the crowning extravagance to his mad financial dissipation, he actually employed the spare time of one of the local newspaper reporters to do something which...
Big Pictures at Big Prices

CONSIDERABLE newspaper space was given to the announcement of the three days’ run each week. He had booked such productions as “My Four Years in Germany,” “Tarzan of the Apes,” “War Brides,” “A Daughter of the Gods” and “The Crisis.” The admission price for “My Four Years in Germany was twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents. “Tarzan of the Apes sold out to standing room at every performance at twenty and thirty cents.

Mr. Beatty’s predecessor at The Garden had a contract for the First National Chaplin comedies at $50 a day. He continued this contract on the first one, “A Dog’s Life,” and then changed it so that he played “Shoulder Arms” during the first week of its reopening. They cost him more, of course, but he claims that it is well worth the price.

He opened the Garden theatre to the biggest crowd that had ever patronized any local house, and I know from his receipts that only about ten per cent of that first night’s audiences failed to get in for at least one show during the week.

Now I want to present another point on which Mr. Beatty differs from some exhibitors. He had worked hard in preparation for the opening of the theatre, but he did not feel that this was the most difficult part of his task. He knew that people will try anything once or twice. The big job is to hold them after they have started to patronize his show. So he settled down to a period of hard work. Remember, the Garden had had several different managers and as many grand openings of one kind or another in three years, and each time the public had come, looked, listened, went away and didn’t come back.

Momand to “Carry On”

THE next step in Mr. Beatty’s plan was C. Edgar Momand, who became the manager of the Garden. And to Mr. Momand is given the credit for keeping the Garden at top pitch as an amusement place. Mr. Beatty modestly refuses to be blamed for the success of the house after Mr. Momand had been installed. He sums up his part in the recent history of the place in this wise: “I got things started chiefly because there was no one else available at the moment to do it. It is just as big a job to keep a thing going as it is to get it under way. And Mr. Momand deserves all of the credit for the week-in and week-out success of the house. He has comparatively no co-operation from me in handling his bookings.”

Whether Mr. Momand is following Mr. Beatty’s ideas I do not know, but I do know that, whoever is responsible, the result is worth the study of any exhibitor. Following, briefly, are several things that are institutional at the Garden. The greatest care is given to the booking of short subjects to make up a program.
The value of a well-booked show is obvious, and the one and two-reel subjects are just as severely scrutinized as the feature attractions. The hiring of a new employee for work of any character in the theatre is similar to determining a candidate for the presidency. There are a score of factors considered, and the applicant has to be satisfactory in every particular before he or she is engaged. Ushers are constantly drilled in courtesy, they are taught what to anticipate in the nature of patrons’ wants, they are veritable catalogues of information on screen data, and they are consulted scores of times a day by patrons who want to know about stars, forthcoming productions or current attractions.
If one of them is asked a question he cannot answer, he makes a note of it, gets the information, and then the question and the answer are supplied to all of the ushers.

Personal neatness is insisted upon. A soiled collar, an unshaven chin, hair overly long, shoes untanned or trousers un-pressed are certain to be censured. The physical equipment of the house receives the same careful inspection every day.

“The Little Things Count”

All of this infinite attention to seemingly minor details has contributed a great deal to the recent success of the Garden. Mr. Momand tries not to overlook a single item, no matter how unimportant it may seem. He demands perfection in the pictures he shows, and he wants the same perfection in the atmosphere and surroundings in which he presents them.

Influenza Flareback Renews Agitation

Managers Fear Closing Orders in Many Sections—Cincinnati Bars Children—Northwest Situation Clouded

DETROIT, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Cincinnati were this week added to the list of cities reporting alarming signs of an influenza flareback and renewed agitation to close the theatres. It is also reported that 70 per cent. of the theatres in the Omaha territory are closed.

Cincinnati has already closed the schools and barred the children from theatres. San Diego amusement places have been allowed to open, but patrons must wear masks. Springfield, Illinois, Ogden, Utah, and Butte, Montana, are other cities still flying danger signals.

Green Bay, Wisconsin, gives a lesson to health authorities throughout the country in the remarkable results of the application of the quarantine to influenza cases. So quickly did the new cases drop to negligible figures, that bans on public gatherings were found unnecessary.

Fear Statewide Closing Order

Detroit, (Special).—It looks very much as though a statewide closing order will again be issued by the State Board of Health. It had, in fact, been planned to order every theatre closed Saturday, December 7th, but the health authorities were prevailed on to hold it off another week.

The situation in Michigan, according to the reports from Lansing, is that in some communities the “flp” is worse than ever before. It appears that a few cities, such as Pontiac and Bay City, have never been widely opened up.

The film exchanges have sent out one-sheet posters to every theatre in the state and managers are displaying slides and reading announcements asking their patrons to use every precaution to not only keep from spreading the disease, but to protect themselves.

If the state authorities order theatres closed but do not order everything else closed, injunction proceedings will undoubtedly be brought by the theatre owners, the exchanges and the dance hall proprietors on the ground of discrimination.

It is only in the last few days that cases of influenza have been quarantined, and it has been found that the last closing order was illegal because cases were not quarantined as the law demands.

It is a certainty that if the theatres are closed every church, school house, department store and industry where people meet, must be closed, if the lawyers for the picture men have their say.

Ohio Outlook Is Blue

CINCINNATI (Special).—A second ban on picture shows as the result of the influenza epidemic has hit Cincinnati motion picture shows. The Board of Health has ordered all schools closed and restricted attendance to persons sixteen years and over. No school children are allowed to attend the shows.

The health authorities in Newport, a Kentucky suburb immediately opposite Cincinnati, have enforced the same ruling, and word comes from Columbus, Ohio, that the same action has been taken there. Hamilton, Ohio, eighteen miles north of Cincinnati, has a grievance, and the motion picture devotees have joined hands with the managers in a movement to have the influenza ban in that city lifted. They claim that an injustice is being done the theatres, as the danger point has been passed.

Milwaukee Managers Cooperate

Milwaukee, Wis., (Special).—Milwaukee is again in the grip of the “flu.” Conditions this time are worse than during the previous epidemic, and unless they improve everything from churches to saloons will be closed tight. This was the warning issued Saturday, December 7th, by Health Commissioner George Ruhland at a meeting of the downtown photo play and theatre managers, called to consider the situation.

Commissioner Ruhland received assurance from the managers that they would do everything in their power to co-operate with him and prevent general shut-down of industries. The result was that Sunday saw all theatres playing, but to 75 per cent. of their capacity; ticket takers, at the outside lobby doors, allowing no chowders around the box offices, and signs and slides warning the public against the disease.

During the meeting the theatre men went to the health commissioner one better by requesting a general closing of everything immediately instead of waiting until Tuesday. Incidentally they made it plain that they were tired of being the goats during the application of half way measures, and could see no good reasons why the ban should be closed while saloons and department stores were allowed to remain open.

The managers stated that they thought that the only way to fight the epidemic was a complete closing of everything immediately, though agreeing to be guided by the health department’s opinion and cooperate with it thoroughly.

Twin City Exchanges Worried

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (Special).—Following the closing of twenty-two public schools by Health Commissioner Guilford, Wednesday, December 4th, rumors were current that the ban on motion picture theatres, recently lifted after being on the shelf for five weeks, might again be clamped on. Despite the fact that extractions had reduced during the past week many new cases of influenza have been reported in Minneapolis, and Mr. Guilford and the health council were scheduled to meet December 5th to decide whether to close theatres again or not. In St. Paul, where theatres were only closed eight days, it has also been rumored that the ban might be put on picture theatres again, but Mayor Hodgson, interviewed by the News’ representative, stated that such reports were entirely without foundation.

In several cities of the Northwest theatres have been allowed to open after being closed five weeks only to be shut up again by a new spread of influenza within the past ten days. On the Iron Range in Minnesota, considered one of the most prosperous theatrical districts in the entire country, the outlook is that the present winter will be the worst shown ever experienced.

Springfield Business Hit

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (Special).—A second epidemic of influenza is now sweeping Springfield and as a result the theatre business is demoralized.

Influenza Flareback Reviews Agitation

A meeting of the Influenza-Pneumonia Commission was called to talk over the matter of closing the playhouses again. When the theatre men were called upon for a statement, Arthur Fitzgerald, attorney for the amusement people, replied. Mr. Fitzgerald stated that the theatres should be allowed to co-operate in any way possible to check the epidemic, even to closing. But he added that if the theatres must close, so must the stores, the factories, mines and all places where crowds congregate.

After a long session, it was decided to allow the theatres to stay open, but signs would be posted in a conspicuous manner in the box office and lobbies calling attention to those who have coughs and colds and advising them to stay away.

These signs were posted in every theatre and business house, and a policeman was stationed at the theatre entrances and entrances to big stores to see that the ruling was carried out. As a result of all the agitation and sign posting, business has dropped until every playhouse in the city is running along at about fifty per cent decrease.

Business Booms in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Cal. (Special).—Los Angeles theatres opened December 2 and the first three days of the week offered to far greater business than had been anticipated by the managers. Judging from the report from other cities, Los Angeles theatremen did not expect a normal business, even though the theatres had been closed for almost eight weeks. All had the impression that in other cities where houses were closed, people were afraid to attend the theatres the opening week for fear of contracting influenza. The second week in other cities business was reported to be about normal, while the third week went ahead of the receipts previous to the close down.

The bills of the several downtown houses are as follows: Grauman's, Marguerite Clark's in "Out of a Clear Sky"; Sennett's 'Beware of Strangers," etc.; Clune's Broadway, Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane"; Tally's Broadway, Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots"; Rialto, Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl"; Kinema, Dorothy Dalton in "Vive La France"; Ray's Garden, Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins"; Alhambra, Robert Warwick in "Accidental Honeymoon"; Suppera, Monroe Salisbury in "Hugon the Mighty." Symphony, Dorothy Phillips in "Talk of the Town."

No special features were added to any of the local theatre programs for the first week, the general plan being that special programs would be given at a later date when it was thought they would draw bigger business.

Reports from Many Sections

Ogden, Utah (Special).—Local theatres are still closed as a result of the influenza epidemic but the expectation is strong among the managers that the ban will be lifted on Dec. 18.

Brady Resigns Presidency; League Quits Association

Failure to secure a quorum December 10 to vote on the question of the admission of the Exhibitors' League Branch to the National Association on a fifty-fifty basis resulted in a whirlwind of action.

William A. Brady, recently re-elected president of the National Association, read to the stenographer his resignation from that post.

Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, resigned from the Association and stated that the League would go on its own way in the future.

The action of the two executives came as the climax of a slimly attended meeting at which the air was constantly throbbing with possibilities for trouble.

For weeks past the manufacturers and producers in the Association are known to have been in frequent caucus on the question of the admission of the League to equal representation on the Executive Committee and Board of Directors. Many of the manufacturers are said to have been flatly opposed to this from the beginning, while others based their opposition on the allegation that the exhibitors would not consent to pay a pro rata share of the Association's expenses if admitted to fifty-fifty interest.

In the course of his remarks at Tuesday's meeting President Schaefer is said to have intimated that the producers got cold feet and instead of appearing and going on record agreed to stay away and prevent a quorum. After the meeting he declared: "We will go ahead full steam on the job of organizing the Exhibitors' League. I believe we will be better off without any entangling alliances."

The rumor spreaders have not even started on the task of electing a successor to William A. Brady as National Association head. Many inclined to the belief that sufficient pressure would be brought to bear to induce him to withdraw the resignation.

Following the meeting Peter Schaefer left for Washington, where he intends to do some work on behalf of the exhibitors in connection with the new revenue legislation.

If this is done it is certain that the city will still remain under a strict quarantine.

The situation has improved greatly here in the past few days and the state-wide ban was lifted on December 9.

San Diego, Cal. (Special).—The ban on theatres in this city was lifted on Dec. 9 and the houses opened the following day. But it hasn't meant much to business yet for the theatres are operating under the handicap of a rule which makes the wearing of a mask obligatory on all except when at home. This ordinance will continue in effect ten days.

The raising of the ban came as a surprise following the closing down of the theatres on Dec. 7, for the second time, because of the influenza epidemic. This order, which also affected schools, churches and all places of business except those handling necessities, was declared effective for five days. But improvement in conditions and the spirit of co-operation shown by the theatre and business men brought about the early relief.

Green Bay, Wis. (Special).—This city had two experiments at the closing of public places without showing any appreciable result in the fight against the influenza peril.

Then the City Council ordered a strict quarantine over all homes inhabited by persons with influenza. The ordinance went into effect Tuesday, December 3, and by December 7 the effect in reducing the number of new cases of the dangerous contagious disease had become apparent to the health authorities. The number of new cases of influenza dropped from 24 and 30 on December 2 and 3 to 5 on December 6.

With the adoption of the quarantine ordinance, the City Council lifted the ban which closed picture houses and other public places for a period of one week. The closing order was the second since the influenza epidemic broke out here in September. The new method of handling the situation precludes any possibility of future orders shutting up picture houses and other amusement places, and that fact is gratifying to the owners of houses who suffered financial loss when their houses were dark. The constant worry of the theatre owners and managers that they might be cut out of a revenue at any time under the old method of closing public places in an attempt to curb the epidemic is no longer with the owners and managers.
War Films Are Through—Brunet

Paul Brunet of Pathe Says Reconstruction Period Opens Up Larger Field, But War Films Are Through

While Motion Picture News published the views of several producers last issue, and they all predicted a long vogue for war films, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., believes that, to the contrary, the war films are through.

In response to the request of the Motion Picture News as to the probable effect of the reconstruction period upon motion pictures, Mr. Brunet made the following statement:

"First of all I believe it will mean the discontinuance of the war drama. The war theme has been worked into a majority of the pictures produced during the last two years. The public is tired of that; they have had enough war. This is evidenced by the mad rush of motion picture advertisers to disclaim that theirs is a war picture.

"The result of this lessened demand for the picture drama with the war theme will certainly mean much smaller returns to the producers and distributors of war pictures, many of whom have spent vast sums of money in producing and advertising the same.

"But, on the other hand, the reconstruction period upon which we are now entering opens up a greater, larger field than the world has known in four long years.

"During that period the industry has made great strides. While few people expected hostilities to cease for at least another year, many of the big producers and distributors have had their plans made for many months past to take up their new work upon the cessation of hostilities, and the task before them will not find them unprepared.

"While the industry may expect to bear the burden of taxation already imposed upon it, and which is reputed to have driven out of business many producers and about one-quarter of the exhibitors, it will now know where it stands, and can make its plans accordingly; it will no longer have to work under the uncertainty of not knowing just what additional burden will be placed upon it.

"New producing companies will undoubtedly spring up and the old ones will extend the scope of their operations. Everything points to a large increase in the volume of pictures produced, but as to the quality standard no one can now even guess.

"The foreign market will absorb a large part of the stuff on our shelves, which will enable the picture men to realize on the profit that has been tied up in the while the war lasted.

"Altogether I look upon the situation, both from the producing and distributing standpoint, as most favorable.

"The war has taught us many lessons and has given us many new ideas, and I believe we can expect to find these, to a very large extent, replace the hackneyed, threadbare themes which have been turned into motion pictures in various disguises for many years past."

War Pictures in Strong Demand?

E. Ratisborne, Delegate of the Cinematographic Division of French Army Says General Public Wants War Films

"Was it in the trade papers? Was it in the elevators of film buildings or in the reports of film executives that I heard that now the war is over, reports from all over the country were coming in to the effect that: ‘The public did not want to see any more war pictures.’ ‘The public wanted to forget all about the war.’ ‘The public was walking out on war pictures.’ ‘The public wanted a rest from the war,’ etc., etc.,” said E. Ratisborne, delegate of the Cinematographic Division of the French Army.

"As an ally, I have naturally taken a great interest in the war activities of this country as well as in its leaders. I am familiar with the achievements of President Wilson, Secretaries Baker, Daniels, Lansing. Messrs. Schwab, Hoover, Garfield, etc., etc., and I must confess that what I have seen and read has inspired me with great admiration for the men who, in such a short space of time, have become able to create the most formidable war organization in the world.

"Now, hearing so much lately in film centers about the ‘public being tired of war pictures,’ the ‘public this and the public that,’ I said to myself: ‘This public they speak of, much about must be quite an important personage and I had better look him up.’

"Well, I set out to look up ‘Public’ and ask him what he thought of war pictures. I stopped my friends, I stopped my friends’ friends. I went to the Strand, the Rialto, the Rivoli, the Palace theatre, always on the look out for this ‘Public’ who does not want to see war pictures any more.

"I am really getting desperate for so far I have not caught even a passing glimpse of this individual, who, according to report, is getting tired of seeing the glorification of America and her Allies—tired of being reminded of the sacrifice of life in the cause of liberty and democracy—tired of watching on the screen the immortal deeds of American youths—in short, the man who does not wish to see reenacted for the benefit of future generations those events which, through the boundless greed of ambition of one man, have plunged the world into the most fearful war ever experienced in history.

"Well, I must say that my mind is relieved at the thought that I have not been able to meet this personification of selfishness and avarice,” Mr. Ratisborne continued.

"In the name of all that is clean, healthy and inspiring, don't be deceived by those who take upon themselves to speak for the public and who fail to see that they must separate from their private interests the great public service that the moving picture better than the printed press can render to civilization.

"Let us thank God that we have the moral courage to look war pictures in the face.”
Lasky Urges Exhibitors to Tell Him the Facts—"We Want to Know."

December 9, 1918.

To the Editor,
Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir:

Permit me to extend an invitation to Mr. J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, and any exhibitor, singly, or any committee of exhibitors, to present any fact or argument to me personally which may bear upon the bettering of production methods and results.

Ever since the first Paramount organization the companies now merged in Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have used unremitting diligence in testing the box-office value of their pictures. Within the past year we have gone one step further and carried on an organized work of reaching the exhibitor personally in an effort to find out from him what would better our pictures in detail.

This work, under my personal supervision, is in the hands of Mr. George N. Shorey, who did similar work very successfully for Motion Picture News. Your readers know his picture judgment through reviews by him in the News. For eight years Mr. Shorey has been actively an exhibitor.

We purposely placed this work in the hands of a man whose personal sympathy is entirely with the exhibitor. He sees things as the exhibitor sees them. He is as frank with us as he expects his brother exhibitors to be with him. He asks his brother exhibitors how they really feel about our productions, and then he asks them to tell him how they would improve them. His favorite request of exhibitors is that they give him, so far as they can, "exhibitor experience plus audience viewpoint."

Making pictures is not an exact science. It is not always possible to transfer story thought to the screen with all the values of the original. Many individuals have to do with the making or marring of the intangible "idea." But by law of averages the success of a production, financially, depends on facts which can be applied to production more generally than they have been in the past. We have employed Mr. Shorey to supplement our knowledge of these facts or principles from the limitless fund of experience known only to the exhibitor.

The only doubt we have ever had upon the wisdom of consulting the exhibitor at every point is the often asserted "prejudice"—which exhibitors themselves have asserted dims the power of vision of the exhibitor.

We now know from the startling unanimity of reply of exhibitors in all sections of the country upon certain points that the intelligent exhibitor of today—the successful exhibitor, be he in larger or smaller city—is not to be feared as an individual who would advise against his own best interests. We want more facts and suggestions from exhibitors. We can use them ALL.

Cordially yours,

Jesse L. Lasky.

The Last Anonymous Letter That Motion Picture News Will Print.

(The producer who wrote this letter got cold feet at the last moment and phoned, "I'd rather you wouldn't use my name with that letter." And having published an anonymous letter signed "Exhibitor" last week we thought it fair to run this one, even if the signature is only "Producer." With it we serve notice that we will print no more anonymous communications.)

Editor,
Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir:

I have been watching with interest the manner in which the showmen, big and little, who have gotten into the discussion provoked by the Quinn letter have been camouflageing their lack of showmanship by joining in a free-for-all attack upon the producer.

With just one exception—and I shall name him presently—your correspondents place the onus of the difficulties under which the industry is now laboring upon the manufacturers. The latter are charged with being guilty of the most heinous waste and extravagance. They are charged with being the poorest specimen of the genus business man that this world has ever known, and all arguments if these producers could be done away with forthwith the millennium will have dawned and that henceforth the path of the exhibitors would be indeed strewn with roses.

But DOES the exhibitor pay for the manufacturers' mistakes? As a man whose film experience goes back to 1905, I emphatically say NO!

Here is an angle of the argument that does not seem to have occurred to the average exhibitor. The cost of a feature does NOT enter into the determination of the final selling price. Sales executives who have handled both expensive and inexpensive productions will readily agree with me on this.

When a producer does not really put forth a big enough campaign, does not really emphasize features which, nevertheless, sold at junk film rentals? And who does not know of comparatively inexpensive features which nevertheless commanded top-notch rentals?

Except in the case of the unusual and out-of-the-ordinary production, there isn't a picture on the market that will not average—say $10 per booking! At that I am two dollars and a half too high, according to the almost tearful assurance given to me by the sales manager of a certain other big film organization.

Ten dollars per booking—and in order to obtain this average we've got to consider the price paid by the big first-run exhibitor. An exhibitor considering, even his rental price is nothing startling! Think of the thousands of bookings UNDER ten dollars—and then show me wherein the producer is guilty of profiteering or how he can be said to be making the exhibitor pay for the waste and extravagance which undoubtedly does exist in the producing end of the business.

Yes, somebody DOES pay for this waste, but it isn't the exhibitor. Make no mistake about that. It's the stockholder in the film company guilty of this waste, who, as the mellor-drama has it, pays and pays and pays!

Let us leave this phase of the argument for a moment and take up Mr. Quinn's contention that there is a scarcity of good pictures on the market. I wonder how many pictures Mr. Quinn views in the course of a day, because his statement is manifestly absurd.

Good pictures aplenty are regularly produced. What IS lacking is good advertising and, let me add, SHOWMANTSHIP. I have repeatedly seen exhibitors book meritorious productions which they obtained at exceedingly moderate rentals and, despite the fact that these films lacked world-famous stars, proceeded to break all box-office records. The secret lay in the fact that they ADVERTISED AS GOOD SHOWMEN SHOULD.

My knowledge of the exhibitor has taught me this. He—and now I refer to the average exhibitor—totally lacks initiative. Instead of using his brains, he is inclined to rely entirely for business on the popularity of the star featured in the production, or else on its title. He bases his opinion upon the result, even though proper exploitation would have made the picture a clean-up.

Mr. Quinn mentions "HEARTS OF THE WORLD" as an example of the kind of pictures for which the public hunger. This exhibitor, however, does not seem to realize that but for the marvelous advertising and publicity campaign which preceded the release of this feature—a campaign which had its inception months before Griffith shot a single foot of film—"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" might have faded from view unknown and unsung. Pictures galore, possessing the same heart interest and presenting the same powerful appeal to the emotions, have passed by like ships in the night because they were not properly exploited.

Reverting back to the question of whether the exhibitor pays for the producer's extravagance, here is a fact I want to bring to the attention of the Quinns of the business:

Touring With Goldfish and Rothapfel

The joint trip of Samuel Goldfish and S. L. Rothapfel, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rivoli and Rialto theatres, has become a triumphal procession, reports to Goldwyn's home office indicate. Everywhere they are being greeted by enthusiastic gatherings of exhibitors, newspaper critics and business men.

"The trip got a whirlwind start at Cleveland, where more than 250 persons attended a luncheon at the Hotel Winton. Gifts of honor were Mr. Goldfish, Mr. Rothapfel and Will Rogers, star of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who recently made his motion picture debut under Goldwyn auspices in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," and who happened to be in Cleveland with the 'Follies.' Also present was Ann Pennington, bright part in the feminine feature of the Ziegfeld show.

The luncheon was under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, of which H. H. Lustig is president. Messrs. Goldfish, Rothapfel and Rogers and Miss Pennington were filmed for the Plain-Dealer news weekly after Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel had spoken on the subject of producer-exhibitor co-operation. H. C. Horater, the Toledo exhibitor, made a speech, and Will Rogers also talked, and got a lot of laughs. Mr. Lustig was toastmaster. H. A. Bandy, Goldwyn's Cleveland manager, and Joseph Grossman, first-run exhibitor, were called on.

As a surprise for the luncheon guests, The Cleveland News published and circulated at the luncheon a two-page newspaper called "The Goldfish Globe." It contained a half-page group cartoon of the celebrities present and several columns of humorous "news" matter.

It was an unmistakable "Goldfish week" in Cleveland when the visitors from the East arrived. Mabel Normand, in "A Perfect 36," was playing first-run to big business at Joseph Grossman's Standard theatre. Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," with Will Rogers, was showing its important second-run at the Knickerbocker theatre, and there were also playing Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth" at the Cedar theatre; Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel" at the Crown; Mae Marsh in "Money Mad" at the Homeostad. In Cleveland there are 151 theatres, and Goldwyn pictures are served to 76 of this number regularly under contract.

The next stop was at Chicago, where Mr. Goldfish met 100 exhibitors of Chicago and the surrounding territory. There was a luncheon at the Hotel Blackstone at which speeches were made. Aaron J. Jones, president of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer Company, and Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Bros., were among those present, as was L. Van Ronkel, Chicago manager for Goldwyn.

The next day there was another banquet at the Wisconsin Hotel in Milwaukee, and two days later still another at the Radisson Hotel in Minneapolis. In the latter city arrangements were in the hands of Ruten & Frankenstein, Goldwyn first-run exhibitors, and John W. Hicks, Jr., branch manager there. At the conclusion of festivities Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel left for the long jump to Seattle.

The Cleveland Report

Cleveland, December 4: If coming events cast their shadows before, and it is said that they do, then the occurrences in Cleveland during the past twelve hours are going to have a revolutionary effect upon the motion picture business.

There was a preponderance of movie magnates in the city last Wednesday when Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York; Will Rogers, a Goldwyn star, playing at the Opera House this week with the "Ziegfeld Follies" and Anne Pennington, also a footlight and screen satellite, all foraged together at a luncheon given at the Winton Hotel under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland.

"This was the first of a dinner that a producer and an actor have appeared together publicly," were Mr. Goldfish's introductory remarks after being called upon by Henry H. Lustig, president of the Exhibitors' League, for a speech. "The only remarkable part about the circumstance is that three members of the three different branches of the industry are meeting together in harmony."

These few words immediately broke the ice, and informality held sway from that time on. Mr. Goldfish then went on to say:

"I am glad to see so many exhibitors gathered together for some purpose other than to cut the price of a picture. (Laughter.) In fact, I confess that I expected to see a large representation of exhibitors during my brief stay in Cleveland, but I did not think that my coming was of sufficient importance to stop the cars running in my honor. (This has reference to the street car strike that occurred last Monday).

"I am glad to see that the exhibitors of Cleveland are so well organized as to have such a representation as is present today. Organization is the corner-stone of any growing industry. The industry must be so organized as to make for a better understanding between the exhibitor and the producer. The producer is not so in need of organization as is the exhibitor, because it is the exhibitor who is the mainstay of the industry. If the exhibitor refuses to run a producer's pictures, the producer has no other market for his product. He must listen to the demand of the exhibitor for that reason. But, in making his demands, the exhibitor must offer sufficient inducement to the producer in order to produce pictures. If the exhibitor refuses to pay enough so as to assure the producer a legitimate profit, what incentive has he to go on making pictures?

"Organization is what is needed, but constructive organization. The exhibitor should not get together to fight the producer—that is tearing down process. The kind of organization that is needed is one of harmony between the branches of the industry; one that works together; one that builds up a permanent structure because each is working for the good of every branch, not for the supremacy of one branch.

"The producer is just as anxious to co-operate with the exhibitor as the exhibitor is to co-operate with the producer. It's a fifty-fifty proposition, because unless you exhibitors succeed and continue to show pictures on your screen we cannot make pictures."

"Never has the producer been more in need of co-operation with the various branches of the industry than he is today," continued Mr. Goldfish in a more serious strain. "There isn't a producer in the country that has paid a cent in dividends in the past two years. You exhibitors probably did not know that, but it is a fact. We are facing a crisis—a serious crisis, and we must have your support to pull through it successfully. If you exhibitors get together and decide that you won't pay over, say, $25 or $50 for a picture, what will be the result? We will make $25 and $50 pictures for you; but you don't want to do that, because that would not be a constructive policy. It would not make for progress. No industry stands still. It either progresses or retrogresses. We want the motion picture business to go forward, and in order to do that we must stand together; we must have constructive co-operation."

In conclusion, Mr. Goldfish admitted that his corporation was not perfect—that there were flaws and errors and mistakes, but he asked the exhibitors not to expect the impossible; that is, not to expect any producing company to make fifty-two per cent pictures every year. He also requested that if any exhibitor, at any time, has any complaint to make against the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, or against any one representing the Goldwyn Pic-

Convention Lauds Pictures for Their Help in War—Irwin, Flinn, Smith and Elliott Committee Representing Films—Resolutions Adopted

THE results ascertained in the accomplishments of the motion picture industry as an arm of the Government in the time of war and as an art requiring freedom from all restrictions in times of peace, were summed up in a resolution submitted and adopted in Atlantic City at the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress under the auspices of the United States Chamber of Commerce. In the four days of the convention in which more than 5,500 of the leading business men of the United States participated, and in which 232 different industries were represented, the motion picture industry was classified by this as related group No. 37.

The committee representing the industry was composed of Walter W. Irwin, Chairman, General Manager of the Vitagraph Company of America; John C. Flinn, Secretary, Director of Publicity and Advertising Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William C. Smith, Speaker, General Manager Nicholas Power Machine Company, and Fred H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The resolutions as drawn were submitted and accepted by the major group No. 10 in session at the Hotel Chalmont on Thursday night. The resolutions follow:

Irwin Hits Competition

On Thursday, December 5, Walter W. Irwin, as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Representative of the Industry to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress of the United States Chamber of Commerce, introduced the resolution resolutions vigorously protesting against United States Government competition, through the Committee on Public Information, with the Motion Picture Industry, urging the Government to cease such competition and likewise urging the abolition of the entire censorship system now in existence in the United States.

The substance of these resolutions was conveyed at a meeting of a Committee of the Motion Picture Industry representatives, at the Hotel Traymore in Atlantic City, on Wednesday evening, December 4. Those present were Walter W. Irwin, chairman; John C. Flinn, secretary; William C. Smith, speaker, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. After a discussion of the substance of the resolutions, Mr. Irwin drafted the resolutions and presented them to the Convention on Thursday morning.

The presentation of these resolutions to the greatest assembly of business men that the country has ever seen brings to the direct attention of the leaders of national industry two of the most vital problems confronting the Motion Picture Industry.

Helped in the Loan

The clear-cut ringing terms of the resolutions sound no alarmism. From the recital of the industry's share in constructive war work of every sort, to the thoroughly just and sharply drawn demands of the resolutions for the full recognition of the industry's rights, the resolutions are of such force and clarity that the most far-reaching results may be expected from their introduction to the Industrial Congress assembled in Atlantic City.

Resolutions—Resolutions respectfully submitted for adoption to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress, at Atlantic City, New Jersey, December 5, 1918, by the Motion Picture Industry, Related Group Number 37, Walter W. Irwin, chairman; John C. Flinn, secretary; William C. Smith, speaker.

WHEREAS, The Motion Picture Industry along with other industries of the country mobilized itself upon our entrance into the war, for the purpose of rendering the greatest cooperation with, and service to the National Government; and

WHEREAS, The substantial result now accomplished has been acknowledged by public statements and in writing by the President of the United States, and by various of the cabinet officers and heads of departments and bureaus, and other semi-official and coordinated agencies; and

WHEREAS, Such work undertaken and accomplished consisted substantially of the following:

1. Treasury Department.
   First Liberty Loan; Distribution without charge to, and exhibition in 13,000 motion picture theatres of 30,000 colored slides and of 8,000 copies of a 70-foot motion picture of President Wilson, carrying a patriotic appeal.
   Second Liberty Loan; Distribution without charge in all motion picture theatres of 70,000 colored slides and of 500 copies of five specially-prepared subjects, each 500 feet in length, in which leading stars of the industry appeared in dramatic episodes. These were produced by the industry and contributed to the Government.
   Third Liberty Loan; Distributed without charge to all motion picture theatres, 17,000 copies of a short motion picture of Secretary McAdoo delivering an appeal, specially prepared by him for the purpose. Distributed without charge 17,200 sets of posters (five to a set). These were posted in the lobbies or on the exteriors of all motion picture theatres throughout the United States.

2. Food Administration.
   Distributed to all motion picture theatres, without charge, several thousand copies of short motion pictures and many thousands of slides, conveying to the public the necessity for the conservation of food.

3. Department of Agriculture.
   Extensive distribution of slides and film trailers. This work is still in progress.

4. Fuel Administration.
   Extensive distribution of slides and film trailers. New work of this character recently undertaken by Government.

5. War and Navy Departments.
   Wide distribution of specially prepared pictures, slides and posters pertaining to recruiting and physical and moral welfare.

6. Four-Minute Men Organization.
   Fifteen thousand men and women daily seen the motion picture theatres for various national purposes.

7. Red Cross.
   In the first drive 300 copies of a motion picture entitled "The Spirit of the Red Cross" were distributed throughout the country without charge by distributors.

In the second drive, a similar distribution occurred of 400 prints of one subject and of 1,000 prints of a second subject.

8. The same cooperation occurred with the Departments of the Interior and of Labor, the Aircraft Production Board, the Commerce Economy Board, the Committee on Training Camp Activities, and other departments and bureaus.

9. The picture in motion was shown to our boys in the trenches and in cantonments, on the transports and in the hospitals. In the latter case a projection machine was wheeled into the ward and the picture projected upon the ceiling in order that the boys lying on their backs could gain both relief and recreation; and ures Corporation, that such complaint should be filed with him, and he would see that it was always be the boast.

"The home office of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is on the level with the exhibitor. Write the association if you feel you are not getting just treatment."

"The ace exhibitor," is the way Mr. Rothapfel speaks of the exhibitors who attended the famous movie luncheon. "An ace," said Mr. Lustig in his introduction, "is an aviator of the first class. Mr. Rothapfel has attained the highest place among exhibitors, and the same title should be bestowed upon him."

Whereupon Mr. Rothapfel took the floor, and after a few shots at Mr. Goldfish, because he had just signed a contract for the Tom Moore pictures, and the transcontinental transcontinental, this surprising couple, has only commenced, he started right in to roast the exhibitors. Not any particular exhibitor, but all exhibitors.

"The trouble with you fellows is," Rothapfel said, "that you are in a rut. For that matter so are producers in a rut. The exchanges are in a rut. The whole industry is in a rut. But there's a remedy. And that is, you have got to get away from the way you are now doing. You've got to get away from the fact that you are putting on a show, and simply collecting the money at the door. You've got to make your theatre an institution. And until you do that, you are not a success. Your house must be so much of an institution that you can figure on so-and-so much average profit every day in the week, not only on those days when you are running the big stars. In order to be a success, you have got to do a thing differently a star in the picture. It isn't the first-run release. So many exhibitors are afraid of second runs. Why, second runs are just as good as first runs, So Long as You Present Them Differently than they were presented the theatre that I'm talking about. I've tried out my theory, and it's proved successful.

"I have often been asked the secret of my success. Shall I tell you what it is? Success is psychology applied to business. Success is nothing other than common sense used in connection with your business. The psychology applied to business is simply doing the right thing at the right time, and doing the right thing at the right time spells success."

"There's a big fallacy in the way the average exhibitor attacks his work. He starts out with the premise that he must give the public what it wants. That's all wrong. You don't know what the public wants. The public doesn't know what it wants. But you, as an exhibitor, must create a taste, and then supply it. The only way you can succeed in doing this is to do the right thing differently than it has ever been done before."

"Another thing that is necessary to success is constant application to your busi-
Hammons Returns from Trip to Coast

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, returned December 9 from his Los Angeles trip and will announce directly after the holidays the release plans of "The Key to Power," Miss Caroline Gentry, co-author of the feature with E. Lloyd Sheldon, took the picture to Washington, D. C., West Virginia and Greater New York. Arrangements are now being made for a Broadway pre-release.

Mr. Hammons said of his California trip:

"The short reel releases of the Educational Films will be materially increased and strengthened as the result of my visit. I found Los Angeles studio conditions excellent. Most of the local picture theatres were reopening or being enlarged, a sign of the dwindling of the epidemic. Among the high points of the trip were visits to the Chaplins and to Grauman's million-dollar theatre. Through study of the conditions in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, I am firmly convinced that the film industry is entering upon a new era of unprecedented prosperity. In that new era Educations will play an ever more prominent role, not only as worth-while entertainment in picture houses, but also as a means of popular instruction."

A. M. P. Advertisers Issue Film Year Book

At the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's, copies of the Association's thirty-two page book, long delayed, according to Chairman Paul Gulick of the Committee on Publication, account on the scarcity of Copenhagen blue in the color market, were distributed to the members.

The book, besides being an attractive example of the printer's art, is said to contain an abundance of interesting information regarding the Association, including a brief history of the organization since its inception in August, 1916; a chronology of the year's activities, the constitution and by-laws, a tribute to the members in the military and naval service, list of officers and standing committees, individual portraits of all the members, etc.

The cover, designed by Burton Rice, presents a background of newspaper headings. On the front cover is the monogram of the Association and on the back is the set of tickets for the first trip and will announce direct reissues of pictures to which the stars represent. Chinese vermilion and Copenhagen blue are the colors used, it is stated on Mr. Gulick's authority.

Harry Reinichen, who has just returned from the west coast trip, has been employed in propaganda work for the Committee on Public Information, gave an interesting sketch of the labors of himself and associates.

Siegell Back in Buffalo

Otto A. Siegell, former assistant manager of the Buffalo, Y. M. C. A. office, has returned to the city from CannonMcCellen and is trying to forget soldier life in the Buffalo office of the Goldwyn company, where he is now employed as salesman.
DENVER is badly in need of photoplay news. It is one of the liveliest cities in the whole country, with a number of splendid theatres and a motion picture going public that ranks with the highest class in the country. Yet the newspapers fail almost completely to show that they are interested in giving the photoplay fan any attention.

Denver has a census population of 245,523, but it is considerably larger than that now. There are only four newspapers, two of them, the Post and the Times, being under the same ownership. Certainly a combination of those two papers, one morning and the other afternoon, could be in a position to employ a real advertising and editorial expert on motion picture matters and to give the theatres the attention they deserve.

The leading theatres show an inclination to do mighty good advertising, but they do not get a great deal in return. A survey of the newspapers seems to show that nothing has been done to develop the sales to such of the smaller houses. Another disappointing thing about the situation is the evident inclination on the part of the papers to rank the legitimate as the main thing and let the photoplay take its chances, although the picture houses contribute the great majority of the advertising.

Here are the Denver newspapers, with the circulation as given by the Lord and Thomas directory:

Express, Afternoon (18,592).
Post, Morning (95,798) and Sunday (122,691).
Rocky Mountain News, Morning (30,438) and Sunday (52,937).
Times, Afternoon (36,828).

Six motion picture houses do the bulk of the business of Denver. They are the America, Rialto, Rivoli, Strand, Isis and Princess. They are practically the only advertisers.

Now a city like this presents something of a problem to a newspaper. Here is a case where nothing has apparently been done to get the advertising of the smaller houses. We can imagine the advertising manager of the newspapers saying:

"Here we have the big houses advertising regularly. We don't have to worry about preparing their copy and we don't have to worry about getting our money. To go out and get the business of the little fellows we would first have to put up a strong 'selling argument,' then we would have to show them how to advertise until they got in the habit and we would have to watch our collections carefully."

Then he probably would add: "And the big houses wouldn't like it if we put the smaller ones into keener competition with them."

So let us take this argument first. Development of the advertising of ALL the theatres in a city—provided the newspaper accords the proper sort of co-operation—has been proven time after time to help the others, the bigger houses, instead of hurting them. We had the same experience in a city somewhat larger than Denver where a plan was started to develop the neighborhood houses into advertisers. There was some complaint from the downtown houses, who feared that this would hurt their business. Not only was this not the case. To this advertising alone of the neighborhood houses was due the increase of business of the downtown houses to such an extent that within a year two handsome new theatres, larger than any of the older ones, were opened. And the neighborhood theatres profited from their advertising.

"But the co-operation is essential. The papers that did this were printing real photoplay sections, giving the fans the sort of matter that they wanted to read and increasing the interest in photoplays generally so that ALL of the theatres profited from that matter.

In theory, at least, a newspaper strives to be a complete newspaper, to interest every subscriber. It is not necessary to repeat here the interest in the photoplay and the argument for printing other matter than the straight press news in the theatres. But there is another angle, the advertising.

How much greater interest do you think there would be in a newspaper if it carried the advertising of every motion picture house in its territory. It would have the immediate support of every person who attended any of the theatres with any degree of regularity. It would be looked upon as a daily reference guide—it would be as indispensable as the telephone directory. The newspaper that would carry this complete advertising would be worth a great deal more to the paper manager than the paper that is not thoroughly read by the thousands of photoplay fans.

There is another point that is too seldom taken into account by papers in cities like Denver. Especially the Sunday issues of these papers have considerable circulation outside the city of publication. It is bound to be the case that there is a share of the purely local news that is of no interest to the outside reader, and to offset this it is used to be the habit of papers of this class to print on Sundays a large mass of the social correspondence in order to hold the interest of the outlying territory. It was then the theory that the more of that purely local matter that the paper could print, the greater circulation it would have in each community. That was a very good proposition, but the trouble with it was the mass of type setting and the bulk of white paper that was required to cover the field.

Since those days the newspapers have gone to the other practice—that of trying to print the most material that will interest the most readers.

Certainly there can be no argument about the interest in the motion picture. We are not afraid to make the statements that there are hundreds of readers of the Sunday issues of the Denver papers who seldom get the chance to go to a motion picture, because there is no theatre at hand, who would show the most eager interest in a photoplay section that really covers the field.

And equally sure is it that the increased advertising that they would get by developing the field to its fullest would certainly more than pay the Post and its afternoon sister for all the expense. Issues of the papers that we have reproduced announced the re-opening of the theatres after the "flu" ban, and therefore the advertising is somewhat different from usual.

A glance at the amusement page of the Post shows that practically all of the page is devoted to the legitimate theatre. There is a column of "Close-ups," short items about motion picture people and productions, but it appears to be carelessly edited. One item has evidently been clipped from a New York paper and uses the word "here," meaning New York. Other items about scenario editors and the like seem of little interest to the average fan.

But the glaring thing that strikes us about this page is that the cuts are all pure advertising and are so marketable than the paper that says to the theatres:

"You get nothing here unless you pay for it. We are not interested in what our readers want, but you are looking only for free stuff. If you want any picture matter printed you will have to pay for it!"

A newspaper that takes such an attitude is hopeless so far as really serving the interests and desires of the public.

Motion picture and theatre advertising is mixed together, along with the local advertising and is placed on two different pages. (Continued on page 3686)
These Papers Get the Advertising But They Give Nothing Away

At the top there are three pages from the Sunday Denver Post, then three pages from the Rocky Mountain News. At the bottom a page from the Saturday Express and Saturday and Wednesday pages from the News, the latter showing the during the week advertising.
Leading Denver Theatres Are Liberal With Their Advertising, But Newspapers There Do Nothing

With the exception of the Strand the Denver theatres do not use name-plates in their advertising, but they use plenty of cuts of the stars, and the advertising is generally attractive.

For instance, the America uses seven inches across four columns for a combination still including Chaplin and Alice Joyce. There is no unnecessary type matter used and the pictures of the two players are attractively displayed.

The Isis has a habit that also prevails in a few other cities, that of putting dashes between the letters: 1—S—1—S. We have never yet been able to discover the reason for this unless there is some suspicion that the readers may not know how to spell the name. Certainly the practice results in a messy appearance of every advertisement in which it is used. That is one of the reasons who we do not care for five-inch, double-column display that it used.

On this same page are 1/2-inch displays for the Weber, Thompson and Ogden, announcing the current attractions. The rest of the displays are from vaudeville and legitimate houses, though the Broadway is now playing motion pictures.

Rialto dominates the second advertising page with its two displays on “America’s Answer.” Rivoli uses seven inches double, Princess six and the Strand five, all double.

Three pages are likewise reproduced from the Sunday Rocky Mountain News. This paper gives the photoplay even less than the Post. There are only reading notices grouped under a single heading. There is a layout on legitimate and vaudeville attractions, but the photoplay is unrepresented. It carries practically the same advertising as the Post. In the issue from which we have taken the page it was merely announcing the reopening of the houses, and six of them are grouped in the same advertisement. There is no motion picture news matter.

The same is true of the Saturday edition of the Times. There is a layout on the legitimate and vaudeville, but the photoplay is ignored.

Now to show you that the Denver leading theatres do good and liberal advertising during the week, we are reproducing a page from the Wednesday News, just about the same advertising being used in the three leading papers. It will be noted that there is more than a half page of motion picture advertising here, yet the two-column layout appearing on this page is devoted entirely to vaudeville and legitimate, with a total advertising representation of 4 1/4 inches.

In all of the papers at hand we find never less than two columns of display matter in any of them, but we find regularly an entire absence of anything that resembles motion picture news matter except a few Monday reviews.

In brief, there could not be less evidence of cooperation than there is in Denver.

About all that we can see in the situation there is—AN OPPORTUNITY.

President’s Ship Does Share in Exploiting “Mickey”

When the liner “George Washington,” carrying President Wilson, America’s representative to the peace council, and a number of distinguished men, sailed from New York harbor it carried another portion of the widespread exploitation for “Mickey.” The campaign carried out on the shipboard was similar to that arranged for theatres that book the production.

Arrangements were made through Chief Radio Operator S. Rose and Kenneth MacLarney, who is in charge of entertainment on the liner to carry out the complete plan. Even 24-sheets on the picture were prominently displayed in various portions of the boat. Two thousand copies of the song were supplied so that every one on board would be familiar with the words.

Kaiser Hung in Effigy Gets Much Publicity in Washington

HANGING the Kaiser in effigy was a novel stunt used by the Leader theatre, of Washington, D. C., as part of a local advertising and publicity campaign that brought capacity business during its entire run on “The Kaiser’s Finish," the special eight-part State rights production controlled by A. Warner.

The lobby of the Leader theatre was decorated with cut-out effigies from the three-sheet poster, showing the ex-Kaiser and crown prince at the height of a quarrel, supplemented by one-sheets and two sizes of lobby display cards. Across the front of the lobby, and outside, were hung two six-sheets, flanked on either side by three-sheets.

From a beam placed outside and above the lobby the effigy of the former Hun ruler was hung by the neck. The figure attracted great crowds to the theatre, and proved such an object of interest that the Washington newspapers sent staff photographers to make "shots" of it. These were published during the week the picture was run with the results of publicity, added to the regular advertising by the house, packed the theatre at every performance.

The production is playing to phenomenal business in every house in which it has been booked in the Washington territory, according to Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, which controls the rights for that district.

Regular Trenches Before Theatres for “Shoulder Arms”

Manager Herschel Stuart transformed the front of the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Tex., into a scene on the European battle front during the showing of the new Charlie Chaplin picture, “Shoulder Arms.” Trenches were built of sand bags and the “dug outs,” which were really the theatre doors, were labelled with the fanciful names that have been given by the soldiers to their homes along the battle line. Ushers were garbed in khaki for the occasion.

The Old Mill has been responsible for some striking lobby displays, but this is one of the very best that Mr. Stuart has put over.

Detroit Theatre Gives Patrons Chance to Be “Stars”

Something new in the line of a movie contest, at least so far as Detroit is concerned, was inaugrated there last week. The contest was put on by the Coloinial theatres management. About two weeks earlier a scenario was printed and this week the men and women who desire to “act” were placed on the stage at the different shows and told to perform. A few showed cleverness but most of the contestants did nothing, but provide last winter for the audiences. The contestants have to stage their little play in two minutes. A cameraman lends realism to the scene.
What Live Wires are Doing

You will note that the same style of type is used through the advertisement almost without exception in the heavier display and that is a mighty good point. The only suggestion that we would make to the Strand would be to use a name plate. We are mighty strong for that idea.

Let's don't run our theatres in Hel-I-Go dand.

COLONIAL THEATRE, Toledo, Ohio, did a big advertising campaign on Theda Bara in Salome, using large space in the daily as well as in the Sunday issues. This was one of the displays that was used in the advance campaign and therefore it does not come under the same requirements as would a display during the engagement. It was intended to be in a measure teaser advertising, for there is nothing about the picture except the line "Seven Veils Fell From Her and Still She Danced." The cut of Miss Bara, her name and the title are attractively displayed, the black and white effects being used so as to get immediate attention.

Nearly a half page was used on the Sunday of the opening and all during the week there was large space going into detail about the offering and telling of the crowds that were packing the Colonial. The success of the engagement proves that it pays to conduct advance campaigns on unusual pictures. And when you do this, follow the example of the Colonial and do not try to tell everything about the picture in these earlier displays, but rely some on the curiously element.

The advertising barrage must precede the victory smile.

TEMPLE THEATRE, San Bernardino, Calif., has adopted the institutional form in some of its advertising. This display, nine and one-half inches across three columns is modelled something on the order of the displays of the Grauman theatre, Los Angeles. An attractive border has been used here, but it is strictly a Christmas affair and is entirely out of place. It makes the whole display look attractive, we admit, but it is a bad plan to use anything meaningless in any display. For the proper sort of institutional advertising, including the hours of the performance, but there is a distinctly jarring note in the little boxed sentence, "Some Show: Let's Go." It is not in keeping with the dignity of the remainder of the display.

It's not "what I thought," but what you THINK.

WHERE it is desirable to use more than one illustration in a single display it is a mighty good idea to combine the line work and the half-tone as has been done in the case of the Victory theatre, Tacoma, Wash. Practically four full columns has been used in this one and every portion of it tells, and at the same time full appreciation of values is shown.

You will note that in the main layout the entire matter is devoted to the Raffles idea and that it remains for the type matter below to bring out the name of the star and a few additional selling points on the picture.

This is the sort of advertising that makes a theatre stand out as THE house of the city. It is with the greatest pleasure that we see so many of the theatres turning to the sort of advertising that carries class with it. It is a sure sign that the exhibiting industry is getting on a surer basis and an insurance for the popularity of the motion picture.

THIS is not a new stunt, for it has been used in various newspaper contests, and the manager of the Strand, Birmingham, Ala., knew that, but he used it to arouse greater interest in the theatre which has only recently come under new management. The result was the receipt of over 800 properly pasted together replies. It was the first time that such a contest had been conducted by a Birmingham theatre and it was certainly worth the award of a pass for two, good for a month. One of the scene cuts for "Women's Weapons" was cut up to make the puzzle.
Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

By the time this is read S. L. Rothapfel will be on the other edge of the continent, and therefore, from one point of view, the general heading of this article this week, and for several weeks to follow, is misleading. Mr. Rothapfel had no personal part in arranging the presentations at the Rialto and Rivoli this week. Yet, in the greater sense, it is not misleading and the premier exhibitor did have about all to do.

The Rothapfel spirit fully imbues every one of his employees. There are few organizations in the country that show the same team work. Mr. Rothapfel demands a high percentage of everything from his staff, but he is always ready to accord them the fullest credit. The organization that he has built up can run the Rialto and the Rivoli in the Rothapfel way, and so when he has on one or annual vacations he leaves the whole thing to them. And you can bet that they leave nothing undone to get the highest degree of perfection in the presentations.

And so, with these introductory remarks, we can go ahead and see the two shows just as if Mr. Rothapfel were right by our side.

Now an excellent effect is being secured at the Rivoli since the installation of the new John Wenger general setting. The lights are all down before the outer curtain goes up and then as the second starts revealing the orchestra it is bathed in blue. The lights in the dome and proscenium arch come up in blue while the heavy curtains at either side of the house are fringed in red. The "Symphonic Poem," from Liszt's "Idylle," is the overture this week, and at the end the lights all come up in gold.

Rivoli Animated follows immediately, opening with bugle calls and the roll of drums and then turning into "Semper Fidelis" with Gaumont pictures of the parade at Washington to supply milk for the Savoie of France and reviewed by Mrs. Wilson. With Hearst-Pathe pictures of a negro battle royal and other sports for the sailors at Charleston, S. C., we get "You Bet," a very lively item. Then come beautiful colored pictures entitled "Love Bird," released by Education. These get many laughs and take the strain off the warlike character of the rest of the Animated.

Then comes the Official War Review, which opens with the American attack on St. Mihiel, and you should hear the crowds drown out the music. First we have the artillery preparation, and then with the tanks rolling along ahead, the doughboys start forward. There are a few groups of cavalry and we watch the advance of the soldiers from various angles. These pictures were taken in the midst of the battle-field and are some of the most realistic that have come out of the war. "Battle of Ypres" is played during the first portion of the week and then appearing during the week is "Les Preludes." Just as we see the barrage fire laid down and the men kneeling between their dashes forward "New York Hippodrome March" is used.

After the battle General Pershing decorates some heroes here and there, and great applause, "You're a Grand Old Flag" is played. It is hard to tell whether this gets more applause than the scenes that follow—of the king and queen entering Bruges, which was recaptured just before the armistice, the appearance of the orchestra pelting forth the very martial Belgian National Anthem. "La Brabacone," the audiences pay an earnest tribute to the rulers of the heroic little nation.

Then we switch back to this country and Hearst-Pathe gives us pictures of the sailing of the "George Washington," bearing the President and the peace delegates. "Invincible Eagle" is played twice through and then as the ship is seen passing the Statue of Liberty there comes "Liberty Bell March." The pictures open with views of the delegates and the President and then we have various views of the ship, the battleship "Pennsylvania" and the destroyers which accompany her and the aeroplanes that hover overhead. The pictures get a great ovation.

With the dome in blue and no other lights in the theatre, the curtains part and reveal Emanuel List, in evening clothes and seated before a fireplace. The only light on the stage comes from the glowing coals. Two evergreens and a fanciful hanging light are the only decorations. The song is "Little Grey Home in the West."

"Clouds that Smile" is the beautiful Van Severn scenic that comes next. These are wonderful views of all sorts of clouds, with the titles cleverly done in verse. "In the Garden" is the music here.

There is another one of the wonderful Wenger settings for the second vocal number, Madeline D'Espine singing "Un Peu d'Amour."

As the curtain comes down just at the end of the song and one gets the idea of the moon perfectly, for the introductory scenes have the star of the feature, Elsie Ferguson, seated in the hollow of a new moon. The same music is carried into the opening of the picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree."

Unquestionably, a great deal of the charm of the production rests on the brilliant score that Mr. Riesenfeld has arranged. We have never heard a more pleasing one at either of the houses. Nevin's "Romance" is the theme and it comes in with the introduction of "Mary Hamilton," played with harp, cello and one violin. Then comes "Songs from Shakespeare," followed by "Merry England" with the arrival of the old family lawyer. Some of the other selections that are used are "Country Dance," "Three English Dances," "Shepherd Dance," "Hungarian Dance No. 2," "Love Song," "Gypsy Song," "Bubillage" and "Forget Me Not." The theme is brought back only twice during the feature, once at the title "Oh, Moon" and then near the very end at the title "With Reverence." "La Perdrix," is also used twice, the first time when the loving pair are seen after the gypsy scene when the selection is played as a violin solo with organ accompaniment and then at the very end when the romance comes to an issue. Far more of the children are seen dancing around the couple.

For the second orchestra number all the lights are in gold. This is selections from "Florestan," which has been recommended so often to other exhibitors that they try the plan of playing these favorites of a few years ago that we are almost ashamed to repeat it. But if you could be present at one of the sessions at the Peacock and hear the people humming and singing and then hear the burst of applause at the end, you would be convinced.

"Hitting the High Spots," a Mutt and Jeff comedy, is the "send them home laughing" part of the bill. "Herekiah," "Woodland Dreams" and "Introduce Me" are the three musical selections used.

Dr. Riesenfeld is "putting over" this week at the Rialto, when he had introduced one of the most perfect arrangements that we have ever seen. It is Saint-Saens' "Dance Machine." Now, the lights are all down even before the entrance of the musical director, a very rare occurrence, and with the start of the music we are surrounded by the weird sounds of the mournful wind and then against the background of the curtain a ghostlike form appears and in a few seconds a woman's voice is heard. It is Elsie Herndon Kearns reciting "The Dance of Death," a dramatic poem by R. A. Barette. There is no music with the recital and as it is ended and the orchestra takes up the refrain, there is applause, in marked contrast with the utter silence of the house up to this time. The end of the number gets a great reception. It is a effective number and is especially good when the rest of the bill is comedy, as is the one at the Rialto.

"Peaks, Parks and Pines" is the scene which is helped along by Nos. 2 and 3 of the "Ansell Suite."

Now, another surprise is here in the musical arrangement. For the first time that we have ever seen it done, the same singers are used for the vocal numbers, but you never see how differently they are used in the two of them.

With the center dome in red and blue, the arch in white and the inner dome in red, bringing the national colors of France, the Rialto quartet appears on the stage and sings. "Home Coming Week," which stirs the audience to insistent applause, which, however, fails to break the Rothapfel rule of "No encores."

Then comes the Animated opening with Gaumont pictures of the "Mauretania" arriving with the first American soldiers from the other side. The first glimpse of the big liner gets a great hand and then as we have the close-ups the enthusiasm swells. The music does its part for first time; it is "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," until the title, which says they are men of the air service and then the orchestra turns into "When You Come Back."

Heast-Pathe pictures then show French sailors showing what they do when they sing and storm music is played up to the time the sailors are decorated and here we have the first eight bars of "Les Enfants de France," repeated through these scenes. Then Hearst-Pathe shows us pictures of the new marine railway at Alameda, Calif., and here the music is "Melodie." Then we are given some more comedy with a short Mutt and Jeff comedy called "The New Champion" and for this, "Habanaola" is the lively accompaniment.

Gaumont then shows us pictures of our flying men at Kelly Field, Texas, and the orchestra remains tacit during these pictures, only the effects for the motor being used. When we gave you an account of the way that "America's Answer" was presented by Mr. Rothapfel at the Cohan theatre, we told you that Joseph LaRose, the production manager, had obtained a miniature sawmill to get this effect, and it is used again at the Rialto.

The orchestra takes up the music again with Gaumont pictures of "Our Boys in France," with the doughboys "pushing on toward Potsdam" and then we have "Co-} lumbia," played until the appearance of the French General Belenet, when the music becomes "La Pere de ley Victoire."

There comes a crashing ending to the Animated with Gaumont pictures of the "peace ship" off to Europe. First we are told that just before she sailed, in came the "Lapland," bearing wounded soldiers, and these boys get a great hand. Then we have pictures of the ship, taken from various angles, with the warships and the airships, whistle effects being sounded as the harbor crafts salute and then the presidential salute of twenty-one guns, which was fired by the "Pennsylvania," being reproduced. The closing title, "Bon Voyage, Mr. President," gets a cheer from everyone. Those who do not like the idea of the President sailing away, evidently were not in the Rialto when we saw these pictures.

Then comes the second vocal number, supplied by the Rialto quartet again, but this time they are seated with the orchestra, and as they begin to sing Arthur Gibson's "The Drums," two little tots with drums appear and march back and forth on the stage, giving an intensely human touch that draws more applause than most musical numbers get.

Comedy is the ruling element in the feature, which is a rather ordinary affair with some of the hearse hiring the rich young man without knowing who he is. "Waiting for You" is the theme, which is first used when Enid Bennett is seen for the first time. "Reuben Fox Trot" is played when the old man comes to the city and Friels' "Romance," "Tete a Tete," "Old Time Valse" and "Ectasy" are used, but the most of the music consists of the Rothapfel numbered selections.

After the orchestra plays selections from "Pinafore" we have one of the funniest of comedies in "The Fatal Marriage," a Fox Sunshine. The audience simply howls with glee all the way through it. The clever dogs are again used in the introduction, with the daschund getting a storm of hisses as he appears on the screen. Billie Ritchie and Ethel Teare have leading parts and there is not a moment of it where there isn't something doing—and where the audience isn't laughing. The music selections, in the order they are played, are "Oh Frenely, Frenchy," "My Belgium Rose," "Y. M. C. A.," "Full of Dash," "Money-moon," without the introduction, "Electric Galop" and "Trolley Galop."

Yes, comedy is the strong feature of the Rialto bill. It is introduced three times during the presentation and one goes away from the theatre after more laughing than one has done in weeks.

In brief, they are great bills at the two houses this week. They are up to the Rothapfel standard and after he reads this he can keep enjoying his vacation with the certainty that the rest of us back here are enjoying the Rialto and the Rivoli.

Theatre Issues Novel Form of Holiday Program

Andrews theatre, Shiner, Texas, has issued a clever little booklet for the holiday season, giving the program during December. The cover carries Christmas decorations and is tied together with ribbon of holy design. The booklet is arranged so that each succeeding page projects a little below the one just before, bearing the words, "First Week," "Second Week," etc., making it convenient.
McCormick Stages a Wonderful Pageant for Circle Theatre Showing of "Under Four Flags"

By Davis Hampton

Once upon a time Indianapolis looked to the coming of the Winter Garden show and similar big musical attractions for spectacular stage effects. Now they just crank up the old Tin Henry or "step on" the '9 Stutz and go to the Circle, for a great change has come about in local theatre fields and the playgoers look forward to the Circle's spectacular curtain raisers, tableaux and stage prologues with as much pleasure as the coming of a popular star.

The Shrine of the Silent Art has also become the temple of stage spectacle.

The scenic studio, electrical work rooms and mechanical departments are constantly busy painting new scenes, devising and inventing new mechanical and electrical effects for the embellishment of the program and it is doubtful if any theatre has attained the success of the Circle in the presentation of stage pictures.

Pageant of the Allies

For the official government presentation of the Victory Picture, "Under Four Flags," S. Barrett McCormick, managing and producing director of the Circle, created "The Pageant of the Allies," a spectacle of music, song and tableau, perhaps the most striking of the many things he has done.

The theme of the spectacle was symbolized in the person of a wounded soldier played by Gerol Gardner, who lay alone, dying, in a shell crater on No Man's Land. Around him stretched the bleak, shell-torn battlefield with its tangle of wire and grim ruins, at his feet, as though defiant of the war machine, red poppies in small uneven patches valiantly blossomed in the spaces that lay untouched by the cannon's vomit.

Blood smeared, the last breath nearly gone, the soldier stirred, and as though moved by some supreme hand, lifted his head and spoke the lines of the poem, "On Flanders Fields the Poppies Bloom." With the last words—"If ye break faith with us a man, once again a child, who, in the falling shadows, took the memory of the silver-haired one as his companion.

"Hosts of Freedom Come"

With a sob, clutching the picture to him, he fell. In the distance a bugle sounded, a white light illuminated his face. "They Come," he cried. Again came the distant echo of the trumpet. "They Come,—I Die in Peace—The Hosts of Freedom Come."

He lay still. The orchestra swung into the sweeping chords of the introduction of the inspiring overture, "The Victorious Allies," which soon developed into the Serbian National Anthem, at the first strains of which a beautiful young girl, barefooted and draped in the national colors that fell in filmy folds about her, entered with the sword of Scythia drawn and bearing proudly the flag of the tiny kingdom.

Before the body of the dead soldier she paused, the sword and flag of Serbia saluted, then she took her position at the right as the Russian Hymn was heard and another girl, bearing the flag and sword of Russia, entered. In succession came France, Belgium, England, each to do honor to the fallen and pledge allegiance to the holy cause.

Then, a distant rumble of drums, almost inaudible at first, then increasing to a resounding thunder, Russia vainly tries to lift her sword, but she weakens, her flag falls and drags on the ground. Russia has failed; crouching, ashamed, beaten, she withdraws from the group of nations, then comes the sound of trumpet and drum, which soon develops into Marcia Reale and Italy enters to take her place in the pageant of nations.

Red Flag of Russia

Again the drums are heard, this time mingled with wild discordant notes, and Russia dashes in, flaunting the red flag of the revolution, the nations turn from her, vainly she tries to take place among them as the music rises and swells with the fury of a nation gone mad. With a crash of drums and symbols she falls, clinging to the Red Flag of anarchy, as the music
THREE OF THEM
Now Give Us Your Idea on the Same Pictures

In this issue there are three Special Service Sections which undertake to give the exhibitors an idea of the character of the productions and to make suggestions for their exploitation. They are:

D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life."
Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams."
"The Key to Power."

We want to urge exhibitors who show these pictures to send in accounts of the way that they are presented with photographs of any lobby display or special stage settings that are used, together with specimens of their advertising. We don't claim to have any corner on ideas, and we want YOURS for the benefit of other exhibitors.

think of this too. The theatre offers the easiest and quickest jobs for many of those who will come back. Experience is not so essential as clean intelligence. No manager need have any fear of being displaced, if he makes any effort at all to live up to the new requirements. On the other hand every one of us can breathe easier knowing that we can pick once again the best from the country's brains for our own little shoe-shop.

THEY WANT A WELCOME
When the boys come home! What a breeze of welcome we should give them; and how deep from our hearts it will come if we catch the new spirit of "doing your bit" and "doing it right now" which the army life has stood for. We couldn't go ourselves, perhaps. But we can get the spirit of it now, with new and fresh energy arriving to help us and to make ours the quickest business of all to respond to right treatment.

Our theatres will fill up with eager new faces. We will take in new dimes and nickels and quarters until perhaps we are intoxicated with it all and forget the responsibilities that go with this silver lining to the dark clouds that we have just passed through. Now is the time, you boys at home, to see that the good feeling of this home-coming is turned into permanent good by having the home welcome one the boys from over there won't forget in a week or a fortnight.

Music and flowers, touches of courtesy, refinements that don't obtrude as mere "show" will help mightily to give the impression that home is the best place after all. When the boys come back they are going to look you over with a critical eye born of a new training, a training that leads to appreciation of the real things in life.

Does your present organization provide every possible pleasure and comfort for the boys, father, mother, and the best girl? If you have any doubt on this point, get busy. There is not much time to prepare.

And these boys judge by results. They have done their bit and will accept no excuses if things at home don't measure up to their new keener perceptions of what ought to be.

Cleveland House Books Its First Serial for Children

Alhambra theatre, Cleveland, O., has just booked a serial for the first time in the history of the house. This is "The Lure of the Circus," and it will be shown at the special children's matinees each Saturday. Heretofore the theatre has been using only short subjects for the matinees, on the principle that the longer features tire the little ones.
Blasé New York Wakes Up as Kashin Starts
Big Teaser Campaign on "Wanted for Murder"

NEW YORK is notoriously blasé. It takes something mighty much out of the ordinary to wake the old city up and to get things started. Maurice A. Kashin is showing at the Broadway theatre this week how it can be done. And if it can be done in New York certainly the same thing can be accomplished in any other part of the earth.

If we started in right off the reel to tell you that Kashin did "neighborhood" exploitation to put the picture over at the Broadway, one might resort to the slang and retort: "What do you mean—neighborhood?" And we will reply that we mean exactly what we said. We do not mean that he advertised solely in the neighborhood of Broadway, but that he went into the neighborhood sections and exploited each one of them so as to bring the greatest volume of business to the Broadway.

He even used the grocery stores, and

DESCRIPTION

Height—Measured from a rope, allowing 5 ft. clearance, should be approximately 10 ft. 10 in. from ground.

Weight—Including a ton of fat above the neck—2,93 lbs.

Iron-gray hair, and mustache fiercely curled upward around a ferocious, snarling wolf-like mouth.

Brute face, registering cruelty, arrogance and insanity.

Left arm already withered.

WANTED FOR—Murder, rape and the most hellish atrocities, heaped upon a peaceful world.

REWARD

UPON APPREHENSION—NOTIFY POLICE AUTHORITIES

These teaser posters were in the form of the usual police "reward" offer used them in a way that every other exhibitor can follow. And he not only used them with the American grocery stores, but he invaded the Yiddish. And the results in attendance at the Broadway this week show the result.

But let's start at the beginning. The picture which he is showing this week is "Wanted for Murder," the latest Harry Rapf production which is now being distributed through the Film Clearing House, Inc. It features Elaine Hammerstein and was written by S. Jay Kaufman, conductor of "Round the Town" column in the New York Globe. As the title indicates it is based on the demand that the Kaiser be tried for murder as the result of his running bloody amuck in Europe.

Mr. Kashin had only to take one glance at his morning paper and note the growing sentiment among the allies that the Vandal of the North be placed on trial when he decided to do just a little more on this than he had ever done before. And he has pulled some sensational stunts on other pictures, so that he had to "go some" and this he did by utilizing every means at his disposal from newspaper advertising to lobby display, with quite a lot of things in between. And he hinged every bit of the publicity on the first page stories in every newspaper.

His campaign started out with the posting of hundreds of posters on the order of the ordinary police poster advertising for the arrest of an ordinary criminal. These did not mention the name of the Kaiser, but gave a description of him that gave every one a good clue. Reports came to the police from several sections of the big city that traffic had been blocked by the posters and extra men had to be sent out from various stations. New York is the most curious city in the world. All you have to do is to stop in the middle of the street and begin looking intently at the sky and in a couple of minutes you will have a few thousand others doing the same thing. Kashin simply banked on that knowledge.

This teaser campaign was carried further by posting of "snipes" nine inches deep and forty-two inches wide which carried a drawing of the Kaiser and then the simple legend, "Wanted for Murder."

Then there were handbills distributed bearing the same matter as on the larger posters and these were put in all parts of the city through the use of an aeroplane. The same effect can be used in other cities by circulating them from house-tops. The lines "Wanted for Murder" were used in newspaper advertising without any explanation.

Now none of this matter bore the name of the theatre or any indication that reference was being made to a photoplay. The mystery idea was kept the dominant one by all of this exploitation, and when one can hard to carry out the same plan in a smaller community.

Then came the second phase of the campaign. It was linking up the advance, or teaser advertising with the name of the theatre. First there appeared the newspaper advertising that told that this was a motion picture and that it would be seen at the Broadway.

A large balloon was sent up above the Broadway and moored there. It bore the title of the picture in striking letters.

Then four mysterious horsemen, dressed in the colors of the allies, were employed in searching the city for the Kaiser. A limousine was then brought into play. The curtains were tightly drawn and on the side windows there were painted silhouette figures of the Hun ruler. It was guarded by a couple of soldiers, while a bunch of "supers" were also employed as a mob and these were held back from the limousine by the soldiers. This stunt was employed only at night.

Now the advertising became all of a distinctive type. It represented the Kaiser dressed as a Hollander and cringing as he read the posters announcing that he was wanted on a murder charge. These posters mentioned the playhouse and the dates of the showing and again an aeroplane was employed to aid in their distribution.

Fifty thousand letters were also sent out to a select mailing list, these starting off with a talk about what would happen to the former Hun ruler. These, of course, also mentioned the name of the theatre.

However, the neighborhood element came in through the distribution of 150,000 paper bags to various grocery stores in different parts of the city. These were in Yiddish and in English, according to the neighborhood in which they were used. They bore the title of the production, then the description of the man wanted and finally ended in the announcement of the place and dates for the showing.

These paper bags are inexpensive and the smaller merchants will jump at the chance to use them when they are getting something for nothing.

Mr. Kashin, of course, made a special lobby display. In the two side arches were panels showing an allegorical figure of Justice. In the center arch was an electrical display of the title. On the two center columns were two huge official-looking indictments against Wm. Hohenzollern, with Woodrow Wilson as the foreman of the jury, and Marshal Foch as the prosecuting attorney.

Inside was a huge painting of the Kaiser in Holland, as already described, and on the left side was an allegorical painting of the World's International Court of Justice.

All the lobby cards carried the Holland theme, and the tall narrow frames on the door easily lent themselves to being turned into a big display.

Proceeding to the showing of the feature the stage represented a bivouac, and a singer dressed as a soldier sang, "The Rose of No Man's Land." A female singer dressed as a nurse responded from a stage box.

"Something Different" Gets the Crowds, Declares Detroit Manager

"Give the public lots of variety in pictures and lots of music and you'll get them," remarks Phil Gleichman, managing director of the Broadway Strand theatre, who was expressing his views on local conditions.

"A good picture is half or most of the battle and we all must admit it," continued Mr. Gleichman, "and yet it is the attractive program as a whole that starts the public coming and keeps them coming week after week.

"The department stories draw people into their big establishments because they advertise bargains. In fact they have new bargains every day. The theatre that gives the most for the least, as it were, though price is not so much an object as many people think, is the one that has the greatest receipts. Of course on Mary Pickford we may do a little more than with some of our other stars, because the public knows her and that helps the box office, but after all the big show is the thing.

"There was a time when you could satisfy everyone with two or three reels. Then came four, five and six reel shows. Later the three reel and longer features arrived. Managers began putting on a feature with a news weekly or a comedy. Now they want more than that so we have big orchestras and soloists.

"For instance this week the Broadway Strand has an Ethel Clayton feature, a Montgomery Flagg comedy and a news weekly. Our regular soloist is assisted by a trio and a member of the orchestra offers xylophone and concertina solos.

"That isn't too much because the public likes it. The only necessity is that we give them something different a week hence. This I am prepared to do by lending continued variety to the bills."

Lots of theatres just run themselves, and you can always tell which way they are going.
Willis Gives His Photoplay Views

Well-Known Coast Writer Draws Distinction Between Screen and Stage Art—Urges Removal of the Barrier

By Richard Willis

It is a curious fact that the dramatization of novels and short stories for speaking stage purposes has seldom proven either an artistic or a financial success, yet the reverse is true in regard to the photoplay.

One reason is that the drama relies on dialogue to present much of the action which has taken place outside of the scenes actually presented, and the lengthy action of the novel has to be compressed into comparatively few words and only enough action to comply with the demands of dramatic construction.

With a photoplay, the dialogue is confined to a few sub-titles, as they are termed; the rest is action; the more action there is in a photoplay the better it is as a rule, while in a stage drama the happenings must build to a climax.

The building of a stage play is an art apart and cannot be confused with the art of writing a photoplay.

Considerable latitude and liberty can be, and is, taken in adapting a novel into a photoplay. The action is what is actually adapted, not the dialogue, and this action must be well connected, put into good continuity and well sustained throughout.

It is very true that in adapting a novel many hack writers lose sight of the main ideas advanced by the author, who will recognize but little of his work in the adaptation. On the other hand, it is almost impossible to make an adaptation without alteration, although a skilled writer can do this and even make additions and yet keep to the ideas and main plot of the author.

It is also true that producers will at times purchase the rights to a well-known book or short story, mainly to advertise the name of the author or his book, although an adaptation which will follow the novel faithfully is impossible.

Again, it is true that authors do not, as a rule, make good adaptations, because they do not understand the needs or limitations of the photoplay, nor do they comprehend the necessary technique required. They are inclined to keep too strictly to their own story and are afraid to leave anything out, when by so doing they would improve the adaptation immensely.

Adaptations are undoubtedly popular, especially at this time, and I look forward to the time when our leading authors will make a closer study of the technique of the photoplay and not only be able to make desirable adaptations of their published work but write original stories for screen use.

The one objection of the author: that the producers will not pay adequate prices for photoplay rights, does not hold good any more, because good prices for good photoplay material can be obtained. An author has the right to expect payment for photoplay rights to his good adaptable material in proper proportion to what he can secure in other channels, but he should not expect large sums for material which is not easily adapted and if he chooses to sell "an idea," that is his own affair.

Coming to ideals, ideals are not always possible or practical, the most desirable procedure is for an author to collaborate with a skillful adapter; it is being (Continued on page 3705)

SOME OF HIS VIEWS

"In adapting a novel many hack writers lose sight of the main ideas advanced by the author, who will recognize but little of his work in the adaptation. A skilled writer can make changes and additions and yet keep to the ideas and main plot.

"Coming to ideals, the most desirable procedure is for an author to collaborate with a skillful adapter; this procedure will certainly become more popular.

"The feeling of hostility among writers toward producers and the feeling of resentment among producers toward authors should be done away with."

Huff in Paramount-Arthcraft Special

Although the complete cast for the John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, "When the Boys Come Home," which is now in production at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has not been announced, it is stated that the leading roles in this Paramount-Arthcraft Special will be in the hands of Ernest Truex and Louise Huff.

It is further stated that although these two well-known players have the feature parts, the entire cast is of a proportionately high standard and there will be no star.

Strong Cast Reported for "Made in America"

In "Made in America," the new eight-reel patriotic series illustrating the training of the American soldier here and abroad, which will be released one reel each week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the principal roles are taken by well-known actors and actresses and 40,000 typical American youths clad in khaki.

The scenes of the series were taken in one of the greatest cantonments in the country under the direction of Ashley Miller, producer and director of the play.

Bruner in Charge Pathe Serial Publicity

Frank V. Bruner has resigned his position as Director of Publicity for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation to become Manager of Serial Publicity for Pathe.

Mr. Bruner has had long experience in the field of theatrical and motion picture publicity and will specialize on the tremendous serial campaign Pathe is planning.

Just now his particular space-filling pets are Pearl White and Ruth Roland, Pathe's two Serial Stars.

Norma Talmadge to First National

First National Exhibitors' Circuit Has Signed a Two Years' Contract to Distribute Productions Starring Former Select Player

After completing four more productions for Select Pictures to complete her agreement with that concern, Norma Talmadge will release all her productions thereafter for a period of two years, through the exchanges of First National, according to announcement from the First National offices.

This addition of another star of known box-office value to the ranks of independent producers whose releases are booked to exhibitors on an independent basis is declared by First National officials to be one of the biggest transactions, financially, ever concluded between a star and a distributing organization.

J. M. Schenck Pleased

"And for the first time in my experience as a producer," declares Joseph M. Schenck, who is the active head of the Norma Talmadge Productions Company, "I am able to understand how it is possible for a producer to make bigger and better pictures with an increase in values at the box-office compatible with the added quality in the picture. To me this contract with First National is the solution to an ambition I have cherished for more than a year."

"I have wanted to make bigger pictures. I have wanted to pay the price demanded for big stories. Of course, there has been nothing to stop me but the uncertainty of whether I could do any better than break even on the investment. This was the fault, not of an individual or group of individuals, but a system."

While the details of the contract are not made public, it is understood that First National will distribute a minimum of twelve Norma Talmadge productions during the two years the contract is in force, and that a total of twenty productions will be the maximum. By his system of keeping two directors constantly employed, Mr. Schenck plans to make at least six releases each year, allowing a minimum of six weeks' normal studio working time for every production.

Although the amount that will be paid by First National for the negative rights to each picture totals, in the aggregate, what is described as one of the biggest, if not the biggest sum ever involved in a contract of this nature, it means, according to Circuit officials, that the Norma Talmadge pictures will, as a consequence of the increased latitude given Mr. Schenck, take on a proportionate increase in box-office value, apart from the exhibitors' advantage in booking them independently.

J. D. Williams Elucidates

"The exhibitors will book the Talmadge pictures exactly as they are booking the Chaplin, Pickford and Stewart releases," declared J. D. Williams, manager for First National, and of independent of anything else. Mr. Schenck's features will stand absolutely on their own merits.

"And no exhibitor will be compelled to spend any dollars for publicity that he may not want, or which have no popularity in his community, the profits he makes on the Talmadge pictures."

"Mr. Schenck has seen the general trend of the industry toward the open market buying policy. He is convinced that if exhibitors can make double and triple the profits today on big star productions booked independently that they made when those stars were rented on the program series principle, it follows that the popularity which Miss Talmadge has attained in the last two years more than justifies the opportunity to offer exhibitors her future releases on the open market."

"But most important of all, to exhibitors, to Mr. Schenck and other producers, and to First National franchise holders as distributors, is the solution provided for the problem which for months past has harassed and worried manufacturers of quality films with a big box-office pull—the alarming discovery that the producers have made upon the profit, and that to strive for greater quality in releases on the program distributing system meant going more deeply into debt, and increasing the loans from banks and individuals to finance their activities."

"I understand that Mr. Schenck has made a statement on this point, which explains his position. So let's look at it now from the exhibitor viewpoint. First National franchise holders are exhibitors every one of them. Their present and future is affected when the producers whose films they show fail to make the profits necessary to encourage them to continue making bigger and better pictures. Industry without progress is a car without gasoline. It stands still."

Productions Must Continue

"The remedy is to make it possible for producers to continue in business by allowing them sufficient financial latitude to make quality releases and realize a legitimate profit from their efforts and investments. If they have the financial freedom to produce really good pictures the exhibitor is certain to benefit."

"There is no locality in the world that will not patronize a good picture in sufficient numbers to ensure him who shows it. Consequently, when producers make good pictures the exhibitor cannot fail to benefit. He may have to pay more for them, but he makes more in proportion."

"But how can any star or recognized producer continue gambling from $50,000 to $100,000 on each picture without some assurance, and a very definite one at that, that they will get it back? If theirs is quality workmanship they are entitled to a return of their investment, plus a profit."

"If it is not quality, the market will quickly prove it," continued Mr. Williams.

But to make and release big pictures on a percentage basis, and then have them offered to the exhibitors under conditions which compel him to book anywhere from two to a dozen other productions of questionable value in order to get the big one is a menace to the continuance and furtherance of the quality, this industry needs more than anything else.

"If producers would begin active investigations of the reasons for their lack of profits on box-office winners they would quickly discover the solution—and that is to offer every star and every production to exhibitors on individual merits and drawing power, and not in such a way that it is necessary to carry weaker releases, or to be carried by stronger attractions, to prop the exhibitors to stand the expense through heavily taxed profits either way they take."

Revolutionary Changes

Mr. Schenck summed up his opinion of the contract with First National by describing it as "the revolutionary change of method which gives me the open door to greater quality in productions starring Norma Talmadge."

Mr. Schenck says there is a tendency of a profit from the superior releases I will place at the disposal of exhibitors." As the chief executive of the Norma Talmadge Productions Company for the last two years, Mr. Schenck has confronted the financial problem involved in producing features for program distribution, and gave a liberal expression to his opinions.

"First let me make clear," he requested, "that my comments are not in any sense a criticism of individual exhibitors or combinations, but an analysis of a system. For this system there can be no individual responsibility. It is universally employed by program distributors. That it cannot endure much longer is obvious to me. I have been producing pictures as big studio pictures as the star for more than two years. When I first took charge of her studio I received an offer of $750 a week for her services."

"Recently I was offered $7,500 a week by a program company. To have accepted it would have been fatal to her popularity. True, an income of $30,000 a month is better than a reasonable salary. The fact that I refused the offer was not due entirely to my belief that she is capable of earning more."

"It was also because I knew that to accept it would be to place her against a dead wall obstacle to progress, and would result in a decline in her popularity. Allowing six weeks to a production, her salary alone would burden each picture with approximately $60,000, because she would require ten days or two weeks of rest between pictures. Add to this about $40,000 for other expense, not including advertising support and Talmadge costs, and you have an idea of what it means to get back that sum."
Madge Kennedy Scores Thrice

Goldwyn Declares That Last Three Productions of Madge Kennedy Were Marked Successes and Evoked Enthusiasm

“Three marked successes in as many months is a record of which Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, may well be proud,” declared a Goldwyn official.

“Hailed as an instantaneous favorite in her first Goldwyn production only a year ago, the following she won for herself in her first screen performance has grown to tremendous proportions, until today Madge Kennedy enjoys a popularity that has come to but few young stars of the screen.

“Recently Miss Kennedy’s personality and art in ‘Friend Husband’ thrilled and amused thousands. Even more pronounced was the enthusiasm evoked by ‘The Kingdom of Youth,’ rated by many as the most delightful and entertaining of all Madge Kennedy-Goldwyn pictures.”

Madge Kennedy’s success in “Friend Husband” and “The Kingdom of Youth” is said to have been duplicated in her latest release, “A Perfect Lady,” the Goldwyn picturization of Rose Stahl’s stage vehicle by Channing Pollock and Renold Wolf.

In fact, it is said that no other story has given the artist such wide scope for the talents that differentiate Madge Kennedy from any other screen luminary.

Essentially a comedy, “A Perfect Lady” is not without pathetic moments, and in these Miss Kennedy displays the dramatic skill with which she surprised her big following in several of her previous Goldwyn productions.

“Madge Kennedy is a success because she’s different,” remarked Clarence G. Badger, who directed “A Perfect Lady.”

And when I say different I mean that there isn’t another personality like hers on the screen.

“The greatest factor in her success, to my mind, is the fact that she’s never the same in two pictures. Charming as she was in ‘The Kingdom of Youth’ it is an altogether different Madge Kennedy in ‘A Perfect Lady’.”

Mr. Badger added that making a success of a Madge Kennedy picture was the simplest of tasks. “Without realizing it she dominates every situation—and the direction, too,” Mr. Badger smiled.

Universal to Start the New Year Auspiciously

Ruth Clifford and Priscilla Dean are the stars in Universal’s feature releases the initial week of 1919. Miss Clifford is seen in “The Cabaret Girl” a bluebird in five reels, while Miss Dean’s vehicle is “The Wildcat of Paris” a Universal Special Attraction in six reels.

“The Cabaret Girl” is based on a story of the failure of a country girl to realize her operatic aspirations and her engagement as a cabaret singer. Douglas Gerrard produced the film from the scenario by Rex Taylor.

“The Wildcat of Paris” presents Miss Dean as a model for an Apache artist, Jean Rovel, who was so fascinated by the girl’s loveliness that he was instantly jealous of her. Joseph deGrasse produced the play from the scenario by Harvey Gates.

Burton King Directed Many Big Pictures

It was Burton King who directed “The Master Mystery,” the fifteen-episode super serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., and all who have seen his work are said to be of the opinion that Mr. King had added new laurels to his list of achievements.

Mr. King’s first engagement in the amusement world dates to his early youth. At the age of seventeen he became an actor, playing with road attractions. Later he became a stock leading man and then stock director.

When the motion picture field first opened, Mr. King joined the growing film colony as an actor, but after two years gave up work before the camera to take a director’s place back of it. Since then he has been directing continually.

As a director he was connected with Universal, Seelig and Thomas H. Ince for a year each. In the last named affiliation he directed Charles Ray, Louise Glau and other Ince stars.

Later he was with the World Film Corporation, directing Jane Grey and John Mason. Thereafter he was the producer of a number of independent features, starring such players as Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Edmund Breese.

Joining Metro Pictures Corporation he directed Mme. Petrova, and after a year’s engagement went over to the Mutual, for whom he directed Edna Goodrich. His next and present association was with B. A. Rolfe in filming Houdini’s serial.

James Vincent to Produce Patriotic Picture

James Vincent, who is the Secretary of the Advisory Board of the Division of Films, is engaged upon the production of a patriotic feature based upon James Mott Hallowell’s book, “The Spirit of Lafayette.” This feature has the endorsement of Director Charles S. Hart, of the Creel Committee’s Film Division.

Mr. Vincent, although a very young man, has been associated with the film industry for years. He was one of the original Kalem Company, and may be remembered for his work as director of special features and his connection with many of the large organizations, including Fox and Pathé.

It is said Mr. Vincent’s new feature will disclose an entirely new angle in patriotic pictures. The story follows closely Mr. Hallowell’s book.

Cannibals to Exhibitor-Mutual

The Martin Johnson "Cannibals of the South Seas" Pictures Transferred to Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation

"T"he Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas" pictures will be released in the United States and Canada by the Robertson-Cole Company through the Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation. Previous to this arrangement it was decided to distribute this subject through the First National chain of exchanges. However, upon the completion of the deal whereby all subjects controlled by Robertson-Cole Company were to be handled by the Exhibitors’ Mutual, arrangements were made with the First National for the transfer of the picture back to Robertson-Cole Company.

Much promotional work has been done by the Robertson-Cole Company to further public interest in this subject. The premiere showing in Canada under their management is said to have brought crowded houses to Massey Hall, where it was offered for an entire week. The newspapers were reported as lavish in their praise of the subject and it was said to be considered one of the most auspicious picture presentations of the season in that city.

In New York City it was offered at the Rivoli theatre by Samuel Rothapfel. Mr. Johnson appeared in person in connection with the picture and told many interesting things about his trip as the film was presented. The New York papers are said to have devoted considerable space to the picture, claiming it the greatest novelty in many years that has been presented in this country.

Interest is being maintained in this picture by a broad line of advertising. A massive signboard has been erected on Broadway at Forty-seventh street which tells Broadway’s millions the wonders of “Martin Johnson’s Cannibals of the South Seas.” The recent showing at the Hotel Astor which was put on in a very unusual manner was attended by a large number of exhibitors who—since have been awaiting the news of the releasing channel. At this showing Mr. Beynon conducted the orchestra.

He is also responsible for the special orchestral score which is used in conjunction with this subject. In addition to many things of a helpful nature have been prepared which include lithographs in sizes from one-sheet to twenty-four-sheets as well as slides, trailers and many unusual exhibitors’ aids.

This first installment of the “Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas” will be released through the Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation on December 15. The second installment which is also ready will be issued on February 15.

Drews Start Production Work on Fourth Paramount Comedy

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have engaged space at the Biograph Studio and began work on the fourth Paramount picture, three films having already been finished before they signed with Famous Players-Lasky.

The fourth picture will be entitled, “Harold, the Last of the Saxons,” and is adapted from a short story written by Florence Ryerson, published in the December issue of the Pictorial Review.

Mrs. Drew is directing the picture as she has done with all the previous pictures, and also takes an active interest in the interior decoration of the sets and costumes worn by everyone in the production.

The play in which Mr. and Mrs. Drew appear on the stage, “Keep Her Smiling,” closed in New York Saturday night and is now playing in Newark.

Goldwyn Changes Title on Kennedy Picture

Goldwyn announces a change in the title of Madge Kennedy’s next production. Instead of “Primrose,” the title selected for it by the author of the story, Cosmo Hamilton, it will be called “Day Dreams.” “Day Dreams,” written especially for the star by Mr. Hamilton, has been completed and will be ready for release in a few weeks.

Universal Executives Maintain That "The Heart of Humanity," Starring Dorothy Phillips, is Their Greatest Photoplay

Universal executives have just completed a thorough "diagnosis" of what they maintain is their greatest photoplay.

Approximately eleven months in the state of production, Allen Holubar's timely film drama, featuring Dorothy Phillips, was brought to New York and has just been given a permanent title.

Every production, from the one-reeler to the biggest drama produced, undergoes a rigid and thorough examination at the hands of Universal executives before it is sent into the laboratories for printing, but no feature has ever been submitted to such searching scrutiny as "The Heart of Humanity," by which Mr. Holubar's picture is to be known on the screen.

The negative (15,000 feet of it) was brought to New York from Los Angeles in a baggage car, Director Holubar and Frank Lawrence, film editor, using every available minute to edit and cut the negative so that it would be at its best by the time it arrived in the Universal home offices.

Dorothy Phillips, star of the production, accompanied Mr. Holubar on his trip East and also assisted in the editing of the film.

Upon the arrival of the negative and the studio print in New York a committee of executives, exhibitors and exchange men was appointed to prepare the most fitting title possible for the film.

For nine days this committee discussed many suggested titles. Letters, telegrams and telephone calls went to leading exhibitors asking their opinions on various titles. "Till We Meet Again," "A Mother's Heart," "The Dawn of Reckoning" were suggested and debated. They were good, but not particularly fitting for a picture with so many unusual angles as the Holubar film is said to possess. A title which would be a composite of love, power, hatred, sympathy and of life and death would alone suffice.

On the tenth day of the debate it is said that three men suggested "The Heart of Humanity" at the same time. This, broad in meaning, after considerable "sounding," was adopted as the permanent title.

"The Heart of Humanity" will be released as a Jewel production and will be backed by a publicity and advertising campaign surmounting any previous effort of Universal's large and capable forces, it is announced, and will be released early in the new year.

Billy West Begins on New Comedies

After a prolonged stay in New York caused by a serious attack of influenza, Billy West has started the production of two-reelers for the bulbs Eye Film Corporation, a new company formed recently with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

This comedian is declared to be in great demand.

Samuel Gompers to Appear in McClure Film

Frederick L. Collins, President of McClure Productions, Inc., who will soon release a film based on the life of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, announced today that Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has signed a contract with the McClure Company to appear personally in a motion picture based on his career and on the loyalty and helpfulness of American labor to the cause of democracy through the great world war.

Now that Bolshevism has entrenched itself in Russia, secured a foothold in the Central Empires, and is threatening to engulf other countries of Europe, the loyalty of Samuel Gompers and his associates in the American Federation of Labor is declared to stand out in contrast to those who would disorganize the industries of our country.

Even before American entered the war Mr. Gompers took a firm stand against the spread of German propaganda through the ranks of the working men, and from the time war was declared he and his companions toiled unceasingly to send our army and its vast supplies to the battle front.

Two Cameras Smashed in Arden Production

In the filming of Zena Keefe's first picture as a star for Arden Photoplays, Inc., "The Challenge Accepted," two cameras were said to be smashed. The first time was when one of the actors on horseback rode into the camera.

Before it was repaired, the second camera is said to have fallen off a fifty-foot platform, from which a panorama of Camp Dix was photographed, and literally smashed into splinters.

"The Challenge Accepted" was directed by Edwin L. Hollywood from the original story by Donald Gordon Reid. It will be released December 23 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathé Exchange, Inc.
Keenan Has Auspicious Start on West Coast

FRANK KEENAN PRODUCTIONS, INC., is a new firm added to the list of producing organizations in Los Angeles, upon the arrival of Frank Keenan from New York where he completed arrangements for a release of subjects made by him and his company through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Prior to his departure for the West, Mr. Keenan made arrangements for his first five stories which will be of a dramatic nature. Three of these are original stories, written especially for Mr. Keenan and particularly adapted to his characterization work.

Two are adaptations from well known stories. By wire Mr. Keenan made arrangements for his producing staff which will include Jack Cunningham, scenario and continuity with Keenan, William C. McGuire, writer, and Charles Keenan, cameraman.

Mr. Keenan before leaving the eastern Broadway engaged Joseph MacManus, who has been leading man in a number of New York successes, for the past two years, to come to the coast and play leading man parts in the Keenan productions. MacManus is a new man for the screen, and Mr. Keenan is positive he will prove a finished actor before the camera, as he has done upon the stage.

"No, I will not appear in comedy again," Mr. Keenan said, when questioned concerning his future productions. "The Pathé officers advised me that my dramatic characterization were in demand in the foreign market, and so I am going to produce only dramatic subjects with touches of comedy sufficient to soften the stories.

"While en route to the Coast I was asked to speak at several theatres in Chicago, and there I outlined my future policy. I do not expect to make the greatest pictures the screen has ever had, but I am going to try and produce good pictures that every theatre will want to book."

"The Better 'Ole" from an Expression

The title of "The Better 'Ole," the seven-reel production just secured by World Pictures, was derived from a spoken phrase where one of the characters replying to another says: "If you do not like this (b) 'ole, find a better one."

The Better 'Ole" stage production, now playing at the Oriental in Nevada City, is said to have done over $14,000 gross business for the week ending December 2. Although the play has been seen in this country less than two months, so great is its success that three companies are now beginning tours to the major towns.

The production was written by Bruce Bairnsfather, the English soldier cartoonist, whose efforts have been exploited in a great number of daily American newspapers and the more prominent of the illustrated weeklies.

World Pictures release the picture version of "The Better 'Ole" as a special. It was made with the cast that was identified with it during its London run. Such scenes as were correlated to the fighting zone were made in Flanders.

World Pictures to Issue Animated Weekly

World Pictures has completed all arrangements to enter the field of the animated weeklies. It has perfected an organization to secure the momentous news of the world and to record it on the screen in a most interesting manner.

Neither distance nor expense will be a deterrent factor in securing for the millions of patrons of the moving picture theatres the very best service that money and intelligent discrimination of news values can secure, according to report.

"Not being bound nor influenced by time-worn precedents nor shackled by editorial policies nor dictated by interests who cannot be gainsaid, ‘World News’ will bring into the field, youthful enthusiasm tempered by the experience of minds who have long understood the public taste through having had splendid experience in conducting the news columns of the very best newspapers of this country," declared a World official.

"No propaganda will be permitted to creep in the screen columns, nor will any interest be permitted to use ‘World News’ as the weapon to attack those who differ with them.

"News as it is understood by those who are connected with this picture weekly is matter that the greatest number of people are interested in,"

The first issue will be published about January 15. Full and complete details will soon be issued to the exhibitors.

Advance Bookings on Serial Pleases Pathe

Pearl White’s forthcoming serial, "The Lightning Raider," seems destined to be the most successful of this star’s many serials, and likewise to break any record ever established by a Pathe serial, judging from the advance bookings, which are said to pouring into the home office.

Miss White is without a doubt the most popular serial star on the screens today, according to the Pathe branch managers and salesmen, and they declare that they find a tremendous market ready for them when they start their campaign on one of her serials.

Starting with her first Pathe serial, "The Perils of Pauline," and then running down the list of her others, "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Fatal Ring," "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army," and "The House of Hate," each one is said to have established a new high water mark for business, and in consequence the Pathe men say they are confronted with a more difficult task on each new serial—to break the record of the previous one.

In the case of "The Lightning Raider," it is evident already that a new record will be established, according to these officials. The New York branch reports already enough advance bookings to insure its setting up a new record and the other Pathe branches are showing signs of accomplishing the same result.

In the middle west, where the influenza epidemic still rages unabated, the salesmen are of course working against a heavy handicap, but even this and the continued closing of many theatres will not prevent them from breaking records, they claim.

Manager Raynor of the New York Office, in announcing the booking of the Fox Circuit, reveals the fact that "The Lightning Raider" will be shown, through this booking, in a number of New York picture theatres that have never before exhibited a serial, notably the Academy of Music.

Constance Talmadge Team Pull Together

With the production and distribution of the four Constance Talmadge pictures past and present, there has leaped into being a combination of star, leading man and director that from all indications gives promise of becoming one of the foremost teams of screen workers.

Constance Talmadge, who is presented in all of her Select Pictures by Lewis J. Selznick, is the star; Harrison Ford is the leading man and Walter Edwards is the director.

The life of this combination dates back to one of Constance Talmadge’s recent Select Pictures. "A Pair of Silk Stockings," in which Harrison Ford first made his appearance as a Constance Talmadge leading man, and making also the advent of Walter Edwards as Miss Talmadge’s director.

The success of this combination in "A Pair of Silk Stockings," "Sauce for the Goose," and "Mrs. Leffingwell’s Boots," where all three were found together, and in Miss Talmadge’s current attraction, "A Lady’s Name," is taken to indicate that the charm is still working.

American Humor Prevails in Capitol Comedies

One of the principal reasons given by Goldwyn for the success of "Smiling Bill" Parsons and his Capitol comedies is the essentially American quality of their humor. It is said of "Proposing Bill," which will shortly be seen, that it could not have been written or produced anywhere but in America.

The characters are all unmistakably American, the fun is of a kind that only the American spirit could evolve—it is declared to be broad, genial and of the swift-ness that has come to be generally recognized as one of the dominant qualities in American plays as in industrial affairs.

Breamer to Take Rest

Sylvia Breamer, the Blackton star, who is featured with Herbert Rawlinson in "The Common Cause," the Blackton-Vitaphone special, has completed her work in a leading role of "My Lady's Garter" under Maurice Tourneur direction. She was loaned to Mr. Tourneur by Commodore Blackton for this picture.

Her work in the two specials has been so strenuous that Miss Breamer has decided to take a brief vacation and will not accept the role offered her in another production. She plans to rest until called for the next picture which Commodore Blackton will produce.

Rosenbaum Goes West

Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., who has been on the staff of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, for several months, has been transferred to the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., leaving for the West this week.

Universal Nails the New Bluebird Rumor

Exchange managers of the Universal were amazed last week at news which appeared in newspapers of the Central West and South to the effect that the Bluebird Productions had been discontinued. Inquiry instituted by the main office failed to reveal the origin of the report.

It was officially announced that there was absolutely no foundation for the rumor. The company does not contemplate any revision of the present schedule at this time, and it has mentioned important Bluebird productions on the program for some time to come.

It was believed that the appearance of one or two former Bluebird stars in current Special Attraction pictures may have led to the mistaken belief that the Bluebirds were being eliminated.

Universal wishes to make it very plain that the assumption is altogether wrong and that Bluebird pictures will continue.

Blanche Sweet Visits East

After completing the Garson-Neilan production of "The Unpardonable Sin," in which she starred, Blanche Sweet left Los Angeles to visit New York City on a business trip, after which she will again return to the West Coast to start work on her next big picture under the management of Harry Garson, the name of which Miss Sweet would not divulge.

Neither would she give any inkling as to the nature of the picture, but when it came to "The Unpardonable Sin," which Miss Sweet has just completed, her enthusiasm knew no bounds, and she declares it to be the biggest picture of the year.

Miss Sweet recounted all her troubles of making "The Unpardonable Sin" during the "flu" epidemic. Marshall Neilan, the director, persevered, however, and the result has been beyond all expectations. The picture will be in nine reels instead of eight as previously announced.

The picture goes into Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for a run.
Two Blacktons to Independent Sales Corp.

J. Stuart Blackton announces that he has completed arrangements whereby "The New Democracy," his new special photoplay starring Mitchell Lewis, which had a pre-release run as the feature of the Rivoli theatre program during the week of November 3, and "The Littlest Scout," a five-reel Paula Blackton Country Life story starring little Charles Stuart Blackton, will be exploited by the Independent Sales Corporation and physically distributed through the exchanges of the Film Clearing House, Inc., with which the first named organization is affiliated.

These two Blackton features, both of which are ready for immediate release, are said to be the first productions placed with the Film Clearing House for distribution. Under this arrangement Commodore Blackton will not maintain his own sales force for the booking of "The New Democracy" and "The Littlest Scout," but will have these two productions handled by the Independent Sales Corporation through the Film Clearing House separately and distinctly from other pictures placed in their charge.

The Film Clearing House idea of distribution appealed to Commodore Blackton from its inception, while the plan of having special salesmen for each producer's product, made possible by the working proposition of the Independent Sales Corporation, of which William M. Seabury, organizer of the Film Clearing House, is vice-president, led him to make a thorough investigation of the new distributing companies, their personnel and business systems.

As a result he decided that his interests could best be served by placing "The New Democracy" with the Independent Sales Corporation for Film Clearing House distribution than by continuing the previously announced plan for its exploitation through another organization.

The fact that Commodore Blackton has placed these two special productions on the market in this manner does not mean that he has severed any of his other affiliations in the industry. The plan of the Film Clearing House, it is understood, is such that any producer can use it for one or more of his pictures without obligating himself to market all of his product in the same way.

Music Scores for Robertson-Cole Pictures

The inauguration of complete music scores with the Robertson-Cole Company releases is an innovation in the service that will be rendered with their productions which are handled through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

This service starts with the first release, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," issued December 15.

Mr. George W. Beynon, who has devoted many years to the preparation of musical scores for motion pictures and is an accomplished musician, is the director of the Musical Department of the Robertson-Cole Company, and bears the distinction of being the first to adapt orchestral scores to motion pictures, it is said.

Considerable comment was made on the musical offerings at the premiere presentation of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" by the press as well as by the audiences which viewed this production both in New York and Toronto.

The great value that is placed in the musical accompaniment of pictures is evidenced by the very best houses throughout the country who employ large orchestras that would do credit in size and ability to grand opera. This part of the program is being given as much attention as is the selection of proper pictures.

The Billie Rhodes subject, "The Girl of My Dreams," will also be accompanied by a complete musical score arranged by Mr. Beynon.

Tally to Build Another Theatre

Owner of First National Exhbitors' Circuit Franchise Plans to Build
New Theatre at Los Angeles

T. L. TALLY, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Southern California and Arizona, is to build a theatre designed exclusively for long runs on super productions, according to a recent announcement from Los Angeles.

His decision is based on his opinion that with the new era of specialization in productions by such stars as Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart and others there will come a much higher quality in releases. This he believes will be the foundation on which exhibitors can make their plans for increasing the length of their runs and reducing the frequency of their program changes.

Mr. Tally has been contemplating the erection of a new theatre in Los Angeles, but his plans were interrupted when they were delayed by war conditions and the consequent lack of materials. Now that the War Industries Board has, removed the ban on the commercial use of structural materials it is expected that he will go ahead with his intentions to give Los Angeles an entirely new type of motion picture theatre.

"Events of the last few months," declared Mr. Tally, "are conclusive proof that long runs are the thing of the future for exhibitors. We know to a certainty now that indefinite engagements of genuinely good pictures are profitable to exhibitors and that it is throwing money away to give only two or three days or a week to productions that have the merit necessary to longer bookings."

"Take the results of Charlie Chaplin's 'Shoulder Arms.' Exhibitors are playing not one, but three, four and five repeat dates, which is something from two to three days. The public does not get a chance to patronize a worthwhile film if it is shown for one or two days. Every theatre will receive a certain amount of nominal patronage each day. But not every prospective patron—not one-fifth of the prospective patrons could or would patronize a theatre within one or two days to see a production that is being talked about."

"There are many reasons for this. Some people are kept at home by illness, others are out of town for a few days, others are entertaining guests, others are too busy the first two or three days that a good production is shown. And a far greater number, who are not regular fans, do not hear comments on an especially worth while release until several days after it has opened."

To play longer runs requires a certain type of physical equipment in a theatre which, while not absolutely essential to the success of indefinite engagements, adds enough to the atmosphere and general effectiveness of the production to make the investment almost certain. Any theatre with the standard equipment can serve as the background for runs of a week, or even longer.

But where it is possible to do it and particularly in the instances of new theatres being built, I believe that it is a wise precaution for the exhibitor to consider carefully the advantages of special interior arrangements which will give him opportunities for settings, lighting effects, greater latitude in musical accompaniments and which will contribute to the quality atmosphere imparted by the super-productions which the public will patronize, day after day, for runs ranging from two weeks to a month or longer."

Nazimova Starts Work in Hollywood Studios

Mme. Alla Nazimova arrived in Los Angeles December 3, and on December 9 she started work at her new studios in Hollywood on her production, "The Red Lantern," under the direction of Albert Capellani.

June Mathis, in collaboration with Director Capellani, completed the screen adaptation for Mme. Nazimova's first picture on the West Coast, but the completed script was in his hands. Miss Mathis and M. Capellani did some of their work on the scenario of "The Red Lantern" while en route from New York to Mme. Nazimova's new studios.

Seven Stars Are Promised for World Feature

The most ambitious and pretentious production ever made by World Pictures is declared to be "A Scrap of Paper," which will inaugurate the resumption of studio activity of this company.

The cast embraces all the stars connected with World Pictures and includes Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Madge Evans, George Drumier and Johnny Hines. It will be directed by Dell Henderson.

The scenario was written by Wallace C. Clifton from an original story secured by the World Pictures scenario department from a famous French author.

This aggregation of talent has been arranged for the production because the world believes that the exceptional strength of the story told in "A Scrap of Paper" demands a wholly stellar presentation.

Margarita Fisher Gives Medal for Hero

A gold medal, offered by Margarita Fisher, American Film Company star, featuring in "Flying A" productions, to the first Rockwell Field aviator to bring down a German plane, was won by Lieut. Frank Lupton of Phoenix, Arizona.

Because of Lieutenant Luke's death shortly before the armistice was signed, the medal will be given to his father.
Government Releases a Series

Each of the Two-Reelers to Take Up Phase of the War—First Scheduled for December 23

To meet the demand of the people to know more about the war activities of the nation the Government has prepared and will begin the release of a series of two-reel pictures, announced as the U. S. A. Series, each of which takes up a phase of the war and pictorializes it with detail. The new pictures are presented by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

It has been clearly indicated that the American people want to know the more intimate details of the war and of the participation of their country in that war. In the new two-reelers they will be shown just how the wounded were taken care of, how an airplane industry was built up, the real part played by machine guns and hand grenades, how men were made fit to fight, how, despite the utilization of auto trucks and motor lorries, the horse and the army man held its own and did its bit, and how the guns, which did so much to crush Prussianism, were made.

The first of the pictures, scheduled for release December 23, is entitled "If Your Soldier's Hit." It is a revelation of the care given the soldier boys overseas. It gets close to the heart and is true—every bit of it. There will be a release every two weeks, the complete series being made up of six pictures.

Number two of the series, "Wings of Victory," is the full story of the air program of the United States and of America's achievements in building planes and training aviators for the gigantic effort of defeating the Huns; the story of motor plane and coming ace, and how the three were aligned that America might fill the skies of France with swift fighters.

The next release is called "Making a Nation Fit" and is a picture of striking interest, showing how America met the difficult problem of rendering millions of men of sedentary occupations into physical fitness for the labor of war. It shows the new entrants of the Army and Navy being put in the top of physical perfection for their jobs.

The fourth release is entitled "Horses of War" and shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle. The vivid, sweeping, irresistible story of the horses of the cavalry and artillery which, in spite of motor trucks, tractors and tanks, must still be relied upon to help win the day.

"The Bath of Bullets" is the fifth release. The last release of the series, "The Storm of Steel," is the story of the Ordnance Department.

The World Film Corporation, which has handled the distribution of both "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," will also handle the "U. S. A. Series."

Selig Appoints Priest Exclusive Agent

Colonel William N. Selig has appointed Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., exclusive sales agent for all of his feature productions in the United States and Canada.

Features which have come into the immediate possession of The Film Market, and which will be disposed of on the independent market are, "The City of Purple Dreams," "Who Shall Take My Life," "Beware of Strangers," "The Garden of Allah" and the reissue rights to "The Spoilers."

Before leaving New York for California, where he goes to supervise a very important production, Colonel Selig made a statement in which he said that Mr. Priest has all sale rights, and that any person interested in any of his productions should see Mr. Priest in reference to them.

"Little Orphan Annie" Territory Selling

In the six-reel photodramatic production of the late James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "Little Orphan Annie," which is being state righted by The Pioneer Film Corp., Coleen Moore and Thomas Santosci are the featured players, while the supporting cast includes little Billy Jacobs and little Ben Alexander, who has appeared in many of D. W. Griffith's productions.

Already great interest is being shown, it is said, by exhibitors who are inquiring as to when and how they can book the picture. Nathan Hirsh, president of The Pioneer Film Corporation, says that he has never had a feature which seems to have caught on so quickly. Every mail, Mr. Hirsh says, brings letters from theatre owners from all parts of the country who are anxious to book the film.

Pauline Frederick Busy on First Goldwyn

Pauline Frederick is rapidly progressing at the Biograph studio in the Bronx under the direction of Hobart Henley on her first Goldwyn picture. The cast includes Ben Hendricks, one of the forceful character actors of the stage; Fred Lemieux, who has played the foremost roles in the support of many popular stars; Jere Austin and Tammany Young.

Prominent on the distaff side is Florence Ashbrook, who has played with the Ken-dals, the Bancrofts, Sir Henry Irving and others.

New Distributing Policy for News Reels

A new policy of distributing news reels will be inaugurated by Universal the week beginning December 22.

The distributing contract with Pathe expiring December 23, the Hearst International News Service, having acquired the producing and distributing rights of the Universal Current Events and Animated Weekly and of Mutual's Screen Telegram, will issue the first of its tri-weekly news reels Tuesday, December 24.

Hearst News No. 1 will be released through Universal exchanges on this date and this will be followed on Thursday, December 26, by Screen Telegram No. 76 and on the following Sunday, December 29, the Universal Current Events No. 85 will be marketed.

The reason the Hearst interests selected the Universal exchanges to do the distributing of their news reels is declared to be due to the success attained by these branches when releasing only Universal weeklies.

In addition to the release of Universal Current Events, Hearst News and the Screen Telegram, by Hearst through Universal exchanges, the Universal Screen magazine will be released each Saturday, independently by Universal and will be developed along newspaper feature lines.

Pathe Has Gloria Joy in Short Comedy-Dramas

In a series of three two-reel comedy dramas to be released by Pathe under the general title of "The Fortunes of Corinne," Baby Gloria Joy carries the role of the heroine upon her frail but capable shoulders.

This child actress is well-named, it seems, and is said to have an exceptionally keen sense of comedy and of pathos. The series will be released in the following order:

December 22, "Fortunes of Corinne";
January 5, "I Want To Be a Lady";
January 19, "Corinne, Come Here."

The Robertson-Cole Company

1600 Broadway New York City

Exhibitors Praise "Eye for Eye"

S. L. Rothapfel, E. C. Bostick and Other Nationally Known Exhibitors, Praise Nazimova's Latest Production

Naziomova, Talented Star in Metro Pictures

pronouncing it one of the greatest works Mme. Nazimova has ever done on the stage or screen, prominent exhibitors throughout the country are said to be flocking the offices of Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger with letters and telegrams congratulating them upon their latest Nazimova production, "Eye for Eye." S. L. Rothapfel, one of the first to see the picture and to declare that the international star's "personal performance has not been surpassed upon the screen" and that the picture itself was "a revelation," expects to show it at the Rivoli theatre in New York the week of December 22.

E. C. Bostick, managing director of the big Merrill theatre in Milwaukee, who has already shown "Eye for Eye," is said to be even more enthusiastic about the picture and Nazimova's drawing power than Mr. Rothapfel.

The Merrill, Mr. Bostick says, has broken all Milwaukee attendance records with "Eye for Eye". Crowds, he says, even during the supper hour, were lined up to the curb awaiting an opportunity to get into the Merrill. Mr. Bostick's letter speaks for itself.

Mr. J. S. Grauman,
METRO PICTURES CORP.,
403 Toy Bldg.,
City, Dec. 30, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Grauman:—

I believe that it is fitting that both you and Metro should have some statement from me as to the remarkable business I am doing on "Eye for Eye." I will confess that when you sold me this series of pictures at more than twice the highest rental I have ever paid for a picture, I was somewhat doubtful as to whether or not I could make any money to speak of on the Nazimova productions. However, I felt it would be a big treat for my patrons, so you can readily see the question of profit on this picture was secondary.

The public, however, has proved that I was wrong. We opened with "Eye for Eye" on Sunday, the 26th of November, and there has not been one hour during the past week, including supper hour, that we have not held them out to the curb, and we have done what, I am confident, is the biggest business ever done in Milwaukee. Certainly the biggest in my experience.

I am absolutely sincere when I state to you that if you have not shown me Nazimova unequalled, and I am only too glad of this opportunity to state to you that I am more than pleased to have booked the entire series at $2,000 per picture. You may send this letter to your different offices if you wish, since I feel that it is a privilege for any first-run exhibitor to be able to play this subject, and I shall be greatly surprised if the phenomenal business done by us is not repeated by every one else who book it. Yours very truly, E. C. Bostick, Manager.

Among other large first run houses which are already playing the picture or plan to give it special runs within the next few weeks are the Strand and Alhambra, Tokyo; Madison, Detroit; Gold, Chicago; Strand, Cincinnati; Empire, San Antonio; Rex, Duluth; Regent, Paterson, N. J.; Goodwin, Newark, N. J., and others.

The California, in Los Angeles, which recently ran "Pals First," starring the late Harold Lockwood, to capacity houses, according to report, has also booked "Eye for Eye" and expects to break all attendance records with the picture.

"From an artistic as well as a box-office standpoint 'Eye for Eye,' and Nazimova's other pictures are the finest I have ever seen. And Toys of Fate,' have satisfied the exhibitor and the public as no other productions have done in the history of the industry," said Richard A. Rowland, "and her coming plays will even surpass these.

"They will be made in California under the direction of Albert Capellani and the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Nazimova Productions, and will embody in story and production qualities the finest work on the screen has yet known."
Al Lichtman Completes Journey

Famous Players-Lasky General Manager in Charge of Distribution Concludes Five Weeks’ Tour of Principal Cities

That the motion picture industry has gone through its greatest crisis and is now well on the road to recovery is confirmed by Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution.

Mr. Lichtman has just concluded a five weeks’ tour of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, including visits to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, having been stricken with the influenza in St. Louis which compelled him to give up further travel at his next stop, Kansas City.

"After personally seeing just how the motion picture industry at large went through the period of national depression, I am proud to say that I am connected with the business," said Mr. Lichtman. "In every district I visited, the theatres were closed for an average of three weeks. While gloom was evident everywhere and everyone including myself, seemed to be suffering, either personally or in a business way from the epidemic, exhibitors and exchange managers were not sitting down to bemoan their fate."

"Quite the contrary. Everyone was active, planning for better days to come and taking the dark days with grim determination to make up as soon as the business was resumed."

"As for the Distribution Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the country, the full, although it has cost us a great deal, it will be in the end result in direct benefit to the exhibitor. Although we were not booking pictures we used these so-called idle hours to good advantage."

"We were able to get the undivided attention of all executives and employees on matters of importance in a manner impossible under conditions of business activity. New ideas have been created and new systems installed, all of which point to greater service to the exhibitor. Conditions that have been hanging fire for some time have been cleared up, and with the resumption of business, we are today in a better position than ever to give a service to the exhibitor, the like of which has never before been attempted, much less duplicated."

"With the installation of film clearing houses we introduced only one of these ideas pointing to enhanced service. No longer will the exhibitor have to show poor prints, if he books Paramount and Aircraft pictures."

"The trademarks of this product have now become insignias of a physical high-class quality of the film itself as well as the contents of the film which is evidenced on the screen. With the reopening of theatres the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has also prepared its releasing schedule so that it offers the exhibitor attractions that will insure his making up for lost time."

Fred C. Quimby Takes Two Week Vacation

Fred C. Quimby, General Sales Manager for Pathé Exchange, Inc., has closed up his office and has gone on a fortnight's vacation at Old Point Comfort.

Mr. Quimby has been working night and day of late arranging the details of the launching of the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," and in consequence he was said to be in need of a rest.

His original itinerary led to the Greenbrier Hotel at White Sulphur Springs, but when he was told that a dress suit was as necessary an adjunct at the Greenbrier as a toothbrush, the sales manager balked and immediately switched to Old Point Comfort, where he is doubtless by this time luxuriating in a flannel shirt.

Theda Bara Begins New Fox Production

Theda Bara, the William Fox star, has begun work on a new super-production, temporarily titled "The Scarlet Alps." The picture is being produced at one of the William Fox studios in Yonkers under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, this being Mr. Edwards' thirty-first production for William Fox. The scenario is by Adriam Johnson from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley.

Fred Fishback Engaged by Henry Lehrman

Fred Fishback, who has been responsible for many comedies during the past ten years, is now a member of the staff of directors producing Sunshine Comedies under the general supervision of Henry Lehrman.

Mr. Fishback's early experience was with Thomas Ince.
Seventy Prints Now Used on Les Miserables

It is reported that there are seventy prints of "Les Miserables" now in use. If every one of these prints played every day of the year since "Les Miserables" was first released the total time of the picture's showing would be seventy years.

Perusal of this phenomenal record, says an official of the Fox Film Corporation, shows that the leading theatres all over the country have played "Les Miserables" for engagements in excess of the average time given to special productions.

The following theatres, selected at random from a long list, have played "Les Miserables" for one week each:

Rose theatre, Chicago; Dayton theatre, Dayton; Pastime, Columbus, O.; Bank, Akron, O.; Stillman, Cleveland; Alhambra, Toledo; Queen, Dallas, Tex.; Queen, Fort Worth, Tex.; Colonial, St. Joseph, Mo.; Princess, Sioux City, Ia.; Majestic, Portland, Ore.; Liberty, Seattle; Victory, Tacoma; Colonial, Camden, N. J.; Isis, San Diego, Cal.; Rialto, San Francisco; Granby, Norfolk, Va.; Colonial, Richmond, Va.; Leader, Washington; Strand, Buffalo; Olympia, Pittsburgh.

All United Theatres Will Show "Kaiser's Finish"

All theatres controlled by the United Booking Offices will show "The Kaiser's Finish." A contract has been signed between the U. B. O. and the Emaeue Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, which purchased the New York City and State rights on the production from A. Warner, whereby not only the Keith houses will play it, but also on the Proctor and Meyer and Schneider circuits, embracing all of the downtown territory.

One of the first showings it will have in a house controlled by the U. B. O. will be at the Brevvoort, known as the Strand of Brooklyn, New York. This theatre has given it the star position in all billing.

Moreno-Holloway Study, New Serial Script

ANTONIO MORENO and Carol Holloway, stars of Vitagraph's current serial, "The Iron Test," have received the scripts on their next fifteen-episode play, work on which will start at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood in the near future.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the newest thriller, the title of which has not been announced.

A report from the Vitagraph western plant declares that the stars will be called upon to perform even more hazardous stunts than they did in "The Iron Test," and that if such is the case their courage will be taxed to the utmost.

In "The Red Mask's Prey," the eleventh episode, soon to be released, the action called for Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway to escape from a band of pursuers by fleeing across a telegraph pole spanning a chasm.

This scene was made above the roadway which was cut in the mountains by General John C. Fremont in 1840 to facilitate the movement of his troops, the road thus made being known as Fremont Pass.

The point where the scene was filmed is 150 feet above the pass and had the scene been taken as originally planned the two stars undoubtedly would have been hurled to death. The director to keep the action of the flight continuous, had decided to have the pole dropped and Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway start across it immediately its upper end landed on the far side of the chasm. Later he decided to let the pole fall first and then later to take the complete action. On the test the pole fell with such force that it broke in the middle and went crashing to the pass below.

Despite this, however, a second pole was obtained and after a test had proved it could withstand the fall, the action with Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway was taken as originally planned.

"The Silver King," with Faversham, Completed

The work of assembling and titling the Paramount-Artcraft special production, "The Silver King," in which William Faversham is starred, has been completed and the finished picture was given its first showing a few days ago in the projection room of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Faversham was present, together with his wife, Julie Opp, and Maxine Elliott, who is his partner in several theatrical enterprises.

So impressed were the executive and department heads by the entire picture and particularly the work of the star that spontaneous and prolonged applause followed the final scene and all present proceeded to verbally express their complete satisfaction and offer their congratulations to Mr. Faversham.
Arrow Reissues Serial Under New Name

For the first time in the history of the industry, a serial is about to be re-issued, and by the Arrow Film Corporation.

"The Demon Shadow" is the new title for the ten-reel re-issued serial of two episodes each, being a revised and re-edited version of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" which was originally issued in twenty episodes of two reels each, and in which Marjorie Snow, James Cruze and Mitchell Lewis, now being starred in Select pictures assume the leading roles.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, made the following statement concerning "The Demon Shadow":

"We have contracted with the Big Productions Film Corporation, owners of the rights, to revise and re-edit the production so as to cut it down to ten episodes of two reels each and to distribute it on the State Right basis in that territory."

Universal Takes Umbrage at Misleading Letter

The issuance of a circular on the coast, advising the trade that the Universal and Mutual weeklies had disappeared from the market, elicited last week a hot statement from the Universal and Hearst news representatives.

M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Universal exchange in San Francisco, issued a direct contradiction of the circular, and describes it as misleading.

The circular calls upon exhibitors to take up the news pictorial service circulated by the All Star Company, with the argument that it is now the only considerable service of its kind left since the withdrawal of the Universal and Mutual weeklies.

Mr. Markowitz replies in part as follows:

"The circular is an outright attempt to mislead the exhibitors. This is to advise you that the Hearst interests have taken over the Mutual Weekly known as the Screen Telegram and the Universal weeklies known as The Animated Weekly and Current Events."

He goes on to announce the facts already pretty widely advertised, that the Hearst International News, and the other subjects taken over by it, will continue to be released regularly.

Hart's New Artcraft Still Minus Title

Two weeks more will be required to complete the new William S. Hart picture for Artcraft, which follows in order of release "Branding Broadway," but which is still minus a title.

This is the production which was started in Chicago, where the Thomas H. Ince star is said to have obtained some remarkable scenes at the stock yards.

These scenes, shown in the projection room at the Hart studio in Hollywood, have aroused the enthusiasm of the studio force.

Big Demand for Lockwood

According to officials of Metro, the passing away of a motion picture star does not affect the popularity of his productions, and they declare that although the late Harold Lockwood died at the height of his career, his productions are in greater demand than ever.

The Screen Classics production which had just been completed before his death, "Pals First," is said to be enjoying unprecedented runs in the large theatres of the country.

The photoplay version was made from Lee Wilson Dodd's conception of the novel by Francis Perry Elliott, which was published by Harper and Brothers. The picture was directed by Edwin Carewe.

E. M. Sanders, special representative of Screen Classics, Inc., attributes the increased demand for Harold Lockwood productions not only to the popularity of the star, but the fact that his untimely death has aroused worldwide interest among many who were not regular patrons before.

National Film Engages Two More Directors

More tangible evidence of the growth of Parson's National Film Corporation of America is evidenced by the engagement of two additional directors.

Harry Pollard, known for his American Beauty comedies with the American Film Company during the past three years and Frank Grandon, one of the dramatic directors who has just arrived from New York, are the latest members of the directorial staff of the National.

Small Town Exhibitor Is Convert to Long Runs

B. L. Feinblatt, manager of the Westchester theatre, Mount Vernon, N. Y., is a convert to the creed of longer runs and the abandonment of the practice of definite program change dates.

In explanation of his reason he has notified the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that he has played two repeat dates on "Shoulder Arms," and plans to book it for another return engagement as soon as the New York exchange has a print available.

He opened with the second million-dollar Chaplin comedy in opposition to the big Keith and Proctor house in Mount Vernon and did considerably better than average business, according to report. He then arranged to repeat it for two days the following week and on this engagement played to capacity business at every performance and declares that he was obliged to turn hundreds of people away because of the local fire laws which prohibit the sale of standing room.

"It goes to prove," said Mr. Feinblatt, "that when the public finds something that strikes its fancy the exhibitor cannot begin to satisfy the demand with a two or three days' run. I do not know, of course, just how many patrons came to see 'Shoulder Arms' for a second or third time, but I do know that at every show I wished that the twelve hundred seat capacity of the house had been twice that."
D. W. GRIFFITH presents
"The Greatest Thing in Life"
An ARTCRAFT Picture

When D. W. Griffith Makes a Picture

YOU want it, because you know what D. W. Griffith showmanship means to you and to the motion picture industry.

There's always a very human story, intimate heart appeals upon a background of the universe.

And there's always something new—something nobody else ever thought of.

When You Show a D. W. Griffith Picture

MAKE your showmanship worthy of the production.

Advertise it and stage it with all the care it deserves. You can't be perfunctory with a Griffith production any more than you can be casual with a Christmas Dinner.

Put on all the new linen, the best china and the fine old silverware when you serve a Griffith picture.

After Your Patrons See a D. W. Griffith Picture

THEY talk about it. They argue as to whether it is the best thing he ever has done and most of them say it is. They tell their friends about it, advise them not to miss it.

And always, remember, it gives to your theatre prestige that lasts for months to come.
D. W. Griffith's Great Story of Victory

There was death and life in the hand-grenade

Death for the Huns who were beating down the door.
Life for the American girl, trapped behind it.
And for the American boy, who led the Yanks.

What is the greatest thing in life? Victory?
The veteran's first view of the Statue of Liberty after the end of the war? Or—just what is it?
D. W. Griffith will show you in the newest production from the hand of the genius who made "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love:"

Lillian Gish and Robert Harron are in it. D. W. Griffith and you imagine her to be? D. W. Griffith's newest motion picture introduces you.

That Girl in France

What do you know about that French girl that your soldier-boy, back victorious from the war, is going to tell you about? Are her clothes starting? Do the skirts show her hose? Is she the "Trenchy" sort of person you imagine her to be? D. W. Griffith's newest motion picture portraits the girl. Her two loves affairs don't go quite smoothly. Garlic fumes battle one of her ideals and the other is scarred with a snare for all mankind.

But a war west-wind makes a tremendous difference! There are worse things than garlic, and cats can change.

Meet that girl your boy knows in France.

The Creeping Barrage

It's a moment of terrific suspense! For the first time in motion pictures you are taken into the line back of a creeping barrage. For the first time you charge side by side with the army of Yanks over No Man's Land.

It shows you why the Germans had to quit.

Robert Harron is the American boy. Lillian Gish is the girl. You saw them in those wonderful D. W. Griffith pictures "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love."

The producer? That's easy. Of course it's another D. W. Griffith production.
Special Service Section on

“The Greatest Thing in Life”

WITH the magic name of D. W. Griffith to use in his advertising, the exhibitor does not need to be told to play the producer to the limit in this advertising, but we would make a somewhat different appeal with “The Greatest Thing in Life” than has been made in any of the other Griffith pictures that have come out of the war.

Famous Players-Lasky in its advertising which it has prepared for the exhibitors has referred to this as a victory picture and arranges the advertising along that line. And that it is a good plan to follow, for it is really a victory picture and while it does not undertake to show the actual surrender of the Germans, it does have the air of triumph in the end—not only the triumph of arms, but of all that is good in the world.

“Heart-comedy of the world war”—that is the selling line that we would use in all the advertising that we write. The comedy element is very strong through the picture and yet there are as great heart grips as the master director has been putting into any of his productions. The war scenes themselves are brief and humanness prevails over everything. Lillian Gish is a veritable ray of sunlight through the offering and we believe that element ought to be strongly featured in all of your exploitation.

THIS picture might almost be called an idyl. In a mere outline such as is given here the story might be called flimsy, but one has to take into consideration that it has the Griffith direction, and that the

VICTORY—AND SMILES
There Are Two Elements of This Picture to Bring Out

THAT this is a happy victory picture, that it is intensely human, should be brought out strongly in everything that you say about “The Greatest Thing in Life.”

Tell your public that they'll laugh, and choke a little, and then smile again, and that they'll remember this latest Griffith offering long after the peace treaties have been signed. They'll know then that it is something more than a record of fighting; they'll know that it must have the real heart appeal to accomplish that.

Make it not only a victory picture in the triumph of America and her Allies in the war, but a victory of life and love. Keep every element of the freak out of your exploitation. You don't need “trick stuff” when you have the human heart to work upon.

You couldn't dig up a better sentence to use.

Lillian Gish is seen as the tom-boyish daughter of M. Peret, a Frenchman who conducts a little tobacco shop in New York. His daughter, Jeanette, is full of life and fun, and in fact, in this picture Miss Gish pictures girlhood in its most joyous element. There is a rich youth who is in love with her, Edward Livingston (Robert Harron), but she is not sure of herself and when the youth, who is the best cigarette customer of the tobacconist, calls her a silly brat she casts him out of her heart (she thinks).

Now all of this time the old tobacconist has a drawing at his heart a desire to go back to France, when suddenly there comes a check for him, represented to be from one who borrowed the money from him years before. As the title tells us, “He pretends to remember the incident well, though it never occurred.” Right here let us say that the bright titles add a great deal to the value of this picture and they will bring many an added laugh.

THEN the scene changes to France with the father and daughter, Peret, the guests of the girl's aunt. Here the girl thinks that another love has come to her. He is the sturdy farmer who also conducts a vegetable shop in the little town. He is very fond of Jeanette and also exceedingly fond of garlic, and so between the loyal love of this hulking young Frenchman and the smell of garlic on his breath the love of the girl, who is trying to

At first he hated everything but himself, and the girl, and now the wonderful understanding has come. The child interest is powerful.

Human Element Is Your Strong Appeal in This One

W\\HEN you look this picture, we would advise every exhibitor to sit down and think how he would feel if he had a service flag in the front window of his home, and now that the fighting is over he knew that his son was safe and that he had helped to bring the great victory to stricken France.

Go a little further than this and picture how you would feel if this star had represented a son who was narrow and selfish, before the war started, who hated children and who thought seriously of little but cigarettes, though his heart was big and manliness was hiding in the background.

Go further and picture how you would feel if you knew that this war had regenerated him, that he was coming back to you stronger and better and supported by a wonderful love.

Possibly it sounds a little foolish to ask the exhibitor to put himself into any frame of mind before he starts exploiting a picture, but you have to feel the grip of this latest Griffith production for yourself, as your friends and neighbors who have sent their youth "over there" are going to feel that you may get the real appeal of "The Greatest Thing in Life" over, and earnestly, when you have once felt it, you are a great deal more apt to transmit it to others.

W\\ITHOUT entering into the discussion of what is going to be the fate of a production that is largely a war spectacle, you have nothing of that element here. You have a little skirmish in the street, a wounded and dying French soldier, a few glimpses of some Germans, but the big human element is the great love of country which comes to the fore when our shoulders are straightened and our hearts expanded by the touch of real life.

Now Lillian Gish is the real star of this picture and she has never had a role that is going to make her more delightful to your patrons. And so, in the happy vein we would feature a considerable portion of the advertising around her, at the same time not forgetting the other big elements that you have. Don't merely tell the people that there is fun in the production, but show them by the lines that you use. For instance:

"She thought she loved the rich young American, but she feared that he cared too much for his cigarettes and he called her 'a brat.' And then she thought she loved the brave young Frenchman, but his passion was for garlic, and she hated that. So what was the poor young girl to do?"

That reference to garlic will not give offense, for really a portion of the picture turns on that and it is so well done that the only effect is a series of genuine laughs.

Or:

"There were laughs in the war if you get under the cloak of it. And this little French-American maid was always busy being happy, though she was heroic when the moment came, and a woman when the real love swept her. Just a heart grip accentuates the sunshine of life here."

"She thought she loved the Frenchman because children loved him, but she was surer that she loved the American, until she found he hated children. But when he came to her in the uniform of an American victor and the little French child snuggled up to him and kissed him she knew that the war had opened his heart—and she was happy."

Or this one:

"Robert Livingston cared for nothing in the world but the little girl and his cigarettes, until he found the greatest thing in life on the battlefields of France. And when the war clouds were gone and he came to her she knew and understood and they made the great discovery together."

In other words, let us say again, at the danger of being guilty of repetition, keep away from the element of strife here, except as it is reflected in the principal characters. You have a novel picture here, in that it doesn't go into a screeched accusation of the barbarity of the Germans—not that it makes you love the Germans any more, but it simply leaves out the horrible elements.

And your patrons will feel a greater grip on your emotions than they would if they were constantly up and cheering some title damming the Hun, as much as he deserves it. And it gives the patron a greater loyalty to his country, a stronger love for France for the reason that we have before us a few genuine, loyal, sacrificing persons, in the midst of life—human and appealing.

Which suggests a good line:

"A heart-comedy of the great victory that you will remember long after the war is over."
Griffith, Harron and Miss Gish a Great Combination

But just at that moment Livingston shows up at the French village and Jeanette's heart is torn between her changing emotions more than ever. She loves children, and so does the strong young Frenchman, Monsieur Le Bebe, while Livingston has already shown that he hates them, and that is another argument in her countryman's favor.

And right here there is a mighty strong heart element brought in by Peaches Jackson as the French kid. Exhibitors will do well to bring this out and to use in their newspapers some of the scenes that we have reproduced showing Peaches.

Then the war comes. Le Bebe is called and as he comes in his uniform to say goodbye Jeanette is sure that she loves him beyond the rest of the world. Then comes the fighting in the village and as the French are about to be driven out an officer shows M. Peret a glimpse of a hidden in the cellar and asks him to keep communications with the retiring army. This forms a gripping element of the photoplay. The Germans come and Le Bebe is wounded in the fighting and is taken to the cellar and hidden under the earth, one of the cleverest of scenes. The father is shot and Jeanette acts as the operator of the 'phone to notify the Allies that the Germans have weakened their line, and after that comes the attack, with Livingston, now an officer with the victorious Americans. And the war has now made a man out of him, and one way that he shows it is by his love of children. La Bebe dies in the end, there is a touch of pathos there, but every one will agree that the ending is the right one and that Griffith's touch is all through the picture.

Of course, another element that you are going to advertise strongly is that Robert Harron and Lillian Gish both appeared in "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love." These two pictures have now been seen by thousands and that announcement will be sufficient to bring a great share of patrons to your theatre.

That and the character of the story ought to be carefully brought out. As we have said before, the human element is the part to emphasize. It is a war picture to a degree, but it might best be described as a heart-comedy with the background of the war and the spirit of victory predominating.

You can bring the victory element out strong if you want to take advantage of the timeliness of it, or you can show this a couple of months later and get results by going strong to the heart appeal. But by all means do nothing to indicate that this is a big realistic battle scene. That is a minor element, and, in fact, the only fighting that is seen is a mere skirmish.

People want to laugh and cry with the tears of sympathy. Feature the laughs of the picture, the pathos will take care of itself and create the word-of-mouth advertising for you.

IN YOUR LOBBY
Keep It Simple and Avoid the Battlefield Idea

Here is a picture that we keep repeating has the heart appeal. You do not want anything that resembles the freakish about your exploitation.

Keep away from the battle ideas—the victory element is the one to bring out. It is a story of France and America and you can use the flags of those two nations to good effect in your lobby if the idea has not been overdone with you.

Here is a suggestion for a series of panels: Use a streamer asking what is the greatest thing in life and then suggest the answer:

First, wealth; then power, then love, and then home, and finally a question mark. Figures bearing out these ideas should be carefully prepared, for unless the execution is good they will not appeal.

You can circulate along the same idea and you will get results from simply mailing a card bearing the question: "What is the greatest thing in life?" and on the other side the fact that it is revealed in the newest of Griffith pictures.
Coming Program Offerings

Pathé Program Offers Variety

For Week Beginning December 15

Fannie Ward Heads the Program with a Star Photoplay, "The Narrow Path"

THE Pathé program for the week beginning December 15 is headed by Fannie Ward in another of her Extra Selected Star Photoplays made from the play first presented in New York, "The Narrow Path," under the management of A. H. Woods, who is also the producer of the picture.

It is said to be an exceptionally strong story of New York life and the screen affords it a breadth and detail of treatment impossible in the theatre.

Queer Derivative: Alice Cunningham made the adaptation, George Fitzmaurice directed it in a manner which has elicited high praise and it was made by the Astra Film Company.

The keynote of the play is expressed in one of the subtitles: "God never planned a double standard—one for a man and another for a woman. And, yet, in the eyes of the world, a woman always must pay."

Harold Lloyd, with his active assistants, Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard, appears in a Rolin made comedy called "Take a Chance." The comedian was not slow to accept the invitation, and how he managed to escape broken bones in some of the stunts that he accomplishes is said to be a mystery to the beholder. Miss Daniels does some of her most charming comedy work in this.

The entire history of war as it affected America up to the time of peace, is told in a new one reel patriotic feature called "Liberty's Triumph." It has been called "The Condensation of a Thousand Books."

The tenth episode of "Wolves of Culture" is called "When a Woman Wars," and shows how a clever, wideawake and patriotic girl outwits the fiendish Hun, only to face another peril. Leah Baird is given splendid support by Sheldon Lewis, Charles Hutchison and Edmund Dalby.

No. 25 of the Official War Review is reported as showing some of the most vivid scenes of the conduct of the great war that has yet been exhibited. A reviewer has called these issues "Weekly Trips to Four Great Battle Fronts."

The head-hunting Dyaks, the fierce savage men of Borneo become closely familiar with the camera in Post Travel Series No. 25 and they make an entirely odd and interesting study. Those who have seen "The Wild Men of Borneo," of the circus, will be surprised when they see what really super-freaks the real, "blood-drinking" originals are.

Little Gloria Joy, Pathe Star, in "I Want to Be a Lady"

"Strange Woman" Aboard President's Ship

"The Strange Woman," the widely-heralded film version of the famous play by William J. Hurlbut, was released this week by William Fox, with Gladys Brockwell in the title role.

An interesting point in connection with the release of "The Strange Woman" is that this picture was among those chosen to be shown to President Wilson and his Peace Conference party on the voyage to France.

The picture, which was enacted by a cast of fifteen well-known screen players, was directed by Edward J. LeSaint. The scenario was written by J. Grubb Alexander.

In the cast supporting Miss Brockwell are Charles Clary, William Scott, Harry Depp, Ruby LaFayette, G. Raymond Nye, Ada Beecher, Enunice Moore, Grace Wood, Margaret Cullington, Lucy Donahue, Miss Billy Armi, William Hutchinson, Miss Gerard Grassey and Louis Fitzroy.

Liberal Bookings Claimed for "The Bells"

Taking into consideration the diminution of business done by exhibitors during the period of the epidemic, "The Bells," with Frank Keenan as the star, has been unusually fortunate in its bookings, according to Pathé.

Its pre-release at the Rialto obtained the largest amount of bookings in the Greater New York zone.

War Review Shows Yanks in Russia

The first pictures to come out of Russia in two years are shown in the Official War Review, No. 27, which will be released on December 29. These pictures show American troops marching through the streets of Russian towns, American machine gun corps in action, etc.

"Little Women" Paramount-Artcraft Jan. 5

"LITTLE WOMEN," the William A. Brady production based upon Louise M. Alcott's story of New England life, which was purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation immediately after its initial showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special January 5.

Two million five hundred thousand copies of the book have been sold since it was written and it is still selling at the rate of a hundred thousand a year, according to reports.

Of added historical interest is the fact that the scenes in the photoplay were filmed in and about the home of Miss Alcott in Concord, Mass., which is said to be in a perfect state of preservation. Here the author wrote "Little Women" and here gathered frequently such literary geniuses as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry D. Thoreau and others.

As assisting in the details of production was a nephew of the author, who gave many valuable pointers to Harley Knoles, the director.

In cast as the four little women are Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Finn. Henry Hull is Brooke and Conrad Nagel is Laurie. Kate Lester, Julia Hurley, George Kelson and Lynn Hammond are also in the cast.

"The Goose Girl" Success Series Release

One of Marguerite Clark's screen productions, "The Goose Girl," has been selected by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the Success Series release for December 8.

This was originally released as a Jesse L. Lasky production, directed by Frederick Thompson.

Gloria Swanson, to Appear in a De Mille-Artcraft Production
Pauline Starke Appears as an Irish Lass
Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, both writers with many successful photoplays to their credit, were the joint authors of "Irish Eyes," the Triangle play released for the week of December 15. Pauline Starke is the featured player, and she is said to portray as lovable a little Irish lass as ever graced the screen. She plays the role of Peggeen, a poor neglected stepchild of Irish fisher folk, who meets Sir Arthur Ormsby and is helped by him to escape from her brutal guardian. Rae Godfrey, Eugene Burr and Joe King are well known Triangle players in the supporting cast of this production. "Irish Eyes" was directed by William Dowlan with Elgin Leslie at the camera.

Shelled Hospitals Shown
What is termed "one of the most vividly thrilling pictures of the war" is shown in Official War Review, No. 24, released the week of December 9 by Pathé. One of the scenes clearly shows two Red Cross hospitals destroyed by shells; the other intensely dramatic episode is a close view of the troops going into attack.

Loew Books Burlingham's
Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, has booked the Burlingham Travel Pictures. These are single-reel travelogues which are considered of exceptional merit, released every other week through the General Film Exchange.

PRESIDENT — A FAN
President Wilson Would Not Go to Sea Without Films
WHEN the George Washington sailed on its eventful mission carrying President Wilson and others to the Versailles Peace Conference, nothing was left undone to anticipate any desire that the President might express. Therefore it seemed but natural that the authorities would provide several of the right kind of pictures that would appeal to the President and his honored guests.

Mme. Nazimova's "Revelation," "Toys of Fate," and "Eye for Eye" were the Screen Classics selected from the Metro offices.

Other Metro pictures selected for this honor were "Romeo and Juliet," "Blue Jeans," "Lea We Forget," "My Own United States," "Draf 258," and "The Slack." Magie Franklin has also contributed heavily towards the President's entertainment. Among the Fox photoplays to be shown aboard the Colorado were "The Strange Woman" featuring Gladys Brockwell, and "Fame and Fortune" starring Tom Mix.

Thomas Ince Special to Select

"The Midnight Patrol," Produced by Thomas H. Ince, Will Be Released As a Select Pictures Special
SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces the acquisition of the Thomas H. Ince Special Production, "The Midnight Patrol." The picture will be released exclusively through Select Exchanges, as a Select Special. It was made by Mr. Ince prior to the existing agreement whereby his productions are exclusively released by another concern, and it is the only Thomas H. Ince picture to be so marketed.

"The Midnight Patrol" is described as a swiftly moving melodrama, produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince and featuring the work of that everyday American hero, the police detective. A cast of even excellence has been assembled for the feature, and includes Thurston Hall, Rosemary Theby, Marjorie Bennett, William Musgrave and a number of others, including Kino and Yamamatto, two Chinese actors of first-class ability.

The story for the picture was prepared by Julian Josephson and Denison Clift. Director Irving V. Willat was in immediate charge of the production.

Most of the action takes place in and around San Francisco's great Chinatown, that romantic playground from which so many tales of adventure have come. We see the plotting and counter-plotting of a corrupt ring in which local politicians enlist as confederates unscrupulous leaders of the Chinese underworld.

An important episode pictures the disruption of a band of opium smugglers and the capture of the ring-leaders in the illicit trade. There are scenes aboard the ship on which the opium is being brought to America, in the gambling holes and opium dens far under the surface of Chinatown, and many scenes of life on the surface of the squalid oriental section.

The action culminates in a fight which takes place in a subterranean gallery far under the street. A white girl has been captured and held as a lure which, as anticipated, draws into the clutches of the plotters the enemy whom they fear the most—the government's most energetic agent in the person of a young Irish patrolman. A fight ensues.

Recruits arrive for both sides, with the bluecoats slowly gaining the upper hand. It is described as a tremendously realistic fray, one of those screen battles that lives long in memory. Here the producing genius of Thomas H. Ince scores heavily, it is said.

Select believes that in "The Midnight Patrol," it is offering to its patrons a clean, manly picture which will be welcomed everywhere.

Pathe Needs Tiger Face Actor for Serial

Pathe Scenario experts are exceedingly busy just at present preparing the various episodes of "The Long Arm," the new serial in which Ruth Roland, who has just renewed her Pathe contract, will be starred.

The particular puzzle that is causing the Scenario gentlemen to bungle the midnight oil at present is the proper method to make up an actor so that his face will resemble that of a tiger to a certain degree, while still holding more or less of the human features.

The story of "The Long Arm" concerns three adventurers who penetrate to the wilds of Sumatra and steal an image of a tiger from a cult of natives known as the Tiger Worshippers.

By some secret process of tattooing and skin grafting they remodel the face of the third man until it resembles that of a tiger. Thus this man is compelled to go out into the world wearing, so that all may see, the badge of his shame.

The Pathe Scenario men are now puzzling over just the right make-up for the actor who will play this character, and they have been calling in most of the tattoo artists in New York to give them suggestions.
Famous Players Reopens Fort Lee Studios

THE winter bugaboo in the East seems to have lost much of its power to incite the producers to terror.

Last week it was published, exclusively in Motion Picture News, that Goldwyn Pictures intends to return its entire producing outfit to New York from the West Coast following the completion of pictures now on hand. This week it is made known that Famous Players-Lasky has reopened its Fort Lee studios after it had been announced the plant would be closed until next spring.

These facts appear to be giving a “black eye” to the energetic personages who have press agentry Los Angeles and its sunshine so persistently. A few weeks ago the news was rife in Los Angeles that “every last producer in the business” was moving hurriedly to the Coast, to remain there the rest of their days. From last reports, it appears that San Francisco is to usurp the throne of Los Angeles in West Coast production, and that little old New York and the East will continue to move along at the same merry pace followed in the past.

Famous Players-Lasky last week had three pictures in work at Fort Lee. Margaret Clark was directed by Hugh Ford in “Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch.” At present, in addition to the Clark picture, the new John Emerson-Anita Loos production, “When the Boys Come Home,” is being filmed there, as are also the bigger scenes for Elsie Ferguson’s new Artcraft picture being made under the tentative title, “For Sale.” Productions not requiring the large amount of floor space which the Fort Lee studio affords will be made at the Fifty-sixth street studio in New York and present indications are that the coming months will be exceedingly busy ones for the Famous Players-Lasky eastern producing organizations.

Louise Glaum Now An Independent Producer

LOUISE GLAUM, long a star in her own right, has entered the ranks of the independent producers and has started work on the first of a series of special features.

Miss Glaum’s initial effort under her own auspices is intended to establish an exceedingly high standard. The author of her screen story is the photoplaywright, C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production is under the supervision of Allan Dwan, until recently director-general of the Douglas Fairbanks photoplays.

He has the assistance of Director Art Rosson, who has been associated with him for several years. This collaboration, combined with the technical environments which surround Miss Glaum, is declared to indicate a notable production.

The Louise Glaum Company, after negotiating with a number of the important California concerns has leased space at the new Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City, just approaching completion, at a cost of something like $250,000. The new plant is said to offer the last word in studio efficiency and technical perfection.

The cast with which Miss Glaum has surrounded herself comprises Matt Moore, of the quartet of Moore brothers; Edwin Stevens, the stage player, Jane Novak, well known leading woman, and others.

Forceful Stories Demanded by Brentwood Film

The Brentwood Film Corporation has a very clear-cut policy regarding scenarios. It is to consider only those with dramatic situations which might come within the immediate knowledge or experience of at least 50 per cent of any audience.

Stories measuring up to this standard are scarce because of the dearth of writers of perception and power who can give force and grandeur to strong, everyday situations without destroying their simplicity.

In “The Turn in the Road,” the Brentwood declares it had such a story, written and directed by King W. Vidor.

James A. Keough Manager of Pantheon, Chicago

After an absence of four years from Chicago's Loop, James A. Keough is back again in the city as manager of Lubliner & Trinz's Pantheon theatre, situated on Sheridan road.

Mr. Keough is well-known principally for his past successes with Saxe Bros., owners of the Strand theatre of Minneapolis.

Later he was with Ruben & Finklestein, of the same city, where he managed their Lyric theatre.

Previous to going to Minneapolis Mr. Keough was connected with Charles Weeghman, manager of one of the houses in Chicago's loop—the Casino.

He has been connected with the business for the past twelve years, in all capacities, and was with the first moving picture theatre in the city of Indianapolis, where he ran the phonograph, sang illustrated songs, took tickets and relieved the operator.

Mr. Keough was originally a musician in Chicago and his thorough knowledge of music helps him a great deal in presenting his pictures.
She dominated hundreds of comedies with her dainty beauty. She is even more attractive as a full-fledged star in "The Girl of My Dreams".
She'll Dominate Your Screen

"THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS" by one of America's greatest authors, Wilbur Nesbit, and interpreted by BILLIE RHODES who has been styled the "Screen's Daintiest Star, supported by a capable cast."
Miss Billie Rhodes plays a diversified role in her portrayal of the character of "The Weed" a part that permits her the greatest interpretation of her career and establishes her as a full-fledged star. "The Girl of My Dreams" is the first of eight de-luxe productions which will offer this star during the coming year.
A FULL LINE OF ADVERTISING MATTER that will include many novel EXHIBITOR'S aids is a part of the service with "The Girl of My Dreams" starring Billie Rhodes, produced by the National Film Corp. of America.
HAVE you ever "adopted" a star for your theatre?

Writing some months ago in the News the author of "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor" told how he had taken up a new star and had made her the greatest of favorites in his community and that in a very short time her every appearance marked record attendance at his theatres.

In Billie Rhodes you haven't a really new star, for she has delighted and charmed millions by her work in comedies, but she is now coming into her own as a real star in feature pictures. She will appear only in these special productions which are to be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

You have a distinct advantage in featuring her, for she comes to the screen as a star in features at the ideal moment—with the war over and the people wanting bright and happy things—wanting to laugh and to look on the brighter side. And this girl has been so associated with laughter that all who love comedy know her. And she is to be seen only in bright and pleasing offerings. Her beauty of face and form are known wherever motion pictures are shown.

Let's call her: "The girl with the Victory Smile."

Miss Rhodes is a California girl, born in San Francisco. She began her stage career on the Orpheum circuit and after that played the soubrette role in "Babes in Toyland," and then turned to the screen going with Kalem, later with Universal and then with Christie comedies. It is probably for her work with the last named company that she became best known. Her pictures were featured in most of the big theatres and she began to attract great attention. Since then she has appeared in Strand-Mutual comedies and now has just finished the first of her big features, "The Girl of My Dreams," for the National Film Corporation.

With you it should not be merely a question of increasing the popularity of a star, but of building up greater patronage for your theatre by making that star the better known to your patrons. And where you have a player that can deliver the goods and where you are assured that she will be shown in the right sort of productions, you can go even further by creating the impression in your community that you are virtually one of her discoverers and convert your audiences into her most loyal supporters.

JUST as soon as we booked these productions we would sit down and write a letter to every person within the radius of the theatre—to every possible patron. In most cases circular letters are overdone, but here is a case where you can write one that will attract attention.

In the first place let us suggest that you take the ordinary correspondence size envelope and get an attractive cut of Miss Rhodes, say a three-inch oval and use this at the left of the envelope and over it the words "Introducing her." Use nothing else on the envelope except the address of the patron.

Then write a letter something on this order:

"For a long time we have been watching the work of Miss Billie Rhodes in short comedies and, together with other exhibitors, we have been awaiting the day when she would have a chance in the bigger features. We have admired her beauty, laughed at her infectious humor, taken heart with her Victory smile. And we know that you have, too.

"(Then if you have been playing comedies in which she appeared, call attention to that fact and list the titles of several of them that you have used and which the audience have appreciated most. Then go ahead:)

"And so we have decided to adopt her for the Liberty theatre. We know that you will be glad, especially after you have seen her in the first of her really big offerings and that you will soon be ready to claim her as your own particular star. She doesn't come to us as a novice. We all know her beauty and her ability, but now that she has been granted her proper place among players, let us all show that we appreciate it and that we are going to be charter members of the 'Billie Rhodes star club.'"

"The Girl of My Dreams" is the first of her offerings and it will be shown at the Liberty, January 18 and 19. It is a happy picture, with plenty of laughs, a lot of heart interest, a lot of action—and genuine satisfaction."

WHEN you get the second of her pictures follow it up in the same way. After that you will not need to do any more than to simply notify your patrons of the dates on which you are showing the later offerings. But always refer to her as the star that your theatre has adopted.

Call her "Our Billie."

Figure in all of this sort of exploitation the psychological angle. People do not like to be forced into anything. They are willing to be led when the leading is apparent, but when you make them think that they are doing the thing themselves—in this case that they are putting over Miss Rhodes—they will be with you to the limit and will go further than you would ever dare ask them to go.

We make this statement advisedly. We are not giving you "arm chair" exhibiting ideas here. We have seen them work successfully in the cases of individual theatres and there is no reason why it shouldn't work in the country's theatres as a whole if the managers will put a little enterprise and hard work into the plan.
Use Pictures Everywhere To Put Over The Big Appeal

IN Miss Rhodes' first picture you have a title that is going to help you launch the campaign for her as a feature star—"The Girl of My Dreams." In fact, it is such a business pulling title that it ought to be featured strongly in all your exploitation, second only to striking pictures of your beautiful new star.

And right here, while we are talking about beauty let us take the matter of pictures up. Just as soon as you book these pictures put in your application for every picture of Miss Rhodes that you can get. There is an unusually attractive collection of them that can be bought and you may be certain that they will prove a splendid investment not only for use in your advertising and newspaper work, but for a striking lobby display.

Don't merely rent any of these pictures. Buy them outright. See that your exchange sends through your order without delay and then begin to use them. And don't throw them away after they have been used once, but preserve them for use with every picture. You have a chance here for attractive lobby displays.

AS we have said, get every one of these that is available and have them handsomely mounted in a glass case for your lobby. Use her name at the top and then use the line: "The Liberty has adopted her as our particular star." Then come the pictures and at the bottom should be used a card giving the date on which she will appear at your theatre in "The Girl of My Dreams."

Better still if you will include in this display scene pictures from the coming production. The producers have adopted the policy of using strikingly large pictures for this purpose, and there are eight 11 by 14 and two 22 by 28, so that they will attract immediate attention.

Now don't throw these scene pictures away after you have shown the first of the features. You can make these same stills work for you on the next one. So that they will not appear exactly the same pictures that you have used once before, have cut-outs made of them showing her in the character that she portrays, and then when you get ready to start the display on your second production you can add to the lobby layout a line: "And you'll remember that she looked like this in 'The Girl of My Dreams,'" and then follow this with the scene pictures from the second offering.

FOR theatres that design their own advertising we would advise the use of large and striking half-tones in the displays. The added expense will pay you in the end. The appeal of the illustration is the strongest when the subject is a pretty woman, and you have here a series of photos that will make them all "sit up and take notice."

Don't think that the appeal of a beautiful woman is only to the men. It is even stronger in case of the women.

We would advise you to make the first announcement, of the coming of Miss Rhodes as a real star at least a week before you really start to advertise the first picture. Keep this advertisement separate from your announcement of the current offering. Use one of the photos, a number of, which are shown on these pages, at the top and give the general public a talk along the lines that we have outlined in the letter. Merely announce the name of her first offering.

And tell them it is a happy picture.

THEN start in to advertising the first offering. Don't be afraid to use big space and don't be afraid to make one striking cut the dominant thing about all of your advertising. Elsewhere we are suggesting some selling lines, but in this first picture put all the weight you can behind the personality of the star.

And we would go further than this. We would show that this is not a flash in the pan. Call attention to the unusual beauty of the offering and to the cast that is supporting her.

There are Leo Pierson, Jack MacDonald, Frank MacQuarrie, Lamar Johnston, Golda Mawden and Jane Keerley, all of whom are well known, and the mention of their presence in the cast will help a lot.
Romance and Personality Marked in This One

ROMANCE and personality of the star in the character that she assumes are the two chief points to be played up in exploiting "The Girl of My Dreams." There is a near sensational incident in the story, but you will hurt the patronage not only of this production but of other Billie Rhodes pictures if you go out of the way to emphasize that point.

One big thing to remember is that the people want cheerful pictures these days. They don't want to be worried with problems and they don't want to weep over tragedies. But that does not mean that there is not a demand for the heart thrill—the strong romantic element—and you have it here. Now, let's understand the production before we go any further.

"The Weed," for that is her only name, has been raised in the wilds of the California mountains, ignorant of who her parents are and living with the Williams family, typical product of the mountains. "The Weed" is as pure as the mountain air, but equally ignorant of all but the simplest principles of life. It is on one of her regular trips to a neighboring resort where she goes to sell the farm products that she attracts the attention of George Bassett, an aged millionaire, who is there for his health. Her simple sweetness quite captivates him.

FIRST of the real romance enters the story when Ralph Long, while driving his car down the mountain, skids off a cliff. "The Weed" comes upon him, drag's him to a cave and treats him and then notifies the resort people. Long is taken to the city with "The Weed" remaining in his memory as "the girl of his dreams." But there comes another character, Kenneth Stewart, nephew of the millionaire.

"The Weed" knows nothing of bathing suits and the like, and takes her plunge in the mountain pool in nature's garb. Stewart sees her and snaps her and when he goes back to the city he has the picture enlarged and hung in the club.

But in the meantime the old millionaire is so convinced of the beauty of the girl's character that he takes her to the city to educate her. There Stewart never loses an opportunity to force his unwelcome attentions. It is after she has become Bassett's ward and the heiress to his millions that a landslide wipes out the Williams home and a neighbor finds a book in which it is recorded that the girl is the daughter of Stewart and that her mother died shortly after abandoning her.

During all this time Long remains in a semi-conscious condition in his home next door, and there the girl goes into his apartment, taking him fresh flowers each night. He believes her a dream girl; for the moment he awakes and seems to see her she disappears through the window.

THE information about the girl's parentage comes into the possession of Long's chum and he tells Long, who then goes to the club, tears down the photograph and then reveals the girl's identity to the father. Stewart, heartily ashamed of his conduct, begs that the girl never be told and goes away.

In the meantime the millionaire has formally adopted the girl and has named her as his heiress. It is during a party in the home that she goes to his room to take a plate of refreshments and there finds the old man dead. In the end, of course, Long finds happiness with his "dream girl."

Here are a few lines that tell just enough:

"Pure as the mountain pool in which she bathes, her innocence and beauty charm everyone that she meets. The sordid things in life are kept behind her and the heart throbs you feel for her are strangers to her happy heart. You'll love "The Weed" and she'll make you the happier for having seen her."

"Charmed by her childish innocence, the millionaire took 'The Weed' from her mountain home to the palace of the city, but the beauty of her character remained untouched and she found all that a woman could desire. It's one of the happy stories that put new smiles in your life."

"The Weed" had nothing but beauty and innocence and a heart that knew no limits, but they gave her everything that a woman could desire—wealth and love and utter happiness. You'll delight in the sunshine of her character, you will thrill with events hidden from her, and in the end you'll envy her a little and be very, very happy."

LET us repeat: In this first picture make this a typical "girl" story. Accentuate the happiness of it every moment.

And don't forget the star. Don't forget to talk about her.

Tell the people that she has been seen in comedies galore and that they then only had a chance to see one portion of her talents, but that here they are developed to the fullest.

Try this line:

"If you've liked Billie Rhodes before you'll LOVE her in 'The Girl of My Dreams.' For she's the girl with the Victory Smile."
Rapf Sells A Picture in Lobby

Wanted for Murder" Was Bought by Frank Hall in Broadway Theatre Lobby Immediately After First Presentation

WHAT Mr. Rapf, manager of the recently organized Film Clearing House, did recently in New York, in the briefest phrase, is declared as the quickest film sale on record, took place in the lobby of his theatre Sunday afternoon, December 8, when Frank G. Hall, of the Independent Sales Corporation, bought from Harry Rapf "Wanted for Murder." Mr. Rapf believes that the distinction of putting the first feature production through the recently organized Film Clearing House system of exchanges throughout the country, will fall to him with this special production.

After producing "The Struggle Enduring," with Florence Reed as star, and "An Accidental Honeymoon," featuring Elaine Hammerstein and Robert Warwick, both for the state rights field, Mr. Rapf determined to make as topical a picture as was possible to produce for his next one. S. Jay Kaufman of the New York Globe wrote the story that Mr. Rapf quickly secured and Frank Crane directed it, with George Peters at the camera. Elaine Hammerstein is the French girl and Charles Raven is the American boy in France.

Irene Franklin and Bert Green are also in the picture, as they appeared while entertaining the boys on the other side.

The fact that Mr. Hall bought the picture five minutes after its first presentation is considered by Mr. Rapf as entirely without precedent. The tremendous but practically inexpensive exploitation given the picture by M. Kashin of the Broadway theatre is declared to be a criterion that other progressive exhibitors could well afford to follow.

The "Wanted for Murder" circulars, appearing miraculously upon so many posts around New York City, is said to have attracted thousands of keenly interested groups and was but a part of the "teaser" campaign to bring about the Kaiser's downfall is the impelling motive.

That the production is topical is declared to be revealed through the final scenes, which picture the first actual revolts in Berlin against the tyrannical rule of the Hohenzollerns. The abdication is also pictured and the romance is completed by the return of the American boy to the United States, bringing the French girl home to his mother.

It is declared that Mr. Hall considers "Wanted for Murder" contains the best heart romance of all the war pictures, and without any morbid effects.

Harry Rapf has completed another special production entitled "Sins of the Children," featuring Alma Hanlon, Stuart Holmes and Mahlon Hamilton.

New Release Plan for "Romance of the Air"

An unusual release plan expected to be of good advertising value to exhibitors has been mapped out by the Crest Pictures Corporation for the distribution of the production, "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieutenant Robert Hall, the American Ace, Edith Day, the prima donna of "Going Up," the Cohans and Harris musical comedy now playing in Boston after a season's run in New York.

The releasing plan begins in the New England States, as Lieutenant Hall will make a personal appearance at the premiere of "A Romance of the Air" in Boston on December 30, when this picture begins its four weeks' engagement at the Tremont Temple theatre.

Each and every territory will then be released only after Bert Hall's personal appearance, and no territories will be either sold or leased until after a featured engagement in one large exchange center of each territory during which engagement Hall will appear personally at all performances and give an informal talk on some of his experiences in the Foreign Legion and as an ace in the original Lafayette Escadrille during his three years at three fronts.

As Lieutenant Bert Hall is known for the exploits which resulted in his receiving the highest French, English and Russian honors—he wears seven medals on his broad chest—his personal appearances are expected to be greeted everywhere with enthusiasm and patriotic approval.

"The Hidden Truth" Will Have Broadway Run

"The Hidden Truth," an International Film Service, Inc., production directed by Julius Steger, is scheduled to appear for a run in one of the Broadway theatres in the very near future, but inasmuch as the management of the theatre has secured Anna Case's promise to appear simultaneously with the first showing of her picture—an event which naturally will greatly add to the impressiveness of the occasion—and as she is at present on a concert tour which will keep her engaged for the next two or three weeks, the actual release date cannot, at present, be definitely given out.

It is understood, at the time of her appearance, Miss Case will sing that ever popular old ballad, "Annie Laurie," her rendition of which is so frequently requested.

Anita Stewart Entertains French Officers

Anita Stewart, the movie star, immediately on her arrival in Los Angeles was hosted at a dinner to fourteen French army officers who were on their way under orders from Marshal Foch to join the Allied expeditionary forces in Siberia.

The dinner was given at Hotel Alexandria, and in addition to Miss Stewart and the officers, a number of prominent public officials and people high in the motion picture world were in attendance.

"Wanted for Murder" Has Big Exploitation

Harry Rapf's production, "Wanted for Murder," after a big exploitation campaign, opened at the Broadway theatre, New York, Sunday, December 8.

Mr. Kashin, manager of the theatre, in introducing this production for Mr. Rapf, has arranged very novel advertising ideas. Last week, circulars reading "Wanted for Murder" were posted throughout the city, and many of the streets and thoroughfares were blocked with people reading these circulars.
“Wives of Men” Reported Big Around Cleveland

The Cleveland office of Pioneer Film Corporation reported to Nathan Hirsh, president, that a big business is being done in that territory and that exhibitors are most enthusiastic in their praise of “Wives of Men,” saying that it has been one of the best box office attractions of the season. In the city of Cleveland the first run on this feature was presented at the Miles theatre, and a second run at the Orpheum theatre has done remarkable business.

Crowds have been in front of the theatre during afternoon and evening and from the present outlook it appears that the box office record of the theatre will be broken, according to the report.

Gaumont Shows the First Returning Soldiers

The Gaumont News and Graphic released during the first week in December contained two epochal news events. The giant steamship “Mauretania” arrived in New York City on Monday, December 2, loaded with the first contingent of our returning soldiers.

The Gaumont Company chartered a tug and its corps of cameramen met the “Mauretania” in the lower harbor and obtained what are declared to be the first motion pictures which have been taken of these soldier boys since the armistice was signed.

Arthur H. Sawyer Gathers S-L Cast for Lincoln

Arthur H. Sawyer, the “S” of S-L Productions, and well known in the industry as the business associate of Mr. Lubin in their various film enterprises during the past two years, is engaged in the active supervision of the first S-L feature directed by Ralph Ince.

Mr. Sawyer has gathered together an unusual cast to appear in support of E. K. Lincoln, headed by Clara Joel and Grace Darling.

Star Commends Leading Women

E. K. Lincoln Comments on Leading Women Engaged for His Support in the First of the S-L Productions

E. K. LINCOLN, announced as star of the newly formed producing combination bearing the name of S-L Productions, has appeared in company with many of the feminine screen celebrities of the present day.

Himself, familiar to photoplay audiences by reason of his numerous appearances as leading man in various film features he has been particularly fortunate in his choice of leading women.

During his picture career Lincoln has appeared as leading man with Anita Stewart, Dolores Casselli, Clara Kimball Young, Edith Storey and others equally well known.

Speaking recently of the cast assembled by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin to appear in his support in the initial S-L Production, Mr. Lincoln remarked particularly of the feminine contingent among the players:

“I am greatly impressed with the caliber of the female leads selected by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin to appear in my support in the forthcoming S-L Production. In securing Clara Joel and Grace Darling to interpret the two leading female characters I feel that these roles have been placed in the hands of players both competent and popular.

“Miss Joel is more than familiar to theatre audiences because of her personal success in "Common Clay," "Kick In," and more latterly, "Business Before Pleasure." She is exactly suited to the part assigned to her. I believe Miss Joel will prove a veritable "find" for the screen, and register heavily.

“Miss Darling’s work is known to the patrons of the movies. She has appeared in a great many successful film productions and possesses the particular photographic qualities which make for beauty and appeal on the screen. The vivid contrast in personality and type offered between Clara Joel and Grace Darling should help the production on which I am now working under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Lincoln, as previously announced, is to be presented as a star by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the first of a series of S-L pictures and Ralph Ince is now engaged in directing the production at the Sawyer-Lubin Studios.

Mix-Selig Two Reelers for State Rights

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES, INC., has made a special arrangement with William N. Selig whereby they will offer for the state rights market the sixteen two-reel western dramas featuring Tom Mix.

In the past it has been rather a hard proposition to get good dramatic subjects in short lengths. For this reason Exclusive Features are placing on the market this series of sixteen two-reelers featuring that western star, Tom Mix. The first release, "Twisted Trails," will be available on January 1 and from then on for sixteen weeks one of the two-reelers will be issued weekly.

Tom Mix is noted for his ability to portray the rugged western type of two-fisted fighting man. In this series of two-reelers he is said to be seen at his very best, in plays of fast, snappy action just brimming over with tense situations and real thrills.

Already a great deal of interest is reported as having been manifested by exhibitors who read the initial announcement of these releases.

Exclusive Features reports that they have already made a good number of state rights sales and therefore suggest that state rights buyers should not delay in getting in touch with them.

Those who have seen these two-reel Tom Mix big little features declare that they will provide a long felt want. Exhibitors have always sought for good dramatic short reels, the kind of pictures that can be used to build up a program, and these little Western features are expected to be used to advantage and calculated to fit in well on comedy program, providing a touch of real drama.

United Releases Its First Two in January

CONCRETE evidence of the activity which has been reported from United offices is forthcoming in the announcement of definite dates of release in January of the first two of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., productions, “The Light of Western Stars” and “Adèle.”

The former which is closely based on Zane Grey’s Western romance, “The Light of Western Stars” and was directed by Charles Swickard from the screen version of Roy Clements is definitely announced for release January 5.

The second United release which is firmly set for January 20 will be that of the recently completed Kitty Gordon super-feature, “Adèle,” which has gone smoothly from its inception at the Bronton studios, Los Angeles, and which is said to present this screen star in a novel role differing in its entirety from anything before accomplished by Miss Gordon.

Private showings of “Adèle” in New York are reported to have elicited unqualified praise. The piece is based on Adele Blenman’s widely read “The Nurse’s Story.” Jack Cunningham wrote the continuity and Wallace Worsley directed. Robert Brunton gave personal supervision to the production.

Bruce Announces New Scenics

His Twenty Themes Described as Having Wide and Varied Appeal—Three Thousand Miles to Make One Picture

A NOUNCEMENT has been made of the releases of the new Robert C. Bruce scenes for the winter and early spring. Of the new crop, the Educational Films Corporation has already released "The Tides of Yesterday," "Tis Tough to be Tender," "Tales of the Tall Timber" and "A Wee Bit Odd."

Dane and Buddy, the canine heroes of "The Wanderer and the Whoozit," traveled 3,000 miles to be filmed in one of the pictures. Their winter home is Portland, Oregon, whence they were summoned by telegram to the kennel owner to make the next stand of Jackson's Hole, Wyo. They rode 1,500 miles in express car, met their master at the station, worked on location, and then returned with Bruce on the westbound train to the Coast.

In two of the pictures, equine "leads" are featured. Western canyons bear the packs of Bruce and his dogs up the steep trails, and due need is given to their cleverness and intelligence in "The Little High Hole" and "The Pale Pack Train."

Mr. Bruce believes that in the new series of twenty subjects now offered he has a wider variety of themes and a larger number of original ideas than he has secured in any of his previous seasonal work. The beauty spots of the Northwest, the Rocky Mountains and California have yielded many unexpected treats to the picture-taker, and the novel, the curious and the amusing are blended with the scenically beautiful. Especially is Mr. Bruce enthusiastic in his appreciation of the Jackson's Hole country adjacent to Yellowstone Park. He describes it as the potential Playground of America and warmly favors its incorporation in the Federal Government's system of national parks.

"Motor Corps Night" At Broadway Theatre

In honor of the Motor Corps of America, Mr. Kashin, of the Broadway theatre, will set aside one night as Motor Corps night, during the engagement of the photoplay "Wanted for Murder."

In this picture is a scene in which a few of the ladies of the motor corps with their ambulances are showing their wonderful work on the other side.

"Unique Comedies," Title of Arrow Reissues

The Arrow Film Corporation has secured for exclusive distribution in the United States and Canada thirty-two single reel comedies produced by the United States Motion Pictures Corporation. Twenty-six of these comedies were released through the Paramount programme, but have been withdrawn from the market, while six of the comedies are entirely new.

The re-issues have been re-titled and re-edited, and the entire series are being offered State Rights exchanges to be released once a week, commencing December 20.

Lee Ochs Recovers from Minor Operation

Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United Picture Theatres of America, after completing his recent successful tour through the West, was taken down and consented to be removed to St. Luke's Hospital in New York, where a minor operation was performed.

According to reports, Mr. Ochs is now doing nicely and expects to soon be back at his desk and active in promoting the demand for "Light of the Eastern Stars" and "Adèle."

Charles Chapman Joins S-L Productions

The latest addition to the special studio staff assembled by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin for the first S-L production, starring E. K. Lincoln, is Charles Chapman. Mr. Chapman was appointed in the capacity of Art Director with the newly-formed producing organization.

In point of experience he is a dean of art directors in the motion picture field, having been the first worker in that capacity with the Vitagraph Company of America over nine years ago.

Henry Walthall Christmas Star

"And a Still Small Voice"  Will Be Released December 22 and Distributed Through Exhibitors’ Mutual Exchanges

HENRY B. WALTHALL will be the Christmas star of the new Exhibitors’ Mutual release. By the terms of the new contract between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors’ Corporation, any twelve of the nineteen Exhibitors’ Mutual exchanges in the United States and Canada are being supplied by Robertson-Cole.

Robertson-Cole have contracted for eight Billie Rhodes, eight Henry B. Walthall, eight William Desmond, eight Bessie Barriscale and eight Sesise Hayakawa pictures a year, releasing via the Exhibitors’ Mutual. Mr. Walthall’s first appearance on the releasing program will be on December 18, while “And a Still Small Voice” will appear.

Mr. Walthall is now at work at the National Film Corporation of America studios on the coast in “Lives for Sale,” described as an original powerful story.

Stoermer Comments on “Tidal Wave”

BECAUSE of the many changes in popular desire in its relation toward the theatre, all speculations are wasted energy, according to William Stoermer, author, producer and author of “The Honor System,” and now author, producer and purveyor of “The Tidal Wave,” which he is preparing to circulate immediately.

There are certain angles of mob psychology that may be predetermined accurately, according to the Stoermer manual of film tactics.

In his preparations for “The Tidal Wave” the producer goes back to July, 1917, almost a year and a half ago. At that time, the owner of “The Tidal Wave” decided that he would have in negative form on the shelves ready to be finally cut and submitted a picture big in drama and timely in subject just suited to what popular desire should approximately be when the war was over and peace declared.

"Of one thing you may be sure," said Mr. Stoermer, "and that is that ‘The Tidal Wave’ is not a war play."

"Of another thing you may be certain," he continued, “The Tidal Wave” is not in the limitations of its definitions a romance. Another fact for record is that ‘The Tidal Wave’ is not a suspense detective story. But ‘The Tidal Wave’ possesses situations and atmospheres of all three of those kinds of dramas.

"I am testing my judgment to parallel public inclination at an hour commonly supposed to be the most difficult to gauge by film makers and exhibitors, and, for that matter authors. And I do not think that I have been mistaken in believing more than a year ago that I could call the turn public desire in film plays after peace had been finally tagged to the great red bowl that has convulsed the world for the past four years."

In ‘The Tidal Wave’ I think I have the novel of play that nine-tenths of playgoers want at this time. While it is not a mystery story, my long acquaintance with the pubulm of playhouses long ago taught me that a mystery story is one of the eternal verities for box office draughts.

The story is in eight reels with the surge of souls in conflict as the explanation of the title.

Gaumont Graphic Shows Stirring Scenes

Gaumont Graphic No. 37, which was released December 6, shows many stirring scenes, according to the following partial list:

"With Our Boys in France” shows eleven different scenes, among them being Pushing on to Potsdam, a continuous line of caissons move forward at double time, American engineers build a bridge over the River Meuse, German dugouts near St. Mihiel captured by the Americans, etc.

Gen. Joseph Haller, former commander of the Polish brigade in the Carpathians, is welcomed home at Paris, France. In Los Angeles D. W. Griffith is presented with chevron of honor from the U. S. Government.

At Great Lakes, III., the sailors supplant the newboys and the money real is sent to the Naval Relief Society. The official peace ship is seen leaving New York harbor with President Wilson on board.

Just a few minutes before the President sailed the Lafayette came with several thousand boys from “over there.” All this and many more enlivening scenes are shown in No. 37 of Gaumont Graphic.

Arrow Film Corporation Reports Many Sales in One Week

The activities of the Arrow Film Corporation, state right distributors, have not abated, but if anything renewed and added energy seem to have caused the piling up of a sales record.

In addition to the sales made on the serial, “The Demon Shadow,” the following sales were made for the week ending November 30.

Southeastern Pictures Corporation of Atlanta, for the six Southern States: 32 single-reel “Unique Comedies.”

J. P. Donnelly of Seattle, for Montana: The special attraction, “The Finger of Justice,” and the same production to Max Glueckman for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Standard Films Service Co. of Cleveland, for the territory of Ohio and Kentucky: 12 two-reel “Anna Little” westerns and the same productions to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas for Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma.

The re-issued production, “The Million Dollar Mystery” in six reels, to the Quaker City Film Company, Inc., of Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. Frank Gerston, Inc., for northern New Jersey, and to the S. S. Film Exchange for western Pennsylvania and west Virginia.

“Hugs Within Our Gates,” to the Federal Feature Film Corporation of Boston, for the six New England states.

New Independent Plans to Finance Producers

While the operations of the newly organized Independent Sales Corporation are definitely limited to the maintaining of a large force of film salesmen throughout the country for the sole purpose of booking pictures, and it will not be concerned in the producing of pictures or in the physical distribution of productions, it recently became to that an important part of its functions is the financing of producers so far as a cash advance on finished negatives is concerned and also the financing of prints and advertising.

This places the Independent Sales Corporation in a position where it can close with producers, or groups of producers, immediately to take full charge of the advertising and marketing of their pictures, while at the same time sharing with them the burden of the cost of production.

The physical distribution of the pictures, which is a thing apart from the activities of Independent Sales Corporation, is taken care of by a special arrangement between this company and the Film Clearing House.
Ameri

Americanism and pride of country—in its people and its achievement—have been immeasurably increased by the outcome of the war. Only a couple of years ago we were a more or less selfish people. We didn't care anything about the fellow next door. We didn't thrill much with the success that strangers were making. We didn't worry much about where things came from—so long as they came.

But now we do want to know what our country is doing, so long as the things are virile. We want stories of Americanism, set against the background of things American. We want stories that are happy, stories that are logical, stories that work out to the triumph of real manhood and womanhood. And these are the points to consider in framing your exploitation for "The Key to Power."

Although this six reel feature is released by Educational Film Corporation, it is not to be classed as an "educational" picture, but a virile story of Americanism, set against the background of the great war. It is not a war story, yet the spirit that brought us victory dominates it.

It is distinctly a victory story.

There are thousands of Americans who did not have the privilege of offering their lives "over there," but who offered everything that they had to give on this side of the water. And their part will never be forgotten. In the stress of the excitement of welcoming the heroes back the lustre of these war workers may dim a little, but it will be but a passing cloud.

It is not only not a war picture, but the interest in this should be greater than it was during the actual hostilities. Then the public had time to think only of the feats that the soldiers were performing on the battlefield. Now they have time to consider the whole setting of the great drama. And, as we have said, this forms only the background for an absorbing story of Americanism, full of action and the human elements that people want in pictures.

Here is an idea of the story:

Bruce Wendell, son of a West Virginia coal mine owner, is a West Point graduate and a captain in the American army and in love with Ann Blair, granddaughter of Geo. Blair, who believes that the army is the only profession for a man. Another suitor is Lieut. Parrish, son of the president of the B. & W. Railroad which moves the coal from the Wendell mines. Just before this country gets into the war, Meyer, a German agent, comes to the section and under the guise of making millions for Parrish, senior, really plots to tie up the coal production by having the railroad delay cars. But the elder Wendell fathoms the plot and when he does he is set upon by thugs in the hire of Meyer and receives mortal wounds.

On his deathbed he calls in his son and tells him of the plot and insists that he leave the army and save the coal mines, thus doing his country an even greater service than he could do as a fighter. This offends the Blairs and after this country gets into the war and Bruce refuses to return to his post the break is an open one. Lieut. Parrish and the rest believe that Bruce is animated by cowardice, and the girl finally accepts Parrish's offer of marriage. It is at that moment that Meyer and his crowd resort to further violence and determine to destroy the mines. Ann's little brother, Bobbie, still believes in him and when he is seeking Bruce he is sent by one of the German plotters into the mine just as the explosion is about to go off. Bruce goes to the lad's rescue.

Later, the boy and his sister are trapped by the spies and taken to their headquarters in the mountains. Bobbie escapes and goes to summon Lieut. Parrish and his men from the army post. Bruce shows up just at that moment and a battle with the plotters follows, in which the mine owner is getting the worst of it just as the soldiers arrive. When Lieut. Parrish is told by Meyer of the part that his own father has in the plot he withdraws from the contest for Ann's hand, as well he might, as her faith is now restored and her love is sure.

Pure Americanism—that is the point to play up.

There is just enough of the industrial angle in the picture to give an unusual setting. It is brought out clearly the important part that coal takes in the life of the nation. That is brought out incidentally while Bruce is explaining to Ann and the little brother why he had to leave the army and guard this portion of the national essential resources. This is in the form of allegory, but there are just a few feet of it—enough to strengthen the story without becoming tiresome.

Most of the settings are in West Virginia. There are flashes shown of the mines, of the methods of loading and transport and many scenes in a typical mining town. There isn't the slightest thing of a fake about this picture.

The point that you want to make here is that you have more than a mere story, that you have something everyone will remember. It is a picture that will cause a great amount of "word of mouth" advertising.

Tell them:

"Coal is the key to the power that won the war for America, and the Americans who guarded it and frustrated the plots of the Huns here are just as much heroes as those who fought over there—they all did their duty, and gloriously."
Victory Idea Should Be Played Up Very Strong

THIS is a picture that should be exploited as a special picture. Get out of the rut and do things different. You have a production here that will be a welcome relief after the usual war picture and the general line of current offerings. There is matter here that will make your audiences think without their knowing that they are thinking; that will add greatly to the knowledge of this country's power without their getting the impression that they are being “educated.”

Don’t go into the industrial element of this too much in your advertising. Let that be incidental. We have already told you that the power of coal forms only the background for the story and we wouldn’t go a bit further than that in the publicity. But because of the solid interest, because of that background, because not only is the story real but the settings are genuine you can afford to go much further than you could with one of the purely artificial creations. It should be given all the attention that you give any of the “specials” that you use.

Keep the story the main thing. Keep the victory idea strong. Play the hundred per cent American element for all that it is worth.

HERE is one point that you want to remember:

When the armistice was signed we had more than three million fighting men in service.

That is a great number, a remarkable achievement, but stop to remember that this was but a fraction as compared to the number that were doing war work in this country. A great share of the population was engaged directly in helping to win the war. With the strain of the war over there has been a relief in the tension here at home, just as the boys in the army and navy have relaxed to an extent when the fighting days appear over.

Over on this side of the water the millions have been attending the motion picture theatres and cheering every appearance on the screen of the boys in khaki and blue.

But now the men who did their part on this side are going to have something of an inning. We want all of us now to look further behind the scenes and see the things that contributed to the great victory. We haven’t forgotten the bravery of our heroes, but there is room for a tribute to all now.

Every man who has been serving his country on both sides of the water, every woman, every child knows that there has been every human element at work in this country. You have a chance to show them a part of the war work here, set in with a stirring story of the German intrigue that failed. And though the particular story is fiction the spirit of it is absolutely true.

AND so we would carry that spirit into the advertising. We would talk about the part the workers at home played, keyed up with the victory spirit. Here are a few lines:

“*No braver men ever offered their lives than the millions of boys who served Uncle Sam 'Over There.' But there were heroes at home, too, men who have been unsung, but who have contributed their brain and..."
their brawn to winning the war—without whom Gen. Pershing's army could never have forced the Huns to sign the armistice.

"There were thousands of these heroes in the coal fields, supplying the key to power. They grappled not only with nature, but they had to fight the cunning of German propaganda and Hun violence. Here you have a typical story of the battles that were won at home, how the American coal interests triumphed when all of German power was seeking to cripple our industries. You'll thrill with the bravery of these men just as you have cheered the fighting boys when this tense story of action is unfolded on the screen."

Or this gets the more intimate touch:

"When Bruce Wendell resigned his commission in the army just as this country was about to enter the war, his friends called him a coward. Even his sweetheart turned from him. Among all he knew only his little brother believed in him.

"But he knew that there was a battle to be fought over here, too. He was at the head of a great coal mining plant—and coal is the key to power. How he fought German intrigue and violence and American profiteering is one of the most dramatic stories that has come out of the war.

"There are millions of heroes who never had the chance to do the khaki. You don't know the story of the war until you have seen their part in it. It's a truly American epic."

YOU will note that we have made the selling arguments on this picture somewhat longer than we generally offer in these service sections. It is advisable to do so, because you want to acquaint the public fully with the character of the offering and at the same time to let them know that there is true dramatic interest to the story.

Here is another one that gets the love element into the exploitation a little stronger:

"Ann Blair was a soldier's granddaughter, and when Captain Bruce Wendell came to her in the uniform of a captain, a West Point graduate, he won her heart and hand. But the tocsins of war sounded and Bruce threw up his commission without a word.

"'Coward' she thought, and spurned him and then allowed another officer to win her promise. But she did not know the duty that he had to perform at home. She did not know that German plotters had closed his great mines, that he had to stay at home to supply the key to power of the nation, that our factories might make the munitions of the war, the railroads transport men and supplies and the transports carry them and our fleets over the seas.

"He faced the Hun over here. She saw him in his manhood, with her as the pawn. She came to know that there were heroes on both sides of the water in the big conflict—O, and you know what happened then."

THREE names should be played up in connection with this picture. You have a most charming star in the person of Claire Adams and she will win the sympathy of your audiences quickly. She was born in Calgary, Alberta, and is a niece of Sir Donald McMillan, former governor-general of Manitoba. She recently scored a big hit in "The Spirit of the Red Cross," which has probably been shown in your city and you can make capital of that fact.

Her sole dramatic experience has been in motion pictures, beginning at the Edison studios and was continued in the James Montgomery Flagg short comedies, including "The Man Eater" and "Romance and Brass Tacks." Later, she played opposite Richard Bennett in "The End of the Road." She has just finished work in "Oh! Johnnie," with Louis B. Nennon.

Hugh Thompson, the male lead, is one of the best known leading men on the screen and he certainly has a following in your section. He has played opposite such stars as Virginia Pearson, Theda Bara, Emmy Wehlen and Olive Tell. He was last seen opposite Doris Kenyon in "The Street of the Seven Stars."

William Parke, who is responsible for the making of the picture, is one of the best known of directors. For a long time he made comedies for Thanhouser, and then directed his first feature with Gladys Hulette in "The Shine Girl," the picture that brought the star into real prominence. One of his most recent successes was "The Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward.

Mr. Parke has the advantage of years of experience as stage manager with Richard Mansfield, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, where he learned the fine sense of values that is shown in "The Key to Power."

The Heart of the Theatre

IT is a peculiar thing that when a theatre man talks of his house he goes into every detail with great enthusiasm EXCEPT the PROJECTION ROOM.

They come into his office and sit and expatiate at length about the Bartola, the Seeberg, the Estey, the Austin or some other form of musical instrument of which they are the happy possessors. They will tell you how these instruments have increased their patronage and what a fine musician they have located or the difficulty they are having getting one, as the case may be.

They will go into the stage settings which they will diagram on a pad in order to show the arrangements. They will tell of the cost, etc., all of which we are most interested in and information on which we wish to obtain in full detail.

Some will ask questions as to how to improve their lobby decorations and how to display certain pictures which they have booked. These are the questions on which we are only too glad to give all the help possible at any and all times.

The questions of local advertising and its application to billboard and newspaper space is gone into, also the use of house to house work on “Specials” and “program pictures.” These problems are taken up and discussed and if we can be of service or offer suggestions for improvement, that is our good fortune. We pride ourselves on having this ability.

BUT, and here is the catch, how often does that same theatre man ever take up the question of his PROJECTION ROOM?

How often does he ever inquire as to how he can improve the one thing which he sells to the public and the one thing which means bread and butter to him, “THE PICTURE ON THE SCREEN”?

This never seems to enter his head or if it does he hates to let it remain long enough to cause him any mental exertion. It is the heart of the house, but being the heart, it is hidden and being hidden he seems to think it does not need his supervision. Yet it is responsible for his existence.

It is the same old phase of human nature. The theatre man will pay a large sum for his general equipment but for his PROJECTION ROOM a second-hand rebuilt machine will do or a new one presented to him “because of the advertising possibilities to the manufacturer by having it installed in his house,” or a discount from the dealer who is enough to discourage any man from further dealings with the theatre interests and all on the promise to the dealer of his future business in carbons, slides, etc.

A motor generator set? Why bother with that when the people come anyway and pay to see the picture which flickers along under the influence of alternating current?

Why bother to properly ventilate the Projection Room? Why not suck the foul air up from the theatre and let the Projector breathe it? None of the patrons can see what goes on up there where the machines are working to produce their entertainment. None of them know the hardships which have to be endured in so many houses by the man who is responsible for this entertainment.

Why are these details—or better, the necessities—of the Projection Room overlooked? Merely because the Theatre Owner or Manager does not care for anything except that which can be seen.

Some of them go even further in this respect, thinking that the inability to see is excuse enough, as we pointed out last week, for the elimination of the proper amount of cleaning. All theatres are not in this pitiable condition but there are enough of them to make the general condition appalling, for if the smaller houses continue to be blind to these things they will be forced out of business and pictures will be used elsewhere for the amusement of the people.

In advertising, how many houses feature cleanliness? What percentage of the whole dare? How many reflect upon the condition of their Projection Room by referring to the class of projection with which they offer and the clearness of the picture which they sell.

It is not our desire to be alarmists or super-critical but merely to point out to the theatre men whose houses are in the condition described, what they may expect unless they are awake to conditions.

If theatre men in general were only awake to conditions they would not try to beat down the cost of their projection equipment but each one when he buys would go to the dealer who would give actual service with every article purchased. He would demand absolutely that every so often, in consideration of his purchases, that a repair and electrical man from the dealers should visit his house and see to it that the goods supplied are kept in the proper shape and do the work which they are guaranteed to do. This guarantee and service is worth more to the theatre men than all the price cutting which they could ever take advantage of.

In the one case they are assured of always having their equipment in proper working shape and in the other the dealer does not care whether it ever works or not after the sale is made.

Then there is another feature. We, here at the News, receive photographs and descriptions of houses, all of which we want and ask to have sent in, but how often do these theatre men include photographs of their Projection Rooms? Ever? Practically never. This is wrong and only to prove that these same men who are so progressive in many ways are either thoughtless or have neglected or overlooked that one feature which is responsible for “THE PICTURE ON THE SCREEN”—the one thing they have to sell the public. Let us hope that in future these photographs will be taken and sent in and also let us hope that the Theatre Managers and Owners themselves, as well as the Projectionists, will write in to us and ask us for all the help they need in outfitting or improving the equipment of their Projection Rooms or solving any problem which may arise.

We are conceived enough to think that we can be of help in this regard as well as giving valuable information on running the theatre in general.

E. K. Gillett,
The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus

By Dr. Hermann Kellner
[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Cleveland, Oh., Nov. 26, 1918.]

The following paper contains nothing with which the optical engineer is not familiar. I have, therefore, to apologize for repeating well-known facts. Most of the subject matter that I am able to present is given in a more or less connected form in other papers, printed in our Transactions and elsewhere. I undertook this review at the request of several members of our Society who felt that there was nowhere available a discussion in simple language of the optics of the condenser from the optical standpoint, and which brought out the possibilities and limitations of the subject. I have confined myself in the following strictly to conditions which are reproducible. Effects which may be traced to mistreatment of the apparatus had to be left out of consideration.

Fundamentals of Optical Projection

Light radiates from every point of a source in all directions. If we had a very intense and at the same time cold, point-shaped source, projection would be possible without any additional optical apparatus. Supposing we have such a source S separated by the distance d from a stencil T and at a distance d' from the projection screen. The size of the image on the screen would be \( \frac{d'}{d} \) times the actual size of the stencil, or, differently expressed, the magnification \( M = \frac{d'}{d} \). The magnification may be changed in two ways:

(a) By keeping the projection distance d' constant and varying the distance between source and stencil.

(b) By keeping the distance d the same and varying the projection distance.

The illumination on the screen is more favorable with the shorter projection distance, because a greater amount of the radiation from the source is utilized. The illumination in the center of the field is inversely proportional to the square of the distance d of the screen from the source. For points outside of the center of the projection field the illumination is less than in the center. If a be the angle from the source to a point of the field distant the length b from the center, the illumination I at the point will be proportional to the cosine times the square of the sine of a and inversely proportional to the square of the distance from the center of the field to the point, i.e.,

\[ I = \frac{\cos a \times \sin^2 a}{b^2} \]

To utilize more of the radiation from the source, we apply a condensing system which takes in as large as possible a solid angle of the radiation from the source, and forms an image of this source at which the rays forming this image meet under a smaller angle, or, more generally speaking, under an angle which is more suitable to the particular conditions of the case than the large angle of radiation taken in by the condenser.

By combining an optically perfect condenser, i.e., a condenser which forms a point-shaped image, with a point-shaped source of great intensity, a very simple and perfect projection apparatus could be realized, which would need no projection lens and which would utilize a greater percentage of the energy radiating from the source than the condenserless arrangement. For example: In Fig. 2, S may be a point-shaped source and the distance between S and the condenser C may be shorter than the distance from the image of the source S' to C, so that the aperture of the condenser appears under a greater solid angle from the light source than from its image. If we assume the geometrical conditions on the image side of the condenser (location of stencil, angle under which the boundary rays meet at the image, projection distance, etc.) the same as the conditions in Fig. 1, we will have a projected image of the same size, but with better illumination, because a greater solid angle of the radiation is intercepted by the condenser and made useful for the projection than is intercepted by the stencil in Fig. 1.

The image S' can be considered in its effects as a real light source, with the difference that it radiates only within a limited solid angle, the apex of which is S' and whose base is the surface of the condenser.

!Fig. 1—Projection of the stencil, T, by means of a point-shaped source, S. The picture on the screen is the shadow of the stencil.

The amount of radiation taken in by the condenser is proportional to the square of the sine of the angle \( \theta \) between the optical axis and the ray through the margin of the condenser (which is half of the total angle taken in by the condenser). If, for instance, the size of the stencil in Fig. 1 were 3 x 2 inches, the diagonal would be with close enough approximation equal to 4 inches. Assuming a magnification of 10 at a projection distance of 113.4 inches, the resulting useful angle of radiation at the source would be 20°. If, by using a condenser of suitable power, we intercept a larger angle of radiation, while keeping the angle at the image the same, we will have an increase of illumination proportional to the square of the sine of half the angle at the source. The amount of such possible increase may be seen from the following table:

If we increase the angle \( \theta \) in our example from 10° to 20°, 30°, 40°, we shall have a relative illumination on the screen proportional to 0.12, 0.25, 0.42 against 0.03, or, taking the latter as unit, an increase of illumination of 4 times, 8.3 times, 14 times over the original case. This consideration does not take into account the light lost by absorption and reflection in passing through the condenser.

Even though, by use of the condenser, we utilize a greater amount of radiation than without it, we must be aware of the fact that the greatest part of the radiation from the source is lost, as indicated in Fig. 2, because the radiation within the solid angle intercepted by the condenser is only a small portion of the total amount which the source sends out in all directions. For optical reasons it is impossible to increase the diameter of the condenser very much beyond a size which takes in an angle of about 90°.

Fig. 3—Projection by means of point-shaped source and spherically uncorrected condenser. Rays passing through margin of condenser intersect axis at S' margin, nearer condenser and under greater angle than rays passing through condenser near axis, which latter intersect axis at S' axis. Parts near margin of object, T, are imaged with higher magnification than parts near the axis—the result being "cushion shaped" distortion of the projected picture.

The radiation within this angle can be increased considerably by placing a concave mirror M behind the source, so that its center of curvature lies in the source, Fig. 2. Assuming no loss of light by reflection on the mirror, or by passing through the source, the quantity of light reaching the condenser should be doubled by this expedient.

The conditions so far assumed do not exist in practice because neither the condenser is optically perfect nor the source point shaped. We shall consider:

(A) An Imperfect Condenser in Combination with a Point Shaped Source, and understand by the term imperfect nothing due to careless making of the condenser, but rather those imperfections in performance which are due to the nature of a simple lens system. These are spherical and chromatic aberrations. On account of the former, the different zones of the condenser will produce a series of images of the source; the nearer the zone to the margin, the nearer to the condenser the image produced by it; while with a spherically corrected condenser the rays from all the different zones of the condenser go through the same point, or the hollow cones of light formed by the circumference of the zone as base line have the same apex. These cones have different apices with a spherically uncorrected condenser, the apices lying the nearer the condenser lens the greater the diameter of the zone. The rays which pass through the margin of the condenser will, therefore, intersect the axis at S' margin, Fig. 3, under a greater angle than the corresponding rays in the arrangement with the perfect condenser. This increase of the angles will be small for rays passing near the center of the condenser, and will become greater the nearer the zone which produces the image lies to the margin of the lens. The effect is that the marginal parts of the field are imaged under a greater magnification than the center of the field. The image of a square object will therefore show what is termed cushion shaped distortion.

On account of chromatic aberration, an uncorrected lens will produce images for the different colors composing the white light of the source at different distances from the condenser; the blue image being nearest to the lens, the green, yellow, red, etc., lying at greater distances in the sequence given. For each color, therefore, an image will be produced in the same way as shown in the previous paragraph, these images also having spherical aberration and lying at different distances from the lens. We have to imagine the blue rays forming a cone of the same general shape as just shown, the green ones another one, a little more pointed, because the green image lies farther away from the lens, the red rays forming a still more pointed cone, and so on. The precise shape of such a cone is later illustrated in Fig. 7. A point of a stencil interposed in this multitude of cones will be projected by the red, green, blue, etc., rays at different places on the screen, because these differently colored rays intersect the optical axis at different places and under different angles. Fig. 4 shows how the blue component of a white ray drawn to pass through the margin of the lens, and the red component of another white ray passing nearer to the axis, go through the transparent point P of the stencil. The red ray projects the object point at “red” and blue ray at “blue.” The green and yellow images will lie between the red and blue ones, and in place of a white image we will have a series of colored ones forming a spectrum. The length of this spectrum is a minimum when the stencil is located near the condenser, and increases as the stencil moves towards the image of the source. The amount of this chromatic aberration depends

PERFECTED PROJECTION

THE automatic self-adjustment of the DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector is only one small feature of many which witness to its completeness. No detail has been over looked in making the DeVry the strongest, the lightest, and the most compact self-contained projector on the market. It is the single and separate part. Adopted by the United States Government in all Departments where motion pictures are used, and by the American Red Cross, at home and abroad. Used also in all Y. M. C. A. work, on transports, at home and "over there."

The "Fulco Four" for Projectionists

THROUGH the kindness of the E. E. Fulton Company, 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago, Ill., manufacturers of the well-known line of Fulco Products for use in motion picture theatres and operating rooms, we have just received for inspection a new item of their manufacture, the "Fulco Four," a useful set of tools for the projectionist.

This special tool outfit was evolved as the result of suggestions from an experienced repair man, and comprises tools especially designed for the particular work of the projectionist. The "Fulco Four" will prove handy to the projectionist who takes pride in the quality of his performance, and useful in case of emergency.

As the accompanying illustration shows, the "Fulco Four" consists of a neat military canvas roll, which is used around the edges and contains the following tools, each held in place by a separate loop: (1) Oil-Ejector; (2) V-Block; (3) Set of Punches for Driving Taper Pins; (4) Split Screw Driver.

The Oil-Ejector is a sort of force-pump for forcing oil or grease into the intermittent casings of projecting machines, and it may also be used to advantage in cleaning out the bearings on the machines, as it will shoot a forceful stream of gasoline or kerosene. It is made entirely of brass and heavy brass tubing, and finished in polished nickel.

The V-Block is made of cold rolled steel, and is case-hardened, thus preventing it from becoming easily dented by hammer blows. It is used when removing, or driving, taper-pins in intermittent sprockets and other shafts, and prevents springing the pins when inserting or removing pins. The Set of Punches used with the V-Block comprises four punches of sizes corresponding to the various pins used on projector mechanisms. These punches are made of drill-rod, hardened, tempered and nickel plated, and have knurled hand grips.

The Split Screw Driver, which completes the set, is a mighty useful tool. It is a screw driver with a cleft blade, one side of which is spring-tempered, so that when the blade is applied to the slot of a screw head, the screw will be held in place on the end of the blade, and may be readily put into place no matter if the screw hole is in an inaccessible position. This split screw driver is also nickel plated and has a knurled grip.

The price of the "Fulco Four" tool outfit, as above described, is $5.00, and this neat tool kit will undoubtedly find favor with the projectionists. The tools contained in the set are all "Fulco" specialties, and any of them may be purchased separately by those not desirous of securing the "Fulco Four" complete. The tools are sold separately at the following prices: Oil-Ejector, $2.50; V-Block, $1.25; Set of Four Punches, 50 cents; Split Screw Driver, 75 cents.

Swaab Employed Novel Method of Promoting Simplex Sales

THE latest issue of the Monthly Messenger issued by Lewis M. Swaab, Philadelphia, exclusive distributor for the Simplex products in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, is a particularly attractive number. One full page is devoted to a prospectus of Mr. Swaab's new organization, which he humorously designates the "Simplex Beneficial Association." After the readers of his house-organ are told that they have been invited to join, the aim and objects of the Association are set forth as follows:
"To benefit the exhibitor by advocating the best machines and accessories for his theatre.
"To benefit the operator by giving him a machine that is at once fool-proof, fire-proof, with perfect projection and maximum efficiency with a minimum of trouble.
"To benefit the public by giving them clear, steady, flickerless pictures, not occasionally, but all the time. In addition to the aforegoing:
"To benefit the exhibitor by cutting down his repair bills so as to almost make them nil. To avoid sudden breakdowns by the aid of gears cut out of hardened steel. To permit the operator to see every movement of his machine while in operation by the aid of the plate glass windows in the magazines and mechanism, the working parts of his machine made of tool steel, the non-breaking condenser system and the extraordinary advantages of the cooling system in the lamphouse, admitting the maximum ventilation, and other valuable points almost too numerous to mention.
"There are no dues and no assessments. The membership is unlimited and open to all.

The Association invites every thinking person to investigate its mode of business procedure and refers to any bank and trust company as to its financial standing. It would require too much space to give a list of its membership. One of the principal members is the United States Government, which owns hundreds of Simplex machines."

Then follows a partial list of the principal Simplex installations on Government war vessels, army posts, federal departments, training camps, hospitals, and industrial organizations. After setting forth the declaration of principles of the benefit society and a very striking array of places where the Simplex Projectors are now in use, there appears this whimsical appeal,
"Come on and belong!"

White A. C. Special Carbons have made good the claims made for them from the very day they were placed on the market. Hundreds of voluntary letters from all parts of the country testify to that fact. These carbons have met the requirements so exactly that they are now the standard of alternating current carbons.

White A. C. Special Carbons give the penetrating, pure white, flickerless light so necessary for even screen illumina-

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive
Motion Picture Film

[Latest instructions issued by the Eastman Kodak Co.]

PART II—TONING

Equipment

The equipment necessary for systematic tinting and toning is essentially the same as that required for development, consisting of the usual tanks and racks or small drums, only it is advisable that they should be used for this purpose exclusively, and, if possible, occupy a separate room to exclude any possibility of contaminating the developing solutions by the copper or sulphotating bath, which would cause development fog immediately.

The drum system, on account of the expense involved in apparatus and the greater space required for manipulation, is not to be recommended for tinting and toning operations, though for operation on a small scale, a small wooden drum revolving in a shallow wooden tank is most efficient and economical.

When the tank and rack system is employed, the tanks should be of slate or other resistive material, and should have an outlet at the bottom in the form of a hard-rubber stop-cock or a plain wooden plug. The racks or drums may be of wood, but if metal pegs are employed on the racks they should be coated with acid-resistant paint, such as asphalt, since the presence of any metallic surface in the toning baths will cause contamination and effect a precipitation of sludge. The frames should not be interchanged, but kept separate either for tinting or toning, to prevent contamination of one bath with racks previously employed in another. This also applies to the small drum system. For instance, a pink tint would be ruined by using a rack which had previously been immersed in a deep blue dye-bath, unless that particular rack had been thoroughly washed. In case of delicate tinting, however, no harm is done providing the racks have been previously coated with the following waterproof varnish:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hard Paraffin</th>
<th>Metric</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3½ lbs.</td>
<td>1600 grams</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 gals.</td>
<td>40 liters</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Before treatment it is preferable to immerse the racks which have been previously used for developing, in a 1 per cent solution of hydrochloric acid for two or three minutes, wash for fifteen minutes and thoroughly dry. The well-dried racks are then dipped in the above solution and the excess liquid drained off, when the varnish dries almost immediately. The varnishing should be repeated at intervals.

Mixing Solutions

Developers, toning solutions and dyes should be mixed in crocks of glazed earthenware or enamelled iron, using warm water where necessary and ensuring thorough solution by stirring with a wooden paddle, which should be thoroughly washed after each operation. Having thus dissolved the chemicals is as small a quantity of warm water as possible, filter through fine muslin and make up the bath with cold water, so that the final solution will be at approximately the correct temperature.

Troubles in Toning

Most difficulties met with in toning may be traced to one or more of the following causes:

1. Uneven Toning:
   This may be due to:
   a. Grease on the film. Never project film before toning or before washing and after drying.
   b. Drying spots on untoned film. If possible always tint film immediately after washing and before drying.
   c. Examination of the film too frequently during toning causes an oxidation of the toning solution in places where the solution fails to drain from the film.
   d. Insufficient or uneven washing of the film after bleaching and before toning (Tones F and G).

White Spots:

White spots are produced by particles of hypo or carbonate dust, or splashes of a solution of these, settling on the toned film. The toned image consists of silver together with more or less silver ferrocyanide and the ferrocyanides of uranium, iron and copper as the case may be. Silver ferrocyanides are soluble in a solution of sodium carbonate, strong ammonia, etc., so that the white spots indicate those parts where the toned image has been dissolved away.

Irregular white spots may also be formed if the film is imperfectly squeegeed after washing and before drying, especially if the wash water is slightly alkaline. When a spot of water on the toned film evaporates, the small amount of alkali present in the water becomes more concentrated and finally dissolves away more or less of the tone, leaving a white spot on the film.

White spots due to these causes may be prevented by immersing the film for a few seconds in a 5 per cent solution of glacial acetic acid after toning and before placing on the drying rack.

Stained Highlights:

Are caused by:

a. Traces of fog on the film before toning.

b. An improperly compounded toning bath. All solutions when new should be perfectly clear.

Premature exhaustion of the bath. This is due either to the action of light or to the presence of some metal in the tank on the shape of screw heads, faucets, pins, etc., which gather the tone and cause the formation of sludge.

It is important to keep all solutions containing potassium ferrocyanide exposed as little as possible to daylight, to use only wooden racks with wooden pegs, and to cover all metal parts very carefully with acid resisting paint.

d. In dye-toning, stained highlights are due either to insufficient washing after toning with copper, too strong a dye-bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye-bath.

Recent Patents of Interest to Cinematographers

A MONG the United States patents granted within recent months the following will probably be of interest to cinematographers and others interested in the technique of motion picture production.

Consists of a mirror in the form of a segment of a circle, which is mounted in a cine camera between lens and film, and inclined at 45° to the axis of the lens. The mirror is rotated by a train of gears and throws an image into a view-finder telescope. The scene and action being photographed may thus be observed while the camera is in operation.

No. 1,276,638—A. Wayditch, New York. KinetoScope for Projecting Stereoscopic Motion Pictures

Uses a film containing left-and right-eye images successively arranged, these being projected in pairs to the screen by a quadruple projection lens in combination with a shutter of special type which allows projection through alternate pairs of the projection lenses.

No. 1,279,276—J. L. Crabtree, New York. Tinting Process and Product Thereof

Describes a cheap and effective method of tinting films by the use of inorganic coloring matter in place of comparatively expensive organic dyes.

This method is particularly adapted for us with double-coated positive film, and a plastic or bas-relief appearance is secured in the positive as a result of carrying into practice the effect noted when a negative, and a positive transparency printed therefrom, are superimposed and then shifted slightly out of register.
Kodak Co. Erecting Factory for Production of Photographic Gelatine

A huge new factory for the manufacture of gelatine is under way by the Eastman Kodak Company near its Kodak Park plant in Rochester, N. Y. The new building will cover a site 400 by 400 in size, will be three stories in height and will turn out four times as much gelatine as the present facilities. The manufacture of this product was started only with the severance of commercial relations with Germany, from where most of the product had been obtained before the war. The new factory will be equipped to supply a much larger quantity than was ever available before. It is to be situated just west of Dewey avenue.

Other building activities of the company include the erection of a big warehouse for the storage of film. A new overflow office building also is under construction to house the medical and other offices of the company, which at present are not provided for. Although the Eastman company has not been a "war industry," its constantly growing business is attested by the frequency with which new manufacturing or storage facilities are made necessary.

Indianapolis Projectionists' License Fees Refunded

Projectionists in Indianapolis have been notified to obtain the refund on their occupational license fees by application at the office of the city controller. Six projectionists who were taxed under a city ordinance appealed to the courts and had the ordinance declared invalid. Each is entitled to a refund of $225.

Dramatic Music in Relation to the Motion Picture

The film director unfortunately does not, as a rule, consider music in assembling his pictures. Hence it is all the more necessary for the musical director to consider the picture in adapting his music to interpret same. "Since the mountain does not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain."

Music, as we all know, can appropriately emphasize practically every human emotion portrayed in the photoplay, and it is the place of the orchestra leader to immediately recognize all dramatic musical possibilities of the pictures. Dramatic photoplay situations are in most cases either emotional without much action or physical in which emotion is expressed in movement. In a dramatic situation where love, hatred or sorrow are shown in facial registeration with little or no bodily movement, dramatic maestosos, lentos, adagios or andantes are employed, while in scenes of physical violence or agitation, agitatos, hurrises and furiosos are the proper musical mediums of expression.

There is no doubt that the most important point for the orchestra leader is to acquire an appropriate musical library. We are aware of the fact that real dramatic compositions are hard to obtain. We also know that many publications are advertised as dramatic compositions, but turn out to be dramatic in name only and almost anything in character. Realizing this situation, we consider it our duty to call the attention of our readers to a list of dramatic compositions which I personally, as Musical Editor of these columns, have used to great advantage. Everyone of the following compositions are absolutely suitable to portray dramatic situations, and I earnestly suggest that every musician who aims to interpret the photoplay with appropriate music should avail himself, if not of the entire list, at least of a part of same.

As the first number of great dramatic value, I will mention a composition which is composed by Bach. It isn't the Bach born in Germany, but it is our American Bach, born in Milwaukee. The name of this number is "Ein Marschen," a composition opening with a dramatic maestoso for cello and bass, and finishing with a beautiful dramatic melodic movement for violins. The length of this composition is about eight minutes and the price of same is very reasonable.

"Bleeding Heart" is a beautiful melodic composition of strong heart-interest in the first part, the second strain comprising an agitated movement of intensive dramatic character, same being composed by Sol. P. Levy.

"Schirmer's Photoplay Series," published in four volumes, is another collection of dramatic publications of exceptional merit and can be considered as a very valuable addition to the library of every earnest musician.

"Dramatic Suspense" is an extremely original dramatic composition which in its tonal construction as well as in its arrangement, gives it the distinction of being in a class by itself. This number is composed by M. Winkler and is obtainable for only 30 cents for small orchestra and piano.

The following list of compositions, which I will not describe in detail, can also be considered a very valuable asset in interpreting dramatic situations of the film:

Love Song, by Fleiger.
Eva Prelude, by Massenet.
Tragic Theme, by Paul Vely.
Heartwounds, by Grieg.
Dramatic Tension No. 17, by Shepherd.
The Vampire, by Sol. P. Levy.
Rustle of Spring, by Sinding.
By the River, Romance, by Morse.
Symphonette Suite, by Irene Berge.
Dawn of Hope, by Casella.

Largo from New World Symphony, by Dvorak.
Adagio Cantabile, from Sonata Pathetique, by Beethoven.
Tears, by J. S. Zamecnik.
Adoration, by Borowski.
Broken Melody, by Von Bienne.
Andante Appassionato, by Castello.
Last Spring, by Grieg.
Melody, by Friml.
Pathetic Andante, by Paul Vely.
Grave-Allegro Molto, from Sonata Pathetique, by Beethoven.
Melody, by Kretschmer.
Dramatic Andante, for suppressed emotion, by Borch.
The above mentioned compositions are only a very small part of real dramatic publications on the market, but the editor will at any time gladly give lists of any style of music to all those who will request him to do so.

The Editor.

Review of Latest Compositions

1. "Valse Parisienne." A very popular waltz by Lee S. Roberts is owned and published by the man who made "Missouri Waltz" the world's most famous popular melody. (Forster Music Publishing Co., 736 S. Michigan avenue, Chicago, Ill.)

2. "Some Day They're Coming Home Again." One-step arrangement of the biggest soldier song success published. By Harry Hilbert. (Carl Fischer-Witmark Orchestra and Band Department, Cooper Square, New York.)

3. "Adoration." By Felix Borowski. An orchestra arrangement of this world-famous violin solo. A number which will immediately appeal to your audience. (Carl Fisher, Cooper Square, New York.)

4. "Jealous Moon." Fox-trot. Certainly J. S. Zamenik has never scored a bigger success than with this number. Bright and tuneful, it is indeed a tinkling fox-trot. (Sam Fox Publishing Co., Cleveland, Ohio.)

5. "My Paradise." Here is a waltz which is encored time and again. Dancer leaders are enthusiastic over it. A dreamy, bewitching melody which the crowd will always whistle. (Sam Fox.)

8. "Our Director." The international march hit, by F. E. Bigelow. (Walter Jacobs.)

10. "Yankee Tars." By John Boulton. Dedicated to every one of those glorious boys who have upheld the freedom of the seas. It is a rousing nautical march, the very essence of life on the ocean wave. (Belwin, Inc.)

Theatres Worth While

Crowds waiting to get into the new Coliseum theatre at San Francisco, and a view of the promenade on the main auditorium floor.

Coliseum a Credit to San Francisco

SIGNIFICANT for two reasons, the dedication of the Coliseum theatre, Ninth avenue and Clement street, San Francisco, attracted a record attendance of film followers, both professional and popular, on Friday night, November 22.

First of all, the entire gross proceeds of the opening night were contributed by Samuel H. Levin, owner and manager, to the San Francisco chapter of the American Red Cross, which sponsored the dedication. Secondly, film men were particularly interested in the establishment of so substantial an amusement enterprise in such a remotely situated residential district of the city.

The Coliseum is one of the finest moving picture palaces in the country and brings the best in photoplay entertainment to the very doors of San Francisco's most exclusive residential district.

John A. Britton, chairman of the San Francisco Red Cross chapter, in making the dedicatory address heaped words of praise upon Manager Levin's head for the generous gift and wished him the fullest enjoyment of the success which a dedication in the name of so worthy a cause deserved. The various business clubs and merchants' associations of the district attended the opening, occupying loge and box sections, which they purchased at premium prices in order to swell the Red Cross receipts. Mayor James Rolph was present to represent the city.

The Coliseum is a huge pile, Gothic in architecture, occupying a prominent corner in the Park-Presidio residence district of the city. This location is several miles away from the nearest business district house of the size and character of the Coliseum supplying full orchestral and organ accompaniment for the best of film features.

Erected at a cost of over a quarter of a million dollars, the Coliseum represents the crowning achievement of Samuel H. Levin's career as a director of moving picture theatres in San Francisco. "I have sought to embody in the Coliseum every detail which from an experience of fifteen years before the moving picture public I know to be in demand," said Manager Levin in speaking of his latest project. "Many district picture houses have been in my hands," continued Mr. Levin, "but I have not been able to find an owner who would erect the distinctive kind of building which I wanted to house my ideal of a moving picture theatre—so I built it myself. This investment is unique, since the entire transaction represents the work of one man and is a monument to his faith in the industry. I have bought outright the land upon which the Coliseum is built, and have personally financed the deal in every detail."

The main facade of the Coliseum is severely simple in design, rather tending to accentuate the broad expanse of marquee and width of entrance than to elaboration of detail. The interior is suggestive of the same refinement and simplicity with the exception of the delicately traced design of the organ loft. The proscenium arch is somewhat more elaborate as it is fitting for the frame of the silent stage upon which to be enacted the masterpieces for which the theatre was built. A heavy plush curtain drapes the screen when the stage is utilized for musical acts which are a feature of every bill. The stage is given a dignified finishing touch by huge fern jars at either end and a mahogany baby grand piano at one side of the screen.

Twenty-two hundred seats constitute the capacity of the Coliseum. Of this number 200 are loges and 100 are box seats. About 700 seats are located in the balcony.

Much of the luxury which typifies the furnishings of the Coliseum is centered on the mezzanine floor which is a spacious lounge and reception room extending across the entire front portion of the building. Comfortable divans, chairs and heavily upholstered seats are placed about the lounge which leads directly to the balcony and loge sections by means of a short incline. Here also are located the ladies' dressing and retiring rooms, free telephone booths, a miniature conservatory with playing fountain and the managerial offices.

Modern to the last detail, the Coliseum is equipped with elaborate heating, ventilating and vacuum system. In this respect the house affords the innovation of a parking station for baby, carriage and all, if the parent wishes. A nurse is in charge.

Music of a worth-while character is one of the chief attractions in the programme outlined by Mr. Levin. In addition to a full string orchestra, the Coliseum has a Robert-Morton organ, installed by the American Photo Player Company. This instrument is the latest organ built by the Photo Player people for the reproduction of symphonic orchestral tones.
INDEX TO COMPLETE PLAN BOOK AND EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to the Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

We also contain our reviewers' comments in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. We also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we reserve at the end of this list not only by the actual comments made, but also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

“THE ROAD THROUGH THE DARK”—SELECT

Moral Question Raised in Story That Looks Worthy

The main object of this story is to show that, in order to save women and children from massacre, the heroine, a young French girl, delivers herself to a German Commander; later, taking advantage of her privileged position, she transmits to the Allies valuable information.

Owing to the nature of the theme and its manner of presentation, you can readily see that the spectator is placed in a rather tight corner; he has to do one of two things, either to sanction the heroine's conduct on patriotic grounds, or else condemn it and run the risk of being thought of as unpatriotic.

Worthy as the object of the story is, it will fail, I fear, to win universal sympathy on account of the moral question involved. It is true, in the past, such themes have been successfully embodied in pictures. Almost invariably, however, the heroine was shown as having been forced into such a predicament; while, in this case, it is put up for her to decide, her refusal, of course, meaning torture to innocent human beings.

Perhaps such incidents have occurred in real life during this war—no one may dispute that. And he is a heartless man who would condemn a woman for, under similar circumstances, taking the same action. But in pictures is different; everybody knows that the characters obey the author's bidding.

The logic of the story in many of the situations is not such that we would become exultant over it.

THE STORY

Gabrielle Jardee, a French girl, has fallen in love with John Morgan, an American. Her father wishes her to marry a Frenchman, and, with her brother and sister, sends her away from Paris to break up the affair. They go to visit their aunt, Madame Le Coutier, in a little village on the Meuse.

The war comes. The village is invaded by the Germans. Gabrielle’s brother, sister, and aunt are shot by the drunken soldiers. She is offered shelter in the personal quarters of the Kommandant, Prince Karl of Streilitz. Prince Karl tells her that if she will give herself to him he will punish the rioters and save the town. To save the people of the town, Gabrielle becomes the French mistress of the German prince; scorned by all the villagers, for whom she has killed her soul to save.

In time Karl is transferred to the Intelligence Department in Berlin. He takes Gabrielle with him, at her request. One night he gives a formal banquet. Gabrielle excuses herself, searches his room, and confutes some strategic papers. Karl learns of her duplicity and in the ensuing struggle she kills him. She escapes to France, where she gives valuable information to the Council of Allied Intelligence, who are meeting in Paris, and where she again meets John, who tells her she still loves her.

CATCH LINES

The absorbing tale of a French girl who became the mistress of a German prince to save her native land.

Just how much would the preservation of your country’s honor be worth to you? Gabrielle Jardee gave her most priceless possession to preserve the glorious name of France.

She gave herself to a German prince that she might better serve France.

Clara Kimball Young is brilliantly emotional in the leading role, while two of the cleverest leading men on the screen, Jack Holt and Henry Woodward, are in her support.

Gabrielle Jardee’s road led through the darkness—through the Blackest depths—but the end of her journey held a wonderful reward.

Both the production and star cuts on this production may be used for dressing advertisements as well as with news stories. The smaller star cuts are, however, better suited to newspaper advertising purposes.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is a war picture, its story is so strong and wholly different from the average war picture—being personal in character—you may safely advertise it strongly. Try to get an idea of the story into your advertising. Your patrons may know it is not the usual war stuff. It might be better, however, to forget about the fact that it is a war picture and merely advertise the star’s name and title. Certainly Miss Young is a big drawing card, while there can be little doubt as to the effectiveness of the picture’s name.

AD TALK

Clara Kimball Young, who will be seen at the Theatre on [date], in “The Road Through the Dark,” does not depart from her superb type of emotional acting in this picture. In fact, if possible, she is better.

In it she takes the part of a young French girl who falls in love with an American. In order to keep them from marrying, her father sends her to the home of her aunt, who lives in a little village on the Meuse. The first few months of the war, which comes soon after her removal to the home of her aunt, finds her a captive. She has become the companion of a German officer in order to save the lives of a towful of people. It is the girl’s associations with the officer, and the events which follow, with her as a spy for France, that furnish the plot for the story. It is a thrilling romance, and one in which Miss Young appears to great advantage.

Miss Young’s dark beauty and exquisite form are especially adapted for the role of the vivacious and beautiful French girl which she portrays. Her superb emotions carry her through-out the picture.
THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR—VITAGRAPHC

Light One with Fine Photography and Good Scenes

THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR belongs to the light class of attractions, pleasing the esthetic senses, in which pretty and handsome faces and nice women’s dresses abound, and in which fine photography and real scenic beauty are more or less the predominating features. Pleasure seekers who hunt for the more virile sort of photoplays, in which rapid action of plot and strong suspense must be the chief elements, may not find in it just what they want. It is better suited, however, for the more tender-hearted kind of audiences, who abhor fights and shootings and the like.

The heroine is introduced as a dainty looking young lady, admired by many young men. She loves none of them, however. Her aunt receives a telegram that the hero, known as a woman hater because his wife had deserted him, later being killed in an accident, is to visit her. The heroine enters a wager with one of her admirers that she will win him. The bet is accepted and she sets out to accomplish the task. In the end, she wins the bet and the hero for a husband.

The heroine portrays the role of a child successfully; but whether picture goers will be convinced that she actually fools the hero or not, it is another question.

Directed by Joseph Gleason.

THE STORY
Betty lives with her Aunt Jessie and is having her first honeymoon when she hears that Dick Mentor, a confirmed woman-hater, owing to the fact his wife deserted him with their child and shortly afterwards died, is returning to civilization from his hunting trip in Africa. Betty has never encountered a woman-hater in her life and she makes a wager—a kiss against a horse—with Hugh, an admirer, that she will win Dick’s heart. And with the arrival of Dick she lays out her plan.

Instead of as a girl eighteen years old she appears as a little miss of twelve and by reason of her sweetness and naiveté completely captivates the woman-hater. He resolves that some day he will make her love him. But Betty has already learned to love Dick, much to her consternation be it said, and Hugh being a wide awake young man, realizes it also. As a consequence he prepares to pay his bet and one day leads a horse up to her, bearing the words: “To Betty, for winning her bet and Dick Mentor,” inscribed on its blanket. And it is on this very day that Betty has decided to tell Dick the truth about herself.

Dick, waiting for her, sees the horse and immediately realizes what has happened. He pours scorn on Betty when she appears before him attired as a girl of her own age and announces that she is going to pay a debt to him. With that, he mounts the horse and swings her to the saddle, galloping away to the house that he has not entered since his wife deserted him. But Betty’s punishment is bitter but brief. Dick struggles against the love he has for the girl, but it is too great for him, and it finally triumphs, as it does in all good romances.

AD TALK
Masquerading as a girl of twelve summers, Betty, by her childish sympathy, wins the heart of Dick Mentor, embittered against all women since his wife left him with their baby years before. This remarkable masquerade is delightfully pictured in “The Beloved Impostor,” the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, which will be seen in the latest theatre on —— Grand opening week. Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph’s irresistible “Duchess” star, has the role of Betty, who plays this game of hearts on a wager of a kiss against a thoroughbred horse.

Betty wins her way to this strong man’s affection and trust as a child and in so doing, loses her own heart. She learns to tell Dick lest she lose him, but he finally learns the truth and the powerful climax is where Betty, white-faced and fearful, bows to the punishment he metes out to her.

The feature was directed by Joseph Gleason, and in the supporting cast are Huntery Gordon, Denton Vane, Mrs. Hurley, Frances Grant, and Gwen Williams.

SUGGESTIONS
You have a really delightful little star to boost in this feature. Her recent appearances on the Vitagraph program have gained for her great popularity and the role she plays in this picture is one of the best she has ever been awarded.

The story, too, is somewhat out of the ordinary. It is a romance with several tense moments and very pretty from start to finish. Bring out the quality of the story and the star in all advertising you undertake.

"WILD HONEY"—DE LUXE

A Different Sort of Western with a Striking Star

FOR comparison’s sake “Wild Honey” ranks considerably above “The Street of Seven Stars,” one of Doris Kenyon’s previous pictures. It presents a western melodrama of a sort not to be seen often. It features not the usual bad man or the usual romance, but a truly unusual clash of character between a vain girl of the dance halls and a minister who comes to a western town bent on reforming it.

Miss Kenyon’s youth and beauty are particularly well offset in this character. She appears to fit the part admirably well and is constantly the center of attention.

The picture has been attractively produced and the director has well succeeded in bringing out the contrast of the two principal characters. The result is a picture that remains interesting from beginning to end. The story also has a number of original twists which give the film a distinctive flavor and serve to lift it considerably from the usual sort of western feature.

Miss Kenyon receives adequate support from a large cast headed by Frank Mills.—Length, 5,675 feet.

By Virgie E. Roe.

Directed by Francis J. Grandon.
Photographed by Ned Van Buren and J. A. Badaracco.

SUGGESTIONS

Taken from the standpoint of originality, "Wild Honey" is a picture that will offer you a number of advertising possibilities, chief of which is the fact that the film is based on a clash of character—a dance hall girl on the one hand and a minister on the other. Play this situation up big and you should attract patronage. It is an angle quite different from that provided you in the usual western pictures, so make the most of it.

Miss Kenyon is admirably suited to portray the leading part of this feature. Both in appearance and actions she fits the role to a "T." You can spread yourself on Miss Kenyon, therefore. Let them know that she gives the best performance of her career before the camera in this picture and, another point, don’t fail to mention her beauty. She is, without doubt, one of the prettiest girls on the screen today. Use her pictures as profusely as possible.

Louis Joseph Vance, who made the scenario of the Rose story, is a well-known author himself, so mention his name. Frank Mills, the leading man, has also done much work before the camera and should be featured if adequate returns would be guaranteed.

CATCH LINES

Doris Kenyon appears here in the third picture made by her own company—a western story of a sort that is "different." The thrilling clash of two characters—one side a vain dance hall girl of the olden West—on the other a minister of the highest ideals—a clash that is dramatic from first to last.

Would it hurt a minister’s career to marry an actress? See "Wild Honey" and learn for yourself.

AD TALK

Doris Kenyon will be the star at the theatres this week in her latest De Luxe photoplay, "Wild Honey," an adaptation of the magazine story by Virgie E. Roe made by Louis Joseph Vance. Miss Kenyon scored distinctly in the first two pictures made by this, her own company, namely, "The Street of Seven Stars" and "The Ten of the Blue Moon," but it is more than likely, according to advance report, that "Wild Honey" will quite overshadow these former successes.

In this picture Miss Kenyon appears as a western dance hall girl, vivacious, vain, without thought of anything but the worldly. Into the roaring hell of the western camp comes a minister, bent on conquering new fields. He proves a fighting preacher and gains the respect of the people, but not a little by little, but Wild Honey (Miss Kenyon) delights to smirk and smile at him, disregarding his position and his mission. The clash of these two characters forms the basis of the photoplay and the story builds to a climax of real power when the girl at last confesses her love for the minister. She is no longer ashamed in public places.

Miss Kenyon’s rare beauty, her refreshing personality, fit her admirably well in this role. And never before, it may truthfully be said, has she shown such dramatic ability as in this picture. The story is swift moving and in its essentials differs widely from the usual type of western photoplay on which audiences of today have been "fed." A strong supporting cast headed by Frank Mills surrounds Miss Kenyon, whose direction is of a superior order throughout.

"THE SEA FLOWER"—BLUEBIRD
A Wild Romance of South Sea Isles

SOME Sea Flower! When I was a child, my grandmother used to tell me some pretty good stories—and she was some story teller!—but she never pulled anything on me to equal this one.

The picture opens somewhere in the South Seas. The first thing that strikes your eyes is the "beautiful" sight of a drunk. He is having a fuss with a native woman over the fact that, although the bottle was full before he took his regulation daylight nap, he now finds it empty.

From this point on, things commence to happen. Leaving the natives and their gin on the island, we go to San Francisco. Our purpose is to bring the hero, a U. S. Secret Service man, on the island, so that he can meet the heroine. He happens to be discovered eavesdropping on board of the ship by some German spies and is thrown overboard. The water being chilly, he swims ashore, is found by the heroine and dragged into a cave. She thus gets her book-knight, although somewhat with a heavy crop of beard. But lo! The very next day he comes out of the cave with a face smoother than I ever possessed. (Where 'in Heavens did he get the razor?)

To cut the story short, he goes back to America, gets some help, returns to the island, captures some Germans, saves the heroine and again goes back to America to round up the rest of the spies (I wonder whether it was a safety razor or a straight?)

In the end, it develops that the heroine is none other than the daughter of the Chief of the Secret Service, stolen when he was a baby. (It puzzles me to this day though—where did he get the razor?)

If you happen to cater to children, big ones and little ones, this is the picture to book. But beware! Don't tell them anything about the razor.—Released Dec. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Juanita Hansen, the lovely actress who recently scored such a success in the serial "The Brass Bullet," and who has been seen in many comedies and dramas of the past, will be the star at the —— theatre on the 23rd of this week in the Bluebird photoplay, "The Sea Flower." In truth, one of the most admirable flowers to be found, whether one look on sea or land, and her handling of the role of the adopted daughter of the South Sea Islands in this picture is one of the best things that she has yet done in her exceedingly successful career before the camera lens.

She appears as Lurline, a white girl, supposedly daughter of "Brandy" Cain, a drunken old beachcomber of the South Sea Isles. Fate, and a very kind lady at that, decrees that her path shall cross that of Truxtun Darnley, government secret service operative, who is cast up in a boat on the island after German spies have discovered him peering into their most secret secrets aboard an old tramp schooner. Love springs up between the two as the sun sets, as it does in all good romances, but their pretty affair is rudely interrupted when Darnley realizes the fact that he must be back in San Francisco within eight days in order to prevent the spies from carrying out a serious threat against the government of the United States.

How the romance is concluded, how Lurline finds her real father and how Darnley succeeds on his perilous mission, are events which unite to form a climax of three-fold intensity. The story of "The Sea Flower" with a finale more thrilling even than a man's man which transpire within the body of the picture itself.

THE STORY

Lurline, a beautiful white girl, daughter of "Brandy" Cain, beach comber and "Ne'er-do-well," grows up, imbued with all the poetry of the South Sea and the fauna. She has gleaned from Father John, a missionary. In San Francisco, "Brandy" Cain has been successfully smuggling ammunition and arms to a Huana raider, under the guise of "The Scullion," a schooner owned by burly Dane Larson, for his purpose. Truxtun Darnley, one of the cleverest operatives of the government, is trailing the band. He ships aboard the "Scullion" as a seaman and discovers the hold loaded with munitions. He learns that on the 30th, the National Munition Plant in San Francisco, is to be blown up by Von Linterman's men.

Darnley is detected spying and put adrift in a small boat. He is cast up on an island and found by Lurline. She secures him in her cave. A romance develops, but is halted when Darnley realizes he has only eight days in which to get to San Francisco to foil the plotters. He bids farewell to Lurline, promising to return to her later. That night, Lurline is sold into marriage by her supposed parent, to Larsen. The parent has really stolen Lurline in her infancy. At dawn, the "Scullion" is ahead of the steamer bearing Darnley. Lurline dives overboard and is rescued. In San Francisco, Lurline makes her home with Mrs. Mercer, a friend to Darnley. Lurline is found by Larsen and forced to work at "The Elite" as a Ramaka dancer. President Jordan, of the National Plant, calls at the Mercer home and discovers that Lurline is his long lost daughter. That night Jordan goes to the "Elite" and witnesses a raid by Darnley and his agents. Lurline is rescued and Jordan reveals that he is her father. Larsen is killed in a desperate fracas with Darnley, and Von Linterman and Fowlers are taken into custody. With the union of Lurline and Darnley, the girl's fairy book dreams come true.

Comedy Near the End Saves Lytell Picture

The comedy element which occurs towards the end will, I believe, save this picture, because it furnishes enough amusement to satisfy, especially the star’s friends.

The story, being illogical, fails to convince. It shows two young men in love with the heroine. The one is poor, while the other, rich. The heroine is in love with the hero, the poor one, but the mother favors the rich one.

The father of the girl has sunk all his money in a mining enterprise in Mexico. The revolution stops work on the mines, and they are about to be forfeited to the government, unless, according to the Mexican law, a certain amount of work is done.

In order to save the property, the two men agree to work the mine. After being there a short time, the rich young man gets so terror stricken from the bandits that he gives up further efforts, returns to the United States and gives out a report that the hero has been killed. He is about to marry the girl when the hero, having completed the work and secured title to the property, returns. After giving the villain a good beating for the false report, he marries the girl.

The picture is clean. Released Dec. 9.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Bert Lytell, the young Metro star, who has risen to such prominence during his short career of a year before the camera, returns to the screen in his latest, comedy-drama entitled "Hitting the High Spots." It is interesting to note that Mr. Lytell is also the author of this picture. There are stars and stars but not many of them who venture to try their hands at scenario writing. But with the case of Mr. Lytell an exception is to be recorded. Not only has he tried, but he has succeeded, and proves himself every bit as good an actor as an author, which, believe us, is saying something quite considerable.

"Hitting the High Spots" is a story of an ambitious young engineer who undertook to develop oil wells in Mexico—oil wells that were constantly menaced by the insurgents of the southern country who were in league with agents of Germany. How he succeeded in this perilous mission, only saved his life by a hair's breadth at times and again and how he finally returned to the United States just in time to prevent the girl he loved from being captured by the Mexicans, is a story which makes one of the most interesting and exciting pictures ever thrown on the screen of the motion picture theatre.

Mr. Lytell is supported by Eileen Percy, former Miss Goodwins, Douglas Fairbanks, by Winter Hall, Fred Goodwins, Gordon Griffith, Hume Beatty and others. The picture was made under the direction of Charles Swickard and is without doubt the best of work ever turned out by this skilled director. Other pictures on the bill for the same day as "Hitting the High Spots" are...

THE STORY

Bob Durland, in love with Alice, the daughter of Randolph, president of the Balbo Oil Company, accepts a job of going to Tropico, Mexico, to work the corporation's oil wells there. The previous superintendent has been driven out by Mexican rebels who, in league with German agents, plan to secure the wells for the German government. Harold Blake, Bob's rival in love and more favored by Alice's mother because of his great wealth, accompanies Bob as his assistant because the other man dared him. They arrive in Tropico, and likewise in trouble. The Mexicans are very ferocious, to say nothing of Von Holle, the leader of the Germans. Bob is warned to get out and stop working the wells but refuses to budge.

The work goes on and is finished on schedule time, making the corporation's hold on the land secure. Harold, however, deserts, and returning to the Randolphs, says that Bob has been killed by the Mexicans and that he himself only escaped after having slaughtered a great number of the enemy. Alice refuses to believe this story.

The Mexican rebels having gained the upper hand in the district, things start for Bob—really start this time. There follows a series of adventures of the most exciting sort during his various attempts to escape the Mexicans and Germans and his ultimate success is only accomplished after he has risked his life time and again. In the meantime Alice has come to the conclusion that Bob really must be dead and has consented to marry Harold in order to save her father's finances. But Bob arrives just in time to be the leading man at the wedding, to give Harold a sound thrashing and to make good the claim of the Balbo Company to the oil wells.

SUGGESTIONS

This is the type of story—the story of an adventure-loving, fearless young fellow—that the public seems to take to. Advertise it strongly. Use a little slang. You can drive home the character of the story if you "pack a wallop" in your ad copy, and a little well selected slang is by no means amiss. This certainly is the type of picture which justifies the use of it, which in passing is no knock to the picture.

You can also make much out of the fact that Bert Lytell, the star, is also author of the production. Such a coincidence doesn't happen very often. Here you have a chance to have special stories regarding the star written for your paper. You might also use a line in announcing the picture such as: "By and Starring Bert Lytell." Don't forget that Eileen Percy was leading woman for Fairbanks in a number of features and that she gained quite a following while holding this enviable position. You might use her name below Lytell's in all advertising that you do.

"AND A STILL SMALL VOICE" — ROBERTSON-COLE

Walthall Satisfactory in Drama Built on Old Lines

WHILE the story is not new or novel in theme, this is a very satisfactory dramatic production. Mr. Walthall appears in his familiar role of the young Southern gentleman, develops into an embezzler, and finally evolves into a professional burglar of the Raffles type. Although the central heroic figure is an embezzler and crook, apparently with no great extenuating circumstances, and as such will probably not appeal to a great many; events follow one another in rapid sequence and hold the interest to the end.

Desiring to secure the wealth he feels is essential to permit him to freely woo the girl he loves, he is tempted to embezzle by the scapegrace son of his employer. The son uses the money to pay a gambling debt instead of investing it in a certain stock and when the theft is detected the star assumes all the blame instead of only his share in order to save disgrace from visiting the girl he loves, who has just eloped with the same scheming son.

Later they are all in New York, where Walthall, now grown affluent through a series of successful burglaries, gave his first love a check for $30,000 to save her stock-gambling husband. This is soon frittered away and her husband, the renegade son of his former employer, is shot and killed while appropriating the contents of a safe. Sitting alone in her apartment the young widow finds that she really loves Walthall and prays for him, basing her prayer on a passage of Scripture referring to "the still small voice."

He is evidently reached and swayed through the telepathy or efficiency of this prayer and refrain from stealing from a safe which he had already opened. He enlists in the army and before going "over there" he promises the girl that he will redeem himself and return to her.

A few hundred more feet of film showing him as returned (now that the war is over) would have made a more appealing finish. Fritzie Brunette is the girl in the case, and although she has a hard part, she registers well in all necessary expressions. The settings are all in keeping, the cast is good, and the photography is all that could be desired.—Length, 6 reels.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

AD TALK
Henry Walthall, whose wonderful performance as the Little Colonel in Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" and his role of the most delightful characterization ever given to the screen, will be the star at the —— theatre on ——, which day is the release of his latest picture, "And a Still Small Voice." Strangely enough, Mr. Walthall again takes the role of a southern gentleman in this feature, although a gentleman of the present day.

As Clay Randolph he gives a remarkable characterization of this gentleman of the South, a man with whom honor comes before all else. But because he sees that the girl he loves admires another man and because he knows that this man has embezzled funds, he himself takes the blame that no stain may fall on her name. Subsequently he goes to New York, where, with the shadow of a prison term ever haunting him, he becomes a gentleman crook.

And to New York also comes the girl and the man, now married. He turns out to be worthless and it is not long before Mary discovers this. But Randolph again comes to their aid. How the story ends, how Randolph finally gives heed to the Still Small Voice of Conscience and gives up his career of crime in order to serve his country, puts a thrilling climax to the tale of unrequited love and sacrifice.

Mr. Walthall is backed by an exceptional cast which includes Fritzie Brunette, George Fisher and Joseph J. Dowling.

THE STORY
In a prosperous southern town, Clay Randolph has grown up honoring the traditions of his forefathers and never withstood the advances of Mary Singleton, the daughter of one of hisfather's friends. The girl is inspired by him as well as by Richard Dunlap, the banker's son. Dunlap, however, has become a heavy gambler and when the payment of his debts becomes pressing he approaches Randolph with a scheme for making a fortune on the investment of a large amount of money in copper. Randolph resists the temptation until Dunlap visits him at the bank. When the theft is discovered Dunlap denies the guilt. In the meantime Richard and Mary have eloped and when Randolph discovers their marriage he assumes all guilt of the crime. His disgrace compels him to leave the town.

Dunlap, indolent and lazy, is made to shift for himself and with an inheritance from his mother he becomes the star of "And a Still Small Voice." He soon finds that he cannot cope with the big game, but it is too late; he has already made a terms of his command to secure money. Randolph, also stationed in New York, has become a gentleman crook. Welcomed in the best homes in the city, his operations are made very easy. Dunlap, desperately in need of money, accepts the invitation of Steele to a week-end party. Randolph is also present at this party. Dunlap endeavors to make a loan from Steele, but is not successful, so requests his wife to approach him. Steele attempts to compromise Mrs. Dunlap by making it appear that she has stolen a fabulous diamond which he owns. Randolph, aware of his scheme, frustrates it by placing the diamond in the safe and designating Mrs. Dunlap as the owner. They are already in need of this money soon goes the way of the rest and Dunlap again wants Mary to ask Randolph for another loan. Although Clay's funds are exhausted, he promises to get the money for her. When he advises her that he is going to steal in the pays her young heart out in prayer that he might not do it. The efficacy of her prayer is demonstrated when Randolph, about to take the money from the club safe, feels the "Still Small Voice," and returns the goods. Dunlap, seeing his chance, attempts to take the money and is shot. In his process of redemption, Randolph joins the army and Mary promises to wait his return.

CATCH LINES
Henry Walthall appears as a southern gentleman forced to turn outlaw and later gentleman crook, to save the girl of the time he loves—a truly absorbing tale.

Henry Walthall, hero of "The Birth of a Nation," in a story of love and sacrifice that is full of unexpected turns and surprises.

Henry Walthall supported by an exceptional cast including Fritzie Brunette, George Fisher and Joseph J. Dowling.

As a southern gentleman Randolph bold honor of name and family above all else. But circumstances forced him to become a Raffles that the name of the girl he loved might not be snubbed.

How the Still Small Voice of Conscience worked the reformation of a gentleman burglar.

SUGGESTIONS
Naturally, Henry Walthall is the strong card in connection with this production. Play his name up with reference to his great performance in "The Birth of a Nation." His work has not been as noteworthy in later pictures, so concentrate on the Griffith picture.

Then, also, you have an exciting crook story to advertise, and as the public has always showed itself ready to accept this sort of picture, don't fail to bring out the fact. Hint at the story in your advertisements. This is always a good way to awaken interest in a picture. Tell the tale up to some exciting point and then stop. This type of script needs the exploitation of books and is considered one of the most effective methods. If you have not been in the habit of doing it, try it on this picture for it offers you the proper chance.

OUTDOOR SCENERY SAVES THIS ONE—PLOT BUILT ON REVENGE

BARRING the beautiful outdoor scenery, one can hardly find one other single point in this picture to praise.

To begin with, the story is unsympathetic. It is based on revenge—the villain wrongs the hero’s sister. The hero goes through life seeking the villain to take revenge upon him; secondly, it is illogical, and thirdly, it introduces situations that are anything but pleasing to critical audiences.

The story introduces the hero as a French Canadian, seeking gold in the creeks of the Canadian forests. Once he saves the life of a prospector whose foot is caught in a trap. He takes him into his cabin and doctors him, eventually making him half partner to his claims. As this man is a crook, he works against the hero on the quiet. He even attempts to alienate the affections of the hero’s newly made wife, the daughter of a poor prospector who has just died.

The crook allies himself with the villain, the Bully of that section of the country, and schemes to rob the hero of his mining claims.

When informed by a girl dancer that the villain is the man who had wronged his sister, the hero rushes to find him. A struggle ensues, but convenient lightning kills the villain.—Length, 6 reels—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Mitchell Lewis, the only male star of Select Pictures Corporation, will appear in his first picture of that company’s at the — theatre on — of the — week. It is entitled "Code of the Yukon" and is one of those vivid Alaskan stories that fairly teem with strong interest from beginning to end. Mr. Lewis will be remembered for his masterly characterization of "The Barrier." It is said that in "Code of the Yukon" he has a role, in appealing qualities, quite similar to his first great part. At any rate suffice it that in the part of Jean Dubois, the miner, he creates a character distinctly human and one which touches the heart string time and again.

That the picture was written by Anthony Paul Kelly is yet further proof that it promises something extraordinary to its patrons. Mr. Kelly started in writing photoplays many years ago when he was in his late teens—and not so late either. Today he ranks at the very top of his art. His work has gained for him such a reputation that he is constantly sought after by a variety of producing companies. And inasmuch as he is also author of "Three Faces East," one of the few successful war plays of this season, it can be seen that he is a man of no average accomplishments.

The story is laid in Alaska and tells of the trials of Jean Dubois, whose mine is stolen from him by a crooked gang. How he retrieves it and, when seeking revenge for his sister who has been wronged, suddenly learns that there is a higher power than mere man's, makes engrossing entertainment. Tom Santschi as the heavy, heads a particularly good supporting cast.

THE STORY

Jean Dubois, a French Canadian prospector, has discovered a gold mine. Jean is quietly storing away what dust he is able to wash each day in the hope that when he will have saved enough to leave the Northwoods on a long journey. He is anxious to start on his hunt for the man who wronged his sister. This is his main object in life.

Suddenly his calm is broken. A horde of gold seekers come into his part of the land. A village soon springs up. "Faro" Telford, a renegade gambler, whom Jean had befriended, is the cause. He has informed his friends that Jean has discovered a gold mine. A gang of mining crooks try to steal the mine. They persuade his wife to leave him. She runs away with one of the members of the gang. Jean is heartbroken but decides to leave the village and devote all his energy to discovering the man who wronged his sister.

Just as he is about to leave the village a girl who is in the employ of Cregan, the leader of the gang of crooks, and who is in love with Jean, informs him that she knows the man who harmed his sister. She tells him that it is Cregan, the same man who has ruined her life. Eventually Cregan and Jean meet. Just as Jean is about to crush his life out a Higher Power intervenes and Cregan is punished in God’s way.

Jean’s wife returns to him and convinces him that she has not really done anything wrong. He forgives her and sunshine again enters his life.

CATCH LINES

Written by Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "My Own United States," "The Bar Sinister," and other elaborate photoplays, as well as the stage production, "Three Faces East."

Mitchell Lewis follows up his big hit as the Poleon Doret of "The Barrier" by a wonderfully moving and human performance as Jean Dubois in "Code of the Yukon."

The story of a man who harbored a revenge until he realized that there was a greater power than man’s.

Mitchell Lewis is a star who does not pose to show a pretty profile or patent leather hair. He is the strong, virile man of the great outdoors—an actor able to interpret a human character in a human way.

"STRING BEANS" PARAMOUNT

Ray Fans Will Welcome This Interesting One

"STRING BEANS" will please the majority of Ray fans, as it possesses some human element and good action of plot, while the suspense is well maintained. The story, on the other hand, will hold their interest to the close.

The role given the star is that of a country boy. It is the sort that he has most successfully portrayed in the past, making himself popular. In this instance, he is introduced also as a successful young poet. Due to his mistreatment he receives in the hands of his father, he runs away from home, goes to a little town and obtains a position with the town newspaper. He meets her and falls in love with her. Although she is the mayor's daughter, she reciprocates.

Once he succeeds in rescuing her father from the dangerous attack of a man who later proves to be a crook. During the attack, his sweetheart calls the editor to the assistance. This brings a reconciliation between the mayor and the editor, who have been bitter enemies. In the end, the hero gets the girl.

The situation showing the hero trying to make a speech in order to spoil the plans of the crook for a string bean factory is highly comical, because of his failure to utter a word.

The picture is clean and should entertain fairly well.—Released Dec. 22.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Charles Ray, creator of the only human "hick" character that the screen has ever given, knows another splendid performance in this, his latest Paramount picture.

String Beans? Sure you can, which leads us to remark that two crooks attempt to string the inhabitants of a country town with a fake bean cannery establishment in this picture—but they fall gloriously because of the activities of Charles Ray.

Charles Ray goes back to his farmer boy part in "String Beans." He hasn't an equal in portraying the role.

And you can't blame Charlie for falling in love, either—not when Jane Novak is the girl.

AD TALK

Toby Watkins is the all-around drudge on his uncle's farm—a twenty-acre patch of black mud entirely surrounded by mortgages. This is the opening sentence from Julian Josephson's scenario, "String Beans," which serves to introduce Charles Ray in his next Paramount picture which will be shown at the Theatre next—In highly condensed form it presents a vivid picture of the story's opening scenes.

Toby Watkins is the sort of country boy, brave, humorous and thoroughly human, that all Charles Ray's admirers like to see him portray. It is the sort of character that has made the Ray pictures sure-fire offerings from the exhibitor's point of view. But Toby Watkins is no ordinary boy. He is imaginative and somewhat dreamy, and every night when his day's work is done he goes to his room and takes out a book that he has bought by mail, "What Every Young Poet Ought to Know." For Toby is ambitious to be a writer.

The scenes of the story change to a country newspaper office in each of three acts. This part of the story is developed with realism and charm by the author, Julian Josephson, who knows the country boy himself, and who writes of that life with delightful sympathy.

It is stated, that Ray's handling of the role of Toby Watkins will rank as one of the best screen portraits. Excellent support is provided by Jane Novak, John P. Lockney, and MacDonald, Al Filson and Otto Hoffman, Victor Schertzinger and Chester Lyons was the photographer.

THE STORY

Toby Watkins is a young farmer whose pen-name is "String Beans." His farm is under a cloud because of a narrow-minded uncle, the result being that he must work as a mailman to support himself. Before long he becomes a subscription solicitor on the Sawburt, Weekly Clarion. He meets and loves Jean Morris, daughter of the mayor of Sawburt, and the champion of the cause of the poor. Kendall Reeves, a crook known to the police as Harry Morgan, comes to Sawburt to work on a fake bean cannery scheme and Toby, at the request of Zachary Barmut, editor of the Clarion, attends a mass meeting to speak in opposition to the project. When Toby sees Jean Morris in the audience, his courage deserts him and he flees ignominiously. Reeves overhears Reeves talking to a former pal, who is now employed on the Clarion, and the man's criminal character is revealed. Reeves learns that exposure is inevitable and he seeks to force Mayor Morris to pay him five thousand dollars for a majority interest in the fake cannery, and then decamp. Toby goes to the Morris home and finds Jean struggling with Reeves. He rescues her and after a desperate battle, masters the crook. Barmut and Morris, who long have been enemies, are reconciled and through them the love affair of Toby and Jean reaches a happy denouement.

SUGGESTIONS

You have Charles Ray back in a farmer boy role in this production, and such being the case the you have little else to worry about, inasmuch as he goes through the transition that fans love to see him go through—from boy to hero. Play Ray's name up big and announce the fact that the type of role he plays is of the sort that made him famous. The title also offers you a number of chances to play on words in your advertising and also for the decoration of your lobby with either special drawings or material accessories.

“IRISH EYES”—TRIANGLE

Opinion May Vary in Regard to This One as Entertainment

As a production, “Irish Eyes” may be considered above the average. The action of plot is fairly speedy and the interest is held well. As an entertainment, however, opinion will vary. Those of picture goers who are not critical may find no fault with it. The critical ones, on the other hand, may revolt at the idea of having a brother act as a villain against his own brother.

The story introduces the heroine as a young orphan girl. Her father is killed over a card game by being struck on the head with a bottle by one of the participants. A stranger, who happens to be a kind-hearted lord, takes her under his protection. Eventually they fall in love. The lord’s brother, however, a young dissolute, is fascinated with the girl by foul means and lies he tries to cause an estrangement between them, so that he may make her his own mistress. But he does not succeed.

The picture could be improved upon by cutting off some of the close ups showing blood running from the face of the heroine’s father. The death-bed scene, showing the coffin and two candles burning on each side of it, will hardly prove entertaining to a picture goer. It could be eliminated without injuring the story.

The picture is a little suggestive.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Pauline Starke, the charming young Triangle star, in a tale of old Ireland.

An innocent little Irish lass attempts to win the man she loves by imitating the ways of a vampire! But she wasn’t a very good actress, so she won him anyway!

Pauline Starke, the young actress who scored such personal successes in “Until They Get Me” and “Alias Mary Brown,” is seen to even greater advantage in “Irish Eyes,” her latest production.

Pegeen thought that to win the man she loved she must practice the ways of a siren. Her efforts are both amusing and pathetic as pictured in Pauline Starke’s latest Triangle picture, “Irish Eyes.”

Becoming enraged at the way Moll treats Pegeen, her father leaves his wife, taking his daughter with him, and promising to take her along on his next fishing trip. But O’Barry is killed in a drunken brawl.

Moll tries to take Pegeen back, but she runs away to the rocks on the seashore and hides. While she is crying for her father, Sir Arthur Ombsby, cruising along the coast in his yacht, finds her. He hears her story and decides to help the beautiful little waif. He takes her to his estate along with her blind friend, Jerry, his parrot and dog.

When Sir Arthur’s brother Guy visits the castle to obtain money and to escape from Kitty Price, a chorus girl, he meets Pegeen and falls in love with her. But she loves her benefactor, Sir Arthur.

Kitty has followed Guy to the little village and it becomes necessary for Arthur to visit her in his attempt to prevent her from annoying his brother.

Guy, to kill Pegeen’s love for his brother, takes her to the inn where she sees Kitty and Arthur together. Arthur is unable to understand her anger when Pegeen confronts them. Like a primitive child, she springs upon Kitty. Then she runs from the room. In her flight she is overtaken by Arthur. She learns that his visit was for his brother’s welfare, that Arthur really thought Pegeen was in love with Guy. But when Pegeen realizes that the man she loves is innocent, she acknowledges her love for him and they find happiness.

"DANGER—GO SLOW"—Universal Special

Heart Interest and Suspense Plentiful in This One

PLENTY of heart interest and suspense are the predominating elements in this attraction. They more than make up for the slowness of plot-action after the first reel.

It has been often stated in these reviews that crock plays have a more or less wide appeal. The element of mystery as well as that of danger connected with such subjects seems to possess pleasing qualities. Being a crock play, "Danger—Go Slow" should entertain a great number of picture goers.

Immediately after the unfolding of the preliminary titles, the combination of a safe is flashed on the screen. This strongly suggests the nature of the picture, thus making a more forceful impression upon the spectator than could all the explanations by subtitles or otherwise.

The heroine's sticking to the mother of the hero and helping her, eventually becoming the cause of her boy's home-coming, will win your sympathy. The scene showing the heroine, who had come East for the purpose of inducing the hero, just out of jail, to quit that life and go home with her to his mother, is very touching. It will dig deeply.

The picture is not free from faults. Although the heroine rides from New York to a Western direction only two days, she is shown among Eucalyptus trees and the finest orange orchards in the United States.

It is a clean offering. Released Dec. 9.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Mae Murray, who has starred in a number of very successful Universal Special attractions, will be seen at the — in the theatre on — of — in her latest picture, entitled "Danger—Go Slow." The story for this production was prepared by Robert Leonard and Murray and directed by Mr. Leonard. Here, for once, was a perfect harmony between author, scenarist writer, star and director! The story of "Danger—Go Slow" is a fascinating crock tale in which Miss Murray appears first as housekeeper for a gang of operatives of the underworld. Their haven is raided and Murray (Mae Murray) is obliged to hop a freight train. She alights in a country town.

Here she takes shelter with a kindly old woman, generally known as Aunt Sarah. It is not long before Muggsy discovers that the man she loves, Jimmy, a member of the gang who has been caught by the police, is Aunt Sarah's son. So she determines to serve the old lady until the boy's return.

THE MAN OF BRONZE—WORLD

Another Lewis Stone Picture Presenting an Appealing Story

The producers have relied almost wholly on the fundamental note of heart interest that is struck time and again in the story presented here rather than on action dramatic or physical. Happily their judgment served them in good stead in this instance for the romance of John Adams, westerner, and Mary Lawton, a childhood sweetheart whom he sends to the city to study art, is full of appealing moments in which the two leads appear to advantage.

In particular does Lewis Stone, the star, seem unusually effective in the many scenes in which he makes his bid for the sympathies of the audience. As the lonely man, deserted by all save his dog and the center of attention by reason of his poise and sureness of expression. And the dog, by the by, is another implement employed by the director to strike one of the "heart strings."

The western scenes, taken in the real arid land of the west, present a background full of atmosphere for the story. While this story is particularly coincidental at times, those who will enjoy it for its qualities of human interest will more than likely excuse it for its only partially apparent constructive shortcomings.—Length. 5 reels.—Dec. 9.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Lewis Stone, whose first World picture, "Inside the Lines," instantly established him as a star of the first magnitude, makes his appearance in "The Man of Bronze," as a strong-minded cat-fully of the West.

John Adams was deserted by all save his dog, the sympathetic animal stood by through thick and thin and thereby proved that the humans who turned against him were false.

A romance that is interrupted by misunderstanding—foolishness—trivial. One of those stories that is so human it's real. See it and enjoy a real treat.

Lewis S. Stone and Marguerite Clayton supported by one of the cleverest little dogs that ever frolicked before a camera.

Pegeen thought she could win the man she loved, but she must practice the ways of a siren. Her de- forts are both amusing and pathetic as pictured in Pauline Starke's latest Triangle picture, "It's My Eyes."

Written by Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel C. Goodman, two of the best known authors of the screen.

THE STORY

John Adams, an Arizona cattle man, is in love with Mary Lawton, a girl who has a desire to study art. She is so anxious to go to New York to take up her studies that Adams at first gives her his savings that he may send her. Mary is overjoyed and promises to marry Adams on her return. He looks forward to her home-coming with enthusiasm, builds a new home for her and furnishes it with great glee. Men repre- senting an oil company discover a vein in Adams' land and offer him five hundred dollars for an option on it. This he accepts and with the money, decides to visit Mary in New York.

Mary has changed somewhat since her de-parture from the West. Though reluctant to do so she gradually drifts in with a fast set of art students and it is while she is entertaining a number of these friends that Adams makes his appearance. He realizes right away that a change has come over her, and when he discovers that she is trying to hide her guests from him he leaves her home without a word and returns to the West. There he discovers that Mary's father has died. His only friend now is his dog. In a rage he burns down the new home which he had taken pains to build.

In the city, Mary comes to her senses, leaves her fast companions and gets the job of gov-erness to the daughter of an oil magnate. The oil brokers of the West attempt to cheat Adams of his land. The magnate is summoned to help. At the same time Mary returns West, hearing of her father's death. The magnate tells her that he will not molest Adams if she will consent to a marriage with him. This Mary agrees to do out of her love for Adams. But the magnate is only playing a little trick and the lovers, united once more, find themselves unmolested.

SUGGESTIONS

There is a good title to advertise in connection with this production, as "The Man of Bronze" seems singularly appropriate for a western picture. This is not, however, the usual type of western, as it presents a story of a much interrupted romance that has real heart appeal.

Make your advertising appeal through a good display of the title, the star's name, together with the fact that he did such good work in "Inside the Lines," a previous World picture.

"ONCE TO EVERY MAN"

ring—then you're going to like "Once to Every Man"—it's got more punch in it than half a dozen average features combined.

"What's holdin' him up?" asked the amazed Sutton as Denny Boulton from the north woods took blow after blow from the famous pupil of and never fell. Yes, what was holdin' him up? Grit, a grimness of purpose, the burning desire to make good, to grasp the opportunity that only comes "Once to Every Man."
ALTHOUGH there is nothing in this that will coax a laugh or cause a tear, and no swift action that could possibly thrill any of the blase picture fans, it is a clean little home spun drama based on the draft law.

The small but efficient cast moves like clockwork and the simple story pursues the even tenor of its way through five reels of celluloid to an abrupt ending, leaving nothing to be remembered.

Photography and laboratory work on this are excellent and the three locations, so often repeated, show scenery which compares favorably with our best scene painters. But the story is so very slight and the sharp propaganda edge planned has been dulled in its possible effect as a human appeal by the fact that it arrives twelve months too late to develop any keen interest.

One glaring inconsistency is shown when the men who own the whiskey-still try to avoid the draft by leaving this logical secret hiding place to occupy an open point near a public road. Another impossible occurrence is where the director evidently tried to inject a little punch in the picture and showed a dozen mountaineers, generally recognized as sharpshooters, fire shotguns and rifles at each other across a few yards of space with no casualties. The old tobacco-spitting character did get shot in the wrist and showed the red grease paint to prove it. But a moment afterwards he is seen man-handling with apparent ease and careless abandon a 160 pound desperado with the same hand.

As a fair feature program offering this will do nicely.—Length, 5 reels.—Distributed for service by Hath Exchanges.

THE STORY

The town of Sparhook, N. C., secreted in the Blue Ridge Mountains, is not much concerned over this quiet little draft that goes into effect. Then it wakes up and wonders what it is all about. Steve Carey, a rough mountaineer, comes to the realization that this draft is going to interfere with his personal life. He resents it. Sally Hasston, his sweetheart, the daughter of the village postmaster and keeper of the general store, urges him to accept his call as a man and to go forth and do his country's bidding. And Steve goes.

But he doesn't get along well in camp. Strangers irritate him, as he has lived all his life among friends. Billy Murphy, another soldier, becomes his mortal enemy. Billy enjoys the pastime of "kidding" Steve. Steve retorts with his fists and the two are off around the camp and the house.

When Sally comes to see him with a basket of goodies for his delection she is stung to the quick at seeing paying the penalty for his misdeeds.

Steve is finally released from his imprisonment and, with Billy Murphy makes a slighting remark about Sally. From camp under the cover of the falling darkness and makes his way to Sparhook. He goes straight to Sally, whose patriotism is thoroughly aroused over his desertion.

The mountain folk must not be thought towards the world! She impresses upon him the necessity of returning immediately and rides with him to camp, but they are too late to get in before taps. The captain takes Steve in charge and Sally is sent back home to cry over Billy Murphy's unkind remark that Steve would be shot for desertion. But the captain knew what Steve most needed, and, summoning Murphy, arouses their latent patriotism by recounting some of the horrors committed by the enemy. From that time forth Steve and Billy are not only enthusiastic soldiers, but good friends.

Time passes and Steve prepares to leave for France, for his camp has been called to the whole town setting the hills for James Grogan, who is hiding to evade his call to the draft. Sally, the day before he had accidentally stumbled upon the hiding-place of James and his pals, had acted as leader for the posse. Steve, who has come to aid in the search, comes up from behind and recognizes Steve in a fit, which Steve is the victor. The posse vies for the village position, and Steve, who came in late last accepted the challenge, to say good-bye to Sally.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is a picture of war-time, in that its principal sale is to the boys who are watching the change from a thoughtless attitude toward the war to one of real patriotic feeling, the picture is not in the accepted sense of the word. Advertise the picture for what it really is. "The story of a young mountaineer who went to a training camp with a grudge and came out with a purpose" would be a good line to use in any advertising that you do.

Make sure that you mention the fact that the picture is a drama. The synopsis might suggest the idea that the five reels contained merely a series of scenes concerning the soldier's life at a training camp. Bring out the fact that there is a considerable drama in the picture as well.

Zeena Keefe and Chester Barnett are the stars you have to feature.

CATCH LINES

A dramatic offering showing the making of an American at one of the large army camps—not just a topical—a character study and a romance—with interesting scenes of camp life as background to the action.

Steve Carey knew little or nothing about the war—and cared less. He paid no attention to it until one day it called attention to him. He was called in the draft. Steve resented it. Why should a war in Europe call him from his carefree life in the mountains of North Carolina. But he went. His girl saw to that. And it wasn't long before Steve discovered what the world was fighting for.

Zeena Keefe, as Sally has to feature.

“The Lightning Raider”
(Pathe Serial—First Three Episodes)

WITHOUT a doubt it is our personal opinion that “The Lightning Raider,” featuring Pearl White, is the best serial that Pathe has ever turned out, of course judging by the content and promise of the first three episodes. And this, in passing, is giving the serial the highest recommendation possible. Just collect a few of the former Pathe successes in this line!
The authors of this, Bertram Millhauser and George Seitz, have taken a simple struggle between two factions for a mysterious ebony block for the basis of the photoplay. The mysterious character is done away with; therefore giving cause for thanks. But the fight over this little piece of ebony is one of the most sustaining little wars that has ever been put into a serial. On the one side there is The Lightning Raider, struggling to regain it for Tom Babbington North, who promised his dying father that he would guard it with his life. On the other side is Wu Fang, a wily Chinaman, leader of a notorious band of denizens of the underworld.
The endeavors of each side to procure and retain this block form the action of the first three episodes of the serial and will probably form the nucleus of the action for all the remaining numbers. And if the authors can keep up the excellent pace set for themselves in these opening chapters Pathe may well sit back and claim that it has produced the best serial of the day and of the past day. The scenarios of Millhauser and the direction of Seitz are also highly commendable. There is not a foot of wasted film. Each scene has its place. And the interplay between the two opposing factions is clever and sustaining to the last degree.
Pearl White presents a stunning appearance in the title part and plays her role in her very best style. Warner Oland appears in a wonderful makeup as Wu Fang, and Henry Gsell as the hero is possessed of a nice personality and a sincerity of purpose in everything he undertakes that will soon stamp him as a popular serial hero.
There are thrills in the first three episodes—excellent ones, and they come at the correct moment—at the end of each installment. But it is not the thrills that make “The Lightning Raider” the fine piece of work it is. It is not any one element, or any one personality connected with the production. This excellent serial is the result of years of specialized work by a company. Pathe, that has always lead the field in serial production. And the accumulative result of these years of specialization is “The Lightning Raider.”—Peter Milne.

Tom Mix-Selig Two-Reel Dramas
(Controlled by Exclusive Features, Inc., for State Rights Distribution)

Two subjects of William N. Selig’s two-reel western dramas, featuring Tom Mix, were shown for review in the projection room of Exclusive Features, Inc., and it is amazing to recall just how much story, punch and action were crowded into these two-reelers some four or more years ago.

An idea that many exhibitors may appreciate is that they appear under their original titles and are therefore not misleading in any way. Another thing in their favor is that the styles in western costumes have not changed as in society dramas, and consequently the settings and atmosphere can be considered as topical as if they had been produced today.

“Twisted Trails” is the first subject and shows the young ranchman (Mix) campaigning to oust the rustlers, who are aided by a crooked sheriff. Much shooting and daring riding is shown in a quick moving drama, which carries the human appeal through its romance when the young ranchman marries the girl he loves only to discover that she is his own sister. The old housekeeper then tells the secret of the changed babies, which shows that they are not related at all, and thus provides the happy ending.

These two-reel western dramas could acceptably fit in on almost any program, but would be particularly appropriate with a five-reel comedy or light comedy feature.—Tom Hanlin.

“The Price of Victory”
(British War Films. Arrow Film Corp. 7 reels)

We like to give credit where it belongs. Do you remember what Admiral Sims, in a spirit of chivalry, said to our boys in passing through England on their way to the front? “Don’t stick out your chests and say we’ve done it all. Remember that the British and the French have been fighting for four years.”

Since then the British cannot be made to talk about themselves. Let us do it for them: This set of pictures has been brought over for the purpose of giving a fraction of an idea what England and her colonies have done in this war, how much the Union Jack has suffered.

In looking these pictures don’t have it in your mind that you are doing it as a charity or that you ought to book them as a matter of patriotic duty; they are worth every bit other pictures are. Your patrons will be treated to some real stuff—actual battle scenes. The Hindu cavalry, in battle and at play, is worth seeing. The “Over the Top” scene of the Hindu infantry, brandishing their famous daggers, the ones that planted terror in the brave (?) heart of the Germans, is another scene that your patrons would like to see. The Seoco with their kilts and other Britshers are also shown at war and at play.

These pictures have been taken by Captain H. D. Girtwood, a Canadian in the British Army, at the risk of his life. Length, seven reels.—F. S. Harrison.
Coast Units Again Move Forward

ALTHOUGH production work at Universal City is going forward with six units at work, there is little news to be gleaned at the big plant, for the reason that all organizations have been on subjects for several weeks. This week saw the serial company directed by J. F. McGowan begin work on the military serial "The Fifth Ace" which will star Marie Walsch. Hope Loring is the author of this continuity.

The company under the direction of Douglas Gerrard will within a few days finish the filming of "Sealed Orders" or "The Sentimental Burglar," the making of which was started more than two months ago. Within two days after the first scenes were taken, ten members of the company including Director Douglas Gerrard, were taken ill with influenza. All have now recovered with the exception of Edward Cochran, who had been especially engaged for a type role in this picture. The subject is the first of a series of crook pictures in which William Sherr is featured with Fritzi Brunette.

The Star Comedy organization of Lyons and Moran have added a new scenario writer in the person of Tom Caruthers, who with J. Grubb Alexander will prepare scripts for this company.

William Figott, formerly staff writer of the American at Santa Barbara, has been added to the Universal organization now conducted under the management of Elliot Chav遵.

The new Universal City Laboratories, built under the direction of John M. Nieholaus, are now completed and occupy a building 60 x 100 feet. They have a capacity of 40,000 feet of negative and 30,000 feet of positive daily.

Metro Uses New Stages

The new Metro studio stages are to be christened with production work on December 9, when the present plant of the Metro will be turned over almost entirely to the organization making Nazimova productions. This will be just fifteen days from the time that the ground was turned for the new plant. The work of building the dressing rooms, mammoth carpenter shop and electrical departments has been progressing very satisfactorily, and foundation is now laid for the new administration building.

But one organization is now at work, under the direction of George D. Baker who has May Allison as star. Mr. Baker adapted the magazine story, "Peggy Does Her Darnest," and is now filming this. Robert Ellis, who has been leading man at principal coast theatres for the past two years, and played opposite Miss Allison in her last production, is continuing as leading man in this film. Another important player is Augustus Phillips.

Mme. Nazimova will begin work on December 9 under the direction of Albert Capellani in the Chinese story, "The Red Lantern." Nazimova will take part of an Eurasian girl, and the play hinges upon the battle between the two classes. Charles Bryant, who has appeared opposite Nazimova in many subjects, will continue as her leading man. The actress with Mr. Bryant arrived in Los Angeles December 3.

Bert Lytell has returned to the Metro studio after, being mustered out of the training station. He attended Hollywood officers training camp for seven months where he rose to the office of lieutenant. He then qualified in an examination in Los Angeles and was sent to Waco, Texas, after he had made all arrangements for the welfare of Mrs. Lytell.

National Makes Progress

Very satisfactory progress is being made on the building of the National Film Corporation studios in Hollywood, and the company will within the next two weeks move in their new office building which is being built on Lodi street. The new office building is very complete, and will have elaborate quarters for President William Parsons, Vice-President Isadore Bernstein, Secretary William Le Plante, who is attorney for the company as well as A. W. Aaronson, manager of Henry B. Washall. Arrangements have been completed for an around the world tour to be made by William Parsons, and complete producing organization, which will leave Los Angeles early in 1919. It is planned to make a comedy in each different country visited amid conditions as they exist, and thus combine comedy with scenic subjects. Plans provide that laboratory equipment will be taken so that all film may be developed the day it is taken, and the rushes shown the following morning, thus making possible the retaking of any scenes regardless of where the company is working.

This combining of scenic wonders of the world with comedy is an innovation for the screen, and prior to the departure Mr. Parsons plans that his entire route shall be made for the trip and all places in interest are indexed that the most prominent as well as the out of the way places may be visited and scenes secured.

Milton Sinaberg, member of the National Film Corporation scenario staff, who has been writing comedies for William Parsons Goldwyn release, died Sunday, December 1, of influenza-pneumonia. Sinaberg has been associated with several coast companies, and was to be wed January 1 to Miss Bernstein, daughter of Isadore Bernstein at the home of President William Parsons of the National.

Goldfish Goes to Coast

Executives of the Goldwyn studios have been advised of the coming of Samuel Goldfish, president of the company, who is now scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles on Saturday, December 14. He will be accompanied West by S. L. Rothafel of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York. Mr. Goldfish, it is understood, will spend several weeks on the coast while the trip of Mr. Rothafel is more in the nature of a pleasure one, and he will be here but a short time. Norbert Lusk, who has been a member of the Goldwyn publicity staff at the New York office for some time, has been sent to the Coast and is now organizing a publicity department at the studio which will be conducted in connection with the eastern publicity department of the company. There will probably not be any additional producing activities started at the Goldwyn plant until the arrival of Mr. Goldfish, but preparations are going forward for the making of subjects here.

Madge Kennedy will be here within a few days, and by that time it is expected Reginald Barker will be at work on a Rex Beach subject; the Tom Moore organization will be at work, and very probably Mae Marsh will be able to resume her work.

The entire technical staff has been at work for several weeks, as has also the scenario organization in charge of J. G. Hawks, and the preliminary work of preparing for intensive production has been taken care of.

ber of subjects for Pathe, and who gained much fame when he appeared in "The Fool There Was" with Theda Bara, a William Fox picture, has arrived at the Lasky studios to direct a Salvation Army picture. Bryant and Selwyn's latest picture, "Venice in the East," will be finished this week. He will begin work on a new subject next week, it is announced, which is yet unnamed. Playing with him in "Venice in the East" were Margery Wilson and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Ethel Clayton is in the middle of "Private Pettigrew's Girl," under the direction of George Melford. It is expected the production will be completed late next month.

The Lasky Home Guards, now known as the Fifty-first Company, California Reserves, held their weekly drill Wednesday night. Captain Milton Hoffman and Captain Henry Woodward were in command. The company is now expecting a "demobilization" order any day.

Peggy Hyland Begins One

Peggy Hyland this week began work on a new picture entitled "The Haunted Heart," with Harry Millarde as director. It is a crook play, in which the sister of the heroine and the sister's husband take prominent parts. The complete cast of the production has not been announced.

Ed Le Saint, director for Tom Mix, was tricked this week with the influenza. He is not critically ill.

Madeline Traverse will begin work on a new William Fox production next week, the title of which has not been made public. It has not been determined who will direct the picture, neither has her leading man been selected, it was announced at the Fox studios this week.

Henry Lehrman this week signed Charlton Parris and Rebecca Morris as new Sunshine comedy directors.

Bessie Love, Vitagraph star, was this week stricken with influenza, but it is announced from the studios that she will doubtless be able to resume work next week.

David Smith, her director, arranged to film a number of scenes in which the star does not appear, and thus production of the picture continued almost uninterrupted.

Joe Ryan, who is playing the heavy in William Le Baron's serial, "A Man of Might," is recovering from an attack of influenza.

Earl Williams will this week complete his latest vehicle, "The Aviator's Honeymoon," establishing a record in production. It is claimed his leading lady is Grace Darmond. The William Duncan Company returned this week from San Francisco, where a number of scenes in Duncan's serial, "A Man of Might," were filmed. Clara Holloway and Antonio Moreno are completing the final episodes in "The Iron Test," another Vitagraph serial, and this week a number of scenes were taken in an underground mine in Southern California.

Hampton Production Completed

The Jesse D. Hampton production, "The End of the Game," by F. McGrew Willis and G. E. Jenkins, has been completed, and this company is taking a short vacation while a new story is being prepared. Mr. Hampton was the director of this story which stars J. Warren Kerrigan, and a very peculiar feature concerning it is that practically every part except that of the lead and leading woman, is more or less in the nature of a one-day contract. The different roles were taken by Walter Perry, Jack Richards, George Fields, Bert Apling and Joe Franz. The juvenile role was taken by Alfred Whitman, and the ingenue by Elinor Field. The next story to be filmed will be the Uncharted Lass's story and continuity of which is by Kenneth B. Clark.

The second Hampton Company producing for Robertson-Cole and affiliated Mutual are working on "Life's a Funny Proposition." William Desmond is the star of this, and the direction is by Thomas N. Heffron. Louise Lovely takes the role of posite Desmond, and a very important person in the cast is the seven months' old Ernest Marion. Others playing in this story are Jay Balasco, John de Vaille, Verna Doria, Lillian Sylvester, Aggie Herring and John Stepping. The story and continuity for this production was written by William Parker who is staff author of the Hampton organization.

Ince Works on New One

It was announced at the Ince studios this week that Victor Schertzinger, who wrote "O'Clock Town" for Charles Ray, is working on a new feature story for Dorothy Dalton, whom he is now directing.

Among the stars who will begin new plays in Thomas H. Ince's palatial studios now, is just completed and which from the exterior resemble the popular conception of an old colonial, or Southern mansion, will be be Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett.

Thomas H. Ince has arranged to film thousands of Los Angeles people on Sunday at Lincoln Park, the scenes to become a part of a government picture in which the lads over there will have given an opportunity to see the "folks from home." A special stand has been erected in the park for the battery of cameras.

Chet Withey's gone east. Viola Dana's here. Welcome back.

Bill Keefe's going east for Warl Griffith. Jack Pickford Film Corporation is the latest.

Jerry Storm is a director who never uses a megaphone. He talks to his goldsmith. Gold smith are coming to the coast. Lumasit is the name of J. P. McGowan's dog. The name means "little lemon."

Jim Kirkwood is black in town as blonde as ever. Yes, and curly hairy.

Roy D. Baker got busy at the Goldwyn lot, or at least he had his coat on a week.

Monte Katterjohn is going down and give Broadway a treat. He plans to stay several days.

Dorothy Dalton is becoming prominent (that's a good word) in the art of fairy story telling, so P. A. tells us.

Bill Desmond has a baby girl, the hardworking, and his biggest publicity stunt is how he's going to put over the love-making scenes.

Mister E. D. Hammons was in town this week and being costumed by a HOOUKU stil- lative, he advised he was here on business.

It was rumored this week that Jack Keenan is again disas- serted with his starring position, so seems to be a habit with him.

Douglas Gerrard, whose full name would fill a book, grew full heard during his recent Flu for an Hour. Apparently it is begin- ning to him.

Frank Keenan is in town, and hung up his shingle at the Brun- ton Studios. It reads: "Frank Keenan, Inc. Welcome to our city." Millard K. Webb, familiarly known as the best dressed assistant director in the business, is going east to be assistant director to Chet Withey.

Bill Sherr, juvenile crook actor, is bustling about to discover who it is that wears out the Gideon Bible in his suite at the Alexandria Hotel.

Doug Fairbanks is airing the movie ball smce he can't get dinner jacket preparatory to appearing the stage at the New California Theatre.

A note: Bill Johnson has pro- duced an electric player Chickering grand piano to the collection of musical instruments in his home. "Laughing Heart." This has been a gay and festive week for many of our friends. One is overjoyed that the Flu ban was lifted, and they all went to see themselves flicker and blink and sit on the silver screens. Charles Chaplin is said have been considered making another scene this week for a film. Sid Chap lin being a very efficient general manager, sees to it that no scenes are made each week, or at least some weeks.

Bill Parker reports his full re-covery from the Flu incoincriding. He claims to have written three good stories, and from other sources we learn that they came to him while he had a fever hovering around one hundred.

Voyage to the Sea," is a half dozen marble columns that have never had a camera built on them, and half dozen more that have had one side shot. It is hinted Tom Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan will write a story for the screen that will rival Hugo's "93," or "Toilers of the Sea." Since a recent Sunday they were out on the Bronx in a boat, in a night that horrible wind storm came along that laid everything flat at all of the houses, and the sun blazed, and blew and blew and there was no end to it.

Now that the Flu is over, many artists are none too well affected by the gasoline germ. New cars were purchased from the dealers by Albert Capellini, Edwin Carew, Robert Harron, Alice Millard, Cedric Cadillac; Fred Warren & a Buck from a dealer in Denver. Next week, we hear about Max Karger and Joe Ingle rolling in a Rolls Royce.

Katterjohn Gives Enlightening Views on Presenting a Story

The opinions of Monte M. Katterjohn on any of the various phases of motion picture production are always of interest and the fresh viewpoint which he brings to bear on the problems of the industry is invariably productive of valuable, constructive criticism. Indeed, it is his enthusiastic radicalism and his keen analytical grasp of the essentials of entertainment which have been largely instrumental in elevating him from the position of author to that of a producer in his own right, as the active production head of Katterjohn Films.

For this reason it is interesting to note that Mr. Katterjohn lays particular stress upon a point which has been largely overlooked by producers of motion pictures, but which might conceivably have a very decided effect upon the screen quality of a given photoplay.

"It will be admitted," says Mr. Katterjohn, "that while the story is of paramount importance in any motion picture, the manner and spirit of the production deserves every consideration. Those who are associated with the making of the play must all be thoroughly in the spirit of the story if the completed production is to show its value to the fullest extent.

"Not only must the players feel that their acts and emotions are actually those of the characters being portrayed, but the director himself must approach the filming of the story in the same spirit that actuated the author in creating it. A full understanding of the author's frame of mind must extend to the cutting room as well to insure an accurate reflection of his ideas, and the inclusion of just those scenes and bits of business which perfectly carry out the spirit of the story.

"This quality has a decided effect on the minds of theatre-goes and has much to do with the reception accorded a picture. Get your audience into the spirit of the story in the first two hundred feet of film and their attention and sympathy from that point is assured. They feel and live and laugh and cry with the characters of the story, looking upon life through the eyes of those characters rather than through their own.

"But the antagonistic mind in any important stage of the picture's development may so alter the feeling and spirit of the story that its value is lost upon the spectator, with the subsequent result of a poor box-office attraction.

"Enthusiastic minds which sympathize with the trend of the story are worth their weight in gold at the box office which fact producers seem to have overlooked until very recently, and even now their numbers are too few."

Pettijohn Outlines Affiliated Plans to San Francisco Film Circles

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, has been visiting the Pacific Coast on business and stopped over in San Francisco on November 2 to meet with representative exhibitors and outline the plans of both the Affiliated and the United Booking Corporation. Among those present at the meeting, which was held in the office of the Mutual Film Corporation, 177 Golden Gate avenue, were: Eugene Roth of the California theater; Howard J. Sheehan and George Mann of the Rialto; C. W. Mudgeley of the American, Oakland, and the Alameda, Alameda; James Beatty of the Liberty, Fresno, and Liberty, San Jose; Charles Goddard of the Goddard, Sacramento; Louis Greenfield of the New Mission, New Fillmore, and Progress, San Francisco; Charles Frohman of the Queen, San Francisco; Frank Levy of the Royal and Polk, San Francisco; L. E. Lund of the Broadway, Oakland; Aaron Goldberg of the Apollo and Peerless, San Francisco; S. H. Levin of the Coliseum and Elite, San Francisco; L. Leven of the Regent, San Mateo; Joe Bauer of the Wigwam, San Francisco. The meeting was held at 10 o'clock in the morning and lasted several hours. It was devoted exclusively to the discussion of plans, and one of the remarkable features of the meeting was that all of the out-of-town exhibitors came to San Francisco especially to meet Mr. Pettijohn and hear what he had to say.

After the meeting Mr. Pettijohn expressed his pleasure in being in San Francisco. This is his first visit to the Coast and his main regret was that he could not stay longer. However, he expressed the hope that he would be able to return at an early date, when he might have an opportunity to see more of the sights in this section of the country. Notwithstanding his brief stay, he stated that all the impressions he had gathered from reports had been more than confirmed. He found that the men in the industry fully lived up to their reputation as live wires, up to the minute in all respects and in every respect the very highest type of business men. The theaters he visited, both in the downtown and the resident districts, he found far above the average of other cities. However, he added with a smile, these things did not astonish him as it merely confirmed the reports of the city which he had previously gathered.

The only matter which did really astonish Mr. Pettijohn was the perfect weather which prevailed during his brief stay. "It's more like spring than winter," he remarked as he inhaled a deep breath of ozone after the meeting.

Hugh Fay Is One of the Central Figures in a Forthcoming Henry Lehman-William Fox Sunshine Comedy That Is Expected to "Knock 'Em Off the Seats"

Lehrman Adds Fourth Company at Hollywood

HENRY LEHRMAN, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, has added a fourth company to his personnel at his studios in Hollywood, California, to meet the ever-increasing demand for Sunshine Comedies since this brand of pictures were first presented by the Fox Film Corporation.

When, over a year ago, Henry Lehman sold his interests in L-Ko to start producing Sunshine Comedies, he was considered one of the foremost producers of comedies in the industry. The larger, more modern studios which he erected for his Sunshine Comedies allowed him much wider scope than he had before, and surrounded by a staff of exceptional directors and comedians, most of whom were already familiar with Mr. Lehman's methods, his productions soon became known as second to none in the comic interpretation and superb mounting.

During the past year, the demand for Sunshine Comedies has been steadily increasing until, in many instances, Fox exchanges have reached the point where they cannot supply the demand, it is claimed.

To make comedies of the proportions which Mr. Lehman has been making requires much more time than the average comedy. In order to release one production every other week, three companies have been working unceasingly. But now Mr. Lehman has decided to build comedies of still greater magnitude, and to allow time for their production has added another company to his personnel, making four companies in place of three.

Mack Swain and Gertrude Selby are still working under the direction of Fred Fishback, who joined the Lehman forces a few months ago. Lloyd ("Ham") Hamilton will still work under the direction of Jack White, but has a new leading lady in Virginia Rappe, who was recently engaged by Mr. Lehman after having successfully appeared in a number of Metro features.

Jack Blystone, who is a Lehman product, having been associated with Mr. Lehman for a number of years, has resigned the general supervision of L-Ko comedies to become a member of the staff of directors at the Sunshine studios, and in future will have charge of the productions in which Biffie Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Betty Carpenter will appear.

The fourth company will be directed by Reggie Morris and Charles Parrett, with Jack Cooper, Leo White and Ethel Teare appearing in the leading roles.

Lasky Guards Resume Activities

THE LOS ANGELES HEALTH DEPARTMENT having been removed, the drills of the 51st Company, Military Reserve of California, formerly known as the Lasky Guards, will be resumed at Hollywood. The boys are getting restless and are anxious to execute their evolutions once again.

The minstrel show plagued by the Lasky folk was again put into rehearsal last week and again Kenneth McGaffey is sending up his usual and energetic hand dix for his four or five white horses to be used in his act with Jack Mulhall. If the steeds are unobtainable a quartet of goats may be substituted.

Meanwhile Mr. McGaffey has distinguished himself by appearing in C. B. De Mille's picture as a wayfarer." He swears it is not as a hobo and insists that it is a heavy acting part which required much careful study and research. He admits there is now good and sufficient reason for designating this an all-star cast.

Roscoe Arbuckle and his genial manager, Lou Anger, are still away, somewhere in the South, resting and vacating, and in the case of the former, putting on weight. Lila Lee is expected back sometime this month. Her smiling and cheery presence has been sadly missed.

Vivian Martin starts work in about two weeks, it is announced. Meantime the little star is at home enjoying a vacation after some strenuous work during the last summer.

Fred Kley emulated Mr. Nanton E. Hoffman the other day and went out before breakfast to shoot quail. He got three, but declares that he shot many more which were lost in the brush. "If I only had a dog," he sighs.

Bennie Zedlman, since returning from New York, declared there is no reason for him to admit his earnest conviction that the industry is still in its infancy, although he has some doubts about the surface having been scratched.

Influenza Lid Clamped Down on Butte

THE influenza lid was clamped on Butte with a bang November 30, all non-essential lines of business being ordered closed by the county board of health. Thus the city is closed tighter than ever and the length of the probable closedown is indefinite.

On the previous day a modified closing order was adopted, the theaters, cabarets, churches and dance halls being affected. This lead to a storm of protest from those interests and the following day the health officials decided to "go the limit." The drastic action of the county board resulted in a tempest centered at the city hall. Mayor Maloney called a special meeting of the city council and by a vote of six to five the city officials decided that people within the corporate limits need pay no attention to the county board's orders, claiming that the board exceeded its jurisdiction when attempting to regulate affairs within the city limits. The city health board passed resolutions permitting business houses, including theaters and all amusements to run wide open, but stipulated the wearing of gauze masks. Saloons and other places reopened. The chief of police was instructed to make no arrests. However the county officials ordered the sheriff's office to make arrests and both sides appealed to the governor, with the threat of calling out the soldiers.

A truce was finally declared and the city, not admitting the county board's jurisdiction, finally acquiesced and agreed to permit the regulations to be enforced until the state board of health meeting scheduled for Wednesday, December 4, gives the final word.

The show business was badly demoralized by the constant agitation and under such conditions the theatre men prefer to remain closed. In fact the sentiment seems to be that no premature reopening is desired. About 50 new cases a day and 10 deaths appear to be the average in Butte at present. It is confidently expected that two weeks will bring about sufficient improvement to permit resumption of "business as usual." Missoula theatres closed also and Helena is still closed. Other large Montana towns are open at this time.
What They Do in Seattle

THE influenza cases have not entirely disappeared in the Northwest, and while 70 per cent of the towns are open only 50 per cent of the picture houses opened, as in some cases the people were averse to going to them. The "flu" revisited some of the cities in a light form. This caused the closing of the houses for a couple of days in Everett, Great Falls, Lynden and other places. Since the influenza cases in Seattle and the larger cities were instantly checked by quarantining of the family, drastic measures were not necessary.

THE STAR THEATRE, Bellingham, was recently purchased by Mr. Quimby from Mr. Arnold.

THE PARALTA AGENCY is now occupying offices together with the Pathe agency.

H. G. ROSEBAUM of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently returned from a swing around a section of his territory.

A. J. KENNEDY, publicity manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the Northwest, has recently been praised for the excellent quality of work he has produced. Many a moving picture owner has been helped by his advice.

F. M. BROCKELL of St. Louis has assumed temporary charge of the Northwest Goldwyn exchange since Mr. Hill has resigned to devote all his time to private interests. A permanent manager will soon be installed.

J. M. DUNN, formerly connected with the Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, is now booker and assistant manager of the General Exchange office in Seattle.

A. M. HOGLE has taken a spin to Spokane for the Vitagraph. His reports show that business is picking up with great force.

R. STONE has been appointed shipping clerk for the General's Seattle office.

THE LIBERTY, Seattle, has recently made great hits with the following films produced by the General Film Company: "Tobin's Palm," "Rambles in Asphalts," "Allied Heroes in Switzerland" and "O. Henry and Birmingham Travels."

MESSRS. W. C. GOWEN AND CODE have hit the trail for the General, the Kleine System and the Sherry productions.

MANAGER W. A. MEAD of the Universal exchange in Seattle announces that he has employed a cameraman to be stationed in Seattle who will take pictures which will be shown on the "International News" film. This film will now carry 300 feet of Pacific Coast news on each screen which will be shown three times a week at each house. Consequently these weeks are now 100 per cent weekly.

EDDIE POLO, now bing featured in the Universal's "Lure of the Circus," will appear in person at any house which will display this film.

FRANK COFFINBERRY, formerly manager of the Orpheum in Portland, is in Seattle representing the Government in the Division of Films, Bureau of Public Information.

THE NORM THEATRE, Monmouth, is open for an occasional show.

BEN SMITH, manager of the theatre in Brewster, Wash., has closed his place and moved out of town.

THE WHEATON, Weiser, Idaho, has been closed.

A FIRE in the Liberty, Salt Lake, recently was fought and extinguished without any of the thousand people in the audience realizing anything was wrong. The fire was in the operator's booth. No serious damage was done.

ALEX PANTAGES is contemplating building a show house in Salt Lake City.

THE WILKES THEATRE will soon be opened in Salt Lake.

THE EDISON THEATRE management will soon build a new theatre in New Westminster, Wash.

THE AMERICAN THEATRE, recently completed at Sunny-side, has had its formal opening and proceeded in full blast after the "flu" ban was lifted. It seats 700 and was erected at a cost of approximately $20,000.

MANAGER BOSWORTH of the motion picture theatre in Ketchikan and Manager Spickert of the Palace, Juneau, Alaska, were recent visitors on Seattle's Film Row.

TARKINGTON BAKER, in charge of the new Universal publicity service, has been touring the Pacific Coast. Mr. Baker is studying the needs of the different territories. He has installed a newspaper service campaign which will be found very comprehensive.

Partial Closing Protested in Butte

RESOLUTIONS were passed by the theatre men of Butte at a meeting held Thursday evening, November 28, protesting against a partial closing of the city on account of the influenza epidemic. Such action was characterized as "class legislation" by some of the exhibitors present.

The "Committee of Three Hundred" presented the resolutions to the County Board of Health and the resultant action was to close all non-essential places of business. Banks, drug stores, food stores, coal houses, laundries, garages and but a few other enterprises were permitted to remain open. Those signing the resolution were the following: E. W. Keeler, People Hip; W. H. Belmond, Empress; H. W. Berry, Liberty; Frank T. Bailey, American, and William Woolfall, Harrison Avenue theatre.

The resolutions follow:

"Whereas, The county board of health did, on this 28th day of November, 1918, enact an order closing all theatres of this city for an indefinite period."

"Whereas, Since the 10th day of October, when the first closing order went into effect, the influenza has increased, demonstrating the fallacy of a partial closing order; and"

"Whereas, Since the 10th day of October nothing of any consequence has been done towards stamping out the influenza epidemic; and"

"Whereas, Crowds are permitted to assemble in stores, parks, cafeterias, cafes, street cars and other places; and"

"Whereas, The excuse given out by the health department for closing the theatres was that the influenza was distributed by personal contact of one person with another; and"

"Whereas, We believe that if the public are permitted and encouraged to congregate in all places other than theatres and places of amusement, the value of the order first mentioned is made nill; and"

"Whereas, We believe that the closing of all places of business, worship, education, amusement and other places where people congregate will quickly stamp out the epidemic, save many lives and restore our city to normal conditions; and"

"Whereas, We are emphatically opposed to our health board unjustly discriminating against the theatres and other places of amusement of our city."

"Now, Therefore, First, in the interest of humanity and second in the interest of fair play, equity and justice, we, the undersigned citizens and theatre managers of the city of Butte, do hereby petition to at once have the city of Butte and the county of Silver Bow enact an emergency ordinance providing for the closing of all places of business, worship, education, amusement and other places where people congregate, except drug stores, grocery stores and meat markets, with a regulation limiting the number of persons to congregate therein at any one time, and all such places being patrolled by members of the military, city police or members of the sheriff's office."

We wish to thank the many friends in the trade for their kind expressions of sympathy in our recent bereavement, and for the beautiful floral offerings.

Mrs. Olive Grogg
Miss Sylvia Grogg
A. H. MCDONALD of the Rex theatre of Eugene, Oregon, was in town recently booking Mildred Harris in "For Husbands Only," with which he reopened his theatre. "I am going into every newspaper in the country," he said, for he grabbed immediately the advertising possibilities in the name of Mildred Harris as the newly-married Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

J. C. UGLOW, manager of the Orpheum theatre of Dallas, Oregon, was in Portland more than a week ago. He booked "Crashing Through to Berlin" as the feature that is hitting the psychological moment just right at this time. Mr. Uglow has been strong for the news reels from the Universal also, for his clientele is one that follows eagerly every bit of news from the boys across the pond, for they have lots of them there in the army.

F. C. WESKIL, manager of the Bungalow, North Powder, is circulating that district making a canvas of the moving picture shows. He was in Portland the other day picking up the best shows he could find. "The Kaiser" will be shown in North Powder, and after it will follow "The Geezer of Berlin," "How Charlie Captured the Kaiser," and the big drama of the war, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

CHARLEY SCHRAM of the Grand theatre of Oregon City is showing two Jewel features in succession. The first was "A Soul for Sale" and the second "Crashing Through to Berlin."

AN innovation was introduced at the Globe theatre last week with the appearance of the Countess of Kingston three nights speaking in the interest of the Shamrock Fund for Disabled Irish Soldiers. Some pictures, the property of the Countess, were shown, including picture of the Blarney stone and the kissing of that stone. During intermission pretty Irish colleens sold shamrocks.

THE LATIN QUARTER, where real Bohemianism is reputed to hold sway, would welcome as its own the five girl ushers at the Majestic theatre, for the quintet of smiling maids now appear in the niftiest of artists' costumes. White trousers, black smocks, flowing ties and jaunty black caps that slouch most becomingly comprise their novel habiliments. After a day or so, when they blushed for the masculinity of their apparel, the girls became accustomed to the surprised and admiring glances of the Majestic patrons and are now accepting their tributes with perfect equanimity.

UPON the return of Albert Hyeneke, his brother, William Hyeneke, has resigned the management of the Judith theatre at Lewistown. The retiring manager has several good offers but is as yet undecided as to which to accept. "Bill" made good during his tenure and had to contend with probably the most serious obstacles that the exhibitor has yet been called upon to grapple with. This condition was general over the entire country. Decreased attendance due to so many theatre-goers being called into the army, heavy war taxes and the "flu" shutdown were threefold problems to be overcome.

GEORGE BOURKE of the Universal has been spending several days in eastern Montana looking after bookings. He reports nearly all the big houses in that state now open, although a second shutdown has come in Butte and Missoula. Helena is still closed.

THE influenza situation in Great Falls is reported to be "shaky" with chances for a second shutdown.

NOVEMBER 30 the lid went on again in Butte. The closing presentation at the American was Norma Talmadge in "Her Only Way."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was welcomed by the faithful at the Rialto for the closing bill. He appeared in "Come On In." An added attraction, in addition to the usual comedy, was "With Burton Holmes to the South Seas of Fiji." The animated news review rounded out a nifty program at Manager Ralph Ruffner's amusement emporium.

A COMMITTEE of Three Hundred appeared before the Board of Health of Silver Bow County Friday to protest against the "discriminatory" action taken the previous day when orders were issued closing only theatres, schools and churches. "All or none" was their motto and so the following day resolutions were passed closing all non-essential places of business in Butte and the county. The committee represented not only the theatre managers, but every branch of labor connected therewith.

MADGE KENNEDY in "The Service Star" and Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires" starred at the Ansonia and Orpheum respectively for the closing programs.

WITH reports from the state Board of Health at Helena not at all favorable as regards the influenza situation in Montana road men for the various film companies have but little to do in this territory.

"OVER THE TOP" is still playing in the smaller towns of the state to good business. Manager Moore of the Harlem theatre packed 'em in on Thanksgiving day at 50 cents a throw. It pleased.

SPOKANE BARS CHILDREN BELOW AGE OF TWELVE

ALL children below the age of 12 years in Spokane, Wash., are ordered by the board of health to keep away from motion picture shows. So rapid was the spread of influenza among the school children in Spokane after the six weeks' closing ban was lifted November 18, when schools resumed activities, that the board of education last week decided to close the schools indefinitely and enforce a drastic quarantine on pictures so far as children are concerned.
Spokane News Condensed

THE countenance of her solder son, now dead, smiling as he partook of doughnuts at a Salvation Army hut back of the lines in France greeted his mother Mrs. Caroline Hansen of Spokane, from the Liberty theatre screen Thanksgiving eve. The unusual experience was reported by William Houck, manager of the Liberty. Mrs. Hansen remained in the theatre all evening after recognizing her dead son when he appeared in the war scenes of the Pathé weekly, witnessing the picture numerous times. Manager Houck presented Mrs. Hansen with a section of the film and she will have it enlarged.

"FOOL’S GOLD," the only product of the Washington Motion Picture corporation of Spokane, will be sold for a sum not less than $70,000, according to the New York agent, who has undertaken to prepare it for the market. Of this amount $21,473 will be left for distribution among the stockholders after all the debts are paid, according to F. K. McBroom, receiver for the company. The picture has been viewed by Reginald Warde, one of the leading agents of New York, who readily agreed to undertake the sale of the picture. He was enthusiastic over it, according to Mr. McBroom. The picture as shown in New York ran about 8,000 feet. It will be cut down to 6,500 feet by Mr. Warde, who will write a prologue and insert new titles throughout the picture.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN and "The Hun Within" were counter attractions offered by the Liberty, playing to packed houses the first of the week. Charlie was greeted with gales of laughter in the three-reel comedy, "Shoulder Arms."

THE Clemmer presented a Pickford film, little Mary starring in "Johanna Enlists."

PEGGY HYLAND in "Marriages are Made," and Margarita Fisher in "The Mantle of Charity" were the two programs at the Class A.

MARY MILES WINTER opened the week at the Casino with "Rosemary Climbs the Heights" and Olive Tell in a new Metro picture, "Secret Strings" was the offering the latter part of the week.

Los Angeles Items

RALPH PROCTOR has been made western division manager for Pathé, with offices in Los Angeles. He was formerly in the Middle Western territory. He arrived in Los Angeles last week and immediately gave out an optimistic interview on big business that must be enjoyed by the film industry with the end of the war. He will have under his jurisdiction the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Salt Lake, Spokane and Denver offices.

W. MARKUS, owner of four leading theatres in Santa Barbara, was killed last week in an automobile accident. He had a large number of friends in Los Angeles. The theatres he controlled were the Palace, Mission, Portola and the Opera House.

G. R. SIRWELL, manager of the W. W. Hodkinson offices now established in the Pathé offices, left this week for a visit to a number of Southern California towns, where he will call on exhibitors in an effort to place contracts for Hodkinson releases.

WHAT EXCHANGES AND THEATRES ARE DOING

HARRY D. NAUGLE, late Western division manager of Vitagraph, who died November 23 at Omaha of influenza, was buried in Los Angeles at the Forest Lawn Cemetery November 29. The Los Angeles Vitagraph offices were draped in mourning and were closed all day. The day following the funeral W. H. Hepburn, branch manager of Vitagraph, sent the following letter to every branch manager in Mr. Naugle’s territory: “In the beautiful sunshine of one of our most perfect Southern California days, amid a profusion of exquisite flowers—all so expressive of his character—our beloved friend and esteemed business associate, Harry D. Naugle, was laid to rest yesterday afternoon, Friday, November 29, at 3 p.m. A copy of the letter was also forwarded to the home offices of Vitagraph in New York.

BERNARD FISH and Harvey Gausman, road representatives of the Goldwyn exchange, Los Angeles, left for Southern California and Arizona points in an endeavor to crowd three months of business into one month, according to announcement by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

A PRIVATE preview of Geraldine Farrar’s new picture, "The Hell Cat," was given by the Goldwyn exchange. Only a few exchange representatives were invited to the preview to the ban on public gatherings, but those in attendance pronounced the picture one of the best productions in which Miss Farrar has appeared.

MANAGER JO RICKART of the Rickart and Nace, of Phoenix, Ariz., was in Los Angeles last week and signed the Goldwyn Star series for his new theatre, which will open soon in Phoenix. He predicted big business for the entire Arizona territory as soon as the influenza scare has blown over.

THE Los Angeles unit of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, comprising eleven Western states, which will handle all productions released by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, was organized in Los Angeles, Friday, November 29. The directors are C. D. Barlow of Salt Lake; J. H. Siler, president of the Gale theatre, Whittier, Cal., and Frank A. McDonald, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners’ Association of Los Angeles. Mr. Siler is president of the corporation. The corporation, being thus affiliated with the Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation, will do its releasing through the Mutual exchanges. Mr. Barlow came to Los Angeles in company with C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Exhibitors’ Mutual Distributing Corporation.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week that Miller’s theatre on Main street will be called the Ray’s Garden theatre hereafter. It opened Monday with William Farnum’s “The Rainbow Trail.” When the theatre closed at the beginning of the influenza ban it was playing “Riders of the Purple Sage,” a William Farnum production.

AMONG some of the towns in California that closed because of influenza, reopened, and then closed again and are still closed this week are Pomona, Pasadena and San Diego.

J. L. MERRICK, Pacific coast supervisor for the Mutual exchanges, arrived in Los Angeles last week for an indefinite stay. He has just made a tour of Pacific coast Mutual exchanges and he predicts an excellent business following the closing period on account of influenza.

C. R. PATTON, branch manager of Mutual, was back in his office this week after a few days’ illness. Yes, he was a victim of influenza.

HARRY LUSTIG, western district representative of Metro, left this week for Denver and Salt Lake, where he will visit Metro exchanges in those cities.

“PALS FIRST,” starring Harold Lockwood, will be shown at Clune’s Broadway theatre two weeks after the reopening of that house, it was announced this week by Branch Manager Lamb of the Metro exchange.

AMONG prominent Metro people arriving on the Pacific coast this week were Maxwell Karger, director general, and Viola Dana, Metro star. It is announced that Nazimova will come to Los Angeles soon, and other stars planning to work on the Pacific coast this winter are Emmy Wehlan and Hale Hamilton.

T. E. HANCOCK, branch manager of the World exchange, was ill with a severe cold last week. He denied having the influenza.

DAVID BERSON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, announced Monday that the Superba and Symphony theatres reopened with Universal productions on their programs. Monroe Salisbury in “Hugon the Mighty” was at the Superba, and the Symphony opened with Dorothy Phillips in “Talk of the Town.”

THE new California theatre has signed with Universal for Hearst’s International News Service, according to Branch Manager David Berson of the Universal exchange. Grauman’s theatre has signed for Hearst’s International News Service, also, together with News Serial and the Screen Telegram, Mr. Berson said.

LAST week four theatres in San Bernardino were playing simultaneously Universal subjects, according to information furnished the Universal exchange by Manager Knapp of the temple theatre. He said it was the first time in the history of motion pictures in San Bernardino that all theatres were at the same time playing pictures produced by the same company. “For Husband’s Only” was at the Opera House. At the Temple was a program consisting of “The Brazen Beauty,” a Bluebird production, together with Universal News Reels and a Lyons and Moran comedy. “The Two Souled Woman” was at the Strand, and the program at the Isis consisted of a Universal serial and two Universal westerns.

D. B. LEDERMAN, assistant to the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, was a visitor at the Los Angeles Universal exchange last week. He expects to be in Los Angeles indefinitely, it is said.

“UNDER FOUR FLAGS,” one of the government war films, will have its premier in Los Angeles at the Alhambra theatre within a short time, according to announcement this week by Louis Hyman, branch manager of the All Star Features Distributing corporation. The picture will have a run of three weeks. Mr. Hyman predicts a record run for the subject.

NICK STEELE, formerly district manager for the William L. Sherry Service, is now affiliated with the All Star Features Distributing corporation.

WORD was received in Los Angeles this week that Sol Lesser, head of the All Star Features Distributing corporation, left San Francisco last week for New York, where he expects to purchase releasing rights of a number of feature productions.

J. A. QUINN, former booker for Kleine, has been placed in charge of the booking department in the General Film offices, succeeding William Schoen, who has been given a road position.

MISS EDNA ESCHER, who was bookkeeper for General Film from 1911 to 1916, and then four years in the same position with Paramount, returned to the General Film offices this week to the position formerly held by her. Miss Irma Paulson, General Film stenographer, is also back again.
In and Around Denver

BUSINESS in this territory shows but small improvement. Out of approximately three hundred houses in territory tributary to Denver, thirty are open for business, while the balance are closed on account of the influenza epidemic. Unless conditions change very materially, two of the big houses on Curtis street may close temporarily next week. In Denver the health authorities have rescinded the order requiring that masks be worn by the public, including theatre patrons. There is a small decrease in the number of new cases and the number of deaths in Denver and also in other cities in the Rocky Mountain section.

E. P. BRIGGS, Denver representative of the American Film Company, is visiting principal New Mexico points. Two American pictures are showing on Curtis street beginning Sunday, December 8. William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry" is on hand in his role at the America, and "Money Isn’t Everything," starring Margarita Fisher, is at the Strand for four days.

MANAGER BARTELS announces that W. W. Hodkinson is putting into effect a plan dividing Denver territory into four sections, an arrangement that will give their patrons much better service. Holders of contracts in Western Kansas will hereafter be served by the Kansas City office of Pathe; those in Montana by the Spokane office, and Utah and Idaho by Salt Lake. TheDenver headquarters retain the distribution to points in Colorado, Western Nebraska, Wyoming and New Mexico. Hodkinson representatives at the above named Pathe exchanges will give each account their personal attention.

L. A. QUILL of Pittsburg, who arrived a few days ago to take charge of the local Fox exchange, is much pleased with his new surroundings. He is particularly impressed with Denver’s Great White Way, which, he says, undoubtedly surpasses any pictures theatres section in the United States.

TWO additions to the Fox sales force are noted since his arrival. F. W. Norman, who left a few months ago to join the Golden West's routes has returned to his first love, and H. L. Hartman, well known to the trade in the Northwest, has arrived from Minneapolis, where he was recently located.

THE INTERNATIONAL AMUSEMENT COMPANY has completed the new Liberty theatre at Leadville, which will open as soon as the "flu" ban is lifted.

MR. AND MRS. W. E. MCGUIRE and Ed Anderson were recent visitors on Film Row. Mr. McGuire owns the Gem theatre at Silverton and Mr. Anderson is the owner of the Grand at Pueblo.

COLORADO SPRINGS is still closed, but J. E. Tompkins, owner of the Liberty, added to his popularity a few days ago when he gave a free private showing of "The Hell Cat," featuring Geraldine Farrar, to several hundred disbanded student soldiers of Colorado College. The boys extended to Mr. Tompkins a vote of thankful appreciation.

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel for Affiliated Distributors and the Exhibitors’ Mutuals Distributors Corporation of New York City, met the leading exhibitors of Denver this week at the Rivoli and explained the working plans of the Independent Sales Corporation. He was accompanied by J. S. Barlow, representative of the Exhibitors’ Booking Corporation of Salt Lake City, who will handle their full product in Salt Lake territory and take care of Affiliated and Mutual interests. Mr. Pettijohn expressed himself as well pleased with his visit in Denver.

J. L. MERRICK, Western Coast supervisor for Exhibitors’ Mutual, spent several days here the past week perfecting plans for the distribution of the new Mutual, Affiliated, Robinson-Cole products. He left here for Portland.

R. W. DAVIS of the Palace theatre at Trinidad is in Denver arranging a new service line-up.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been received here of the death of W. T. Mason, formerly located here with the First National. He was a victim of influenza a few days ago at San Francisco. He leaves a wife and five children.

HUGH RENNE has resigned as local representative of the Film Clearing House to become the manager for Exhibitors’ Mutual at Cincinnati. He is succeeded by L. E. Schaeffer, former manager for George Kleine System.

SESSUE HAYAKA in “The Temple of Dusk” is showing at the Strand, on Curtis street.

Looks for One to Star In

DOUGLAS MACLEAN, who has recently been supporting such feminine stars as Mary Pickford, Enid Bennett and Dorothy Gish, is said to be casting his eye about for a good starring vehicle of his own.
San Francisco News Condensed

SINCE Major M. J. Cohen has had charge of the San Francisco office of the General Film Company, Inc., he has been readjusting his working forces. To take care of the General and the George Kleine System he now has a staff of twenty-two persons. He says that he is looking for a wonderful season of success. Business has opened up in fine shape since restrictions have been removed and this indicates continued success for the future.

BEN LIEDMAN, impresario of the Richmond district, San Francisco, controlling the Lincoln and Fischer theatres, is planning to take a number of film managers on a duck hunt in the near future. Mr. Liedman announces that he recently purchased a large Seebury Smith unified pipe organ from the G. H. Leetherby Company and is now having it installed in the Lincoln theatre.

IT is reported that Fred C. Wescher, booker for the Metro Pictures Corporation, was married Sunday, December 1. Mr. Wescher declined to confirm or deny the report.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., has severed his connection with that company and is now with the Select Pictures Corporation. Mr. Cory says it is like getting home again, as he was long with the World, when that company handled Norma Talmadge, Alice Brady and Clara Kimball Young. To be able to book these stars again is somewhat of a coincidence, he says, and it gives him that fireside feeling which a man has when he is home again.

F. A. WAGNER, Vitagraph manager of the Salt Lake office, passed through San Francisco this week on his way home from Los Angeles, where he had gone to attend the funeral of the late Western District Manager H. D. Naugle, who died in Omaha of pneumonia November 23.

FRANCIS PATRICK SHANLEY, proprietor of the Continental Hotels of San Francisco and Los Angeles, and one of the best-known hotel men in the West to the profession and industry alike, met with an accident while driving from Los Angeles to this city in his car recently. In a bad strip of road his machine was upset and Shanley had two ribs badly broken. He is now in the Fairmont Hospital, San Francisco.

R. A. BRACKETT, who has been covering the San Joaquin Valley for the Select, has joined the selling force of the same corporation in Seattle.

THE PEERLESS FILM SERVICE, INC., has outgrown its quarters at 100 Golden Gate avenue and is moving to enlarged quarters at 94 Golden Gate, where the Sunset Exchange recently held forth. Mr. E. H. Emmick, president of the company, says that the move was made necessary on account of the rapidly growing demand on the services of the exchange.

EDWARD B. LOWMAN, formerly chief booker for the San Francisco office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and who had enlisted in the service of the Knights of Columbus, has been honorably discharged from service and returned to his old desk with the company.

WALLACE REID, the star, has been making a personal appearance at both the Imperial and California theatres, where pictures are being run in which he took part. The personal appearance of movie stars is becoming popular in San Francisco and it seems likely that the plan will be greatly extended.

ROBERT C. POOR, the 250-pound star salesman for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in San Francisco, claims to have received an offer to double for Marguerite Clark. He claims that he is double her size, but that otherwise the resemblance is remarkable. He is now working on a plan that by means of throwing certain lights on one portion of a picture which is in process of being made that particular portion can be magnified or diminished in size. As soon as he has it perfected he feels sure he will be able to take the petite Marguerite's parts in her own inimitable way.

M. H. LEWIS, manager of the local office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been home for several days with what is reported to be a slight attack of la grippe.

ADOLPH H. MAYER, the motion picture photographer, who made the film of the famous Moneye trial and subsequent developments of the case, is just back from a two years' trip of the entire country. He calls his picture "The Frame-Up System in the San Francisco Bomb Trials" and plans to bring it up to date with additional features of the case which have recently developed. The Duhein Motion Picture Manufacturing company developed and printed the original films for him and will do the same work on those which Mr. Mayer is about to make.

"Hearts of Love," by Edward Lansing Cowles of the San Francisco Chronicle, which stars Edna Mayo and will be released through the General Film Company, will be given its first preview next week to a group of representatives of the press.

A TELEGRAM was received from general headquarters of the General Film Company on Monday at the local headquarters announcing the release of the "Peace Celebration, at Paris." The picture, according to the telegram, shows the King and Queen of Great Britain congratulating American soldiers. Within ten minutes of the receipt of the telegram the film was booked for the Orpheum, beginning Sunday, December 8. The local exchange is banking that special-delivery stamps will bring the film through by parcel post in time for the opening date.

THE ALL STARS FEATURES DISTRIBUTORS, INC., announces that "Under Four Flags" will make its first appearance on this coast at the Rialto theatre, beginning December 8. The Rialto is planning some special advertising stunts in its publicity campaign. Nearly every day of the week will be set aside as a special Army, Navy, Marine Corps or some other kind of a day. For instance, December 11 will be Marine Corps Day and the marine band will be brought to the city for the occasion and a detachment of marines will give a patriotic demonstration. A special preview for the French troops now in San Francisco, numbering about 500, has been arranged and another for the patients at the Letterman Hospital.

LEON ZELINSKY, road man for the Universal, is just back from a sales trip through the Sacramento valley. He was so successful on this trip that he sets out immediately for a visit to the region surrounding Santa Rosa.

LEON HYSLOP, formerly with the Triangle, has joined the sales force of the Universal.

D. J. CHATKIN, Coast representative of the Film Clearing House, is just back from a trip to Seattle and expects soon to be settled in the offices formerly occupied by the Geo. Kleine System.

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 177 Golden Gate avenue, took advantage of the recent shutdown of business to completely renovate and remodel its headquarters. Partitions were torn out and not only was much better light secured but everything is now open and above board in accordance with the policy of the company. The appearance of the office is improved at least 100 per cent.

B. T. SKINNER, former shipping clerk with the local Vitagraph, writes that he is now provo sergeant in the city of Augusta, Ga., and that he expects to be shortly discharged from the army. The local company announces that his old position is waiting for him on his arrival.
There are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft

There's no need of telling the Operator that the Take-up Shaft is a mighty important part of a Projector.

It absolutely must not fail him; and to be proof against going back on him it must be designed right in the first place.

Now, there are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft.

One way is to design it wrong, to have the belt pull sideways on the shaft, cramping it in its bearings, and then to try to overcome the difficulty by introducing ball bearings.

The Simplex wins because it is correct both in principle and in construction.

The other way is to design it correct in principle, like the Simplex Take-up Shaft here illustrated.

When you read the explanations you will quickly see that the belt pull doesn’t come on the shaft at all; so there's no cramping or friction to try to reduce by “anti-friction” bearings.

And, as you know, the probability of any piece of mechanism going wrong increases directly as the number of parts it contains. So being extremely simple as well as free from blunders in design, the Simplex Take-up Shaft is dependable in the highest degree.

Director Clifton Works on New Gish Feature

DIRECTOR Elmer Clifton has put the finishing touches on his propaganda picture for the Government and has now started rehearsals for his forthcoming Dorothy Gish production. The story is laid in England and some special street scenes have been built. Clifton likes the scenario and has selected an excellent supporting cast for Miss Dorothy, it is said.

Advertise in the West Coast

J. B. SPARKS of the Liberty theatre at Condon, Oreg., has purchased a fotoplayer for his house and intends to discard exclusively on this instrument for music.
MARY PICKFORD, now producing for the First National Exhibitors circuit, has purchased the screen rights to "Come Out of the Kitchen," the popular stage play, it was announced from T. L. Tally's office this week. The consideration was not given. Miss Pickford is now working on the screen version of "Daddy Long Legs," the picture rights of which cost her $40,000. She also purchased the rights of "Polly Ana" for the screen, and it is said that this transaction involved $40,000 also.

A. T. CONRAD, proprietor of the C. & C. theatre at Taft, Cal., was a visitor in Los Angeles this week, where he called on T. L. Tally, of the First National Exhibitors.

"THE KAISER'S FINISH," with the same cast that played in the former Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," was announced last Saturday by Branch Manager Knott, of the First National Exhibitors' exchange. A preview of the picture will be held soon in Los Angeles, he said.

AFTER being closed, reopened and closed again the health authorities clamped the lid on San Diego last Friday with the most drastic closing ordinance that has yet been enforced in any Southern California city. When it became apparent to the theatre owners of San Diego that the health authorities were about to close their places of business for the second time, they entered a vigorous protest, unless the same ban was placed on business of every character in the city, except restaurants and drug stores. After much argument pro and con, the health authorities adopted the theatre owners' plans, or suggestions, and the town was ordered closed for a period of seven days. It was urged from many quarters that a strict quarantine be maintained against visitors from outside cities, but this feature of the closing plan was defeated.

ALL motion picture theatres were open in Phoenix, Ariz., Sunday, Dec. 8, it was learned in Los Angeles this week. The Plaza theatre of Phoenix opened with "Over the Top," the Guy Empey Vitagraph production. This is the fourth time the picture has been shown in Phoenix according to announcement by Vitagraph Branch Manager W. H. Hepburn.

THE theatres in Santa Barbara were opened Sunday, Dec. 8, and shows from the Universal, Paramount and Select exchanges were sent to the resort city to fill various bills of the various houses opening their doors.

MISS IDA DICKSON, proprietor of the Dickson theatre at Ventura, was a visitor in Los Angeles last week. She made some bookings from the Universal, Pathe and Vitagraph exchanges.

THE Film Clearing House exchange is rapidly being fitted up in the former Kleine System offices in the Knickerbocker, and booking releases will be announced from the exchange within a few weeks. Branch Manager H. J. Roberts, who was formerly sales manager with the Fox exchange in New York, is in charge. Before coming to Los Angeles to take charge of his new work he established a reputation for executive ability with the Fox offices. Four years ago he was attached to the Fox Los Angeles office.

J. SLIPPER AND COMPANY this week shipped two Simplex machines to A. A. Lloyd, proprietor of the Lloyd theatre at Santa Barbara. Other similar orders will be filled next week, it was announced from the Slipper shop this week.

RAY BRANDON, of Brandon Bros., owners of the Brandon and other theatres in Phoenix, motored to Los Angeles this week. He was accompanied by Pat Stephens. Mr. Brandon has completely overhauled the American theatre, which now has a seating capacity for 900 people. This theatre was formerly the Empress. He will open the house with the Universal special, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

MESSRS. TRUSSER AND NEWTON, who are now looking after the interest of the late W. Markus, of Santa Barbara, were in Los Angeles this week arranging bookings for the various Markus theatres which opened again Sunday, Dec. 8.

GYD DOUTHIT, of Oxnard, proprietor of the Lyric, Victory and Opera House in Oxnard, was a visitor on film row this week.

IT BECAME KNOWN in Los Angeles this week that Douglas Yarmouth, who has been in the aviation service of the United States army, will return soon to San Bernardino, where he will resume the management of the Strand theatre of that city.

AMES A. COOK, owner of the Palace theatre at El Centro, in the Imperial Valley, was in Los Angeles this week arranging bookings. He called on the Vitagraph, Triangle, Pathé, Paramount, Universal and Goldwyn exchanges.

E. ELLIOTT, special representative of Select Pictures, who lived in Los Angeles from the Middle Western territory some weeks ago, has already become enamoured with the film capital of the world. He asserts vigorously that Los Angeles is the most wonderful city in the United States, and adds that he will soon open the office on Hollywood's famous street and fill a room with all special, foreign, and Paramount business. Los Angeles Select exchange so that his stay here will be for just as long a period as possible.

C. LOPER, branch manager of the Select exchange, read last Friday from a three days' visit at San Diego. He said that the motion picture men in the southern city are very much put up over the influenza situation and its attendant closings.

"THE CAVEL CASE," in which Julia Arthur plays the role of Cavel, the English nurse who was murdered by the Gns in the early stages of the war, has been received by Reis Exchange in Los Angeles. An early preview of the picture will be held, Branch Manager Loper said this week.

H. SCHMIDT, the new branch manager of General exchange, who came to Los Angeles from the San Francisco office, predicted this week that Los Angeles within a few days will be a part of the world in the matter of theatre patronage. All theatres were opened in Los Angeles last week, but did not get back to normal, he said.

M. H. N, formerly manager of the Kleine exchange in San Francisco, succeeded Branch Manager H. W. Schmidt as manager of the San Francisco General Film exchange.

GE. EKRE, who was manager of the General exchange in Angeles before he was succeeded by H. W. Schmidt, left last week that he had not made any definite plans for the future than he expected to be attached to one of the Los Angeles exchanges within a short time.

BR. STUBBINS, of M. & R. feature exchange, announced that he will soon begin releasing the new M. & R. film Screen Productions, which will be one per month for the first year. The first releases have not as yet been named, he said.

"BED CLOTHES," starring Mildred Harris, a Universal production, will be shown at the Superba theatre during the second week of December, according to announcement by Manager David Bershon of the Universal exchange.
All the News of Portland

WHEN the French steam auxiliary schooner Belford sails from this city, Walter W. Kofeldt, who has been prominent in the activities of the moving picture men of this city for some time, will be on board. Kofeldt sailed once before on the ill-fated Dumaru which was destroyed by lightning off Guam, last October. He made but one trip on that boat, having left it at San Francisco, the trip previous to the time that it was destroyed. The Belford will load for France, and will go to New York first, via the Panama Canal. It is expected that when the schooner arrives at New York the American crew will be discharged and a French complement assigned. Previous to preparing to leave this city, Kofeldt went to Seattle, for a few days, where he conferred with several moving picture men of that city. At one time he was manager of the Majestic theatre, at which time some clever advertising stunts were put over.

FRANK COFFINBERRY, formerly manager of local vaudeville theatres, now connected with the division of films in the United States Government Committee on Public Information, is in Portland arranging for the showing of war films here. The next big picture shown here by that committee will be "Under Paris Flags." Mr. Coffinberry stated that the departure of the committee would be discontinued after December 15. The showing of the pictures will be continued by arrangements with private corporations. The work of the film division has been hampered greatly by the influenza epidemic, which resulted in the closing of 94 per cent of the motion picture houses in but the country. Mr. Coffinberry said "America's Answer," which had just been offered to the Portland public, was expected to aid materially in the sale of Fourth Liberty Loan bonds. It had been shown in only five cities when the ban was placed on the "movies," and the presentation was stopped.

MANAGER HOLTZCLAW of the Circle theatre of this city, didn't have to wait a long time to see a big opportunity to draw a capacity house. As soon as the news of Mildred Harris's wedding to Charlie Chaplin was made known, he hopped in his car and went right down to book "For Husbands Only," the third of the big Lois Weber productions featuring Mildred Harris. The only reason that he did not grab "The Price of a Good Time" was because he had run that picture as well as "The Doctor and the Woman," in his house quite recently, and used the S. R. O. sign in both instances. At that he may possibly have found a better chance in order to draw full advantage of the special advertising advantage of Mildred Harris' new name.

J. C. STILL, the live wire who directs the affairs of the People's and the Star theatres of this city, has the reputation that he grabs the right pictures at the right time. He showed "The Kaiser" at just the right minute, and made the biggest clean-up in the history of the theatre. His judgment was good again when he secured the big seven-reel series of official war pictures of Great Britain, "Fighting for Freedom," and at the present time they are running fine in both the People's and the Star theatres. "The public is catin' 'em up," is the latest advice from headquarters.

JOE BRADT of the Echo theatre of this city, is another exhibitor who has been quick to catch the advertising possibilities in featuring the change of Mildred Harris' name to Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. He is running "The Doctor and the Woman" and reports that he is doing an excellent business.

Todd Opens Business at Los Angeles

A NEW institution for an entirely new line of work has been opened by R. L. Todd at the Sanborn Laboratories, Culver City. Todd is a film editor formerly associated with Triangle and Douglas Fairbanks Company, and will do film editing for independent companies. He has had several years experience, and his work as editor has won him considerable praise.

Will M. Ritchey Writes on Selecting a Theme for Pictures

NOW that we have discussed the art of photoplay writing from its various angles, let us get right down to the actual starting of a story, which brings us face to face with one of the most important things to be considered—selecting a theme. It is right here that the majority of new writers make a big mistake, and it should be given careful thought before you start to write your story.

There are various ways of selecting a theme, but the most important one of all is to choose one which the writer understands thoroughly. Never try to write on any subject which you are not entirely familiar with, which the majority of beginning writers do. You can't expect a writer who knows horses to write an authentic treatise on automobiles, can you? No more than a writer who does not know thoroughly the subject he is undertaking can write a convincing photoplay. If you write on a subject purely from your own imagination of it, the scenario editor will soon find it out, and your script will come back with the polite rejection slip—unavailable.

Keep well within your own field and write only that which you understand. If you know society life, write about it, but if you have never come in contact with it—DON'T, because you're only wasting your time. I don't mean by this that one is not supposed to use their imagination in writing their story, but it is because it is unfamiliar. Good stories are seldom interesting. Get a theme that you know, and use your imagination to its fullest extent in framing your story.

There are various ways of selecting a theme for your story. There is the theme which is spontaneous, one that comes to you and makes you say right away—"That's it!" A great many of our most prominent writers confess that they get few spontaneous ideas for stories. They have to "hunt the theme." Observation is one of the best ways to secure material for your photoplay. Watch the people and things that happen about you, closely, and soon something will strike you in what goes on about you that will suggest your story.

It is a good plan to have your pencil and notebook always on hand. Jot down things that you notice, the mind often forgets and much good story material may be lost in this way, but if you have it down in black and white, it is always at your command whenever you may have cause to use it. Successful writers always have their little book and pencil on hand. They are not willing to trust even their trained minds, so why should you?

Observation and imagination are the two great aids to successful photoplay writing. They run along hand in hand. Imagination will soon leave you with a few favorite images, but observation always is open for something new, and leaves an open way for your imagination to start work again.

Get your theme (one you understand); keep your little notebook jotting down the various things you observe, then start on your story and let your imagination "go to it."

Ervin Visits Butte on Way to Southern California

HARRY E. ERVIN, who is erecting a $120,000 picture theatre-opera house in Harlonton, Mont., spent a few days in Butte recently, with the intention of seeing the new Belford. Mr. Ervin has met with remarkable success in his oil ventures in the Wyoming fields, and has reported, in several millions the past two years. When he left Harlonton less than two years ago he was a man of business and moderate means. But his friends and the story of his success reads like a fairy tale. Today he is the head of several large producing companies and owns thousands of acres of undeveloped, but favorably reported, oil land. He has started the construction of a 2,500 barrel refinery in Salt Lake.

Henry Meyers of Harlonton will manage the new theatre which will be known as the American. Plans are to open the theatre by the spring. Thus Harlonton will probably have the distinction of being the smallest city in the nation with a theatre of such class and cost.
THE WEST COAST

What They Do in Seattle

"SHOULDER ARMS," Charlie's latest, which is being put on by the National Exhibitor's Exchange, broke all records for attendance when it was played at The Liberty, Seattle. In Everett, Wash., a city of 25,000 people, over 14,000 saw this screen. The manager of The Liberty, in Bellingham, wrote to the Seattle exchange that he "could not handle the crowds" that wanted to see Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." F. V. Fisher, manager of the Exhibitor's Film Exchange, which is handling this feature in the Northwest, says that he has been asked for longer bookings on this picture by houses that originally booked it for a short period.

Mr. Fisher also reports that great interest is being taken by exhibitors regarding the new Anita Stewart Super Features and the Mary Pickford plays that his company offers.

C. H. FELDMAN and A. Mallot, of the Exhibitors Film exchange, are in their territories, representing the firm and considering the "flu" conditions in the smaller towns, report good business.

T. G. RANDOLPH, a well known photographer of the Seattle, has been appointed the Northwest representative of the International News Service Exchange. This exchange now includes the former Hearst service, Universal Current Events and Screen tales. Mr. Randolph will be stationed in Seattle, but will travel to different sections of the Northwest to photo all important events. This is part of the policy of the new International to show 300 feet of coast "doings" on each of their news pictures, three times a week.

C. F. HILL, who recently resigned the management of the Goldwyn exchange to transact his private business, was presented with a gold watch and chain on his leaving Seattle by the Northwest Film Board of Trade. Mr. Hill was popular with the members of the board and all were sorry to see him leave.

GILBERT HEFFRON, formerly of Missoula, Mont., has purchased the "Queen Anne Theatre," one of Seattle's best suburban houses.

THE L. J. SCHLAIFER ATTRACTIONS COMPANY reports that Mona Darkfeather has taken well in the Dalles, Ore., and other places where she appeared.

FRANK MONTGOMERY, now traveling in Montana, is reporting good business with "The Fall of Barbary Coast." Grace Sanderson, the Northwest distributor of this picture, is doing even better with it now than before the "flu." Miss Sanderson, who also wrote the scenario, is expecting her husband, Lieut. Mache, to come back from the army in a short time.

MADAME PAUL, manageress of the Strand, Olympia, Wash., recently took a flying trip up to the Goldwyn offices in Seattle. Her object was to sign up all the Goldwyn Star Series before some one else from that neighborhood did.

GEO. RING, manager of the Society, Seattle, was in town for a few days, as he recently received a furlough from the camp in which he was training.

GREAT preparations are being made by exhibitors for Christmas week. Christmas music and special programmes are being prepared. "My Phantom Girl," the words and music of which were produced by Mr. Oliver, who plays the Wurlitzer at the Coliseum, was recently sung at that theatre, and the famous "Wallace on the Wurlitzer," interpreted his own piece. The audience was very pleased with it.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

MONDAY, DECEMBER 6, the health board of Butte, Mont., modified the orders on closing, permitting stores to open so that the Christmas trade could be taken care of. Theaters were still closed and were said to be subject to the orders of the state board of health. About 40 new cases of influenza are officially reported daily.

WITH all houses in Butte dark again and no light on the question of reopening things theatrical are rather dead. Manager Bourke is supplying a number of Montana houses from the Universal exchange but in general business is considerably "shot."

ON TOP of the terrific blow given the exhibitors by the two shutdowns, which plucked many hams several days from the theatrical calendar, came a demand on the part of the musicians' union for higher wages. The demand was pre-emptorily rejected and unless an unforeseen contingency arises between now and the reopening date, as it may be set by the health board, theatregoers will have to prepare themselves to enjoy the pictures with no orchestra accompaniment. The exhibitors state that they prefer to dispense with music rather than meet the demands.

VAUDEVILLE houses are included and thus it is likely that Pan and Hip acts will display their wares to Butte audiences before long to the accompaniment of a piano only.

THE THEATRE MANAGERS' reply to the union, which states the new scale demanded, and other conditions, in full follows:

"W. E. Vincent, Secretary Musicians' Mutual Protective Union, 136 Hamilton street, Butte, Mont.

Dear Sir—Replying to your communication of the 15th instant, stating the demand of the amusement houses of an increase in wages as follows:

Two or more performers, six or seven nights and six or seven matinees, per performer, per week, $42.00.

Leader (same as above), $55.00.

Two or more performers, six or seven nights and one matinee, per performer, per week, $55.00.

In reply, will state that under the circumstances and the adverse conditions under which the motion picture houses are now operating, the wage advances demanded by you cannot be met and we herewith reject them. The war is over, the uncertain reconstruction period is upon us, the epidemic of sickness is still in existence cutting into business, increased taxes have just been added to our burdens. These facts combined with the simple proposition that the demands are excessive and unjustified, make our position logical.

"Rather than be forced to meet these demands we prefer to dispense with music in our houses."

The reply is signed by every theatre manager in the city.
Seattle and Northwest Meet Influenza More Than Halfway

The "flu" has hit the Northwest again, but more care is being taken by the authorities to check it. The authorities are going about it in a more sensible manner. Instead of closing stores and movie houses, the cases are being quarantined in the homes. The moving picture men of Seattle and vicinity are cooperating with the officials to do all in their power to prevent its spreading. The larger houses are asking all those who sneeze or cough to use their handkerchiefs and some have announced that they will ask their patrons to leave if they sneeze, in case the "flu" scare keeps up. This will be voluntary on their part.

The smaller towns in the four Northwest states are not in a poor condition from the "flu" standpoint, but they are not in an official standpoint. That is, the officials who are in "power" of the townlets, have announced that they will not allow the movie houses in their "cities" to open until every case of the "flu" or the grippe is wiped out. At least they must be closed till January, 1919. Letters to this effect have been written by managers to the exchange men along Seattle's Film Row. This ruling affects half the houses in the Northwest.

Jane Lee Recovers from Abscess

In the West Jane and Katherine Lee have resumed work on their picture "Smiles" under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom. Work on this production was halted for a brief period because of Jane Lee's illness from an abscess. The little star is now fully recovered.

Another Fox star working in Hollywood is Peggy Hyland, who is in "The Girl With No Regrets," a forthcoming Excel Picture. Miss Hyland is being directed by Harry Millarde.

Ora Carew Gets Her Own Company

Ora Carew is the latest film player to have her own company. Final arrangements were completed recently, and Ora started to work on her first picture this week.

Walter Wright will direct her productions. Ora was one of the first to be featured by Mack Sennett, and left because she preferred comedy-drama and drama to straight comedy. She recently finished "Playing opposite Wallace Reid and Tom Moore in their latest pictures.

Universal Service Branches Out for Exhibitors

The Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., at Los Angeles this week inaugurated an innovation for the benefit of the exhibitor in the way of a booklet containing the name of every film-play and comedy in the vaults of the exchange. The booklet is entitled "Universal Service," and was prepared under the supervision of Branch Manager David Bershon. Space for a booking record for a period of three months has been provided for the exhibitor, and the pamphlet will be re-edited and revised every three months, Mr. Bershon said.

Explaining the releasing program of the exchange, the booklet shows that Universal special attractions are released one a week, also a single two-reel Western, L-Ko comedy, Lyons and Moran comedies, Nestor comedies each week. One Bluebird feature is released every week.

Mr. Bershon this week mailed several hundred of the bulletins to the trade.

Engle Gives Luncheon to Coast Trade Papers

Joseph Engle, treasurer of Metro Film Corporation, gave a luncheon Saturday, December 7, to representatives of the trade papers and dramatic writers of Los Angeles newspapers at Hotel Alexandria in honor of Maxwell Karger, manager of productions for the Metro Company.

The invitations announced that there would be no speeches, and this proved to be the programme followed, with the exception that Mr. Karger became the target for all sorts of questions and he was kept busy for two hours answering them. He prefaced his answers with a statement that, "This is just between us," and he told of the inside politics and the troubles of producing and convinced all the newspaper people that so long as pictures are made there will be good ones and many bad ones.

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors’ Box Office Reports

EDITOR’S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to the Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the type of issue of Motion Picture News which contains the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer’s opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking Big, Average, or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department we will found the “Flash-Backs” being comments on films previously reviewed.

FLASHBACKS

Individual Opinions on Earlier Releases Received During the Past Week

"Society Sensation" (Universal) — Average business.
"This is the Top" (Vitaphone) — Excellent business.
"For Husbands Only" — A really worth while picture. Big business seven days.
"Studio Girl" — Average business.
"Her Condemned Sin" (Biograph State Rights) — Good picture.
"A Grain of Dust" — This was a big surprise. Got more money than any other star series we’ve ever pictured.
"Service Star" (Goldwyn) — Average business.
"Fedora " — Good picture.
"A Law Unto Herself " — Very good way picture.
"Winning Grandma" (Pathé) — Poor business. Weather fine.
"Indian Fighter" (Bosch) — Very poor business.
"Cactus Craball " (Triangle) — Good western to average business.
"Hushand’s Honor" (Mansfield) — Fairly good picture. Fair business two days.
"Doctor and the Woman " (Jewel) — Extra big business.
"America’s Answer" — Big business.
"Fifty-Fifty" — Big business. Average second day.
"To Hell With the Kaiser " (Metro) — Average business.
"Warped Steel " — Big business. Average second day.
"A Pair of Cupids " (Metro) — Big business.
"Blood and Yellow " — Broncho Billy O. K. but poor drawing card.
"Man Without a Country " — Poor business.
"Her Only Way " (Select) — Good story but drama stuff disappointing.
"CAUGHT IN THE ACT"—FOX

Rather Spare Plot and Not Well Treated

It is too bad that the full value of Fred Jackson's stories cannot always be caught by the motion picture camera. He writes so amusingly that his fiction has almost become a vogue. "Caught in the Act," which presents Peggy Hyland in the principal part, turns out to be a rather tiresome affair—a romance done to the tune of comedy and comedy attempted more by grimaces and much running hither and yon than by situations.

Really the best memory of the picture is the performance rendered by that sterling old actor, Walter McEwen, who plays the hero's valet. His ability is rare—one day impersonating Bernsteinoff, the next a comedy butler! Mr. McEwen is really funny, the bright spot of "Caught in the Act."

Much cannot be said of the manner in which the subject has been treated. The "sick-bed" scenes in particular are over-done. A closeup of a man receiving a dose of oil, a very messy dose of oil, is not at all conducive to tranquility of the digestive organs. And the title writer who used puns and slang and Joe Miller jokes in every nine subtitles out of ten should reserve his wit for the Lehrman comedies.

—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 5.—Peter Milne.

SUGGESTIONS
The Fox publicity pamphlet evidently compiles its press sheets, from the original script of a production. This often results in anachronisms that the exhibitor should be warned against. In "Buchanan's Wife," the story told in the press sheet was rather remotely removed from that told in the picture, both in essentials and incidents. While the synopsis given on "Caught in the Act" is more in accord with the picture than was the case with this previous release it differs in a number of respects. The exhibitor is advised therefore to follow the matter given in the synopsis, as there may be some matter which was taken from the screen.

The picture is a light romantic-comedy and should be billed as such with Peggy Hyland doing the stellar honors. Don't forget to mention Walter McEwen, who appears in a supporting part. While his name is unknown to picturegoers in general, they will appreciate your intolerance in mentioning him after they have seen the picture. He shares a place with one of the cleverest of his comedy performances.

AD TALK
Peggy Hyland, the young Fox star, whose name is always associated with the best in popular comedy-drama, will be the attraction at the showing on certain nights of the week when "Caught in the Act" is shown for the first time in this city. As regards plot, there is not much to tell about "Caught in the Act." Its main essentials are romance and comedy and while there is sufficient drama to link these elements together into an enjoyable whole, the story, such as it is, counts for little. But we feel sure that patrons of the house and of the theatre will be well repaid by a trip to the house during the days that "Caught in the Act" heads the bill. It is just the sort of a feature that is of real entertainment value in these days.

Miss Hyland plays the role of a young society girl with her accustomed sincerity and vigor and the result is a distinct character, one that will be enjoyed by all. She receives valuable support from Leslie Austen who appears opposite her as an editor bent on exposing the more crooked practices of her father in the financial world. Of course the young lady is unaware of her father's dishonesty and so she wouldn't be so ready to receive the attentions of the editor. But after the romance has progressed apace does she find it out and then it is too late. And so the father has to reform.

Included in the supporting cast is Walter McEwen, an English character actor of note. As the hero's valet and perpetual alibi that gentleman finds himself in trouble. Mr. McEwen gives a rare comedy characterization, one well fitted, although in exact juxtaposition to rank with his other portrayal of Bernstorff in another Fox picture.

THE STORY
Priscilla Kane's hat blows off in the street and is damaged. She enters a mending shop and hands the bit of millinery to the lady in charge of repairs. She remains in the outer part of the shop while the said lady goes within to render first aid to the injured. Then there happens along Pennington Wright, an editor, just the thing for a stormy interview with Priscilla's father. He has called the old theatre to all kinds of a crook for packing bum beef and is very wrathful. His ire grows by leaps and bounds when a nail gets in his way and tears the nether part of his trousers. Hence his entrance into the mending shop and hence the beginning of the romance.

For he falls in love with Priscilla and quite naturally believes her the lady that runs the place.

Priscilla is keen enough to carry this deception through and as a consequence she calls later at Pennington Wright's apartments to do mending. She has a high old time with the valet, Wills, a thoroughly going valet if ever there was one. When Pennington's supposed fiancée calls, Wills attempts to pass Priscilla off as a relative from Walla Walla but when Pennington himself looms up he passes her off as Wills' "gal."

There is a high old time. The supposed fiancée suspects, as well she might, and leaves in a huff.

Later old man Kane decides to get something on Pennington to make him cease his pennings. He decides to use a woman and a camera to do the trick. All is set for the affair but it so happens that that very night Pennington has phoned Priscilla, saying that he is desperately ill and needs her attention. She has come with her maid to spend the night and to administer first aid to the injured. When the plotter plans to do the blackmail stunt there is a general misunderstanding, need it be said, with a marriage ceremony?

"A LADY'S NAME"—SELECT

Polite Comedy of the Popular Constance Talmadge Type

Constance Talmadge is certainly building a reputation for herself as a comedienne. In "A Lady's Name" she gives further proof of her ability to project her refreshing, buoyant personality over and through five reels of film, lending a life and color to every scene that holds the spectator with an irresistible charm.

It is true that Miss Talmadge has had vehicles better suited to the screen than "A Lady's Name." But to condemn the present picture would be a gross error, resulting only from comparing it with her previous brilliant successes. The piece is so original in conception, so bold in fancy and pretty in treatment that it is safely able to match itself with any other light comedy of the day—and come out the winner. Amusing is the word that fits it. The spectator finds himself chuckling and smiling inwardly and outwardly and constantly.

The one fault that the writer had to find with the production was its closeups. Whether or not the story was spare for the footage is a question, but there are many closeups of the star that should not have been. However, we can even excuse padding with respect to "A Lady's Name." In all other respects it is so delightful. And the production is little short of exquisite. The producers of the Constance Talmadge pictures endow them with an air of refinement, a refinement that is obvious in settings, photographic work, support, properties, everything, a refinement that places them in a class of enviable supremacy.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK
After a vacation of two months Constance Talmadge is to be with us once more in a spick and span new comedy, "A Lady's Name," which Select Pictures will offer to the theatre on—"A Lady's Name," is taken from the play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt, that accomplished weaver of light comedy situations.

The effervescent and always delightful Constance, whom Lewis J. Selznick presents, plays the role of a young and fascinating woman novelist in this new picture, not the short-haired, bespectacled type of writer, but a buoyant, whimsical young woman whose search for literary material leads her to insert an ad in a daily newspaper for a husband. She intends to study the applicants as they arrive, but events do not happen as she expects, and the result is a rapid unfolding of humorous events with Mabel Vere, the young woman played by Constance, as the chief figure.

Included in the exceptional cast assembled to support Miss Talmadge are Harrison Ford, a leading man who has been prominent in all of the studio's recent pictures, Emory Johnson, Vera Doria, James Farley and Lillian Leighton. The scenario was the work of Julia Crawford Ivers, a scenarist well known for her work in Select and Paramount pictures, while the dialogue is in charge of Walter Edwards, the same man responsible for the delightful comedy-drama which Miss Talmadge has appeared in this season.

SUGGESTIONS
If you have been playing the previous Constance Talmadge productions you need no hints on this one, other than to be told that it will safely stand a good lot of boisterousness. The box office reports printed in the NEWS show that this star is constantly drawing bigger crowds. This is the result of her terrific popularity and the superior type of production that the Select Company has been providing her. Don't fail to cash in on this exceptionally high class product that Select is offering you—a clean, polite, high spirited comedy—practically the best that the market has to offer. It is to be hoped that you have popularized these pictures and that when you announce Constance Talmadge in "A Lady's Name," your task is just about done. It will be if you have shown her previous releases.

But if you haven't and if, when you have, you haven't made as much of them as you should have, don't wait but start right in plugging "A Lady's Name" as the fine picture it is. As it is taken from a play by Cyril Harcourt, author of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," which Miss Talmadge also appeared, you should announce it.

THE STORY
Mabel Vere is a young and popular writer. She shares a pretty little flat with Maud Bray, a suffragette of determined character. Mabel is engaged to be married to Gerald Wantage, but she has become aware of growing dissatisfaction with her somewhat priggish fiancé. However, she tries to ignore this discontent, working off her unrest in her own original ways. One of her "ways" is to advertise for a husband. She hopes to obtain good copy from the applicants, and she invites three of them to call.

Adams, a butler, arrives, in whom Mabel sees prospects for a good story. She accepts his invitation to tea for the following afternoon at the house where he works, telling him that his master will be out. Noel Corcoran is the third applicant, to whom Mabel does not show the interest that she feels in him.

Harry Morey Will Please in This One; Diversified Story

Being a crook play, and as a matter of diversity of entertainment, "Hoarded Assets" should give satisfaction, especially among the Harry Morey followers. It has been rather a long time since this star has been given a role of this character; and he does justice to it.

The hero is introduced as a river pirate, owner of a motor boat, who lives by appropriating the other fellow's property. Because he does his work cleverly, he is able to avoid detection.

One day he overhears some rival crooks planning to steal some gold that is to be shipped in nail kegs. By clever substitution, he is able to get the gold, hiding it at the bottom of the river.

He marries the girl he is in love with and moves to a lonely house by the river bank.

Through a certain clue, detectives come to suspect him for the theft; although they catch him in the act of opening one of the barrels, they are unable to arrest him, as, upon examination, they find it contains nothing but sand. They get the remainder of the barrels, however, which they find a little further away.

Realizing now that the narrow path is preferable than the broad, he reforms.

The story in places is not quite logical; also there are a few technical errors in it, but I am inclined to think spectators will not overexamine them.—Released Dec. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Twenty kegs of gold—one million dollars—turned to twenty kegs of sand!

Harry Morey in by far the strongest role he has enacted during the past year.

He was a criminal in the eyes of the law—he was a criminal in his own eyes—but his wife had him innocent and she proved to be right! A weird trick of Fate intervened.

AD TALK

Harry Morey, whose name is merely another way of spelling virility, will be seen at the theatre on—

In his latest Vitagraph picture entitled "Hoarded Assets" is one of the most unusual dramas that has come from the Vitagraph studio in many a month and it offers Mr. Morey still another opportunity to display his ability as an actor of forceful parts. In "Hoarded Assets" he appears as Jerry Rufus, a river pirate, otherwise a skilful man. He is in love with Claire Dawson, a girl courted by many wealthy men. In time Jerry gets the false idea that she is playing for "big money" and not the big love that is his to offer. So he commits a daring robbery in her behalf and then buries his treasure in the bed of the river near his cabin.

He returns to offer Claire marriage and is astounded to find that she loved him all the time. They live in his cabin and are contented until one day a detective appears. He tells Claire her suspicions with the result that she is disconsolate with her lot. As a result Jerry digs down for one of the buried kegs in which there is stored his unlimited treasure. And as he is about to open it the detective appears and apprises himself an audience of one to witness the proceedings. Jerry goes down for the keg and when the cover comes off there is—

Just what there is in this keg, and in all the nineteen others that Jerry buried in the river bed will not be disclosed here. It is done so dramatically in "Hoarded Assets" that none of its patrons will want to miss it. Mr. Morey is supported by an excellent cast, including Betty Bythie, Robert Gailard and George Majeroni.

THE STORY

Jerry Rufus, a river pirate who has committed a number of crimes for all of which a detective has never been able to get the goods on him, is, despite his bite, very much of a man. He is in love with Claire Dawson, a girl courted by many wealthy men. So Jerry makes the pardonable mistake of believing she wants "big money" and not the big love that he has to offer. He leaves her and decides to go up the river on his boat, but as he is about to embark he overhears other river pirates planning to rob a shipment of a million dollars contained in twenty kegs. His desire for the girl again triumphs and, by a cleverly devised plan, he substitutes twenty kegs of sand for the gold and then buries the stolen kegs in the river bed near his cabin. He returns for Claire and learns that she wanted him for himself all along—cared nothing for money.

"THE SEA WAIF"—WORLD

Love Story Made Sustaining by Skillful Handling

A LOVE story so constructed that the interest is well sustained throughout its run is offered in "The Sea Waif," the current World picture starring Louise Huff. Whereas the plot itself is more or less conventional and at times means of a like character have been employed to move it forward, a well wrought continuity and direction of a title calibre serve to contribute to it a quota of suspense not usually found in stories of the same kidney.

Miss Huff registers appealingly in the title role and receives support that is suitably convincing, with the exception of one poorly played character part. The five reels also include a number of attractive seascapes, while the interior settings give ample proof that the producers have sought elsewhere than the storerooms for properties. They are of a realistic and attractive substance.

Harry O. Hoyt was the scenarist and his script was based on a story by Lieut. Howard Irving Young, while Frank Reicher directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 30.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

The story is that of a wealthy lady who lost his voice—at the seashore it was restored to him, but he found something else in its place far away from the Broadway footlights.

Louise Huff is the waif of the sea. And a dainty, adorable little waif she is. No wonder that men fought for her hand!

A story of modern pirates of the Atlantic seaboard—who pose as honest fishermen—but who pillaged and plundered under the cover of night.

The musical comedy star lost his voice one night in the very middle of his great song hit. He found it again in a little fisher village on the coast of Maine—but he found something else far more precious.

Here is a sweet and appealing love story—a story written by Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, and one A. E. F.—but a story as it were, from the seat of war as the Maine sea coast.

AD TALK

Louise Huff will be the star at the—a theatre on —in her second World picture entitled "The Sea Waif." In this production she is seen in the role of Nancy Potter, a girl of a little fishing village, who lives with old Call Potter. He poses before her as a fisherman, but in reality plunders the homes of the wealthy along the coast in company with a gang of renegades. The first, a gentleman that Nancy ever met comes to her in the person of Harry Caton, a musical comedy star, forced to seek rest and quiet by the sea because of the temporary loss of his voice.

Thus does the love story of "The Sea Waif" commence. The complications it leads to are many and highly interesting, not the least of which is the fact that Nancy discovers she is really the daughter of Colonel Brett and no relation whatsoever to the coast bandit. Of course the story ends happily, but really the love story of "The Sea Waif" is developed along unusual lines and the entertainment provided in its five reels is of more than average worth.

The author of the piece is Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, A. E. F., Lieutenant Young was formerly in the Navy and is well known in the scenario field. Special interest, however, is attached to the "Sea Waif" as the script was forwarded to the World Film Corporation from France. Needless to add the company rushed his check back to him in record time! Harry O. Hoyt and John Bowers, with Frank Reicher, one of the most artistic directors in the field, took charge of production details. John Reicher will be seen as Miss Huff's leading man in this offering.
FALSE accusation of forgery and an overheard conversation wreck this picture, in my opinion, right at the start. Other improbabilities follow in quick succession.

A family of three, consisting of the hero, the heroine and their little son, is the first thing ushered at the beginning of the picture. He is a bank clerk; she keeps a good home for him; their child is their greatest pleasure. They are happy and contented. But the villain, a city politician, as usual, wants the heroine and sets out to get what he wants. So the arrest and conviction of the hero for forgery is the result. The balance of the picture is built on this idea. It chiefly deals with the clearing of the hero, due to the heroine's efforts, and the villain's reform.

The first thing that wounds my feelings is the conviction of the innocent hero. This becomes more intensified on account of the extra pains the picture takes in awakening sympathy for him by presenting his home life; the second, is his conviction without any proof whatever. He is simply convicted—that is all. Another, and which jars you somewhat, is the much employed overheard conversation, which occurs twice in this offering. It fails to either arouse interest or convince; and still another, is that, after the preliminary introductions, almost every one of you can tell what the whole story, even to the finest detail, is going to be.—Released Dec. 22.—Length, 5 reels—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

How a young woman played a dangerous game and forced a guilty man into a confession that freed her innocent husband from jail.

The inside story of a cabaret girl's life—proving that all that glitters is not gold.

Dorothy Dalton in a role that taxes her emotional ability to its utmost.

The story of a married woman who became a cabaret performer to find evidence to free her innocent husband from jail.

It was a bald frameup that sent Jim Bowen, a cashier, to jail—his wife suspected the guilty man and by playing her cards carefully, forced a confession from him—a climax of great dramatic intensity.

All the gilt and the tinsel of New York's cabaret life—and all the reality and drama that lies back of every story besides Pagliacci who feel happiness when all is sorrow.

AD TALK

John Lynch has written an exceedingly interesting story for Dorothy Dalton's new Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture, in "Quicksand," which will be presented at the ——— theatre next ———.

R. Cecil Smith prepared the scenario and Victor Schertzinger directed the film. In this picture, Dorothy Dalton returns to the emotional role in a drama of the city, showing the trials of a young wife whose husband is falsely accused of forging a check on his firm and is sent to prison for five years.

To provide a livelihood for herself and her little girl, the wife gets work in a cabaret conducted by a ward boss who admires her. To this place comes the junior member of the firm for which her husband worked and is smitten with her charms. Believing that she may find something in spirit which leads the lady to run over on and on the very night her husband escapes from prison and is hiding, the former follows her to the cabaret. There, the police try to arrest the ward boss and in a fight, he is struck down by the younger man. The wife makes him believe he has killed the man and extorts a confession from the victim who believes her husband is being punished. Then the police officer comes to arrest the wife and in the confusion of the situation some promises to exert his influence in behalf of the wrongly accused man.

The wife is able to afford Miss Dalton abundant opportunities for splendid emotional acting. A good cast supports the star, with Ed. Coxen as leading man.

THE STORY

Mary Bowen is the wife of Jim Bowen, a trusted cashier at one of New York's leading insurance brokers. John Boland is a district leader and keeper of a café and restaurant frequented by Alan Perry, the waif son of Bowen's employer. Taking advantage of an opportunity, Perry obtains Bowen's Hindorf to a fraudulent check. The check is cashed in Boland's café and Bowen, who is completely deluded by the fraud, arrested, convicted and sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

Mary believes her husband is innocent and suspecting Perry, she applies to Boland for a position as singer in his café. He has known her since her childhood, reluctantly consents and she enters upon her new mode of life.

Boland loves her secretly and nourishes the hope that she will obtain a divorce from her convict husband and marry him. Perry becomes acquainted with her and one night he follows her to her apartment and drunkenly seeks to force his attentions upon her. Meanwhile, her husband, having escaped from jail, seeks refuge in his home. Boland, who has been warned of Bowen's escape, notifies the police and the house is surrounded. Bowen arrives at the house to find Mary struggling with Perry and when he seeks to rescue her, is knocked down and apparently killed by Perry. Threatening to turn him over to the police for murder, Mary extorts a confession from Perry. The police break into the house and arrest Perry, while Boland, who has recovered, goes surety for Bowen and pledges his political influence to the task of exonerating him.

SUGGESTIONS

Aside from Dorothy Dalton, an emotional actress of the first water, you have a peculiarly fascinating story to advertise in connection with this production. Make an endeavor to get the "sob" angle into your copy. The heroine takes up the life of a cabaret girl in order to get the "goods" on the villain. Working with this as a basis you can use lines in your advertisements (you may find suitable ones among the catch lines furnished on this page) that bring out the fact that behind the glitter and tinsel of a cabaret performer's life there may be, perhaps, considerable tragedy.

If you can succeed in bringing this angle forcefully home in all your advertising you will stand a good chance of having unusual results. For the sort of picture that such lines will suggest, the unknown life of those who appear in public for purposes of entertainment, always holds a certain glamour for the people who work in offices and at routine jobs. Of course play Miss Dalton up to the limit for she is a worthy actress. Besides possessing an emotional ability that is praiseworthy she has an air of wholesomeness and goodness about her that has earned her many friends among the picture fans.

"The Spender"
(Metro—Five reels—Released Jan. 6)

Metropolitan has a production it may well be proud of in "The Spender," Bert Lytell's latest picture. Taken from a Saturday Evening Post story by Orin Bartlett, it raises the quality of human interest to the nth degree and sets forth clear, wholesome philosophy in entertaining fashion. In New York at present there is a play called "Lightnin,'" generally acknowledged the hit of the season. "The Spender" is of the same calibre as this play. No fast and furious action but appealing, human action that is divided evenly between comedy, romance and that note of sincere human interest that never fails to appeal.

The story tells of the manner in which a crabbed old business man who has amassed a fortune through stint, is brought to a realization of his young nephew who has found no happiness in life. Thereupon, under the guidance of his young nephew, he sets out to spend, and to enjoy life, to find happiness himself and to bring it to others. A simple idea indeed and a wholesome one and one which the producers have caught with a spirit that even the author must praise.

The comedy furnished by the old gentleman's rejuvenation is rich. Thomas Jefferson who appears in this important character part gives a performance that will linger in the memory. His character is one of the principal realistic ingredients that go to make the whole so thoroughly enjoyable. Bert Lytell's playing is even and subdued. He is a star who doesn't claim the center of the lens in every scene. We thank him for this! Mary Anderson as heroine fits well into the general surroundings of the picture and William V. Mong contributes another appealing character study. Clarence Burton and Rosemary Theby are a smooth pair of plotters.

To venture the opinion that "The Spender" will score heavily for the exhibitors is by no means a hazardous statement. It is our opinion that it may be played as a "special," that is advertised more than the average, spoken of in superlatives and heralded with the prospect of an unusual run. Certainly it will not be disappointing for here in "The Spender" is the sort of story the greater majority of the public has shown that it wants. —Peter Milne.

"The Great Victory, or Wilson or the Kaiser" (Screen Classics—Five reels)

The long heralded Screen Classic production which has been successively named "Wilson or the Kaiser," "The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" and "The Great Victory" makes its appearance at last, after the producers have succeeded in bringing it up in the minute by inserting a picture of the George Washington departing for France with President Wilson on board. The picture is in the way of a pictorial history of the war, a history made tensely dramatic by a liberal imagination. If the big fight was still in progress in Europe the picture would serve as propaganda of the best sort. It is a question now whether the public wants to see the outrages of the Germans enacted on the screen. Such things as murder, crucifixion and rape, vividly pictured, are not exactly pleasant.

As a piece of production "The Great Victory" stands as one of the best of its sort. The picture opens with the events of the ex-kaiser's birth and follows with the events of Presi- dent Wilson's birth. A contrast between the ideals of democ- racy and autocracy is thus furnished at the outset. Entering on the war the picture shows individual episodes concerning the Edith Cavell case, the sinking of the Lusitania and other passenger ships, the deportations of Belgian citizens, the rape of the country's women, and an episode showing the outrages carried out to the owner of a French chateau, his wife and daughter.

Probably the Cavell episode is the most prominent in the entire picture. How the military governor of Belgium, Von Bissing, and a captain proceeded to trap the nurse when she was innocent, court martiaulling and executing her despite American protest is all pictured dramatically. The execution details are morbid to an extreme degree. Joseph Kilgour as Von Bissing, Earl Schenck as the Captain and Margaret McWade as the martyr give memorable performances in this episode.

The film is brought to a close with the abduction of the kaiser and his flight into Holland, a few flashes of the boys coming home and of the peace ship departing and "The End" is written across the screen.

As the kaiser Henry Kolker contributes a performance in which arrogance and cruelty are the dominating factors. Frederick Treves's appearance as President Wilson and gives a sincere performance that is aided by some similarity of feature to the head of the nation. Again, though, it is a question as to whether the public will accept him. With your kaiser impersonator it is all right. An accomplished actor will makeup well for the part.

and his conception of the role will generally stand as authentic. We know too much of our President, we have seen him too often to seriously countenance an actor playing him and playing him presiding over the cabinet and in private life.

The picture was exceedingly well photographed and the subtitles well written. The story was written by Maxwell Karger, scenarioized by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino while Charles Miller directed.

“The Fatal Marriage”
(Lehrman Comedy—Fox—Two reels)
HENRY LEHRMAN’S wild circus tricks were never more amply displayed than in his latest comedy “The Fatal Marriage.” He starts out with a separate comedy in which dogs, a kitten and an orang’ are the principals and then switches into a story of rivalry for a young lady’s hand that entails wild chases, smashups, various skiddings and the final plunges of two automobiles off the end of a pier.

The cast is headed by Billy Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Sylvia Day. All of them enter into the comedy with a spirit that is remarkable. Miss Day is an ingenue who gives great promise.

“The Nature Girl”
(Bluebird—Five Reels—Released Jan. 6)
THIS offering may be classed as just above the average. The plot is not out of the ordinary; but it has been so constructed as to unfold itself steadily, thus holding the interest of the spectator fairly tense to the end.

The story has some sympathetic appeal. The feeling it leaves in you is that of compassion for the heroine; also that of pity for her father, who becomes deranged on account of the death of his wife. He later recovers his reason and is joined by his now grown daughter.

Some of the situations are fairly thrilling. Some others could have been made such, had they been handled logically; for instance, it seems rather incredible that the hero could have so easily beaten the Mexicans, in their own country, and rescued the heroine and her father. As the picture, on the whole, is fairly entertaining, however, the critical spectator may be inclined to overlook such conflicts with logic.

Most of the scenes have been taken outdoors. The dense growth of blooming trees and the lakes form a picturesque background that is very enchanting. They add to the entertaining qualities of the picture.

It is a clean offering.—P. S. Harrison.

WOMEN

HOW MUCH INFLUENCE HAVE WOMEN UPON YOUR BOX OFFICE?

If you don't please the women, young and old, you don't prosper. Right?

Louisa M. Alcott's novel, "Little Women," is the story that has been read by more women than any other book ever published.

When William A. Brady made it into a play it was a tremendous success. If it played in your city you know that.

Now it is a moving picture. It's appeal to women drew big business to the Strand Theatre in New York City in the midst of the influenza epidemic.

It has been tested and has made good, as a book, as a play and now as a moving picture.

Special exploitation—advertising and direct by mail circularization—is helping to build new patronage for the exhibitor who shows "Little Women."

Holiday Greetings

To every Triangle Exhibitor we wish a Merry Christmas.

To the boys overseas and to those who have returned victoriously to the Land of the Free we offer our thanks, a hearty hand-shake and a holiday greeting.

Nations overcome conflicting prejudices and in their cooperation win a world war that promises the blessings of Democracy to every Human Nation on the face of this Earth.

When the Allies harmonized in their activities, victory came with unexpected rapidity. To their efficiency in working together, to their foresight in eliminating selfish interests—we owe the rapidity of a sure victory, and the joy of peace for Christmas, 1918.

Do the problems of a peace time industry compare to the problems of Nations at war?

To overcome the many obstacles which must ever crowd the path of a rapidly growing industry, stimulates interest, develops character and adds zest to our endeavors.

Certainly the motion picture industry will continue to progress and enjoy new prosperity in these days of peace.

Realizing that our interests are one, to entertain a Nation of peaceful individuals, the producers, distributors and exhibitors will solve problems, overcome obstacles, and work together with new enthusiasm for the certain prosperity of our mutual pursuit.

And so we predict and wish you a prosperous New Year

SECOND RELEASE OF THE ALICE JOYCE STAR SERIES

Adapted from James A. Cooper's Widely Read Story "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper"

IT is an entirely new Alice Joyce that you will find in this whimsical Cape Cod romance. This time she is the mischievous, irresponsible girl, always doing the unexpected, getting into a bit of a scrape now and then, but getting out of it again, and getting someone else out with her.

"The Captain's Captain" is a typically Happy Picture—brimming with smiles that are never forced. Its fresh delightful humor, its never-waning action and strong love story should make it one of the most popular of the Alice Joyce releases.

And supporting this beautiful star—whose box-office power is increasing with each succeeding release—is this all-star cast: Arthur Donaldson, Maurice Costello, Eulalie Jensen, Percy Standing and Julia Swayne Gordon.

HEARTS OF THE STAMPEDE

The Gold-Mad Days of Nome in a Mighty Alaskan Drama of Humor and Pathos

The broad sweep and verile magnetism of the colorful North have lent inspiration to Monte M. Katterjohn, the writer, in creating "Hearts of the Stampede," his third vigorous photoplay of Alaskan life. It is a human story of love and daring.

In addition to the tremendous spirit of rush and roar, the wild abandon and fascinating lure, this newest Katterjohn Film possesses humor and pathos to a greater degree than did either of its money-making predecessors.

A blood-red melo-drama of elemental life, it is tempered with throbs and chuckles. The untamed characters of the story are of a nobler mould and a cleaner life than have served in most Alaskan photoplays. They are savage only in the sense that to survive, they lived, loved, fought and died according to the code of that ice-locked land.

"Hearts of the Stampede" is exactly what its title implies—a story of those fortune-seekers who flocked to the golden shores of Nome barely eighteen years ago. Its characters are drawn from the raw life of that period.

This picture will be offered to exhibitors in six reels at no greater price than is asked for the best program specials.

THE HELL CAT'S" AVERAGE

By Edward Weitzel

To be explicit about the matter, only one man ever called Panchita O'Brien a "hell cat," and he did it in a fit of savage rage, because she refused to hide her contempt for him and fought with all her strength when he made a captive of her and killed her father. Panchita is as fine a specimen of womanhood as ever grew up on a Wyoming ranch. When she takes the law into her own hands and escapes further indignities by burying a dagger in the heart of Jim Dyke, her act more than justifies itself. And every one will applaud Jack Webb for telling her that her suffering has only added to her claim on his love and devotion. In other words, Panchita O'Brien is a thoroughbred, and her story will interest every man and woman who admires courage and deep affection and all that is best in woman.

This very important point being established, it is in order to check up the other merits in the Goldwyn production, "The Hell Cat," and discover how near it comes to that elusive one-hundred-per-cent. average. A review of the picture printed in last week's Moving Picture World stated that the plot "departs but little from a familiar and well-tested trait." Further on, the article held that, "No Goldwyn production has ever been more completely satisfying."

But one means could have reconciled the two statements—craftsmanship.

Taking the story for consideration, it is quickly made clear that its material has been forced to yield every ounce of its dramatic value without once lowering the tone of its artistic standard, which is a veritable transcript of life. The main motive is primitive passion, and a story of crime and animal instinct is told on the screen lucidly and without compromise, but the artistic restraint which marks the true craftsman is never absent.

Willard Mack has employed the art of the dramatist in putting together the situations of Geraldine Farrar's latest starring vehicle, and the steady pull of its action is never broken by the introduction of unnecessary incident of any description. The closing scenes, which compose the wronged girl's vengeance, are remarkable for their brevity as well as for their power. The effectiveness of their restraint could not be increased. The character drawing is equally well done. Jim Dyke, Jack Webb, Panchita's father and Wan-e-mee are real flesh and blood beings, as created by the author and acted by the members of the cast.

Reginald Barker and his share of the work contribute largely to the merit marks of the production. With the temptation of countless long shots in a sweep of country that abounds in views of great beauty, the director subordinated everything to the human interest of the story and kept the way clear for its constant advance. This scenic background of the picture, when exteriors are used, is a delight, but from the moment Jim Dyke rides over to the O'Brien ranch and meets Panchita the fate of the girl becomes the absorbing feature of "The Hell Cat." Director Barker evidently recognized that nothing else mattered so far as the spectator was concerned. All the help that skilful attention to detail could give was bestowed on the picture, and no legitimate opportunity to add a touch of romance was neglected; but before everything else the director realized it was his duty to create drama.

Here, then, we have "The Hell Cat's" average and the reason for the picture's entertaining qualities: a one-hundred per cent. production of a familiar story whose dramatic possibilities will never grow old. There have been loftier themes, but none with greater vitality. And none has been told on the screen with a better understanding of its demands.

This production is living up to its 100% classification by establishing new patronage records in the principal theatres of the nation.

Do You Know the Real Idea Behind the Ford Educational Weekly?

Let us talk together, exhibitor and distributor, like "regular people" about the Ford Educational Weekly and the reasons both for its existence and its success.

Every great newspaper in America—every one that is rated as a successful, big money-maker—is founded upon human interest and mass appeal.

There is not a class daily paper in America with a tremendous circulation. The class dailies written for the minds of the select few have circulations ranging from 22,000 to 75,000 maximum a day.

But the papers that are built for the public taste—what a difference! There are two million-copy circulations in New York; one 448,000 daily circulation in Philadelphia; three in excess of 400,000 each daily in Chicago.

Our reason for telling you this is to give you the real reason for the success and the tremendously widespread distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is built for the American public. It is frank, open, interesting, human, vivid. It answers the multitude of questions the average alert American asks.

Goldwyn, as you have read in previous announcements, assumes the exclusive American distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly beginning with the first issue of January 12, 1919. We are frankly proud to be the marketing or releasing mechanism for this altruistic product of the greatest industrial captain in our national life.

Every Goldwyn office is now ready to sign contracts with exhibitors and the Ford Motor Company sales agents—there are 10,500 of them in the towns and villages of the country—will forward your applications for service to Goldwyn and give you any desired information promptly. Note the titles of releases under the "Educational" classification in this publication.

It Would Take a Grind Of 5 Years and 8 Months To Show This Picture

Of course, it's a Fox film.

For whenever the unusual, amazing or extraordinary is done in photoplay production, most everybody who knows the film business just naturally says one word—"Fox."

Up to a year or so ago the photoplay world and the public were amazed at each new Fox film surprise. Now they take each Fox surprise as a matter of course.

"The Fox way of doing things," they say, and look forward to the next.

William Fox has just gone on producing one surprise after another, until he has set a "surprise" standard of production. So that motion-picture exhibitors and the public have become so used to the unusual from William Fox that they refuse to be surprised any more—at anything he does.

They just demand his films—and let it go at that.

True—the demand is progressive—is growing bigger and more insistent from day to day, from week to week, from month to month.

Until now—the demand is so vast that the question is—which exhibitor can get Fox productions first.
All this great success is very gratifying.

The public appreciates and wants Fox pictures—that's all William Fox is interested in.

The exhibitors, with their wise fingers on the public pulse, are showing Fox pictures whenever they can get them.

We congratulate these exhibitors on their sagacity—we thank them for their generous support and encouragement.

But—how many people fully realize the stupendous achievement that is the result of the Fox Idea in motion pictures?

Even we—including Mr. Fox himself—didn't fully realize it until we found time to sit back for a few days during the recent non-release period.

Then it dawned on us that we had the greatest moving-picture business in the world.
This Picture Would Be Long Enough to Measure Circumference of Earth

We had been watching both the public and motion-picture exhibitors take each new Fox production—mark it with the sign manual of success—and then wait expectantly for the next.

We, like them, saw only the individual pictures and didn't grasp the magnitude of the whole, big, vast institution grown up around the successful Fox Idea.

When William Fox began producing some five years ago even he, with his great dreams of the future, had no shadow of a thought that the Fox Film Corporation would become the tremendous institution that it is—particularly in so short a time.

No one foresaw that Fox pictures would be seen in every part of the globe—that countless millions of people would become patrons of the Fox Idea of the photoplay—not only here in this country, but in almost every section of Europe, of Asia, of Africa, of South America, of Australasia.

William Fox has been busy producing month after month, year after year, until he has a record of pictures behind him that, in quality and quantity, is the real wonder of the moving-picture business.
The quality of the Fox pictures is proved by the astounding Fox success.

As to their quantity—well, up to date, Fox productions, if made into one picture, would have a footage of 200,284,-160 feet, or 38,000 miles, enough to reach around the earth with thirteen thousand miles of film left over.

This one picture would take a grind of five years and eight months, or over fifty thousand hours, to run—think of it!—a picture of more than two hundred thousand reels.

Does that give you any conception of the vastness of the productive growth and success of the Fox Idea?

On the basis of the Fox Idea—to give the public what it wants—William Fox has built up an edifice so stupendous in size that it is difficult to grasp its proportions.

The public has put its mark of approval on the Fox Idea as expressed in Fox pictures.

The public has made Fox success.

The public will make your success—with Fox pictures.
A virile and compelling drama of the Southland and the Money Marts of New York. The first of a series of eight super-productions starring this premiere actor from the studios of the National Film Corporation of America.

TO THE ALLIED NAVIES

$10,000 were offered us for the first negative of THIS GREAT HISTORICAL PICTURE received in this country. . . . The offerer knew the people were eager to see it, and counted on releasing it in multiple reels, for which the exhibitors would have had to pay fancy rentals.

Needless to say we refused to sell at any price. We are producing pictures not only for our own benefit, but for the benefit of the exhibitors and public.

The complete picture of the surrender of the German fleet and U-boats on the high seas, their imprisonment in the Firth of Forth, the review by King George, the Prince of Wales, Admiral Sims, and other Allied officers—all is shown in one snappy, never-to-be-forgotten reel, distributed at reasonable rates by Cheer Up—And Cheer!

A Christmas Thought

Honest, Boys, isn't it a great life? Even if we do weaken? Isn't it twelve cylindered joy and red-peppered zest just to be a Film Man?

It's Christmas.
Let's take stock.
Let's balance up our personal books.
How are we looking on the outside world? Have we the eyes and the bile of a Mental Bankrupt—or the smiles and the cheer of a Going Concern?

We've growled and we've grumbled; moaned and groaned. We don't like This Fellow; we are opposed to That Policy. We've boiled and we've Bolsheviked.

It's all down there on the red ink side of the ledger. The total spells—A Bilious Crab.

But that's not Us—is it? Deep down in our hearts?
Would we swap the privilege of being a Film Man for any other Salary-Alibi on earth?
Would we?—We would NOT!

No! There's another column on that ledger. Not in the glaring red—but it's the one that counts. And it's the one that says:

We, Us,—You and I—are gosh blamed glad to be living—in Filmland. And almighty willing to die the day we have to leave it.
Isn't it so?

Let's go!—Straight ahead! From here, from Christmas, 1918—straight ahead to bigger things and broader thoughts.

Let's go!—
With our heads an inch higher because we are—Film Men.
With our smile a trace broader because we are—Film Men.
With our hearts a bit warmer because we are—Film Men.

Let's go!—an Act of Film Faith in our hearts; a Challenge to the World on our lips!
Gosh a mighty glad to be in a Business with no Speed Limit on Brains; gol durned happy to be part of an Art born in the Nineteenth Century and already in its Twenty-first; all-fired proud to be in an Industry that will serve Peace even as it has aided Victory.

Let's go!
Cheer up—and Cheer!
Our Own

Abe And Mawruss

They Discuss the Coming Year and Disgust at the One Just Past

[Everybody's doing it—so Mawruss went into the export line a year ago. He journeyed to China with a print of "The Yellow Menace."]

The death sentence was commuted—and now he is back looking for news.

"A BE," he says. "I'd swap it a July 2nd drink if you could information me where is it this fillum business what I left. When I went away it was bad, now it's worse—it aint. An' they all tell me the Infilmenzy took it?"

"You got right, Mawruss. This here Infilmenzy it comes along and first the doctor he says it will only last for four weeks—and now, py Golly, it's a chronicker disease.

"An' it comes, Mawruss, just when everybody discovered it how they could 'Win the War' by making Specialties at a thousand a week rental—oder your Oppersion gets it fer a clean-out y'understand. An' everyone they was just deciding it was a great war to win at top prices.

"The magnuts, Mawruss, they was just getting nerve genity to look their bankers straight in the eyes mitout offering a cigar. A good cigar, y'understand, like the kind you buy by the Aster when you want to establish it credick with these here fellows Brilatour, Wright, Gulick and Beecroft. Which I don't blame you, Mawruss, cause with that credick a fellow could start it a program.

"But I am getting away mitout my subject, Mawruss. You want to know what happened while you was selling the Johnson Cannibul pitchers in the Fiji Islands. I'll tell it you.

"Y'remember, Mawruss, just before you left, the Presidenter he called Mr. Brady aside and he says:

"'Listen, Bill, y'know this here war I got in stock—its a pretty big war. One of the biggest what I ever wrote a history about. Well, Bill, it's this way, old toppar. I may be able to swing this here here war alone, but you're a pretty good scout an' I thought mebbe if you got these fillum fellers in to help I could put the whole job over mitout interfaring mit my golluf. How 'bout it, Bill?"

"'Righto, Woody!' says Mister Brady, aber, y'know him Mawruss, he shouts it. An' about the fourth time he walks around the room and just when his cigar its got a complexxion like he thought it was a sponge, he shakes hands mit the Presidenter and goes out to the job.

"Y'remember that, Mawruss, don't you? An' y'remember how Mister Brady he picked on P. A. Powers, J. A. Berst, an' Walter Irwin and he gives it them rail-road fare to France, Italy an' Russia. Y'remember that, yes?

"Aber, Mawruss, y'been away a whole year now an' I give you a tip, free gratin. When y'meet it Mister Powers don't go askin' him 'Parlay voo,' an' to Mister Berst is it true Harry Reichenbach changed his name to Ravioli when he was over there by the gondolleroms. An' Mister Irwin, don't ask him is it a Bullshivver etwas to eat oder a 'Poisen. Eternal Use Only.'

"Don't do it, Mawruss. I tell you. Don't.

"You should ask me what happened the appointments? I dunno—aber a friend vun mine who is gequainted mit the doctor says he heard they died of 'Creechitis.'

"On that I couldn't say, Mawruss. This I could tell you. Mister Powers he went instead to Rochester and brought back a raw stock company—nein, Mawruss, not the kind you mean, 'par valye five dollars, cash one tenth of one per cent.' This kind makes it the fillum.

"An' Berst, he went on the United time, where it seems by me he is soon to make a big hit. An' Mister Irwin, just the oder day he gives it his notice to Mister Vitographer.

"Mister Brady he went right ahead and did more for the Presidenter. So much, Mawruss, the least y’coud expect he’d get it one of them there S. O. S. Medals. One day, Mawruss, we pick up the papers an’ it is appointed fifty seven varieties of commiters. Such names — Mawruss! Adolph Zukor, Hiram Abrams, Walter Greene, Pete Schaefer, Bill Sherrill, Bill Johnston, J. D. Williams, Sam Goldfish, Bob Cochrane, Carl Laemmle, Bill Fox, Dick Rowland, Louie Selznick, Nick Astor — everybody, Mawruss, exception me an’ Joe Lee.

They all got it on Commiters to help put this here war over big. Some mit the War Department, some the Commercial Department, some the Food an’ Drink Con- sternationer, some mit the Fuelless Administer, an’—yes, Mawruss—some even got next to the Treasurers. An’ I tell you right, Mawruss, when I say that while you was away Zukor’s Commiter it raised genug credick for Mit- ter McAdoo’s Liberty Loans to float even a company making natural color fillums.

Oh, it was great, Mawruss. Everybody gave it three cheers an’ then phoned their tailors to study up on uniform regularities. Aber, Mawruss, this needer wouldn’t I mention when you go round to get gequantined again. Cause most of the fellers they lost it the newspaper clippings the next day and forgot what Commiter they was on. An’ there aint nobody reminded them.

"Other events evented while you was away, Mawruss. Up in Boston they had an Eposition so all the boys could meet Louie Mayer on his home stomping ground. An’ just so soon as it was over the boys found there was some of the Expensive Account saved from the clutches of the Beach Beauties so right away the whole twenty attenders went out to Chicago fer a Convention. By time Colisemo and Mister La Salle got through their consciences was clear.

"So mit no Expensive Account left to worry about they patched up everything. Bill Brady, Pete Schaefer and Frank Rembusch they juggle the alphabet an’ the N. A. M. P. I. & M. P. E. L. & A. E. A. they come out all malgu- mated—which, Mawruss, y’understand it, I aint talking about railroads.

"Aber, Mawruss, this needer would I talk about when y’mee the boys in front of 729. It was a great idea, Mawruss, only someone forgot to sign the papers, an’ the dotted line alone aint binding in court y’understand. So the other day they called it all off. An’ Bill Brady he got so mad he quit his job as Presidenter the National Assessment. Which, the least y’could expect, Mawruss, would be excuse genug fer another assessment.

"Also, Mawruss, while you was away, the National Assessment gave it a Grand One Week Benefit Fer Uncle Sam at Madison’s Square. Oh, Mawruss, as a Moving Pitcher Exposition it was a wunnerful War Tax Collector.

"Outside of these happenings what didn’t happen, Mawruss, there aint much what happened. J. D. Williams—y’notice, Mawruss, he’s got the same initials as that Rock- erfeller wasn’t saying much when you left, but this Christmas, Mawruss, he hands the First National Bank a present of Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart an’ Norma Talmadge.

"Which, Mawruss, you could see is three of a kind, an’ mit the ace Chaplin spiked, why any schnorrer of a poker player could afford to draw one more card. An’ I aint saying much, Mawruss, but maybe he’ll fill.

"Odderwise, Mawruss, there aint much to tell. Only, believe me, never did y’see such a year fer Specialties. I tell you straight, Mawruss, the staple goods was just pushed in the backward ground. ‘The Kaiser in Beastly Berlin,’ ‘The Prussian Curd,’ ‘My Four Years Too Long in Germany,’ ‘Why America Won,’ ‘Two Hell’s Fer the Kaiser,’ ‘Over the Topper,’ oh, there was oodles.

"Also, Mawruss, Moving Day lasted the whole year in the business. George Kleine he now hangs his hat in the General offices, Bill Sherry, he starts it a program and first he opens offices, then he also visits Frank Tichenor. Bill Hodkinson, he thinks it’s getting crowded so he gets desk room with Paul Brunet at Pathé. World Fillum aint no more Brady-Made cause Bill he starts up an independence establishment of his own. Frank Hall, he throws U. S. Exhibitors down, flirts mit Producers an’ Distributors, an’ finishes up mit the Fillum Clearing House— which y’understand aint no relationship to the New York Clearing House.

"Also, Mawruss, we had the Government in the pitcher businessey this year. Which I understand it, Mawruss, is one company where the angel aint kicking, cause that Pubbericker Information Committee made a lot of money.

"Now run along, Mawruss, an’ when you come back leave yourselluf outside.

"So long, Abe," says Mawruss. "I got a important deal for export on. I’m closing fer the German rights on ‘The Common Cause,’ ‘Crashing Through to Berlin,’ ‘The Great Victory’ an’ ‘Why Germany Must Pay’ an’ do it blamed quick. So long!"
THIS First National gentleman has them all guessing. Started 1918 with Chaplin, Petrova and Brenon productions. Starts 1919 with Chaplin— and—Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Norma Talmadge. Also attracted the bigger independent productions, such as "Tarzan" and "My Four Years in Germany." Incidentally gave the merry ha-ha to those who said "First National can't last. You can't make a business organization out of a debating society. Those exhibitors won't stick together," How does it look today? Ha! ha! Dome Rumor says that J. D. has even bigger bombs to explode during 1919. Look out for shell shock!

THE "Fox Idea" never showed up better than under the ever-changing conditions of war and sudden peace. Hit the right moment with such productions as "Why America Will Win," "The Prussian Cur," and now— "Every Mother's Son." Brand-ed some new ones "Victory Pictures," "Excel Pictures," "The Great Nine," and specials and extravaganzas. Put over "The Big Six" reissues to a clean-up. Increased his theatre holdings until he will soon have a "Second National Circuit" all his own. Was in the forefront of every charitable and patriotic movement. Added Evelyn Nesbit to his list of stars.

MOST unusual activity in 1918 the planting of Vitagraph right in the front rank as a serial producer. Opened with "Vengeance and the Woman," following the brilliant record of "The Fighting Trail," and went straight ahead to a policy of fifty-two a year, week in and week out, sure-fire. Produced "Over the Top" at the psychological moment to the tune of a half million in bookings. That's hitting on high, isn't it? Added Bessie Love to his stars, and under a definitely scheduled star series release plan maintained a high standard of quality.

"TWENTY-SIX A YEAR," the ads read last Christmas. "Fifty-Two a Year" is the word now—not to mention Capitol Comedies and occasional specials. A year ago we were wondering if Goldwyn could live up to its successful first twelve months' history. Today it is breaking speed limits. Added Pauline Frederick to its roster; put Tom Moore in the electric lights, and gave us Will Rogers for one picture. Corraled Henry Ford's Weekly. And we have a hunch that Sam may break some 1919 news about the time the Goldfish-Rothapel jaunt reaches Los Angeles.

ENTERS 1919 with the proposition that has 'em all watching—Roberson-Cole. One pessimist called it "the one organization in the business with real cash." Be that as it may, Walter Hoff has brought Robertson-Cole from a general exporter with modest film leanings to a real factor in the film world. Supplies all the product for release by Exhibitors Mutual; covers the world with its export ramifications—and has only started. Its star list already includes Henry Walthall, William Desmond and Billie Rhodes. Also exploiting the Johnson Cannibal Pictures in bang-up showman fashion.

LOUIS certainly had a busy year during 1918. Joined forces with Gordon and started pushing First National in the New England territory. Settled the Anita Stewart suit with Vitagraph and started work on "Virtuous Wives." Finished "Virtuous Wives," handed railroad fare and "Expense Accounts" to three or four organizations and announced a "Country Wide Trade Showing." "In Old Kentucky" is the next. Don't know whether Louis has any more stars in view, but we do know he is restless, he is a showman, and he can give orders to Joe Lee. So keep your eyes on him.

FRANK TICHENOR—we'll get that photo yet, "Tich"—kept General Film sailing smoothly during 1918 and took on more cargo in Sherry, United and Kleine productions.

HARRY RAPP closed 1918 like a whirlwind, beating the clock to "Wanted for Murder.

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL put over one Frohman winner, "My Own United States," and now seems to have another for 1919— "Once to Every Man."

WATTERSON ROTHACKER maintained his position as the First National of the laboratory game—not to mention successes in the industrial field.

GEORGE KLEINE wrote some letters that sure did start 'em talking and on the side continued to distribute good pictures.

HERBERT LUBIN and A. H. SAWYER sprung a new one— S. L. Pictures. Ralph Ince directs, E. K. Lincoln stars and 1919 sees the first release.

FRANK TAYLOR took up the reins on the Film Clearing House and then closed the year by buying the Rapf winner, "Wanted for Murder."

AL. CHRISTIE proved that there is a live state right market for live comedies. He clinched it by adding a one a month two reeler on the 1919 schedule.

HARRY CARSON added Blanche Sweet to his list. Clara Kimball Young maintained her undisputed place.
Making Film History

1919

ONCE upon a time we couldn't say "Berst" without thinking of "Pathe." But 1918 brought J. A. to United. Took a rather indefinite proposition that didn't arouse any enthusiasm and has brought it to a point where—as 1919 looms up—many film men are betting on it to win handsomely. Made his biggest hit with us through the fact that he refused to be hurried. Took his time, gathered together his product, retained his membership, placed his distribution in General's efficient hands, and is now ready to start in regular fashion. Also did yeoman service during 1918 for the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films.

WAS talking a great deal about "The Motion Picture Plus" as 1918 started on its merry course. We don't hear so much about that now, but we have seen W. W. releasing a consistent quality product throughout the year. This week finds him in Chicago, whence, the rumor boys tell us, we may expect some interesting news, Seems likely, for with the air as unsettled as it is just now in Filmland, you may count on the daddy of Paramount to pull something new. Opened the bithrnsome year of 1918 with General distributing his product, but finishes with Pathe doing the job.

FREDERICK COLLINS, of McClure, didn't say much but kept the cameras grinding and as Christmas nears we hear of "What Shall We Do with Him?", of a Roosevelt picture and a Gompers special.

LEWIS SELZNICK—Gosh, but he's been quiet this year. But Myron evened up by incorporating "Selnick Productions" as 1919 neared.

GEORGE SPOOR continued to make pictures, but also blossomed out as a laboratory man—with a process of his own.

B. A. ROLFE gave up his post with Metro's productions forces during 1918 and made the Houdini serial. Then received a Christmas present in the form of U. B. O. booking.

GAUMONT duplicated the Christie stunt—showing that there is a live state rights market for a live weekly and live serials.

RICORD GRADWELL reorganized World's production forces and clinched a winning contract for official Government films.

WILLIAM L. SHERRY sprang a new program in 1918. Theodore Dietrich left International to manage Doris Kenyon production on that program.

EARL HAMMONS closes 1918 with mysterious rumblings of a Griffith deal.

MONTÉ KATTERJOHN embarked as an independent producer with original ideas as 1919 neared.

BROUGHT Caruso and Fred Stone to the screen in 1918. Sprung a new one on Lila Lee. Gave us Griffith on a regular program schedule once more. And—here's one big point for Filmland—he actually carried out one promise made at Christmas 1918. He "Nationally Advertised" the Pramount-Artoraft trade-marks up to every dollar and more than he had promised. Closed 1918 with a "Good luck and God bless you!" to Hiram Abrams and Benjamin Shulberg, who embark on their own craft. We never thought it could happen, Benny. Well, here's our "Good luck!" to you.

HIT the bull's eye with the one big surprise winner of the year—"The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin." Followed with "Crashing Through to Berlin." Didn't tell us much of the Universal Program and the glory of the two-reeler during 1918, but, glory be, what attention was paid Bluebirds, Jewels, and Universal Special Attractions. Made the most consistent gains in quality of product registered by any company. Sold the Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events to International—but will continue to do the releasing. Got a million dollar Christmas present when Charlie made Mildred—Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

SUCCEEDED J. A. Berst as directing head during the year. Closed the deal by which Pathe handles distribution on W. W. Hodkinson's product. Has a crackerjack exchange organization that should attract producers. Kept Pathe's unequalled serial reputation right up to the notch—and they tell us the next Pearl White is "the greatest ever." A little birdie whispers to us that with the war over a visit from Charles Pathé may be likely, and then—well, the 1919 trade papers won't be lacking in Pathe news. Take those words as a tip to watch and listen.

STARTED 1918 with Metro and finished with Metro and Screen Classics. Adding the two and two together you learn that Dick Rowland starts 1919 with oodles of extra kale earned by "To Hell with the Kaiser," "Revelation" and other big specials. Gave the screen the biggest newcomer of the year—Nazimova. Never has a star new to films jumped right into the center of the spotlight as she did. R. A. maintained a policy that places Metro, judging from exhibitor letters to Motion Picture News, in first place for popularity with exhibitors because of its sales methods and representation.
A Christmas Present

Quinn's **

"Cure-All"

EDITOR'S NOTE.—J. A. Quinn, the live Los Angeles showman who started the fuss that has produced so much interesting reading matter in "Motion Picture News" during the past few weeks, steps forward this week in the garb of "Doc Quinn." Having diagnosed the case he presents a prescription that he guarantees to cure. The scheme is novel, and daring—to say the least. We are anxious to know the reception it will receive from "Motion Picture News" readers. Write us. Tell us if you think "Doc Quinn" is dreaming or if you think he can put over in the picture industry the things that were accomplished in the automobile, steel and shoe fields. Come on—you have something new to pan or to boost now. Step up—the line forms on the right.

"THE CURE," BY J. A. QUINN

THE Editor of the Motion Picture News said "Let's Start Something," and if you do not think there is something started in the Los Angeles film colony just ask anyone on exchange row or in the studios here. And the best part of it is that everyone who means anything to the industry is glad it's started. I am receiving wonderful letters from those in the business and the public, copies of some of which I enclose. This is just what I expected, for no one who is conscientiously interested in the welfare of the motion picture industry could be anything but glad. Yes, the Motion Picture News has come gladly to the front at a time of most urgent need, and when this campaign is over, every producer, every exhibitor and every other person engaged in the business will owe a lasting debt of gratitude to W. A. Johnston and the Motion Picture News.

The "necessary" people "think it's great," but they wonder how we are going to manage to get the desired results. Well, one of the foremost reasons we are going to get results is because we've got a LIVE JOURNAL back of us. I have no axe to grind and have had no personal correspondence with any official on the News, aside from enclosing my articles in envelopes addressed to the editor, but it does not take a very keen mind to discern that there is a LIVE, AGGRESSIVE MAN at the head of this paper—not ruled by any particular faction or by advertisers. That this journal is a real trade paper seeking to solidify the foundations of the industry it represents cannot be doubted, and I am sure is not doubted by anyone we need in the business.

So now with the continued wonderful assistance of the News I will tell all who do not know how we are going to effect a cure for unstable conditions in the picture business.

In a recent article published in the News, the statement was made by the head of a producing firm that the exhibitors were trying to starve the producers.

I want to say right here that there is no such thought in my mind in leading this "clean-up movement" as to try to starve conscientious producers who are willing to listen to and co-operate with the exhibitors, but we are going to starve those who persist in using shoe-making methods and wasting time, money and material which has all to be paid for by the exhibitors who are the "paymasters" of the business, and we are going to starve those who refuse to listen to the call of equity, consistency and co-operation.

The exhibitor has had enough of the one-sided game of assuming a great big investment, tremendous liability on leases, etc., and putting in eighteen hours a day grinding and worrying and then either walking home or at the best taking a street car and watching or visualizing high powered limousines whirl by him occupied by the very people who are being paid by him, but who in many cases are not only incapable, but are a positive detriment.

The exhibitor is tired of watching the bored faces of his patrons emerging night after night with few exceptions, unless he happens to have a million dollar palace with a fifty-piece symphony orchestra and a dollar show on the side.

The exhibitor is tired of the "bunk" in the business and the padded, drawn out story, the poor casting, bad timing and unreasonable situations, and has come to the point where he feels that things cannot be any worse. He feels himself at a standstill with his hands tied behind his back.

The game has become so inconsistent that his audiences have lost confidence and enthusiasm in his shows. On the rare occasions when he is fortunate enough to get a fairly good picture between the inflated price that is tacked on and the barrel of money it takes to tell the people that it is good and the time it takes for the people to learn by word of mouth that it is good, he finds himself in most cases a heavy loser unless the picture is headed by an exceptional artist with an exceptional drawing power.

Speaking from the standpoint of the conscientious producer—they are having their troubles also and as many if not more headaches than the exhibitor, and I believe they will welcome any move that is intended as this one is to stabilize conditions for all by eliminating waste and dead wood and make fewer and better pictures. The performers I believe will all gladly join when they know that in joining they make it possible for the producer and exhibitor to survive.

I have received endorsements from those prominent in every branch of the industry and I contemplate shortly starting on a tour of the country to meet exhibitors and representatives of other branches, and feel confident of lining up everyone to support a central organization composed of representatives from all branches of the industry, with offices in New York and Los Angeles, which organization will be the instrument through which these changes will be worked out.

This organization will be fathered by men like W. A. Johnston and will be the official "doctor" for the business, and its committees will carefully investigate all phases of the motion picture business and keep a close tab on the drawing power of the various players and classify them accordingly, also classify directors, producers and exhibitors, take up all grievances, and, in short, establish a get-together, equitable, consistent and co-operative system to deal with all concerned. Regulation of advertising will be an important feature as this is one of the places where money is being thrown away in great quantities.

Those who refuse to join in this movement will announce to the world just what caliber they are made of, and I believe the film world will soon decide that it can get along without them.

For the benefit of a few of the weak-kneed editors who accuse critics of conditions of being calamity howlers, I want to say right here that we can verify all that we have been complaining about and can prove hundreds of specific instances where frightful waste has been and is now going on, and can show where through the false idea of gain and rank incompetency the market has been and is now being flooded with inferior pictures.

RIGHT IS MIGHT—and this movement for equity, consistency and co-operation is right and is going to be backed by the press and the public.
On National Advertising

"Hurray For Kunsky!"

(Editor's Note—John H. Kunsky's recent exclusive article in Motion Picture News on the subject of producer advertising that aids the exhibitor and advertising that is of no help, has brought an enthusiastic echo from L. H. Grandjean, Director of Publicity for the Sanger Amusement Company, New Orleans. In addition to adding the recital of his experience to that of the prominent Detroit exhibitor, Mr. Grandjean also puts forth some interesting opinions of his own on the subject of national advertising.)

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

The Kunsky letter on National Advertising is one hundred per cent common sense and the best exhibitor article which has appeared in any trade journal in months.

The success of any film production in the release city insures its success in the territory surrounding that city, no matter whether the city be Detroit and the territory Michigan or the city New Orleans and the territory Louisiana-Mississippi, etc., ad infinitum, providing, of course, that ordinary intelligence is manifested by the territorial exhibitors in capitalizing the first-run publicity. Likewise, the failure of any production in the release city, the inability of an exchange to secure a "live" release, or the inability to get any "first run" at all in the release city spells poor business for his film through his territory, all of the billboard and magazine advertising notwithstanding, and a great deal of the patent-medicine type of syndicated motion picture advertising complained of by Mr. Kunsky notwithstanding.

I can bear Mr. Kunsky out in this latter, having had experience in trying to put over pictures with "ready-made" advertising of the type specified. I said "tried to," to quote Mr. Kunsky's words. If one in any city of consequence ever succeeded with advertising of that sort, it was success in spite, not by virtue, of the advertising. It lacks conviction because it is so obviously a manufacturer's advertisement, and would be as obviously his even though his name, his trademark and other matter did not dominate the space, because it does not harmonize with its surroundings. Mr. Kunsky states that every house, every newspaper has an individuality. The public knows its newspaper, the public mind is influenced by its newspaper; the public knows its exhibitor and reposes a certain confidence in him. And Mr. Kunsky has pointed the way to intelligent, effective, economical, successful exploitation of motion pictures, suggesting that the manufacturer's appropriations be apportioned among the release exhibitors, letting the latter, in collaboration with the exchange, prepare the copy—the exhibitor to add his own lineage to the manufacturer's appropriation.

There is one point which Mr. Kunsky has not brought out and which I consider very important in a discussion of national advertising. It is (and I believe Mr. Kunsky and others will agree with me) that the newspaper can be a valuable ally to the moving picture, whereas the billboard cannot and the magazine has no local power to exert, regardless of its feelings in the matter. By this I mean that newspapers which are kindly disposed are generous in their favors to exhibitors and the industry in general in the way of reviews, press notices and special stories. It is obviously impossible for the billboard to go further than expose on its front a poster. It is big, ugly, impersonal—a mere announcement that all who run may read, and its province ends there. The magazine has closer ties with its readers, but as an ally of the exhibitor it is a minus quantity. Yet of the hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars wasted annually but a small proportion is placed with newspapers.

It is natural that the newspapers resent this. Let me pause to state that hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent in newspaper advertising which is not to be included in the above. This is strictly exhibitor expenditure. It is, however, of direct benefit to the manufacturer inasmuch as 75 per cent of it is spent in advertising first runs and this advertising works for the showings that follow. This is the advertising which really sways the mind.

Yes, the newspapers resent the fortunes wasted on other mediums, for not only do they not receive their just share of the manufacturer's appropriation, but every day the manufacturers' publicity departments "rub it in" by swapping the editorial desk of every newspaper in the country with all sorts of press dope, mats and photos. This direct-to-the-newspaper matter is sheer waste; it fetches up in the bottom of the waste basket—bottom, I said, for it's the first thing that is wheeped off the desk. But that isn't all. You will never fail to find in all press campaign books the line (with variations): "Hand these stories to your editor, he will be glad to print them." Yes, he will—not. If you are a regular advertiser he might, after having knocked the gizzards out of the story, write his "alms" appeal. But if you are a release exhibitor you have opportunity to see the film. Look at it yourself, write something with guts in it about the production and your editor will use it all, and only then.

Obviously, it is impossible for the territorial exhibitor to enjoy this advantage. AND THAT'S JUST EXACTLY WHY the territorial exhibitor follows the lead of the city release exhibitor. It is not billboard or magazine which brings this information to him and to his patrons. It is the NEWSPAPER. And if the production is worth a hang and the newspapers are kindly disposed, not only do the city patrons read considerable interesting news of the production, but lots of other pertinent news to keep up to the minute. Otherwise, it is as easy for the newspaper to hold its silence.

Here, then, is the reason for newspaper advertising by the manufacturer in collaboration with the exhibitor.

I heartily agree with every line Mr. Kunsky wrote. His remarks about stills are particularly apropos. Will either of his suggestions be adopted, or are such efforts on the part of the exhibitor futile? The industry was removed from its position on the list of essential industries and placed on probation on account of its manifold extravagancies. It would seem that the manufacturers, particularly, have been shooting at the moon so long that they would lend an ear to arguments advanced by the progressive element among exhibitors.

It is most improbable that the advertising agencies which handle manufacturer advertising appropriations know anything of the motion picture business. They may not endorse the Kunsky idea or my remarks about billboards and magazines for that reason; maybe for other reasons. But that is no reason why we exhibitors, and particularly the News Advisory Board, should not seek to enlighten the manufacturer through a discussion of National Advertising and its most efficient employment.

Vitograph Appoints Quinn General Manager

After the completion of this work, Mr. Quinn joined the Triangle Film Corporation, and upon the retirement of David W. Griffith from the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio in California, Mr. Quinn assumed the post of general manager of that Western studio.

Quinn, discussing Mr. Quinn's appointment, Mr. Smith stated that, in his opinion, the permanency of all organizations in the film industry from this time onward necessitated the employment in executive capacities of acknowledged specialists in their respective lines who also enjoyed a broad training in the various other phases of the film industry. He stated further that in an organization of Vitograph's type, wherein the distribution was confined to the processes of the parent organization, and wherein, therefore, the producing and distributing ends of the business were indissolubly linked, he felt that his chief lieutenant in the business must have a comprehensive knowledge of the distribution problems, and likewise, and perhaps even more essentially, his lieutenants in the distributing end of the business must consequently be versed in the producing problems. In other words, all his chief assistants must be film specialists with a thorough understanding of all branches of the business, including a superlative knowledge of their own branch.

Advertisements Host to Well-Known Guests

The regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's last week, was featured and enlivened by the presence of two distinguished guests, Henri Bioment Bergere, editor and director of Le Film, of Paris, the largest motion picture publication in France, and Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto Theater, Butte, Mont., and a member of the Advisory Board of Motion Picture News.

M. Bergere was introduced by Allan Rock, secretary of the association, and gave an interesting talk on the condition of the industry in France and the reconstruction plans for the immediate as well as the more distant future. He intimated that Paris will soon supplant London as the chief distributing center for Europe, and pointed out that with a fair amount of reciprocity between American and French film interests both parties could profit immeasurably.

Mr. Ruffner, who is one of the most successful exhibitors in the country and was formerly publicity and advertising director for the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, provoked a lively discussion which was participated in by nearly all of the twenty-five members present. He spoke not only as an exhibitor, but as an advertising man, and his pointed, constructive criticisms proved of the highest value to the members. There was little or nothing of mutual interest to the exhibitor and the publicity and advertising man, but his keen business sense, and his ready and logically sound answers to the countless questions with which he was bombarded received the most careful attention and were mentally recorded for future use in the preparation of copy and advertising accessories.

Samuel Goldfish Meets Milwaukee Exhibitors

Milwaukee exhibitors were the guests of Samuel Goldfish and the Goldwyn Company Friday at an interesting luncheon and talk in the gold room of the Hotel
Wisconsin at 12:30 p. m.

S. W. Rothapfel was the particular magnate that drew the exhibitors to this lunc-cheon, and the talk he gave them at the close of the luncheon was most interesting.

Quality instead of quantity was the gist of Mr. Rothapfel's remarks, and he took it at the firms that insisted upon long and lengthy leads, giving the names of the producers, the authors, the stars, etc. The people do not pay their money to see those things, said Mr. Rothapfel. They want action, not padding.

Accompanying Mr. Rothapfel were Samuel Goldfish, Aaron Jones, Nathan Ascher and Ike Van Runkle. A large majority of the members of the Milwaukee Photoplay Exhibitors' Association were at the meeting, including Thomas Saxe,
George Fischer, Jack Silliman, Henry
Trinz, Paul Langheimrich and others.

Film Men Favored in Winnipeg

Members of the Winnipeg Board of Trade took a mail vote on the question of the advisability of the proposed film exchange by-law which will compel local exchanges to move into one-story fireproof structures. The vote was overwhelmingly against the proposed law, 431 members marking the ballot papers being opposed to the legislation and 163 supporting the by-law. The vote on a question as to whether local exchanges and theatres should be asked to pay additional taxes favored the film men even more than the ballot on the exchange building question.

Special Writer "Pities the Exhibitor"

Under the heading of "Pity the Exhibitor," S. Jay Kaufman, who writes a column called Round the Town for a New York afternoon paper, said the following in an edition last week:

"As the average picture magnate or director what's wrong with pictures and he will say 'The Exhibitor.' The exhibitor has no way of answering, because all he can show is what the producer makes. Thus better pictures become impossible. It is to say, pictures with something more than a romance of two idiots. The 'pretty-boy' and the ingenue. A big idea back of the story is always refused with, 'Yes, great; but the exhibitors will not take it.' For many a moment we have wanted to see the exhibitor. We did.
Last night. At a dinner at Healy's which they gave to their exhibitors, and they said, no way of getting them other than by asking. When they ask they are told, so this man said: 'Yes, but you are only one exhibitor. The others will not take anything really fine. The result is obvious. Until, then, some philanthropist comes along and produces several hundred great pictures. Then the exhibitors will take the second world romances will continue. The joke, however, may be that the philanthropist will make money. As did Miss Horniman when she established a repertory theatre in England.

The novelty of music and the growth of the art gallery is permitted to remain open on Sunday when a series of pictures with the vociferous and sacred force of music? And isn't what is wrong on Sunday wrong on our Monday? Would these cities rather have their citizens gossip, sleep, and wear clothes that cannot be seen or heard music? Oh, it's done for pay? Oh, we see. The objection is not to the pictures but to the fact that tomorrow makes a decent living at the same time?
We see.'"
Epidemic Must Not Close Theatres

National Campaign of Education Inaugurated by National Association Seeks to Prove That Recent Closing of Theatres Was a Mistake

It is a mistake on the part of public officials to close down motion picture theatres and other places of public gathering when trying to combat the epidemic of Spanish influenza, according to Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of the City of New York.

As a result of these frankly expressed views coming from so high an authority, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announces that it has just started a national campaign to prove it and also to show the many public officials throughout the country, and the public in general, that the motion picture theatres, where they remained open as in New York, were of the greatest assistance to the Department of Health in furthering the work of public health education during the epidemic.

Will Drive Facts Home

That Commissioner Copeland's policy in keeping the theatres open had the best effect is substantiated by a table of statistics that has been compiled by the United States Department of Labor showing that of the major cities of the country where the epidemic had the greatest hold, New York, the largest city in the United States, which kept its theatres open all of the time had the smallest death rate.

The campaign which the National Association has started has for its object the driving home of these facts to the public officials of all the cities in the country of 25,000 population and over.

A copy of the Commissioner's letter to the Association, a reprint of a statement, issued by him and published in the New York Times, explaining in detail why the death rate of New York City was so low and giving great credit to the motion picture theatres for the part they played in keeping the death rate down, and the table compiled by the Department of Labor which shows that in every instance places where the theatres were permitted to remain open had the death rate lower than in the places where they were forced to close down, is being sent to all of the motion picture theatres of the country, daily newspapers, motion picture exchanges, Mayors of cities, Chiefs of Police, Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, city and state health officers, and to the superintendents of schools.

Exhibitors Can Help

With the material that is being sent to the motion picture theatres is a letter of explanation telling the exhibitor in detail just what he is to do in order to use this material to its greatest advantage.

Likewise a letter is being sent to the exchange managers of the various companies signed by the executive heads of the individual companies, apprising the exchange managers of what is being done and instructing them to get together with the exhibitors in their territories and to use every force and every power of concerted effort to impress on the authorities the beneficial results that will result from a proper campaign of public health education carried on in the newspapers, motion picture theatres, schools and all places of public gathering.

The material that is being sent out has been designed in such form that the exhibitors can use it to post in their lobbies in the form of bulletins, and supplies them with the necessary information to enable them to throw slides upon the screen or pass out papers in the lobby. In New York City, make short addresses to their patrons before every performance on the great danger of public coughing and sneezing.

Influenza Takes Two Directors

Wolbert and Percival Succomb to Epidemic at Los Angeles

UNIVERSAL and Paramount lost well known directors when William Wolbert passed away December 12 and Harold Percival died on December 14. Influenza claimed both victims, and their passing is viewed with keen regret by the film colony on the West Coast.

Mr. Wolbert had been with the Universal since last July and was previously directing for Vitaphone. Harold Percival had been art director for two years with Thomas H. Ince Productions.

New Strand at Douglas Opens in January

Plans are now being made by Nick Diamos for the opening of his new theatre, which has been named the Strand, at Douglas, Ariz., some time early in January.

This theatre is said to be the finest one in Arizona, and will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,500. The lobby of the new house is finished in elegant style, Arizona marble being used throughout.

Calbeck Buys Two Houses

Newton Calbeck has just purchased the property of the Nappanee Amusement Company, of Nappanee, Ind.
Coal Saving Campaign Started

National Association Heeds Request of Fuel Administration to Help Conserve Supply—Trailers Used

At the request of the United States Fuel Administration the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its fuel conservation committee, has inaugurated a coal saving campaign to cover the northeastern section of the United States.

This campaign will be conducted in the motion picture theatres in the territory which the Fuel Administration desires to reach by means of trailers attached to the regular weekly issues of the news weeklies.

Sufficient trailers have been provided to cover a campaign of six weeks, the plan being to release two trailers each week. The news weeklies were selected for this purpose owing to the fact that the three weeklies are for the most part published in the territory in which the Fuel Administration believes there exists an acute necessity for the economy of coal during the coming winter months.

This territory includes New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. It is the desire of the Fuel Administration that these trailers be shown outside of the above-mentioned territory and exhibitors located within the restricted zone are requested not to show the trailers in case news weeklies come to them with the trailers attached. All those exhibitors within this zone however are requested to show the trailers and to do everything within their power to impress on their patrons the necessity for economy in the use of coal.

The beginnings of this campaign have been under discussion by the fuel conservation committee of the National Association and the Fuel Administration for considerable time. This committee consists of Marcus Loew, chairman; F. A. Powers, B. S. Moss, Samuel Rothapfel, William Brandt, Sydney Cohen, Albert Lowé, Gabriel Hess and Harry Crandall. When the question of a campaign to reach the individual consumer of coal was first presented to this committee by the officials of the Fuel Administration it was planned to cover all of the territory east of the Mississippi river, and detailed plans were worked out by the committee for this work.

The signing of the armistice however changed all of these plans and all of the work that had been done had to be discarded and new plans worked out. This necessitated the working out of an entirely new set of trailers. When the subject matter had been finally approved by the Fuel Administration the committee gave Washington an example of the quick manner in which the motion picture industry works once it obtains the word to act. Twenty-four hours after the copy for the trailers had been received by Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the committee, the first sample print had been made and was in the mail for Washington. As soon as this was approved by the Fuel Administration orders were placed for the printing of the requisite number of trailers, and forty-eight hours after the orders had been given the trailers were in the hands of the news weeklies and are now being attached to the releases. Letters of appreciation of the expedient manner in which this work was handled have been received from the Fuel Administration.

Goldwyn Selects Feist as Vice-President

It was announced this week that at a meeting of the directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Felix F. Feist of the World Film Corporation, one of the well-known younger executives in the industry, became director of the Goldwyn releasing organization and in a few weeks will join the Goldwyn family.

Mr. Feist is the type of successful man that Goldwyn has taken into its organization since the beginnings of the company. The officers of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation are Samuel Goldfish, president; F. B. Warren and Alfred Weiss, vice-presidents, and Gabriel L. Hess, secretary and treasurer. These executives have been a part of Goldwyn from the day of the company's formation in June, 1917, and have witnessed its growth as an international factor in the industry.

Mr. Feist's entry into the picture industry was made in 1910 as advertising manager of the Kinemacolor Company. A few months later he was made western manager of Kinemacolor with offices in Chicago. He resigned from that organization to become general manager of the Celebrated Players Corporation of Chicago, and in a few months was made president of the company. He remained with this company two and a half years, coming to New York to become secretary and general manager of the Equitable Pictures Corporation. Here he remained until the Equitable was merged with the World.

Detroit Seeks to Correct Trade Evils

Detroit, Mich.—In order to eliminate certain trade evils that have crept into the business, the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers will soon send to every theatre manager in the state, copies of a new set of rules under which the managers must govern themselves. The board seeks to have universal rules for the disposal of trade articles and advertising matter and to eliminate the exhibitor who refuses to pay legitimate charges.

Since the board has been organized a central shipping room has been put into operation in the film building. A credit department is now planned.

It is announced that exhibitors who have complaints should file reports with the board and absolutely fair treatment is assured them.

McLaurin Goes to France for the Red Cross

HAMISH McLaurin, until recently publicity director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, left this week for France where he will have charge of making pictures for the American Red Cross. He will be absent a year.

Mr. McLaurin left his post with Mr. Rothapfel, with whom he had been associated since the opening of the Rialto, because he felt that he wanted to do his bit for his country, and his splendid newspaper talents, together with his considerable knowledge of the technique of motion pictures fitted him especially for his position with the Red Cross.

The week that marked his departure from his country saw the presentation of his picture, "The Greatest Gift," a sterling argument for the campaign that is now on.

"Over there" he will exercise general supervision over the motion pictures that are to be shown by the American Red Cross. This work is going to continue because this great organization of humanity believes is showing to the donors to its sacred cause what is being done with the money that has been contributed. These pictures will be made for the next year and will be shown all through the country. Heretofore, there has been some confusion because these pictures have come to this country in what may be called the crude form and they have had to be cut and titled here.

In France Mr. McLaurin will have charge of this work and when the films do come across they will be ready to go to the laboratory so that the prints may be made.

In addition to this, he will direct the work of the cameramen of the Red Cross, and hereafter the pictures will be made with a definite object in view, of telling a particular story.

Officers Elected by N. Y. F.I.L.M Club

At the annual election of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York, which took place December 4th, the following officers were chosen:

I. E. Chadwick, president; John Hammel, first vice-president; Joseph Klein, second vice-president; Sam Eckman, treasurer; Charles B. Hoy, secretary; George Schaefer, sergeant-at-arms.

Every branch manager and practically every salesman of the various film exchanges in connection with the F. I. L. M. Club attended the beefsteak dinner at Healy's December 11th given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Edna Gladys Brown Dies in New York

Edna Gladys Brown, who had been prominently associated with the motion picture industry for the last ten years, died suddenly December 12 of pneumonia. For the past four years she had been interested with Joseph R. Miles in the Joseph R. Miles Enterprises.

Funeral services were held December 14 from the Funeral Church in New York.
Abrams and Schulberg Quit F.P.-Lasky

Former Vice-President and Vice-Managing Director Lay Plans to Form Own Organization—Details Not Yet Made Known—Off for Coast

Among the more important executive changes within the larger organizations as the old year draws to a close was that last week which saw the withdrawal of Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The former was vice-president and managing director and the latter was vice-managing director.

It was announced this week that Mr. Abrams and Mr. Schulberg have laid plans to form their own organization along lines which they have long had in mind, and it was this reason that resulted in their withdrawal from Famous Players-Lasky.

Details of their proposition have not been given out, as they are considered of such import that complete announcement now would be premature.

Pillars of Organization

The announcement to Motion Picture News regarding their withdrawal read as follows:

"What are perhaps the most important executive changes of the year are contained in the announcement that Hiram Abrams, vice-president and managing director, and B. P. Schulberg, vice-managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, have resigned their offices to form their own organization and carry out certain plans which it has long been their desire to establish.

"The news has aroused intense surprise and interest in the trade, for these two men have long been known as strong pillars of the organization with which they have been identified since its inception."

In response to a request for a statement as to what general form his plans would take, Mr. Abrams remarked that they were of too much import to the trade to be presented in their present immature shape, but that they would be announced in detail within a few weeks, when they would be found to comprise some of the most constructive measures and some of the most equitable principles ever offered for the trade's consideration. He also added that the reason for his departure from his old company was due to the realization that it is more difficult to work out new tenets of procedure between two factors of an industry through an old company with established policies than through a new and unhampered machinery of his own construction.

Goes to the Coast

Mr. Abrams is to start for Los Angeles immediately, and it is promised that the announcement will promptly follow his return to New York. In his absence, Mr. Schulberg will remain in New York adopting the preliminary steps toward the organization which they contemplate building.

They are in close touch with motion picture conditions throughout the country, and their plan to organize a new unit in the industry indicates that they believe that the after-war influence promises expansion for the entire motion picture business.

Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg about a year ago surrendered the presidency and general managership, respectively, of Paramount to organize the administrative bureau of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through which, as was announced at that time, it was their desire to bring the exhibitors of the country closer to the producers for their common welfare, so that a direct channel of communication could be maintained between studio and theatre. In the interests of this project they made numerous tours of the country in order to come in more direct contact with trade currents and more closely feel the pulse of the public as registered at box offices in various sections of the country. It was as a result of these observations that they prompted the declaration by Jesse L. Lasky that the company would produce no gruesome, religious, costume plays or fairy tales during the war, and they were also responsible for the system at present in vogue of obtaining opinions on all productions from exhibitors, for which work they selected Mr. George N. Shorey because he combined the experiences of exhibitor, critic and box office analyst.

Long in the Business

Hiram Abrams entered the film business in the early stages of its development, when his great personal force, magnetic qualities and devotion to the exhibitors' interests rapidly made him conspicuous as one of the foremost distributors in the country. He has always been known as a constructive organizer and a vigorous exponent of equitable principles between producer and exhibitor. He was among the first exchange men to acquire the rights to "Queen Elizabeth," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and the first feature program produced by the Famous Players Film Company, of which he, in association with Walter E. Greene, was the sole distributor in New England. He was one of the principal factors in the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and it was during his presidency of that organization that he, in conjunction with Adolph Zukor, effected the amalgamation of the big distributing company with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It was also during the last period of his three-year tenure of that office that the star-series system was adopted by Paramount, in compliance with the opinions of the majority of exhibitors as contained in their reply to his famous article, "Is the Program System Right or Wrong?"

First Thirty Features

B. P. Schulberg entered the film business ten years ago from the newspaper field, and joined the Famous Players Film Company at its inception as scenario editor and advertising and publicity manager, in which capacity he selected and adapted for the screen, and later directed, "the first thirty Famous Features." It is of interest that it was he who selected "Tess of the Storm Country" for Mary Pickford and "Wildflower" for Marguerite Clark, the first for a long time considered Mary Pickford's greatest success, and the second of which established Miss Clark overnight as one of the foremost favorites of the screen, and it was he who Mr. Zukor once publicly announced "delivered his message to the world." He was appointed general manager of Paramount in 1915 under Hiram Abrams, and has been closely identified with him ever since. They have been described as ideal collaborators, and their detailed announcement is awaited with interest.

Lynchburg Theatre Burns

LYCHBURG, Va.—Fire last week almost completely destroyed the Broadway Moving Picture theatre in Lynchburg, entailing damages estimated at about $12,000, which is covered by insurance.

The fire started from a film in the operating room, causing an explosion, flames spreading rapidly throughout the building. The audience escaped and no one was hurt.
Soldier Employee of Paramount Wins Croix de Guerre

ENLISTING as a private immediately after the United States entered the world war, William J. Moore, formerly employed at the main offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has just returned to New York a First Lieutenant and with high honors—the winning of his French war cross—the Croix de Guerre.

Not since Bill Hart recently visited New York has there been such a commotion among stenographers, clerks and employees, all friends of the hero who entered the army as a private and returned, battle scarred, as a First Lieutenant.

Moore is a member of the old Sixty-ninth of New York (new 169th Infantry), and was wounded twice and gassed once. On March 7th he took command of a sector under heavy bombardment after his superior officer had been killed.

He organized relief parties to dig out men who had been caught in dugouts that caved in; commanding this work and taking active part in it for twenty-four hours, holding out against a fierce bombardment in which forty-two men were lost and he himself shot through the right lung with a machine gun bullet.

Lieutenant Moore, immediately upon landing in New York, rushed up to the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on Fifth Avenue, where he was welcomed back by Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and other executives.

The bombardment in which Moore won his cross and was first wounded took place at Lunneville. After recovering from his wound he again went into action at Ballarat. At Rouge Bouquet later he was severely gassed. He also took part in engagements at Badon Viller, St. Mihiel, and his latest fighting occurred in the Argonne Forest, where he was again wounded, a bullet passing through his leg.

Canada Upholds Own Pictures

Agitation Against American Films Continues to Hold Limelight—Papers Urge the Government to Take Action

THAT all Canadian Provinces should follow up the action of Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer for Ontario, in raising official objection to the presentation of American war dramas and topical pictures on the screens of Ontario, was urged in an editorial appearing in the Calgary Albertan. This step, according to the writer of the editorial, would form one way to influence the producers of films to a consideration of the desires of the Canadian public. It was urged that Canadians seemed to be helpless in the matter up to the present.

The Albertan declared that the action taken by the Ontario official was not an indication of small country peevishness or international sentiment. It was considered more or less a matter of commercial real adjustment and a desired change between producer and consumer. The paper argued that American producers had “dumped” anything and everything upon the Canadians just as it suited their convenience. There is no lack of sympathy with Americanism, it was pointed out, but “scream eagle” productions made Canadians squirm in their seats. It was urged that the government as a whole should take action so that theatre patrons throughout the country would “get a square deal.”

The agitation against American war pictures to date, however, has been more or less localized in Toronto, where Hon. T. W. McGarry holds forth in his official capacity. Hon. McGarry followed up his first “proclamation” against the American soldier films by announcing that he was attending various theatres to see if the exchange managers and exhibitors were taking steps to adjust the situation.

Two of the prominent Toronto theatres presented features and other pictures during the week of December 16 which were Canadian or English in character. Manager W. M. Elliott of the Regent Theatre reproduced in facsimile form the official letter of Hon. T. W. McGarry which had been sent to local exchanges, and he announced that “to comply with Hon. T. W. McGarry’s request” the Regent was offering an English film success, “Inside the Lines.”

Manager Bernstein of Loew’s Theater, Toronto, selected “Canadian” pictures for his programme of December 16 also, the feature attraction being “The Law of the North,” a Canadian story in which Charles Ray is starred. Another picture was the first of a series of Canadian official views showing Canadian troops in France. The first reel was made up of pictures of the Third (Toronto) Battalion.

Fox Theatre Opens Strong at Minneapolis

Evidence of the growing interest in the silent drama in Minneapolis is shown by the crowds that throng the William Fox Shubert Theatre, which has just opened its doors for the first time.

It has been reported that if Minneapolis acquired any additional moving picture houses they would have little patronage, as so many theatres already exist there.

However, when Theda Bara in “Salome” was screened as the opening entertainment, Minneapolis theatre folk “elbowed” their way into the parquet with the same precision and regularity as they do into the other theatres in the city.

If early indications count for anything a great future is in store for the new playhouse, which for the past few years has been occupied by stock companies, and for various entertainments and programs.

Hillsboro Defeats Sunday Closing of Theatres

At the election in Hillsboro, Washington, the proposal to close motion picture theatres on Sundays was badly beaten, only 144 votes being cast for the measure to 372 against.

As the original petition presented to the council asking the passage of a closing ordinance contained 250 names, it is plain that many who signed the petition did not vote in favor of the measure, and the result is further evidence of the truth of the statement that people will sign their names to anything, and a signature does not necessarily indicate opinion.

The initiated means was the means of turning what promised to be a dull city election into a lively affair and was undoubtedly the means of bringing out the large vote which was cast.

Cincinnati Theatres May Increase Admission

Cincinnati now has only five downtown motion picture theatres that operate with five-cent admissions. This condition may be remedied in the near future, as the managers are threatening to raise admissions to ten cents, plus the war tax.

The managers are finding it hard sledding to show a profit, and as none of them are in business for their health they are considering the advance in admissions, thus following out the generally adopted policy of the Queen City downtown exhibitors.

Rufus K. Evans Returns to Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Rufus K. Evans, former manager of the General, Fox and Jewel exchanges of Minneapolis, has returned after an absence of two months to open an exchange for the Film Clearing House.

Mr. Evans has not announced his future plans, but it is believed that the new firm will distribute state rights productions in the territory.
Division of Films Scheduled to End Soon

Acting Director, in Answering Film Men's Attack Declares "Will Cease on Signing of Peace"—Denies Government Competition Charge

MARCUS BEEMAN, Acting Director of the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films, stepped forward this week with a reply to the resolutions presented by a committee of film men at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

In the course of a vigorous reply to the charge that the Government's bureau has provided unfair competition with regular motion picture interests, Mr. Beeman makes the flat statement that "the Committee on Public Information will cease to exist with the signing of the peace proclamation. . . . It has no desire to perpetuate itself."

The Chamber of Commerce resolutions were presented by a committee representing the National Association and consisting of Walter W. Irwin, Will C. Smith, John Flinn and Frederick H. Elliott.

The Division's Reply

Messrs. Walter W. Irwin, John C. Flinn, William C. Smith and Frederick H. Elliott, representing the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: The Division of Films of the United States Committee on Public Information has received a copy of the resolution drawn up by your committee at a meeting held at Atlantic City on December 5, 1918.

Your resolution features the assistance the motion picture industry has rendered to the United States Government in its Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives and departmental activities, such as War, Navy, Food, Fuel, Agriculture and other departments. This splendid and generous help and co-operation has been acknowledged by the President of the United States and by those associated with him.

You claim that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has "competed" with the motion picture industry in releasing its official war features and weekly reviews "at a profit," and wants these activities turned over to private film agencies.

The Division of Films has not competed with the motion picture industry, as it purposely avoided creating an expensive and elaborate mechanism for distribution. On the other hand, through competitive bids, it allowed the distributors of the United States to employ their physical facilities and exchanges for this purpose.

Of necessity the official film material was taken by the Signal Corps photographers of the army and the official photographers of the navy, no privately staged material whatever being utilized. All of the official film portrayed intimately and accurately the military and industrial preparations in the United States and the splendid accomplishments of our armies on the battle front of Europe.

The rental prices to exhibitors which you complain of were determined by a most fair and equitable procedure in which each exhibitor indicated his average daily receipts and the price he could afford to pay to return him a profit and still play to crowded houses.

MARKET REPORT CHART

The Annual Market Report Chart presents the weekly motion pictures News' Holiday Numbers for some years past, does not appear in this issue.

It was thought that in view of the peculiar circumstances created by the influenza epidemic and the coming of peace a country-wide survey at this time would have little permanent value. In addition, any value it might have in recording admission prices can now be rendered nil in a few months should a boost in the tax rate be decided by the Congress.

The Motion Picture News Market Report will appear in an issue early in the New Year—just as soon as conditions warrant it.

Profits to Treasury

The "profits" of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, which you apparently object to, were by act of Congress under date of June 17, 1917, turned over to the United States Treasury and represent a direct return to the taxpayers. The fact that the Division of Films did operate on this basis and return substantial sums to the United States Treasury is a matter of general knowledge and has been the subject of widespread commendation and has been gratefully appreciated by those who know the tremendous cost of this World War.

On the other hand, these films were released to the exhibitors at cost, as you suggest, you would have been justified in claiming that the standardized priced releases of privately produced features would be placed in jeopardy. This would have been "ruinous competition" indeed.

Furthermore, the Committee on Public Information, through an extensive community campaign, has brought thousands of new patrons to the motion picture theatres of the country. The "People's Films" had a drawing power second to none. Throughout the United States and in foreign countries these films showed that the allies and the United States must ultimately win the war, and their value in this respect cannot be overestimated.

As a war organization similar to the War Trade Board and the War Industries Board and other departments created as war emergency bodies, the Committee on Public Information will cease to exist upon the signing of the peace proclamation. It has already reduced to a minimum its activities, as it has no desire to perpetuate itself. The third official war feature, "Under Four Flags," is the last official feature to be distributed. The official war review continues only during the period embraced by the present activities of our army and navy.

The Division of Films is now completing a record of which it is justly proud.

The motion picture industry of the United States has been immeasurably benefited by its existence.

Yours very truly,

MARCUS A. BEEMAN,
Acting Director.

"The Spreading Evil"

Sol Lesser, well known Pacific Coast states rights buyer, has closed a contract for "The Spreading Evil," James Keane's special production, for the States of California, Arizona and Nevada. The deal was closed in Chicago after a really spectacular chase from New York to the Middle Western metropolis in which everything but an airplane was used.

Mr. Lesser has expressed a keen interest in the picture some weeks ago, but when he arrived in New York, Mr. Keane was out of town. Just as Mr. Lesser was leaving for the coast Mr. Keane got back into New York and the two got together at the last minute.

George Wilson to Manage Strand at Kingston

George Wilson, formerly manager of the Empire Theatre, Windsor, Ontario, has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Kingston, Ontario, which is one of the string of theatres controlled by the Paramount Theatres Company, Limited.

Mr. James Davidson, who has been in charge of the Strand temporarily, has returned to his duties with the Regal Films, Limited, Toronto.

Atlanta Sees Changes

It has been announced from Atlanta, Ga., that Wallace Walthall, former salesman of the Atlanta branch of General Film Company, has succeeded James Kelly at Dallas, Texas, as manager of the General branch at that point.

J. B. Willbanks, former manager of the George Kleine System branch, succeeds Mr. Dillard at the Atlanta branch of General, Mr. Dillard being transferred to the New Orleans office to fill the vacancy left by Jack Woods' death.

Ohio May Lose Reformers Take Courage at Prohibition Amendment and Turn Attention to Pictures—Exhibitors Put Up Stiff Fight

ACCORDING to reports from Cincinnati, Ohio now faces the prospect of having Sunday motion picture shows put in the discard, as reformers who have succeeded in having the Buckeye State placed in the "dry" column are turning their attention to amusements. An effort will be made to have the coming session of the Ohio Legislature enact a new law that will make the "blue" laws effective after being dormant for a number of years. At the present time a Sunday closing law is on the statute books, but it has not been enforced for over twenty-five years. The consensus of opinion is in favor of Sunday shows.

Cincinnati exhibitors have taken steps to make a vigorous fight against the reformers, and at a meeting at the Hotel Sinton, December 11, expressed themselves as follows:

"Now that the reformers have succeeded in making Ohio dry, their activities will be centered upon the theatres, and an effective organization will be necessary to counteract their efforts."

A committee of five was named to collect funds from exhibitors to finance the fight. The committee named was as follows: George G. Rich and William Bowers, representing the sixteen film exchanges, and Isaac Libson, Frederick L. Emmert and A. Hettesheimer, representing the exhibitors.

It also was agreed that every exhibitor in Cincinnati and Hamilton County should be enrolled as a member of the Ohio State Screen League. This was recommended to pool all interests to present a solid front before the State Legislature.

Exhibitors from many of the small theatres in the vicinity of Cincinnati attended the meeting and an attempt was made to get all the exhibitors to attend, but the good weather on Sunday helped them to attend. Many of them now are compelled to close on Sundays while the show houses in the larger cities are open on Sundays and receive the benefit of the heavy attendance.

An attempt was made by Ben Heidingsfeld, representing the legitimate houses, to have the meeting back step on its proposal to fight any attempt to do away with Sunday shows. Mr. Heidingsfeld made the claim that any agitation at the present time would result in a drastic measure being passed by the Ohio Legislature. However, the opposition has "tipped off" its hand at Columbus, coming out with the flat-footed announcement that they plan to close all shows on Sunday, so the local exhibitors have determined to meet the opposition half way and have fired the first shot in the fight.

Harry W. Kress, Piqua, Ohio, member of the executive committee of the Ohio State Screen League, attended the meet-

Sunday Shows Pictures Discussed in Small Towns

The fresh interest of the public in the subject of motion pictures following the war was indicated at two meetings held recently in Danielson, Conn., and Worcester, Mass. The former was held in the High School building of the town, under the auspices of the Killingly Woman's Club, while the latter meeting, which took place in the Free Public Library building, was called by the Worcester Board of Review of Motion Pictures, composed of forty-nine representatives of civic and social organizations of the city. Both of these meetings were addressed by Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Review. At the former, the subjects discussed were the importance of the motion picture in connection with the war, the advances made in the motion picture art, and the use of selected motion pictures for young people. Questions were asked regarding the possibility of greater cooperation with the exhibitor in connection with "family nights" and the use of pictures considered particularly suitable for young people.

Wallace Leaves for South America

H. Staunton Wallace, South American representative of the American Film Company, whose headquarters are in Buenos Ayres, has been in New York for the past five weeks. Friday he left again for his home office after acquainting himself with the changes in trade conditions in this country since his last visit here.

Mr. Wallace is one of the leaders in the film industry of South America and is enthusiastic over prospects on the southern continent. There was never a better opportunity offered a business house than is offered the film company today in South America, according to Mr. Wallace.

C. H. Fulton Will Soon Return from France

C. H. Fulton, sergeant in an engineers' corps in France, expects to be back within a few months, and it is expected that he will establish a film office in Chicago, and also take up his duties as an officer of the E. E. Fulton Company, manufacturers of the "Fulco" specialties, with offices and factory at 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago.

R. H. Fulton, a brother, also interested in the E. E. Fulton Company, has resigned from active employment with the United Theatre Equipment Corporation to take a much needed rest.

New California Theatre Opened Dec. 24

Announcement was made by Director General Fred A. Miller of the new California theatre opening date at Los Angeles, which was Tuesday, December 24. It was expected that the house would be completely finished and very elaborate plans were made for the opening program, which introduced a number of new features in motion picture presentation.

The principal feature of the evening was Douglas Fairbanks in Arizona. Arrangements were made for the star to appear in person at the theatre. Governor Stephens of California was scheduled to make the dedication address, and William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, and Jesse L. Laksy, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, were invited to be guests of honor.

Besides the California News weekly, which will be a composite of all the weeklies now on the market, the program includes a Burlington Travelogue and a Bill Parsons-Goldwyn comedy.

This theatre has had installed the finest orchestral organ made by the Robert Morton Organ Company of Boston, and it will be augmented with music by a thirty-five piece orchestra.

Buffalo Experiences Good Business

Buffalo, like other cities, is no exception to the present business boom in film circles, both theatres and exchanges enjoying remarkable business. There are few theatres in Buffalo today complaining of poor business, and these are mostly small houses in the outlying districts, but even these places are getting their share. "Try to Get In," is the slogan heard in the advertising of one of the downtown houses, and that explains nicely the general situation. With the coming of the holidays, crowds are flocking to the business section and as a result the theatres are reaping a golden harvest from those who would rest a few hours during their search for Xmas presents. With the war over folks are also finding that they wish to get back to the old good times again, and so we find, that the family is going to the "movies" more than ever. Local exhibitors are looking forward to their most prosperous season. Each week exhibitors tell of breaking "last week's record."

Cassinelli Appointed Lieutenant

The American soldier boys at Camp Upton have sent to Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian film artist, a certificate appointing her honorary first lieutenant of the 3rd Battalion, 152nd Depot Brigade of the U. S. Army.

This is in recognition for her entertaining the Camp Upton boys this summer, while many scenes of Leone Perret's Victory film, "Stars of Glory," were taken near Camp Upton. In a good many scenes of this film the soldiers of Camp Upton took a prominent part.
News Weekly "Grinder" Gets Off Easy

According to reports from Buffalo, N. Y., a conflict that arose over the taking of pictures by the News-Strand cameraman of that city of the floating bulkheaded section of the freighter Van Hise has been straightened out by Washington, according to announcement by U. S. Attorney Stephen T. Lockwood, to whom representatives of the Shipping Board appealed. Under the announcement from the capital, all war-time rules and acts governing the taking of pictures in harbors are now out of effect, with the exception of the Espionage Act, which contains a brief section covering this. The Espionage Act will remain in effect until final peace is declared, but it is of no avail for prosecution unless the inimical intent of the alleged violator is clearly established. Mr. Lockwood said the official statement he had received coincided with his own view, that Mr. Spang had not sought to do anything antagonistic either to the interests of the nation as a whole or the Shipping Board itself.

"Fit-to-Fight" Picture Shown in Canada

MONTREAL, CAN.—The Committee of Sixteen in Montreal, Quebec, which is leading a crusade against commercialized vice locally, has obtained a print of the "Fit-to-Fight" picture which has been shown at army camps throughout the United States.

Announcement is made that the Montreal Y. M. C. A. has arranged for the showing of the picture to soldiers at the Red Triangle Hut, Dominion Square, at regular intervals.

The Committee of Sixteen also arranged for a very private presentation of the release December 6. Invitations were extended to five hundred citizens of Montreal and the latter were required to make written application for an admission ticket for the performance. Only males were admitted to this show.

G. F. Perkins of Montreal Visits New York

George F. Perkins, general manager of the Perkins Electric Company, 497 Philips Square, Montreal, Quebec, Canada, was a visitor in New York.

His company is the exclusive distributor for the Simplex projector throughout the Dominion of Canada, and maintains branches in Toronto, Winnipeg and St. John.

ONE DAY LATE

Owing to Christmas falling on Wednesday, next week's issue of Motion Picture News will be one day late.

William E. Keefe Visits the East in Interest of Griffith Production

William E. Keefe, studio manager and special representative for David Wark Griffith, is in New York, where he will spend several days in the interest of Mr. Griffith's productions. Mr. Keefe did not disclose the purpose of his mission, but it is believed it is in connection with the release of the subject recently filmed by Mr. Griffith under the direction of Provost Marshal General Crowder, and pertaining to the war and the government within the United States.

Mr. Keefe will probably be in the East for several weeks. Incidentally it is of interest to know that Mr. Keefe is the first west coast publicity man, having become a member of Mr. Griffith's staff when the producer opened his Los Angeles studios in 1913, and has continued since that time with Mr. Griffith.

Sydney S. Cohen Buys His Fourth Theatre

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors added another theatre to his chain when he purchased the Tremont Theatre at 178th street and Webster avenue, New York.

The Tremont is one of the largest theatres in the Bronx, seating more than a thousand people, and has a high class clientele.

By the acquisition of the Tremont, Mr. Cohen now owns outright four large theatres in New York and has large holdings in other houses. The three others under his immediate control are the Empire and McKinley Square, also in the Bronx, and the North Star on upper Fifth avenue.

Richmond Threatened with Another Epidemic

RICHMOND, VA.—With a daily average of nearly two hundred deaths for the past week, indications are that Richmond will have another "flu" epidemic.

Local health officials, who are advising everybody to avoid all crowds, state that it is a big mistake to assert that the present epidemic is less virulent than that in October. Generally speaking, the disease has shown itself less dangerous to children and to old people than to people in robust health.

C. E. Elliot of Select on West Coast

Clyde E. Elliott has been sent to Los Angeles by the Select Pictures Corporation to act as representative for their special releases, including "The One Woman," produced by Reginald Barker from the Tom Dickson story, "The Cavell Case," and the Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol." Mr. Elliott will make his headquarters at the Los Angeles Select office, and work in cooperation with Manager B. E. Loper.

Miscellaneous Notes

With Thomas Meighan as her leading man, Gladys James and several full-blooded Comanche Indians in the Nezima Talma production, the Van Hise had one of the most exceptional and novel companies on presentation of her Select Picture, "The Heart of Wetona."

The new John Emerson-Anita Loos production in release this week is titled "How the Boys Come Home," and has in the cast Clairette Anthony, a Belgian girl of charming personality.

Members of Henry Lehrman's Sunshine Comedies companies arranged an elaborate vaudeville program which was given for the boys in the Knight's of Columbus theatre at Camp Kearny, under the auspices of the Motion Picture War Service.

Baby Marie Osborne, the Pathe Diando child star, is perfectly framed in the five-cent program feature, "Dolly's Vacation," which will be released by Pathe on December 29.

The occupation of a North African port by French marines, who proceeded to quell a disturbance by hostile Arabian tribes, is depicted in "Eye for an Eye," released this week. From Egypt, it is distributed by Metro, starting the celebrated Russian actress Nazimova.

At the Fifty-Sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, John Barrymore is nearing the finish of a Paramount picture, "Here Comes the Bride," which John Stuart Robertson is directing.

In "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Film for December, Mr. Vitagraph presents Earle Williams in the lead of his seven star team under the five-cent program for release December 29, which is distributed by a new company, Metro, starting the celebrated Russian actress Nazimova.

For the first time in its history Tom Moore's Strand theatre at Washington, D. C., played a second release on Thursday after it had been featured several weeks before on the competing theatres. The production was "My Four Years in Germany," a First National attraction.

One of the leading characters in D. W. Griffith's new photoplay for Arboretum, "The Greatest Thing in Life," released December 8, is a moustached and fastidious young aristocrat, Edward Livingston, a part played by Robert Harron.

The Lee Children, Jane and Katherine, who are stars on the West Coast for the first time, started their first picture at the William Fox studios in the direction of Arvid Gilieson. This newest Lee vehicle is entitled "Smiles," from a story by Ralph H. Stenson.

Ten million picture patrons will be reached by the "Saturday Evening Post" campaign to be instituted by Pathé Exchange, Inc., for its forthcoming serial, "The Lightning Raider," to be released early in January.

Submarine scenes are shown in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," a forthcoming Series Classics, Inc., picture version of the drama of the same name. Both interior and exterior views of a submarine are photographed in connection with the action of this feature.

What is said to be one of the most realistic scenes in motion pictures is the one where the Russian soldiers advance on the French chateau in "Kitty Gordon's latest feature drama, "Andel, taken from the novel, "The Nurse's Story," written by Adele Blenau.

Hoodini, the star of the Octagon Films, Inc., serial, "The Master Mystery," produced by B. A. Rolfe Productions, made fifteen personal appearances in conjunction with the initial territorial release showing.

Eslie Ferguson, whose Arcturis picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," was released December 1, is working at the Fifty-Sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in a new production under the direction of Emil Chantard.

Ed Gedewick, who appears in the two William Fox pictures, "The Land of the Free" and "North of the Divide," has been coming on strong in his part in "First Lieutenant" for the B. A. Rolfe Studios. This picture is entitled "The Midnight Patrol."
Arrogance in Kansas City

Star, With Its Dominating Circulation Worst Blot on the Story of Newspaper Cooperation

IT is an old adage that competition is the life of a trade. It is also equally true that where one newspaper dominates a particular territory that someone is likely to suffer. Why that should affect the motion picture is, from one point of view, a mystery, for one would think that the newspaper that is so far in the lead would seek to continue to maintain that lead by giving it the fullest appeal to its readers.

But that is, unfortunately, not the case in Kansas City, Mo. If you have been at all familiar with the standing of various newspapers you have always heard that the Kansas City Star is one of the greatest of newspapers. We must confess that in years of newspaper training we have never got just a definite idea of why it has continued to maintain that position, but it remains a fact that it is, not only generally, but in its own city and community. It certainly is great in that it has almost a monopoly on the field.

Now while Kansas City has a census population of only 281,911, the Star is rated by the Lord and Thomas newspaper directory as having a daily (afternoon) circulation of 218,927 and on Sunday of 343,666. The morning edition of the same paper, the Times, is given 214,208. Now, of course, all of this circulation is by no means in Kansas City, but it remains a fact that the paper covers the field much better than either of the two other papers. It does carry the bulk of the advertising and motion picture exhibitions feel that they have to advertise in this paper.

There are only two other papers in Kansas City. The Journal is a morning and Sunday, but the circulation is very small compared with that of the Star and Times, for it is rated at only 42,899 during the week and 42,006 on Sunday. The Post is an afternoon daily and also prints a Sunday issue. The daily circulation is given at 145,949 and the Sunday at 127,783. This paper is much more sensational than any of the others, which are unusually conservative, and, according to our information from Kansas City, a considerable portion of this circulation is street sale, and naturally the motion picture exhibitor wants the sort of circulation that goes into the home.

Now with its position as it is the Star, and when we use the word "Star" we refer to both the morning and afternoon papers, absolutely dictates to the advertiser what he can do.

In the first place, to get the advertising rate of 15 cents a line for motion picture theatres the exhibitor must use both papers. As a matter of fact, the picture houses get a little the best of this, for the legitimate advertising rate of the two papers is 50 cents a line.

But with that the exhibitor cannot do the sort of advertising he wants to do. In the first place, there can be no cut or trade mark used in an advertisement unless the space used is at least four inches double column, and even after the theatre has taken larger space he cannot use anything of the black effect in types or borders. While the pages in the reproduction opposite are brought down so small that only the general effect is shown you can see that the exhibitor is not given a chance to do anything at all in the way of display.

If we did not know the situation in Kansas City we would condemn the displays as mighty bad work, but the truth is that the exhibitors are so hemmed in by rules that they have lost all desire to try to do anything original, because they have seldom been allowed to get away with it. And when these regulations by the dominant paper hold them down to such an extent one would not expect the theatres to go to a great deal of trouble and expense for their displays in the papers of lesser circulation.

In the Star there is the same rule followed in the way of news cuts. There is never a half tone used in the news pages of either paper. In the center of the top row on the opposite page the drawing shows the manner in which the paper is "illustrated." The reduction makes this cut look blacker than it really appears in the full sized sheet, for it is a very light line drawing. This ruling prevents the exhibitor from getting a chance to use in the news pages any of the matter supplied by the producers. Scenes pictures are out of the question, because they could not well be re-drawn and have any punch to them.

But there is not much use of worrying about this fact, because the Star gives the theatres NOTHING in the way of cooperation. Sometimes you will find one of these drawn illustrations and about a column of motion picture notes in the Star, but this matter is printed without the slightest reference to the interests of the local theatres. In the issues that we have at hand, daily and Sunday, there is not a reference to motion pictures except in the advertising columns.

Can you imagine a newspaper that is ranked as being one of the leading papers of the country following such a policy?

Can you imagine a newspaper that pretends to represent the interests of its readers ignoring the desires of the thousands of motion picture fans among its readers?

The Kansas City Star is holding its position largely by tradition. In so far as motion pictures is concerned it does not deserve the dominance it holds. It deliberately ignores one of the biggest interests of the country because it has the power to do something.

We do not know a case on record where there are such ARBITRARY papers followed and if the treatment of motion pictures is any guide to the rest of the paper the people of Kansas City would do well to forget the age-old position of the Star and go out and buy a paper with a little less prestige and a little more energy.

A lot of people live on the past and get away with it. The Star appears to be doing so far as the photoplay is concerned. It is not a representative paper: it is twenty years behind the times so far as amusement is concerned; it is unjust and unfair, in this regard, at least to the public's interests.

And here is another remarkable point about the Kansas City situation:

There are about fifty motion picture houses in Kansas City and there are thirty-one theatres represented in the Star advertising, the highest proportion that we have found in any of the large cities.

There isn't any use to analyze the advertising of the various theatres in the Star, for we have already pointed out that the theatres have no real opportunity. The entire layout of advertising is little more than a directory and within the limits set for them the houses are doing the best that they could.

There are twelve downtown theatres including eight first run. The Liberty is the largest house with a seating capacity of about a thousand. The others are Twelfth Street, 700; Regent, 650; Royal, 750; Doric, 900; Wonderland, 500; Idle Hours, 600 and the Victory 450.

We have printed the "dramatic" page of the Star to show the matter that is given to the legitimate—and nothing to the motion picture

In the Saturday Star we find the displays of thirty-four theatres, some of the smaller neighborhood houses coming in for that edition. Practically the same advertisements appear in the Times daily.

In its Sunday issue the Post makes a stab at getting out an (Continued on page 3872)

Only One Paper Shades Any Ray on Situation in Kansas City

amusement page. It carries more than three columns of motion picture advertising gathered together under the heading “Motion Picture Directory” and carries the displays of sixteen theatres. There are reading notices for those using the larger spaces, but the most of the space is devoted to legitimate and vaudeville attractions under the larger head at the left of the page, but at the right, under “Stage and Screen,” the photoplay gets a little the best of it.

This same directory is carried during the week, but in the papers we have examined we have not found any photoplay matter.

But into the Kansas City situation there comes a real ray of hope through the Journal. Under the direction of Miss Lorena M. Wade, the Sunday Journal has a real motion picture page, but we regret that it is not supported to any extent by the theatres, only eight of them using any space, and the Liberty being the only one to use any considerable space.

There is not a reading notice on this page, and strictly news matter, the sort that will encourage interest in the motion picture and help every theatre in the Kansas City section.

In addition to this page, there were added another, giving a layout on productions at the local theatres and short stories about the current attractions, we would be just about satisfied with the co-operative efforts on the part of the Journal.

Three times a week, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, under the heading “Film Facts and Fables,” the Journal prints brief gossip of the photoplay. There are, apparently only three theatres using the Journal every day in the week, the Royal, Regent and Liberty.

Now, regardless of the fact that the Star has far the larger circulation, they should encourage in every way that this paper is doing, and there is no doubt in our minds that advertising in the Journal will bring the theatres a 1,000 per cent greater result per reader than in the Star. We would advise the exhibitors of Kansas City not only to encourage the Journal’s policy by advertising, but to call attention to the fact that you are advertising in this paper by using slides on your screen.

So far as the situation is concerned the deal that is being given motion pictures by the Star is a disgrace to Kansas City. The cocksure, dictatorial policy of the Star offers not the slightest hope. It is in the same position, so far as motion pictures are concerned, as the aged lady on getting her first sight of a railway train. It is distinctly the “old lady” of newspapers of the country.

The only hope that the exhibitors have is by showing the owners of the papers that the people are interested in motion pictures by patronizing the paper that gives them some attention. Probably it is useless to make the suggestion, but if the exhibitors of Kansas City would get together and reduce their advertising in the Star to five or ten agate lines each, just enough to carry the bare announcements of their bills and then devote this money to the support of the Journal, we believe that there would be ultimate results.

While the paper in question was probably not so strong as the Star, we know of a case where one of the arrogant, dictatorial sheets was brought around. In this case the managing editor and the city editor and various other employees, who wanted to be considered very “high brows,” were fond of openly boasting that if they had their way there would not be a motion picture show in the country. It accepted the motion picture advertising “as a favor” to the exhibitors and gave them nothing. But the showmen had no recourse until another paper with young blood and new ownership came along and started a real motion picture department and gave real co-operation. The “old lady” stood it for a few months. She saw the livelier paper getting the motion picture advertising and herself losing it. And she heard the people talking about the motion picture department of the other and livelier sheet, saw people turning to these departments on the street car, and her employees reported that from their own families came a demand for this matter. Finally she saw the light.

But where she slipped in motion pictures she slipped in everything else, and from that day until now she is distinctly a second in the field, though she has the old age and the “distinguished past” of the Star.

Radical medicines generally work. Possibly it might in the case of the Star.
How Exhibitor Can Become a “Producer”

By Harold B. Franklin
Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

The war has given the public a lofter conception of the motion picture than ever before. Now that the war is won, managers should strive to make their theatres more deserving of this public confidence. The motion picture theatre is the great “national” theatre of today. It is an acknowledged “necessity” in the public life of the nation.

One of the big reasons for its popularity is because the motion picture has an appeal for every member of the family. Pictures are the favorite diversion of most folks. Managers should arrange their programs so that there is something that will please both young and old. There is a popular notion that any one can arrange a motion picture program. Motion picture exhibiting is rapidly passing away from “star show” methods.

The successful exhibitor has become as much a “producer” of pictures as a manufacturer. The arrangement of the program, and the proper staging of the picture is the one function that is entirely in the hands of the exhibitor. It is here that he distinguishes his entertainment from the other fellows. Careful staging, playing up the details, music that synchronizes with the action of the public, attention to lighting, all help to enhance the production. The artistic side of the manager’s tastes and refinements finds expression here. The booking of the picture is really the easiest thing the exhibitor can do.

In arranging the program at Shea’s Hippodrome we strive to have something on the program that will appeal to every possible taste. We try to keep our entertainment cheerful and inspiring. We pick our programs just as an editor picks his make-up for a magazine. Variety, diversity of program is what counts. And quality is the watchword.

The successful exhibitor must know what a large portion of the public wants—study and observation is necessary to achieve this knowledge. The story quality of pictures naturally has different appeal. A “good” story generally appeals to all. A woman’s natural instinct is towards romance, while a man prefers mystery and adventure. Comedy appeals to everyone. What does the public demand of a picture? It must have something to tell and it must be well told. The most successful story mirrors life. Most of our inspired literature has been taken from actual incidents that have happened. Suggestive pictures cannot find a place on the screen of the theatre that expects to prosper.

There cannot be any set rules as to what a program should consist of. It depends entirely on the class of theatre you run. First discover what class of people you play to—then cater to them.

Good music appeals to every member of the family—neither too classical nor too popular. Give them some of each. Haunting melodies, good marches, beautiful lyrics! Good music is always a source of pleasure. It is not necessary to have a great symphony orchestra to produce good music—a piano well played is better than a big orchestra out of tune.

The comfort of your patrons is a big subject. The future of your theatre depends entirely on what the public impression is of your theatre. Service is the cheapest thing you can give, yet it is most important. Every thoughtful service strengthens the foundation of your success.

Novelties and stage settings give the “exhibitor” unlimited scopes for his talents. It is here that the more prominent theatres of the country have developed an “artistic touch,” that seldom misses fire. This part of the motion picture theatre program is “still in its infancy.” Great development can be expected here. It binds itself to color, music, singing and is looked for with interest by every class of patron. It is the atmosphere you surround your picture with that give it “individuality.”

Taste! The motion picture theatre must be run with good judgment and taste. No one would willingly appear at a disadvantage indoors. Make your theatre inviting and restful. Don’t overlook the many little details that delight the eye.
Your Idea and Ours

This quarter page of the Standard Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, certainly has the distinction of being entirely different from any other that we have seen. The corset with an inset of the picture of Mabel Normand, and then her name, and the title of the picture will get the attention at the first opening of the paper.

The general style of advertising of the Cleveland papers is to use some striking display and then merely announce the star and the picture, the selling argument being omitted. We believe that this would have been bettered as a business puller if there had been a few lines telling the character of the picture. Some people may get a wrong impression merely from the picture of a corset. This teaser stunt it is mighty hard to beat because most of those who see this will take the trouble to come to the theatre to find out what it is all about.

Get the Christmas spirit now and keep it all the year in the courtesy of your theatre.

After the somewhat rough things that we had to say about St. Louis theatres' advertising in general we are mighty glad to see that the Royal is proving an exception to the rule by using larger space than the others and seeking to get something worth while into the displays.

This one is five inches across three columns and the person who wrote this has been studying the picture and is really trying to put the message over to the public. Some of the lines that were suggested in our Special Service Section on this picture have been used. Directly under the cut the writer has taken care to call attention to some of the other big successes in which Miss Phillips has appeared.

We would like to have seen a more striking cut of the star used, preferably one as she appears in the picture. But the display, at that, shows great progress as compared with the other St. Louis theatres who rarely use a cut no matter how big the attraction is and depend merely upon the name of the star and the title of the picture to get the people to the theatre.

Forget what you "always did" and do what TODAY demands.

What a good looking cut of a pretty woman will do for an advertisement, the pulling power that it will give, is shown by this nine-inch three-column display of the Majestic, Topeka, Kan. Here the name of the star and title of the picture are used in only 14 point type, with the name of the author in 10 point bold and

MABEL NORMAND, in A Perfect 36

The selling talk in 10 point light. Now we would like to have seen the name of the star in somewhat larger type than was used, and the display could have been much improved by taking only another inch of space and getting these two lines sufficiently strong.

But it was a great deal better to have done it this way than to have attempted to crowd a lot of matter into the space between the cut and the border. As it is, the pretty picture gets the eye and one will read the matter even if it is in comparatively small type. The man who discounts the worth of attractive cuts in motion picture advertising is several years behind.

We have referred a number of times in these columns that Casino theatre, Chicago, is a mighty good advertiser. Most of the specimens we have printed have been in small space on account of the exceedingly high rate for advertising in Chicago and because there are a number of media to be used. But this theatre has solved the problem of getting a punch in a few inches as we have shown you several times.

But here is a case where the Casino has used large space for a Chicago theatre—and in advertising a serial. The display which consists largely of the same Universal advertising as appeared in the trade papers occupies 7¼ inches, double column and is bound to attract attention. The reading matter takes one back to his boyhood days when he got the greatest of all his thrills when the circus came to town. Then it goes ahead to tell that this is a real circus picture with all the thrills.

For some reason there has been a feeling on the part of some exhibitors that it does not pay to advertise serials, and most exhibitors book the serials because they believe them sure money and then force the pictures to put themselves over by their own power. We are certain that every exhibitor would make more money with these chaptered stories if he gave them a big send off. The Casino is proving the value of advertising by devoting to "The Lure of the Circus" than it usually does to a feature. We believe it is right.

The tail may not wag the dog, but "little things" jar a lot of theatres.

Here is a remarkably fine example of the "personal guarantee" advertisement, and Max Stearn, owner of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, reports that it attracted more attention than any display that he had used in a long time. And we don't doubt it for this is all carried out in splendid taste. The theatre itself does not use any adjectives. It simply calls your at-
Roth Urges All Exhibitors to Speak Out

By Eugene H. Roth
Managing Director, California and Portola Theatres, San Francisco

Mr. Samuel Goldfish. Our thanks for his article appearing in the Motion Picture News of November 30. I am flattered that my few remarks published in your number of November 16 should have called for a reply from so august a source. It now seems that the splendid efforts of the Motion Picture News are going to be productive of gratifying results for the entire industry, and that those who are in a position to accomplish the results that we all hope for, are being stimulated by your efforts. Mr. Goldfish prefaced his reply with the query:

"I wonder how many exhibitors there are in the United States who really know what kind of stories, scenarios and productions the audience—the public—really like and desire to see on the screen?"

The answer to this query as it suggests itself to me will carry with it not only a surprise to the questioner, but possibly some clarifying of the present situation. It is my opinion that a modest estimate would be that at least half of the exhibitors in the United States have a pretty shrewd notion of what manner and sort of stories, scenarios and productions their audience demands, and this knowledge has come to them from sources that are numerous and are not confined to the daily balance sheet. Practically every exhibitor in the great cities and in the small country places are endeavoring with daily regularity to ascertain what the public's demands are, and it will be necessary for each and every one of them to plug up their ears if they are not to hear abundant comments from their patrons, and these patrons, as we all know, have by their constant attendance at moving picture shows been educated to a degree that permit them to claim that their judgment has some discernment.

Asks Exhibitors to Reply

Mr. Goldfish's article has left an opening for the exhibitor to reply to him. Ordinarily it would have been a bit of a presumption for most of us in the motion picture industry to have dared to suggest a definite plan of action to him, but his article permits us to state what in our opinion the public demands and what our knowledge of the public is, and the writer sincerely hopes that all exhibitors who are steadfast of purpose and who are striving to make their theatres the success that the industry warrants, will, now that the opening has been given them, grasp the opportunity to express their views and offer suggestions.

The Motion Picture News has by its broad course of conduct clearly indicated that it at all times welcomes suggestions from no matter how obscure a source, and I am sure that its columns will be at the disposal of all of us.

It must be borne in mind that the producer and the exhibitor have a common interest. The one is indispensable to the other. It therefore follows inevitably that any efforts for the betterment of the industry must be of a friendly and co-operative nature, and that the suggestions must be considered as sincere, and not fault-finding.

Who Should Know?

Who is in a better position to suggest to the producer what the public does not want than the individual who is in daily contact with the millions who are viewing his product? Would the manufacturer resent the retailer merchant's telling him what character of fashions his trade will not purchase? A designer with an automobile model would necessarily curtail or expand his product depending upon the demand of the consumer. So, too, with the exhibitor of motion pictures. It seems hardly necessary to justify the exhibitor's right to do so. I mean to state directly that when the exhibitor says what the public do not want, the individual who is in close contact with the public is speaking for that public to the producer.

I think that if Mr. Goldfish would more carefully analyze my article he would discern therein an unbiased version of a consistent exhibitor's ideas. My article was qualified by the following statement:

"I wish I were able to advise the producer, but that is a branch in itself, and suggestions only can be made by the exhibitor which may guide the producers," etc.

What the Public Wants

Consistently, and in line with that statement, I reiterate that as an exhibitor my experience has taught me that the public want good, wholesome stories, with a heart interest and appeal. It is my conviction that this statement can be made with equal force by the vast majority of other exhibitors, who, by a process of exclusion, would unanimously state that they do not want fairy tales, biblical pictures, costume pictures, licentious pictures, and I might add that the sudden termination of the war makes it necessary to add war pictures to this group.

At the same time I fully realize and am anxious to admit that there are a number of pictures of this last type which have been produced, and that the producer is justified in expecting the co-operation of the exhibitor, and this for the reason that many of these productions were undertaken for the purpose of meeting the demands of the exhibitors who were damming for this character of product during the period of the war. As to this character of product, I only desire to be understood as saying that I think it would be ill-advised at this time to start the making of any other or further war pictures.

Of course, Mr. Goldfish does not take direct issue with me on any of the above notions, but he does state that I do not go far enough. I am an exhibitor. Don't you think that Mr. Goldfish would resent my handling him a scenario?

Must See the Light

There can be no doubt but that Mr. Goldfish is subject to many complaints of the exhibitor, or, as he phrases it, "the endless bias of exhibitors." Yes, exhibitors are biased, especially in favor of good pictures. Also, like all other human beings, of any particular group or class, there are in the vast army of exhibitors some who are shortsighted and some what have their shortcomings. This portion of our fraternity must be made to see the light, and it does seem to me that we are in a measure justified in asking that the producers who have a broader and keener view help with all the strength that they have in guiding these exhibitors to the road of understanding and the haven of a better and higher aim.

Mr. Goldfish writes glibly of his encouragement of the best literary efforts on the part of the scenario writers, but he tells us that his pictures are produced in the most modern and up-to-date studio plants; that his stars are the brightest in the firmament, his directors the most highly developed in the industry, and his productions the last word in artistic development. In the next breath we learn that a thousand dollars is the standard price for a creditable scenario to a writer. Can anyone say that the producer is justified in offering a scenario from such a capable writer, as Mr. Rex Beach for the price of one thousand dollars?

What He Suggests

I am not endeavoring to reconstruct the producing end of this industry, but I do maintain that it would be vastly better for all of the interests concerned if the bigger and better producers would purchase plays, scenarios or books for prices ranging from three thousand to ten thousand dollars, and, as a result of this investment and effort, secures the very foundation for a successful picture, rather than to pay any sum ranging from nothing to one thousand dollars for the background of a picture, which in most instances portrays on the screen not only characters that are not known to the public, but are poorly developed that they can never make an impression on the public mind. A successful spoken drama has the advantage of already having produced an impression on the public mind, lest a star misconstrue what I say, I hope to make it clear that it is my notion that the moving picture star is as capable of portraying any character as is the star of the spoken drama, but that the additional value lies in the fact that the successful spoken drama has a big past, thousands speaking on its behalf. And in already achieved and demonstrated nation-wide popularity.

It is a matter of much concern to me, and I keenly regret that Mr. Goldfish has become so identified with the "monotonous cry that the producers do not encourage authors, etc. We are producing pictures with the hope of realizing a profit for ourselves by so doing, and the very moment any individual of originality or novelty would offer a scenario properly produced, we would welcome it, encourage it and pay him for it. Mr. Goldfish must know this. His experience have taught him that the vast number of popular magazines in the United States vie with one another in offering fabulous prices for the story, be it short or long, that will attract. I fail to see that Mr. Goldfish has offered one single suggestion that calls for the statement that the exhibitor's view on the writer's problems are absurd. We do not want to put any shackles on the writers, but they are no more privileged than any one else to go outside of acceptable subjects for the meat of their scenarios.

It is not my purpose to discuss "Baby Mine," or "I'm Not Married." I did not intend and expected them to play them. Exhibitors who have are qualified to voice their opinion and expressions. It is evident that if Mr. Goldfish is basing his notion of all exhibitors, or the majority of them, on the type of exhibitor he mentions, which exhibitor said: "Why, I have never even heard of her (meaning Madge Kennedy)," then it is a waste of time to even engage in any discussion. But Mr. Goldfish must admit that his big rental demands some such type of exhibitor, and I cannot for one moment believe that the genuine and legitimate exhibitor could ever make the statement that he had "never heard of Madge Kennedy."

AN INVITATION FROM ONE OF OUR MEMBERS

You Exhibitors All Are Invited Into This Discussion

During the "closed season" we invited a number of the members of the Advisory Board to tell us what were the greatest needs of the industry, what better things could be done. Under the heading "Check Up Now, Everybody," we published an article from Mr. Roth in the November 16 issue in which he urged manufacturers and exhibitors alike to take stock of themselves and took occasion to point out the sort of stories that were needed.

This drew a reply from Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in which he asked how many exhibitors of the country really knew what sort of pictures their audiences want. If you haven't read his article dig out the November 30 issue of the NEWS and read it.

Now comes back Mr. Roth clarifying and making stronger the points in his original letter. EVERY LINE OF THIS IS VITAL TO YOU AS AN EXHIBITOR.

We want to call attention to one paragraph in this article in which Mr. Roth says:

"The MOTION PICTURE NEWS has, by its broad course of conduct, clearly indicated that it at times welcomes suggestions from no matter how obscure a source, and I am sure that its columns will be at the disposal of all of us."

You are right, Mr. Roth, these pages of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau are just what they are labelled—the exhibitors' own department, for, by and of the exhibitors.

We would like to hear from you all.

HOLIDAY SPIRIT

A Little Touch of It in Your Theatre is Good Advertising

This issue will reach the exhibitors just before the holidays. How many of you are planning to get something of the holiday spirit into your bill during that week? It is not what lavish things that you do, but merely a question of absorbing something of Christmas time.

Everything that you do out of the ordinary causes word of mouth advertising, and that is the sort that you cannot buy for mere money. And it makes the people think that your theatre is up to the minute and taking advantage of every opportunity.

Plan something "different." It need not be big. But do something that you have not done before. And then write us about it so that in these pages these good ideas of showmen everywhere will be useful on another Christmas to those who have not had the initiative to plan for themselves.

Prize Offers Arouse New Interest in House Program

Manager Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, came to the conclusion that he was not getting full value out of his house organ because not enough people were reading them, and too many of them were being thrown on the floor. So he determined to make them even more valuable and started the plan of numbering them, announcing a certain number of lucky numbers each week. The prizes consisted of free passes. The same plan has been worked in baseball parks for several years.
Wilby Exploits Installation of Big New Organ and Brings More Business to Montgomery Theatre

WITHIN the past few months we have called attention to several institutional campaigns that have been conducted by the theatres in Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala., which are under the direction of R. B. Wilby. He believes in talking over his theatre with the public and it is a mighty good idea—when you have something to talk about.

So when the Strand installed a new $11,000 organ a few days ago Mr. Wilby went to the newspapers and for several days used space about eight inches deep across three columns with talks about this musical instrument. Two of them are reproduced on this page. The others were written in the same vein, with the purpose of telling the people of Montgomery how much better music they were to have in the future.

You will note that one of these recites the instruments that are represented on the organ. Now, to get behind the scenes, the truth is that the Strand has been having some trouble with its musicians and decided to replace them with an organ. So you can see the impress that is made on the public with the rest of the number of pieces that are represented under the new arrangement. Then the display goes ahead to say that an orchestra with this number of pieces would be impossible under the scale of prices charged—hence the organ.

Another display is headed "We ought to call it a $25,000 organ," and then goes on to say:

"And we could do that without missing the truth any further than she is usually missed in announcements of that kind. But the cost of the organ is about the only thing that concerns us more than you. What we want to know is that the organ is the largest instrument in any Southern theatre, that it has been designed as a perfect musical accompaniment to pictures, that in point of variety, tonal quality and volume, it is easily the equal of an orchestra of thirty men with the additional advantage of giving the player better control of its parts than a director can have of so many musicians."

Two of the displays were devoted to talking about the organist, telling his experience and outlining the quality of music that he would supply. It recited the things that Mr. Allen had done in the past and left the impression with the patrons that the theatre had gone out and acquired the very best musician that could be obtained. In addition there were a few lines about the two assistants, or relief organists.

It's all mighty good work and you won't make the slightest mistake when you spend money in improving your theatre to spend a little more in the newspapers and let the people know what you are doing. Without this advertising the installation of the big instrument would have caused nothing more than a little comment. But, as it was handled it was one of the big topics of conversation in the Alabama city.

French Idea Carried Thro' Whole Performance at the Broadway

In designing his lobby display at the Broadway theatre this week and, in fact, in his entire presentation of his program Maurice A. Kashin is carrying out the French idea from the sidwalk to the stage, a policy that has attracted attention with many of his bills.

Priscilla Dean in "The Willet of Paris" is the feature picture and along with this is being shown "How Stars Twinkle Away from the Studios," being the first meeting of the Motion Picture War Service Association. There were the usual news and comedy pictures, with all French music.

Preceding the showing of the feature Mr. Kashin staged a real Anarche dance with two noted dancers as the principals. This fitted splendidly into the first scenes of the feature, the title coming on the screen just at the conclusion of the dance.

Simplicity marked the display in the outer lobby. There was a large head of Priscilla Dean used as the only decoration, an enlargement from one of the posters. The French style of design was followed in all of the window cards and the shadow box at the rear of the lobby was devoted to the motion picture star's picture.

Clever Stage Setting Used with Charles Ray Picture

Charles Ray's picture, "The Law of the North," was shown at Grauman's million dollar theatre recently with an elaborate and artistic setting. It is a story of the north woods, with a stockade in the midst of the great snow wastes as the background for much of the action in the picture. Diagonally after the title, cast and introduction to the picture have been thrown on the screen the curtain is suddenly withdrawn and brilliant lights play on the stage, where a couple open the huge gates of the stockade. Ray is cleverly represented in this bit of atmosphere, and when the door closes again the first scene of the picture is flashed on the screen, an exact duplication of the realistic stage setting.
Film Influences Public Opinion

Motion Pictures Rapidly Becoming Greatest Possible Medium in Swaying the People—Many Topical Themes

In presenting big problems of the moment in concise, visualized form, so that every spectator can at once grasp the salient points, and by grasping them the better form a comprehensive judgment as to what should be done in the matter, motion pictures stand alone.

Magazines, newspapers and the drama cannot, by the greatest possible extension of their particular provinces, compete with motion pictures in humanizing and clarifying the world's big questions.

Motion pictures are rapidly becoming the greatest and most effective medium in enabling the public to formulate sane and satisfactory opinions.

A realization of this fact came early in the war to England, France and America, and these countries made use of this powerful organ for molding public opinion by creating governmental departments or divisions of film.

The effectiveness of their screen propaganda is best illustrated by the change in attitude of the neutral powers, who for a long time are said to have wavered in their determination to take sides with the Central Powers, and were held back only through the irresistible arguments presented by the Allies through motion pictures of the certainty of ultimate victory resting with the cause of humanity.

If there were no other illustration of the ultimate use of moving pictures to sway not alone individuals but also collective bodies of nations, than what was done by films during the long years of war, it would be sufficient to show that in the future the motion picture will have an established position as the best method of getting to men in order to convert them to a certain line of thought.

McClure's Productions, in distributing through World Pictures their latest production, "What Shall We Do With Him?" have seized upon the topic of the moment as the theme for an interesting photoplay that not alone carries entertainment qualities but acts as an ocular demonstration of the subject that is commanding the front pages of every newspaper in the world, according to an announcement from World Film Corporation.

Its six thousand feet of pictorial representation of acts of the greatest criminal the world has ever known is declared to carry with it the summing up by humanity's lawyers of the evidence that has been brought out in the trial that is now taking place "Over There."

Sheehan Looks for Prosperous Year in 1919

Just back from a tour of the William Fox branch offices throughout the country, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is optimistic over the outlook for the motion picture industry in the coming year.

But at the same time he sounds a note of caution, warning producers and exhibitors alike against over-confidence that they can make increased profits in 1919 without hard work and sound business methods.

"The coming year," said Mr. Sheehan, "will be the most prosperous in the history of the films for those who deserve prosperity. The country is returning to a peace basis, and after the first unsettled conditions due to the readjustment from a war to a peace foundation the country will enter upon the greatest period of commercial and industrial development we ever have seen.

"Naturally the motion picture business will derive direct benefit from the prosperity, for, it goes without saying, good times mean plenty of spending money. But exhibitors and producers need not think that this prosperity and these profits are to be had for the asking. Hard work and close attention to the changing tastes and conditions are absolutely necessary.

"During the year now closing the motion picture exhibitors have endured greater trials and tribulations than ever before. The imposition of heavy taxes by the Government, the tightening of the Government's war curb on all activities not absolutely necessary to the winning of the war, the influenza epidemic and a number of other things have combined to make the lot of the exhibitor a hard one.

"It is to the credit of exhibitors, however, and of the industry that only a comparatively few were unable to stand up under the strain. The great majority of exhibitors, doing business along tried, proved and sound lines, surmounted difficulties and made money.

"For this last class the year 1919 holds out great promise, and they deserve it."

Romayne Leases Home in Los Angeles

To insure perfect interiors, the Romayne Super Films, Inc., has leased the use of one of the finest furnished residence properties on fashionable West Adams street, Los Angeles, and here Director Wyndham Gettins is producing many of the interiors and exteriors for the company's second production. This home is considered one of the finest in Los Angeles and has beautiful gardens adjoining, all of which will be used for this film. Another feature of the subject which will make it decidedly attractive is that Mr. Gettins, by the aid of the owner of this home, has in mind to create the best known society people of Los Angeles to take part in ball room and dining scenes within this home. In this manner Director Gettins has been able to secure people who not only look the part they are playing, but are capable of naturally acting the various roles in the society scenes.

This second production of Romayne Super Films will offer Vera Sisson and Edward Hearn in the leading roles, with Hector Sarno appearing as the heavy. A cast of well-known West Coast players will support these three principals, Director Gettins is also author of the story, which he speaks of as being intensely dramatic, with comedy touches and satire sufficient for relief. It is based on present-day conditions in the business world, and will offer a treatise on a theme that is of great interest to everyone of the nation at this time.

Director Gettins, following a long career as story writer and magazine editor, became film editor for the Universal company, where he remained for more than a year. Following this he served in a similar capacity for Triangle, and there did his first directing. Probably his best known release is that of the Triangle titled "The Ship of Doom," which received unstinted praise from the critics throughout the country when it was released. Indications point to the present subject, as yet untitled, as being one of the promising independent releases of the season, Director Gettins having all the essential facilities needed for such a subject.

Film Star Combination for Universal

What Universal considers as one of the best film-star combinations of the screen has been assembled at Universal City where Monroe Saltaire and Ruth Clifford have begun work on "Pirate Gold," under the direction of Rupert Julian, of "Beast of Berlin" fame.

Last year under the direction of 'Mr. Julian, Miss Saltaire-Clifford was featured in "The Savage," "Hands Down" and "Hungry Eyes."
Wm. Fox Activities Reviewed for 1918

Past Twelve Months Declared to Have Been Most Successful Year in History of Fox Film Corporation—Introduced Three New Brands

DESPITE the difficulties created by war conditions and the sudden cessation of hostilities, not to mention the nation-wide influenza epidemic—a few of the big producers, by dint of close study of conditions and a policy of quick acceptance of opportunities, can point to 1918 as the most successful year in their history.

Intensive development of merchandising in distribution, elimination of waste and a close adherence to basic business principles in production, have enabled many producers to serve their exhibitors even better than during the year previous, and at the same time show reasonable progress on the profit side of their own ledgers.

Chief among these producers is William Fox, who, it is reported, has just put the Fox Film Corporation through the most successful season of its history.

The Showman Vision

Officials of the Fox Corporation, commenting on this record, declare it is a result of the keen showman’s vision of William Fox and the sound business principles upon which the Fox Film Corporation has always operated.

The ability of Mr. Fox to forecast the wants of the public, they say, has given Fox pictures an appeal that insured big profits to the exhibitors; and the same business methods of the Fox organization have enabled the Fox Corporation to surmount the difficulties caused by unsettled conditions and to extend the distribution of Fox films as in normal times.

Not only has William Fox continued the same high output of the Fox Film Corporation, it is pointed out, but he is the only producer who introduced three new brands of pictures to the trade this year. These brands are the William Fox Big Timely Pictures, Victory Pictures and Excel Pictures.

Beginning with the opening of this season, in September, Fox officials declare that their efforts, brands have forged to the front in a manner that more than justifies Mr. Fox's confidence that, despite the unsettled conditions of the world, big pictures, made in a big way and featuring big stars, would prove successful.

Big Timely Pictures

In the Big, Timely group, five pictures have been released to date. These are R. A. Walsh's drama, "The Prussian Cur"; "Queen of the Sea," starring Annette Kellerman; "The Land of the Free," based on the life of General John J. Pershing; "Every Mother’s Son," R. A. Walsh’s production dealing with the end of the war and the reconstruction period, and "Why I Would Not Marry," Richard Stanton’s morality play.

The Victory Pictures group was inaugurated with the opening of the fall season in September. The stars in this group are Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and George Walsh. Every one of the pictures have scored heavily, it is reported.

Victory Pictures so far released are "Kultur," starring Gladys Brockwell; "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." with Tom Mix; "On the Jump," starring George Walsh; "Pam and Fortune," starring Tom Mix; "The Truth Strangest Woman," with Gladys Brockwell, and George Walsh in "I’ll Say So."

The other new William Fox series, Excel Pictures, has attained a tremendous success," declared a Fox official. "Made by stars of assured drawing power and produced on a large scale, these pictures have already earned a reputation among exhibitors as pictures that can be relied upon to fill theatres."

The stars in this group are Peggy Hyland, Jane and Katherine Lee, Madelaine Travers and Virginia Pearson.

Twenty-six “Standards”

The William Fox Standard Pictures, it is stated by the Fox Film Corporation, have maintained a high grade of excellence. Twenty-six subjects have been released in this group, and the exhibitors who have contracted for the Standard Picture program have almost doubled in number during the year, it is said.

Not only has William Fox instituted two new groups of photoplays, but he also has added two more stars—Evelyn Nesbit, whose pictures are being released under the Standard Picture program, and Madelaine Travers, who is now making Excel Pictures in Los Angeles.

The William Fox year has been marked also by the release on the open market of three big special productions—"Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," starring William Farnum, and "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellerman. William Fox states that since their release they have proved themselves among the most successful pictures of the whole year.

Two Extravaganzas

The two extravaganza—"Fan Fair" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves"—another new group of William Fox plays which this season has brought forth, are said to be produced on a lavish scale. It is claimed that they are the first film extravaganzas made by any producer, and that although they were released in November, they have already made a huge success.

Since last January William Fox has produced and released a total of 170 pictures. Production has been about evenly divided between the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., and the Fox studios in and around New York City, with the four-week shutdown due to the influenza epidemic, fifteen Fox companies have been working constantly, East and West.

"There has been a persistent combing of the film profession for directors, until today the Fox staff of fifteen directors represents a corps d’elite," said Mr. Fox.

Mr. Fox also re-edited and revised a number of his greatest successes of former years. The Great Nine, a series of pictures, the success of which is declared to have established Mr. Fox as a producer, will have its first release the latter part of December; one of the pictures to be released each week thereafter.

Early in the summer Mr. Fox also released the Big Six, another series of his former best productions. Primarily intended as a summer attraction only, it is said these pictures, in their new form, are still carrying on, and bookings for the home trade is declared. They have shown that their attraction to exhibitors and the public will probably last for a long time to come.

"Infatuation" Benefits by Former Publicity

Reports from Pathé branch offices all over the country, said to be coming in daily, are taken to indicate that "Infatuation," is meeting with unqualified success and that Gaby Deslys has made a personal hit in the picture.

It is interesting to note in this connection that this story, that was published in practically every newspaper in the United States at one time and which was probably responsible more than any factor in creating for Gaby Deslys the interest and curiosity which are tremendous advantages for a star, has been declined by Miss Deslys as absolutely without a word of truth.

This story connected her name with that of a profligate European monarch, and he was supposed to have lost his throne through neglect of his royal duties while paying court to "Gaby."

Perret Chooses McAdoo

Leonce Perret, the French film director, who has become well known in the motion picture field through his recent film productions, "Lafayette We Come," and "Stars of Glory," wants no less a person than William J. McAdoo, the present secretary of the treasury, to assume a post as leader of the film industry.

Mr. Perret thinks the unknown organizing capabilities of Mr. McAdoo would be of invaluable aid to the motion picture industry, and has written a letter to William J. McAdoo in which the French film director points out how the motion picture industry can help during the reconstruction period and of what great assistance it can be to solve big problems.
Ebbing Year is the Greatest for Metro

More Than Seventy All-Star Series and Screen Classics Produced Besides Erection of Million Dollar Studio and Participation in Patriotic Drives

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, President of Metro Pictures Corporation, is highly elated and pronounces the year 1918 as the most active and brilliant, from an artistic, production and achievement standpoint in the history of that company.

During the twelve-month period the organization which Mr. Rowland heads has made more than sixty-two All-Star Series features, distributed the monthly "super de luxe" productions of Screen Classics, Inc., spent many thousands of dollars in enlarging and improving its studios and laboratories and purchasing the rights to novels, plays and manuscripts for future use, and finally has begun the erection of what is described as one of the most complete and up-to-the-minute studios in the world in Hollywood, California, a studio which, when finished, will accommodate more than a dozen big companies at the same time.

A Banner Year

Maxwell Karger, under whose personal supervision all casts for Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., pictures are selected and directed, feels with Mr. Rowland, that 1918 has been an unparalleled banner year for the companies. He has just recently gone to California to supervise production work in the company's new studios.

"In addition to its producing and distributing activities, Metro has done as much if not more than any other three companies," said Mr. Rowland, "in arousing and quickening patriotism with its stirring Screen Classics, Inc., superfetures, "The Slacker," starring Emily Stevens, "Draft 258," starring Mabel Taliaferro, "My Own United States," the William L. Sherrill masterpiece, produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, in which Mr. Arnold Daly was starred, "The Legion of Death," with Edith Storey as star, "To Hell With the Kaiser," featuring Lawrence Grant with Olive Tell and a cast of 2,000, and Screen Classics, Inc.'s two latest Liberty reel productions, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" and "Why Germany Must Pay," historical records of the war which future generations will view with the same enthusiasm as they read Gibbons now.

"For Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., stars and directors contributed their services as four-minute speakers, made special patriotic productions for the government, and in other ways unselfishly gave their time and talents to aiding in crushing Germany's mad monarch.

"Over two hundred employees, including stars and directors, served in different arms of the service and in the loan drives the company and its stars raised over $25,000,000—thousands of dollars of this being contributed by the corporation and its employees, one star alone taking over $75,000 in Liberty bonds."

Many Big Productions

Among the works of extensively read fiction used by Metro were "The House of Mirth," Edith Wharton's society novel, which was produced with a cast composed of Katherine Hays, Barrymore, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Lottie Briscoe, Christine Mayo and Edward Abeles; Myrtle Reed's two books, "Flower of the Dusk" and "Weaver of Dreams," in which Viola Dana did some of the best work of her career; "Lend Me Your Name," Francis Perry Elliott's story, played by the late Harold Lockwood; "The Landleper," also one of Mr. Lockwood's most successful pictures, adopted by Fred J. Balshofer from Holman Day's appealing novel of the same name; Edward Moffat's novel of the west, "Hearts Steadfast," with Edith Storey, under the title of "Revenge"; Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "No Man's Land," which served to introduce Bert Lytell; "The Trail to Yesterday," a picturization of Charles Alden Seltzer's tale of the same name, and Mr. Lytell's first Metro picture; C. N. and A. M. Williamson's romantic story, "The Demon," the screen version of which Edith Storey used as a starring vehicle; and "Kildare of Stormy," Emily Stevens' mid-season All Star Series picture, which was adapted from Eleanor Kelly's novel, published by the Century Company.

Ten Screen Classics

Among the Screen Classics, Incorporated, "Big Super-Features" which the Metro organization distributed were "Lost We Forgot," in which the French stage artist, Rita Jolivet, survivor of the Lusitania, starred; "Pals First," a picturization of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name in which Harold Lockwood was starred; "The Legion of Death," a tremendous screen epic of Russia's famous battalion of women, in which Edith Storey played the commander of these Joan d'Arcs; Charles A. Taylor's photo-version of Joseph Arthur's melodrama, "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana in her first Screen Classics, Inc. production; "My Own United States," in which the dramatic star, Mr. Arnold Daly, appeared; "The Million Dollar Dollies," the feature which served to introduce the Broadway beauties and dancers; "The Slacker," starring Emily Stevens; "Draft 258," starring Mabel Taliaferro; "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," an adaptation of Maxwell Karger's novel, depicting the causes and end of the war, and "Why Germany Must Pay," also written by Mr. Karger. The two latter productions were directed by Charles Miller.

"While Metro has always been unique in the class of stars that headed its production, its casts of nationally known stage and screen artists, the excellence in direction, setting and lighting of its big photo-dramas, its achievements for 1918 have exceeded all of its previous efforts in these lines," said Mr. Rowland.

And Metro enters upon its new year with still further plans of expansion and enlarged activities. It will be even a more active producer than ever. It foresees in the coming year a great improvement in business conditions and public patronage which will mean greater returns for exhibitors and Metro.

Jefferies Assigned to Secure Stories

Norman Jefferies, who transacted the purchase of "High Pockets" for the Betzwood Film Company, to be released through Goldwyn, is now commissioned to negotiate immediately for several other stories suitable for Louis Bennison. Original or published stories with Western, Canadian or Alaskan locals are required at once.

There is also instant demand for a feature story for Katherine McDonald, whose work with W. S. Hart in "Shark Monroe" and "Riddle Gawne" is known to picture patrons.

Quick action is promised on stories of the designated type if submitted to Norman Jefferies, Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia.

Riddle Assistant Manager

N. Y. General Exchange

Announcement is made by General Film Company of the appointment of B. S. Riddle as assistant manager of the New York City exchange. Mr. Riddle was promoted to this position from traveling auditor, in which capacity he has served the company several years.

At the New York exchange he will cooperate with Manager J. A. Hammell, his duties pertaining to the accounting work.

Mr. Riddle feels it his responsibility to motion picture people through the East and has specialized in system and office management.

HE motion picture industry during the stormiest year since its inc Famous Players-Lasky. "New faced with such perplexing problems the year of 1918," said Mr. Lasky to News. "Through it all the industry ha prise than ever before. The motion pi episode have only acted as the fire th ing together an enterprise that, has it b kind, would have tumbled and perhaps 1 years to rebuild.
"To everyone who has stood by the everlasting recognition in the eyes of sense of gratification and pride at this obstacles that have been thrown in the twelve months," continued the producer.

Big Dangers Ahead
"I do not mean to infer that the motion picture industry is now in a sea of calm and that before it lies clearly defined a passive voyage. Both from without and within our business we must always antici pate dangers the like of which are unknown to other gigantic institutions.
"However, it is quite right to feel that we have passed the crisis. With peace at hand it is only natural to expect that the motion picture enterprise will enjoy condi tions that will make possible its great ad vancement, not only as an art, but as a regular business project.
"With conditions at normal I anticipate greater developments during the next year than within any similar period heretofore.
The reason for this supposition seems quite obvious. During the past year we have as a unit devoted our energies chiefly toward the welfare of our Government. What we have accomplished in this connection is history and needs no repetition here. Su fice to say that our efforts have brought forth expressions of sincere and full ap preciation from Government executives in whose hands has been entrusted the future of some hundred and ten million people.
"From our store of brains and genius we have contributed freely and gladly to ward the ultimate victory of our country, a reward for heroic sacrifice which must always come to those peoples who fight for right.
"With the advent of 1919 the motion picture industry embarks on a new era of business association. More things have happened during the past twelve months to make the industry a modern business en prise than during any previous year. The better motion pictures of today are being emb arked in a manner befitting the im portance of our gigantic business.
The product is being sold not only to the ex hibitor, but to the public as well, along lines employed by large distributors in other modern industries.

Service the Main Issue
"Service is the keynote of all business success once the quality has become estab lished. During the past year the exhibitor has been given increased service as the time progressed. Systematic sales plans have been embodied in the distribution of the motion picture product. The haphazard manner of distributing and exploiting films, although not entirely extinct in some cases, is rapidly giving place to more business like methods.

"With the beginning of the new year nearly all pictures are being sold on their merit, and the producer and exhibitor profit or loss is absolutely commensurate with the quality of the product. In other words, since the inception of the motion picture business it is only through the dis tribution and presentation developments of the past year that producers, distributors and exhibitors alike are better able to cal culate their earnings in advance by virtue of the fact that we are now dealing in con crete values.

January 5 Is United’s Big Day

The First Release of the United Picture Theatres of America Is Scheduled for First Week of New Year

Concrete evidence of the activity which has been reported from United offices is contained in the detailed announcement of definite date of release in January of the first two of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., features, "The Light of Western Stars" and "Adele."

The former, which is closely based on Zane Gray's Western romance, "The Light of Western Stars," and was directed by Charles Swickard from the screen version of Roy Clements, is definitely announced for release January 5th.

The second United release, which is set for January 26th, will be that of the recently completed Kitty Gordon feature, "Adele," which has grown smoothly from its inception at the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, and which is said to present this screen star in a novel role differing in its entirety from anything before accomplished by Miss Gordon.

Private showings of "Adele" in New York are reported to have elicited unstinted praise. The piece is based on Adele Blenee's "The Nurse's Story." Jack Cunningham wrote the continuity and Wallace Worsley directed. Robert Brunton gave personal supervision to the production, while Clyde De Vinney is credited with the camera work.

For the month of February, J. A. Berst, president of United, further announces two other releases. These will be forthcoming in the recently completed Florence Reed feature from the studios of Tribune Productions, Inc., the title of which is not definitely determined, and the second of the pictures in which Dustin Farnum is starring for United, "A Man in the Open," which latter is based on Roger Pocock's romance of the Northwest of the same title.

A letter received by Mr. Berst from Robert Brunton of the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, has this to say regarding "Adele" and "A Man in the Open":

"May I take this opportunity to congratulate you on the general excellence of your super-features, 'Adele' and 'A Man in the Open'? We spared neither time nor expense in the making of these pictures, and I consider them the very last word in motion picture production."

"Tarzan" Ad Competition Expires February 1

With play dates on "The Romance of Tarzan" advanced in many contracts from a month to six weeks as the result of the influenza shutdown, officials of First National Exhibitors' Circuit have changed the date for ending the exhibitor advertising competition on the sequel production from December 29, 1918, to February 1, 1919.

With an extension of practically five weeks it is believed that many of the smaller theatres, in the third and fourth class for capacities, will have shown "The Romance of Tarzan" and submitted their entries, so that the judges will have before them an almost equal number of entries from each of the four classes of houses.

Dorothy Phillips Visits Metropolis for Rest

Dorothy Phillips is in New York for a rest. Her director-husband, Allen Holubar, came to New York from Universal City, bringing with them "The Heart of Humanity" to the Eastern laboratories.

Mr. Holubar and Mr. Lawrence are working with executives at the Universal Studios on their film "The Heart of Humanity." The film is now in the editing process and is expected to be released shortly.

Weddige Enrollment Supply Quarters at Detroit

C. A. Weddige, president of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, Filmmaking, Detroit, which disposes of Simplex projectors in Michigan, expects shortly to have a "house warming" in celebration of his enlarged quarters on the second floor of the Film building.

In anticipation of an increase in his business as the result of his plans to push the Simplex products in Michigan, he has provided for more floor space to handle this make of projectors.

Mr. Weddige is well known to the exhibiting fraternity in Michigan and has planned an extensive advertising campaign to keep before them the merits claimed for the Simplex machine by its manufacturers.

As part of his aim to keep the name "Simplex" constantly before the motion picture theatre managers in Michigan, he has begun to advertise heavily.

Jack Rose Keeps an Eye on the Coast

Jack Rose, who will be remembered for his clever work as feature cameraman for the Essanay for over eight years, where he photographed Charlie Chaplin, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn and many other of filmdom's brightest lights, has the Coast in his bonnet, although he is now in Chicago.

Mr. Rose was the first cameraman in the country to use a triple dissolve and he invented many new devices for motion pictures. The gentleman has made cinematographic work a life study and been associated with such directors as Captain E. H. Calvert, Harry Beaumont, Fred Wright, Chas. Brabin and Theo. Wharton, and has made about two hundred and sixty photoplays, approximating eight hundred reels.

Zukor Sees Triumphant Year

The man behind the idea of motion picture entertainment just as it does in buying any other article. As a rule the public buys a certain brand of goods, first because it has been brought to his attention by advertising, either in a printed or verbal way, and, second, because that article lives up to all that is claimed of it.

"With peace at Christmas time the whole world will rejoice in thankful expressions of good will. Every industry faces a new era, a time when competition increases, in many instances a hundredfold. In the motion picture industry we are looking toward the future with hopeful expectancy. Surely we have become stronger embedded in the hearts of the entire universe for what our industry has done to save civilization. We are consequently entitled to a year of growth and expansion in a commercial way as well as from the viewpoint of art. The new year is perhaps the greatest in history for the commercial world. If not handicapped it will be the greatest for the motion picture industry, and for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

“Lion and Mouse” Cast Chosen

Vitagraph to Feature Alice Joyce in “The Lion and the Mouse.” Released in February

THE full cast for the Vitagraph production of “The Lion and the Mouse,” in which Alice Joyce is to be featured, has just been announced.

The players who will support Miss Joyce have been chosen with great care, and both their talent and the making of what is promised to be a better production even than Vitagraph's “Within the Law.”

Miss Joyce will play the role of Shirley Rossmore; Anders Randolf will play John Burket Ryder; Mrs. John Burket Ryder will be played by Jane Jennings; Conrad Nagel will play Jefferson Ryder; W. T. Carleton will be seen as Senator Roberts; Mona Kingsley will play Kate Roberts; Henry Hallam will play Judge Rossmore; Mary Carr will be seen as Mrs. Rossmore; William H. Burton plays ex-Judge Stott, and Templer Saxe will be seen as the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley.

The production will be directed by Tom Terriss, who has directed the Alice Joyce productions, for many months past. The date set for the release of “The Lion and the Mouse” is February 10. It will be the third of the Alice Joyce Star Series now being released under Vitagraph new booking plan and policy. Miss Joyce's first production under the Star Series plan was “Everybody's Girl,” which was released November 18; her second production, “The Captain's Captain,” will be released on December 30.

The release of “The Lion and the Mouse” on February 10 is looked forward to by Vitagraph as one of the big events of the picture year. As a play, “The Lion and the Mouse,” which is from the pen of the late Charles Klein, is declared to be quite as famous as “Within the Law,” and is a rival to it in the matter of financial success as a stage production.

The play is probably as well known to picture fans and playgoers in general as any drama produced within the last twenty-five years.

It is a woman's story; that is to say, the heroine dominates throughout, and for that reason its selection as a vehicle for Miss Joyce is said to be ideal.

Goldwyn Announces New Dramatic Films

CONTINUING the pace set by Goldwyn since the beginning of its second releasing year in September, the schedule of coming Goldwyn releases bring exhibitors of America a battery of dramas that are expected to even surpass the successful records established by Goldwyn's first eleven Star Series releases.

On December 22, Mae Marsh's second Star Series production, “The Racing Strain,” by Tex Charwate, directed by Emmett J. Flynn, will be featured in the country's leading first-run houses. In “The Racing Strain” Miss Marsh is seen in the type of role that first won her fame in Griffith's “The Birth of a Nation.”

On December 29 Tom Moore in “Go West, Young Man,” by Willard Mack, directed by Harry Beaumont, is scheduled for nation-wide release. Moore's appearance in this drama is anxiously awaited by the fans of the country. As a romantic young Westerner fighting to win the girl of his choice, Goldwyn's only man star will be seen to his very best advantage.

Madge Kennedy in a drama of love and romance comes next. “Day Dreams,” written for Miss Kennedy by Cosmo Hamilton, and directed by Clarence G. Badger, is the title of this release. The production was originally named “Primrose,” but Goldwyn has selected the new title in its place.

Mabel Normand's third Goldwyn broad comedy production, “Sis Hopkins,” from the Rose Melville stage success, follows the release of “Day Dreams.”

Geraldine Farrar, successful in her first two Star Series releases, “The Turn of the Wheel” and “The Hell Cat,” will be seen in “Shadows,” by Willard Mack, directed by Reginald Barker, as her third Goldwyn production. “Shadows” shifts from the wild dance halls of far-off Alaska to the fashionable quarters of an Eastern metropolis. Milton Sills and Tom Santschi appear in a supporting cast of favorably known players.

Gaumont Graphs Shows Our Boys in France

Gaumont Graphite, No. 38, released December 12, showed a big variety of interesting subjects of which the following is a partial list:

Supply wagons keep pace with the boys on the march, because Uncle Sam believes that “an army marches on its stomach.”

Billeted in quaint little French homes the boys are entertained by German prisoners and an occasional song by a vaudeville artist.

The advance is continued in open formation as nobody trusts the Hun, then a little sight-seeing trip through an abandoned German trench.

50,000 Italians march in victory parade in Chicago.

A German supergun captured by the Fourth American Army, is exhibited in the Champ de Mars, at Paris.

The “Empress of Britain” brings home another load of doughboys. Among the number is a lot of New York's own Twenty-seventh, many wounded. Greeted only by the ladies of the Red Cross with their ubiquitous coffee and sandwiches. Off to the demobilization camp.

35,000 Yanks pass in great farewell review at Camp Funston. Major-General Wood and General Hoffman, veterans from France, witness great spectacle of American power. Red Cross trailer.

J. Le Roy Drug Joins Hamilton and Kern

An addition to the scenario department of Hamilton & Kern is J. Le Roy Drug, a veteran newspaper man, having been at one time associate editor of a New York daily, and has had several years' experience in the writing game. It is the intention of Hamilton & Kern of making this department the best on the coast, and Mr. Drug, realizing the importance and the vital necessity of the scenario in the moving picture industry, has resigned as business manager of Grauman's theatre so that he may devote his entire attention to this department, and is now busily engaged writing the continuity on a five-reel story for a well known star.

Pegler Takes Charge of Sherry Publicity

Arthur James Pegler, who for the last two years has handled newspaper and magazine publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, has resigned to assume charge of publicity for the Sherry Service.

Mr. Pegler is well known in newspaper circles and is a contributor to the magazines as well as author of several plays.
Pathe Names Eight Months Releases

Paul Brunet Announces Schedule of Pictures for Distributing Within Thirty-Five Week Period—Attractions Already Completed from Comprehensive Program

WHAT is declared to be a permanent schedule and subject only to additions of special releases which will in no wise affect the arrangement, is announced by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The period is for eight months, from December 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919. This provides for monthly releases both of the "Extra Selected" and the Program Features. The attractions embrace the Extra Selected Star Photoplays, the Pathe Program Features and the Pathe Special Features.

It is said that thousands of cards already sent to exhibitors throughout the country announcing the long period releasing schedule has met with tremendous success and most satisfactory results.

This schedule is not an unaccomplished plan, but is a statement of completed work and declared to be done without the rush and incomplete finish that go with it; Frank Keenan terms the "machine method of making machine pictures."

Pictures All Made

"These pictures have been made, assembled, edited and titled, with ample time for the best possible results," said Mr. Brunet, "and could be ready for immediate distribution, should such a necessity arise. They comprise under the Extra Selected classification the following: Four features starring Fannie Ward; three features starring Frank Keenan; one feature starring Bessie Love; one feature starring Bryant Washburn; total, nine Extra Selected Star Photoplays.

The Pathe Program Features are as follows: Five features starring Baby Marie Osborne; two features starring Helene Chadwick; one feature starring Henri Krauss; total, eight Pathe Program Features.

The specials thus far are "Infatuation," the pretentious Eclipse production, directed by Louis Mercanton and starring Gaby Deslys, and "Common Clay," with Fannie Ward. The strength of the offerings, which will most favorably compare in quality of all essentials to any other production, may be judged by the following summary:

 December 1st, 'Milady o' the Beanstalk,' a five-reel program feature, story by Elizabeth Burbridge, scenario by Clara S. Beranger, produced by Diando and directed by William Bertram.

 December 8th, 'Infatuation,' Pathe Special, starring Gaby Deslys, based on Marcel L'Herbier's romance, directed by Louis Mercanton. The Pathe-colored scenes of a performance in the big Casino de Paris is said to be one of the brilliant and unusual features in this production.

 December 15th, 'The Narrow Path,' a five-reel Extra Selected Fannie Ward Photoplay, adapted for the screen by Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham, from A. H. Woods' Broadway production of the same name, directed by George Fitzmaurice and produced by Astra.

 December 29th, 'Dolly's Vacation,' a five-reel program feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne; written by Mrs. George Griffin Lee and directed by William Bertram.

Starting the New Year

 January 12th, 'The Midnight Stage,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Frank Keenan; produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company from a scenario by Jack Cunningham and directed by Ernest C. Warde.

 January 26th, 'A Vagabond of France,' a Program Feature starring Henri Krauss, the original screen Jean Valjean in 'Les Misérables.'

 February 23rd, 'An Old Maid's Baby,' a Program Feature with Baby Marie Osborne; the story by Agnes C. Johnson and directed by William Bertram.

 March 2nd, 'Common Clay,' a special feature starring Fannie Ward, and based upon the successful A. H. Woods' stage production of the same name. It is in six reels and was produced by Astra, with George Fitzmaurice as the director.

 March 9th, 'Carolyn of the Corners,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Bessie Love. The story is by Ruth Belmore Endicott and arranged for the screen by Frank S. Beresford. It is a product of the Anderson-Brunton Company and was directed by Robert Thorby.

 March 23rd, 'Go Get 'Em Garrity,' a Program Feature with Helene Chadwick. This is a Western story.

 April 6th, 'The Silver Girl,' an Extra Selected, starring Frank Keenan.

 April 30th, 'The Sawdust Doll,' a Program Feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne. Claire DuBrey and Jack Connelly give fine dramatic expression to the romance.

 May 18th, 'Caleb Piper's Girl,' a Program Feature, with Helene Chadwick. W. E. Lawrence is the athletic hero.

Three in June

 June 1st, 'All Wrong,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Bryant Washburn. It is by Mildred Condine, and produced for the screen by Jack Cunningham. It was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company, and directed by William Worthington and Raymond B. West.

 June 15th, 'The Little Diplomat,' a Program Feature, with Baby Marie Osborne, from a story by Burton George. The scenario is the work of Clara S. Beranger and Jack Cunningham. The production was made by Diando and directed by William Bertram. Baby Marie, as the "Rosebud," is supported by Morris Foster, Ruth Kind and Thomas Quinn.

 June 29th, 'Our Enemies,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Fannie Ward, a story of society, politics, patriotism, and the malign influence of a commanding figure in public life.

 July 7th, 'The Cry of the Week,' Extra Selected Star Photoplay, also starring Miss Ward. These last two offerings are said to form a high peak of dramatic achievement for Miss Ward and take place among her most important work.

"Cannibals" Gets Special Music Score

George W. Beynon, one of the first musicians to inaugurate orchestral scores with pictures, has prepared a complete musical score for Martin Johnson's production, "Cannibals of the South Seas," which is controlled by Robertson-Cole Company and released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation on December 22d.

The score contains many original numbers prepared by Mr. Beynon and has been pronounced by Mr. Johnson as thoroughly synchronizing with the production. This asset to the service in connection with this picture will undoubtedly be welcomed by the exhibitors who will play this production. Its value is evident, especially in a production of this nature which deals with unknown peoples and countries.
Three Productions on Broadway

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Points with Pride to Three Pictures, Showing Broadway in Same Week

n official of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that two Paramounts and one Arcafilm picture were shown at as many leading New York theatres during the same week.

At the Rivoli, Elsie Ferguson in her new Arcafilm picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," was the attraction; Enid Bennett, in the Paramount production, "Fuss and Feathers," was at the Rialto, while at the Strand was Wallace Reid in "Too Many Millions," also a Paramount offering.

Miss Ferguson's picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," directed by Emile Chautard, is based upon Henry V. Esmond's play of the same title in which Maxine Elliott starred some years ago. The screen adaptation is by Adrian Gill-Spear, and the story deals with the adventures of a jaded English society girl of great wealth who deserts her high social circles to take up the simple life of a gypsy and out there in the forest finds a man worth while.

The Thomas H. Ince production, "Fuss and Feathers," in which Enid Bennett is seen at the Rialto, is from an original story and scenario by Julien Josephson and was directed by the star's husband, Fred Niblo. Miss Bennett appears as the daughter of a miner who has struck it rich, and with him she comes East to establish a social position. A meeting with the profligate son of the purchaser of the father's mine results in a series of exciting adventures.

At the Strand, Wallace Reid appeared in "Too Many Millions," an adaptation by Gardner Hunting of Porter Emerson Browne's story, "Someone and Somebody," which was directed by James Cruze. It is a tale of a poor young man who suddenly inherits $40,000,000 and doesn't know what to do with it. "'Too Many Millions' has many chuckles," headlined the World. "Mr. Reid's latest vehicle abounds in laughs. The story is too good to tell, it must be seen," observed Mr. Oliphant in the Mail. "There is never a moment this comedy does not hold interest," said the Evening Telegram. "He gives a capital performance," was the comment on the star by Heywood Broun in the Tribune.

"Lightning Raider" Makes Good Impression

ne of the most representative gatherings of exhibitors ever assembled for a trade showing was present at the special view of the new Pathé serial, "The Lightning Raider," featuring Pearl White on the New York Roof recently. The first three episodes of the serial were shown and were received with intense interest by the many picture men present.

As the theme of this serial was unrolled, the exhibitors were unanimous in their praise of this latest output of Pathé Exchange, Inc. That it is the best of the many serials distributed by Pathé has been expressed by a majority of those present, and they even went farther and stated that it was the best serial that Pearl White has ever appeared in.

These comments were particularly gratifying to the Pathé executives present, for they have gone to great pains to have "The Lightning Raider" reveal itself as a forward step in the history of the continued form of screen entertainment. Every effort has been made in the production of "The Lightning Raider" to get away from the impossible creatures and impossible situations that have been so noticeable in many serials. "The Lightning Raider," according to Mr. Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathé, is a new idea in serials, since it presents a logical story with a logical heroine. It is a serial based on reason instead of imagination, and not a single adventure in the entire fifteen episodes is one that could not have been accomplished in real life by the leading characters.

In addition to the praise of exhibitors, and the further endorsement of "The Lightning Raider" furnished by unprecedented advance bookings, Pathé is particularly proud of a recent comment on this serial by Professor Thomas O. Masaryk, president of the Czecho-Slovak Republic.

Pathe News Says It Will Broaden Scope

The Pathe News, after December 24, will broaden its national scope, and at the same time come into closer relations to the big centers of population, according to an announcement.

For this purpose, more than ever before, it expects to be operated with the efficiency of an up-to-date newspaper, as to rapidity of production and circulation.

Jewel Cites Progress of Mildred Harris

The rapidly increasing popularity of Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charlie Chaplin) is being emphasized by exhibitors from various parts of the country in letters to the New York offices of Jewel Productions, Inc., daily.

In California, Oregon and Washington Miss Harris has developed an unusually large following among the film followers and letters from Porto Rico, and even far off Rio Janeiro, tell of how well "The Price of a Good Time" and "Doctor and the Woman" have been received by Jewel executives.

The following letter from Manager S. M. Kasse of the Empress theatre, Akron, Ohio, and a telegram from the Rialto theatre at Wahoo, Neb., tell of the success of Miss Harris' two latest Jewel productions in the respective cities:

Jewel Productions, Inc.

Just a few lines to express my opinion on your Mildred Harris productions, especially "Borrowed Clothes." Without any doubt when I had the pleasure of witnessing the above picture, to my mind it is the best production I ever saw. It is far greater and better than "The Price of a Good Time" and a good many makes of films from different producers.

I am glad to say that I have booked "Borrowed Clothes" for one week for the Empress theatre.

I also think that Mildred Harris is more valuable to exhibitors right now and in the future since she is Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

Mildred Harris has always been a good money getter for me and I expect to do more so on "Borrowed Clothes." And I also wish to state that I have signed a contract with your salesman, Mr. Saks, for all future Mildred Harris releases. And allow me to congratulate you and your concern for having such a comer in the film industry as Mildred Harris.

Yours respectfully,

EMPIRE THEATRE.

Garson and Neilan Receive Big Offers

Producers Reported in Receipt of One Offer of $200,000 for the Negative of “The Unpardonable Sin,” Starring Blanche Sweet

In these days of big productions it seems nothing extraordinary to hear of as much as $100,000 being paid for a negative of some few film productions. But it remained for two independent producers to refuse just twice that sum for a negative of a nine-reel production recently completed.

According to reports emanating mostly from Los Angeles, Garson and Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet, has brought forth many liberal offers for the negative.

Harry Garson declares that he has already turned down a $200,000 cash offer and has not yet rendered a decision on another offer of $150,000, with a sharing contract which might double that sum.

Not a War Film

It is asserted that one particular attraction to the prospective buyer is that the war element does not predominate, and that "The Unpardonable Sin" is one of the really powerful productions of the year. Worried and芙蓉 are worn in the film, the theme is declared to be so intense otherwise that the presence of the brass buttons is scarcely noted.

Messrs. Garson and Neilan announce that territorial rights on this production are not for sale. They contemplate making a big special exploitation campaign and play the larger houses throughout the country.

Beginning New Year's week the production starts a run at Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles, and it is said that immediately following the showing on the West Coast the eastern premiere will be inaugurated at a leading Broadway theatre for a long run in New York at advanced prices.

Major Rupert Hughes' story of "The Unpardonable Sin" is said to be the biggest seller he ever wrote, and the book is reported as standing forth on all the best sellers of the year.

While not a war story, it is based on the world's greatest struggle, and, from all reports, it is full of intensely dramatic human interest.

Blanche Sweet comes back to the screen after an eighteen months' absence in what is declared to be the crowning achievement of her career. Moore is her leading man, and the entire cast is said to be especially strong and in keeping with the caliber of the production.

Miss Sweet is reported as already on her way back to Los Angeles after her short visit to New York, and will start immediately at work on another Garson-Neilan production.

Now in Nine Parts

After cutting and assembling and also inserting the various sub-titles, the producers find that it will run nine instead of eight reels, originally contemplated. And Messrs. Garson and Neilan both declare that there is no padding, but that the film is full of action and human interest in every foot of its nine reels.

The story starts in Los Angeles, after which the scenes quickly shift to Belgium. Blanche Sweet plays two parts, the wronged sister and the sister that bravely saves the wronged one.

Walter Beery is cast as Colonel Klem, the German officer who imposes "kultur" upon a defenseless American girl in Belgium.

Miss Sweet is "Dimmy," the young American girl who left Los Angeles for Belgium when she learned that her sister was in trouble. After receiving help in England, Dimmy arrives at the Dutch border, but discovers that her passport is useless.

While attempting to slip over the line at night she attracts the attention of a German officer. He happens to be Colonel Klem, the officer who had mistreated Dimmy's sister, and mistook Dimmy for her sister, Alice, as they looked so much alike; although he has had such a ruthless career with women that he does not even recall the exact circumstances of his original meeting with the wronged sister.

Crosses Belgium Border

Dimmy meets Noll WInsor, a young American, who promises to help her. On his next trip into Belgium he succeeds in smuggling Dimmy across the line. Colonel Klem discovers them and, still unable to recall where he had seen Dimmy before, he decides that she is a spy and has her subjected to the German method of searching suspect.

From then on the many tense situations are said to develop with astonishing rapidity. Dimmy finally foils the machinations of the German Government and is reunited with her sweetheart and sister.

The great difficulties of obtaining the final scenes of this production have already been noted. In one of the big scenes nearing the climax the health authorities in charge of the restrictions during the influenza epidemic stopped work on the production.

It required many doctors and twenty-five nurses armed with inoculators and the entire force wearing gas masks to finally receive permission to take the last stirring scenes of "The Unpardonable Sin."

Herbert Brenon Returns to United States

Herbert Brenon, who has been in England for the past eight months, has returned to America, it was learned yesterday.

Mr. Brenon left this country last January in response to a call from the English Government to make a British propaganda picture. Under the auspices of the Minister of Information, Lord Beaverbrook, Mr. Brenon has been engaged on its production ever since. Immediately upon its completion Mr. Brenon sailed for America, arriving on the S. S. Lapland a few days ago.

Mr. Brenon did not bring his latest production over with him, but he expects that it will be shown in London within the next few weeks. He did not wait for the premiere, however.

Mr. Brenon finds that the British field presents untold possibilities for the producer, but just what his plans for the immediate future are he has not divulged.

"Sahara" Nears Completion on Coast

"Sahara," the first of the Louise Glaum feature productions is rapidly nearing completion. According to those associated in the making of it, including the star, the supervising director, Allan Dwan, and the author, C. Gardner Sullivan, "Sahara" will be a 'potrormatic sensation of the new year.

Intensely dramatic, spectacular in settings and powerfully impregnated with the atmosphere of the East, Miss Glaum's initial super-vehicle promises to establish a new standard of the modern story in an ancient setting.

The dramatic role opposite Miss Glaum is taken by Matt Moore. Edwin Stevens has the heavy part, and Pat Moore, the four-year-old child actor, also plays a role.

Brabin Directs Next for Evelyn Nesbit

Charles J. Brabin, who directed Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife" will direct the next William Fox Standard Picture to be made by Evelyn Nesbit. Miss Nesbit is now finishing "Woman! Woman!" under the direction of Kenean Buel.

The Fox Film Corporation, it is said, is negotiating for the picture rights to a big popular novel, published recently, this story being considered exceptionally suited for Miss Nesbit's style of work.
Rogers Signs Up With Goldwyn

Goldfish Closes Contract at Cleveland
While on Tour of Country—To Be Starred in Human Dramas

WILL ROGERS, star of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who scored a personal triumph in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," recently released by Goldwyn, is the latest addition to Goldwyn's group of personalities.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, placed Rogers under contract during his visit in Cleveland en route to the Coast. The cowboy wit and lariat-thrower will be starred in original dramas, selected or written for him by Goldwyn authors.

Goldwyn has been negotiating with Will Rogers ever since "Laughing Bill Hyde" was released, because his personal success was so instantaneous and unquestionable that there could be no doubt of his future in the cinema. His quaint humor and remarkable humaneness have stamped him as the most picturesque star on the screen today.

The contract between the Goldwyn Corporation and Will Rogers was signed while Rogers was starring with the "Follies" in Cleveland. When the news of the affiliation was confirmed by Mr. Goldfish, the Cleveland newspapers featured the story in bold headlines, announcing the acquisition of the new favorite as "another achievement of Goldwyn."

The stories to be provided for Will Rogers will be big, gripping, human dramas of life itself. Following the expiration of his contract with Flo Ziegfeld, Rogers will move his family to Culver City, where he will take up his permanent screen work in the big Goldwyn studios.

Motion picture followers are enthusiastically applauding the acquisition of Will Rogers as a Goldwyn star. The success of "Laughing Bill Hyde" in every locality of the country won for Rogers a following that is equalled by few stars of the stage or screen. His radiant personality and his natural impersonation of the crook who was redeemed by the kindness of others charmed and delighted the most critical of screen adherents.

Blackton Picture Pleases Vitagraph

The reception given to J. Stuart Blackton's new production, "The Common Cause," at its initial presentation to exhibitors at the Rialto theatre, New York City, last week, is said to be duplicated all over the country in the Vitagraph exchange cities.

Private showings for groups of exhibitors have been in progress throughout all of the Vitagraph branch offices and the entire Vitagraph distributing organization is enthusiastic over the reception that is being given the picture.

Following its trade showing in New York, all of the trade papers were favorable in their reviews of the picture and their predictions of contemplated exhibitor success with the production.

Court Decides Suit in Favor of Pathé

In a suit instituted against Pathé Exchange, Inc., for an accounting for the receipts from the Pearl White serial, "The Iron Claw," claiming plagiarism and infringement of copyright, Prince Sarath Ghosh not only lost the case, but the court settled all the costs upon him.

The Prince had written several stories which were published in Pearson's Magazine, and had also prepared a sort of memorandum of ideas which might be inserted in a serial and submitted them to Pathé's scenario department. After the appearance of "The Iron Claw" he claimed that many of these ideas were used, according to report, but the court could not see it.

Universal Laboratory Almost Completed

J. M. Nickolaus, superintendent of the laboratories at Universal City, has informed the New York office that the rebuilding of the present laboratories is started and that it will be completed within a short time.

The re-built laboratories will occupy a structure 60 by over 100 feet.

Hun Fleet Surrender

UNIVERSAL executives are claiming the establishment of a new record for the expedient handling of a news film as a result of what has been accomplished in bringing "The Surrender of the German Fleet" before the public.

Having obtained pictures of the surrender of the German fleet, negatives showing the ceremonies were rushed to America on the Adriatic.

After waiting for the arrival of the White Star liner all of two nights and days, Universal representatives were able to get their negatives through the Customs House half-past four on Thursday, December 12.

Fort Lee laboratories obtained the negative one hour and a half later, and, after editing and cutting, the first print was shown at the Broadway theatre at ten o'clock the same day.

Universal Laboratory's

The Universal home office, New York, reports that it is in daily receipt of letters of commendation on various Jewel productions, the following being one of many received during the past few days.

Mr. J. W. Kliger, manager of the Hopkinson theatre, New York, played "Borrowed Clothes", November 30 and December 1, and has the following to say regarding business recorded on the feature:

"I think it would be unfair on my part not to inform you how I fared with your Jewel Production featuring Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes." The publicity for this picture was a mere trifle compared to what I spent for other pictures.

"I enclosed circular will enlighten you as to how I succeeded in making your feature break the record of the house.

"I ran 'Borrowed Clothes' in conjunction with an old Charlie Chaplin picture last Saturday day and Sunday and I wish to state that from start to finish S. R. O. sign was always noticeable."

Ann May Learns Stunts Plentifully

How you like to suffer three mishaps during one production which confined you to bed and then return to the studio to learn that your "next scene" was—hospital scene? That was the experience of Ann May, playing Barbara Rand in "The Family Honor," a Frank C. Keeney feature produced under Sidney Olcott's direction. The latter asked Miss May, who is only in her teens, to drop 75 feet from an "inn window" at Edgewood, N. J., and Miss Bay successfully essayed it but fainted upon being taken, unscathed, from the net. While Miss May is not distinguished as a "stunt" actress, her next scene called for a roll down an embankment. She had to be assisted to the top of the bank by "Griff," property man, as progress was not easy in the Vivandiere costume and wooden shoes that Miss May wore. But "Griff's" assistance, though well meant and usually efficient, failed for once and the actress stumbled over a rock and did a "backward fall" that was not in the picture. Gritty, she picked herself up and went to the spot of the embankment, where the "roll-off" for the camera was scheduled. This was over forty feet of ground, some of it very rugged—and Miss May woke up in her own bed at Hotel Breton Hall, Manhattan, with Dr. Erdman and a nurse close by in the place of Director Olcott and the cameraman.

Film Division Schedules Four

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information is distributing to exhibitors a leaflet announcing the U. S. A. Series, a collective series of tworeelers, each dealing with some vital war activity, illustrating the methods and the successful results attained. The first of the series will be released December 23rd, with a new release following every two weeks. The pictures in the order of their release are as follows: "If Your Soldier's Hit!," "Wings of Victory," "Making a Nation Fit," "The Bath of Bullets," and "The Storm of Steel."

"Midnight Patrol" Stars Cop

Ince Is Said to Have Made This Select Production Especially for the Policeman—Exhibitor Has Good Opportunity

THE corner cop has stood for a good deal in his more or less turbulent career, but the millennium dawn for this guardian of the peace is here at last, in the form of Select Pictures special attraction, "The Midnight Patrol." With the distribution of this big Thomas H. Ince production the policeman comes into his own, and also, the exhibitor has one of the richest opportunities for advertising ever contained in any picture.

Thomas H. Ince is said to have produced "The Midnight Patrol" for the policeman. In a recently published story, authorized by Mr. Ince, he declared that "The Midnight Patrol" was written and produced for the purpose of crediting the policeman with a few of his many unheralded achievements. The plot of the story is woven around the life of a young policeman, portrayed by Thurston Hall, depicting his rapid advance from the rank of roundsman to chief of the force. The scenes are laid in the Chinese section of one of the largest Western cities, while the story itself deals with the life of a Chinese underworld. Throughout the entire picture the policeman is the hero.

Without any known exception there has never been a picture in which the policeman, individually, and as a department, has been shown to such good advantage, and in the face of this it is easy to believe that the average policeman will be a ready champion and willing to aid in boosting for the exhibitors who show this special feature.

There have been several suggestions offered for enlisting the co-operation of the exhibitor's local police department in advertising "The Midnight Patrol." While a few of the suggestions might not appeal to the police in larger cities, there is every reason to believe that the police of the smaller cities and towns will willingly lend their efforts to push this picture.

Mr. Ince produced "The Midnight Patrol" with the welfare of the policeman in mind. It will be an easy matter, therefore, for exhibitors to arrange a private showing for the policemen of their town, and unless the calculations of the shrewdest students of human psychology go amiss, these knights of the night stick are going to be the best advertising medium in town. It will be possible, even, for some exhibitors who are on good terms with their police captain or chief, to arrange a short parade, or to have a squad of policemen stationed in front of their theatre on the day they show this attraction.

World Pictures Reports Great Prosperity

World Pictures reports that it is having the most prosperous period of its existence at the present moment, and that every branch exchange is doing at full capacity due to the renewed interest in motion pictures as the reflex of war conditions.

The World is reaching out with perfect assurance that it is seizing the moment at its flood tide. In addition to its regular weekly releases of pictures in which Montagu Love, Louise Huff, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Grecley, Jane Elvidge and Madge Evans are the stars, it has arranged for a number of specials, including "America's Answer," "Under Four Flags" and a picture of the moment entitled "What Shall We Do With Him?"

Nine Companies Active for William Fox

No fewer than nine companies are now at work, in the East and on the Pacific Coast, making pictures for William Fox, three of the companies having begun on new productions last week.

At the Triangle studio in Yonkers, J. Gordon Edwards is staging a super-production temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars." The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley, and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson, who wrote the scenario for "Salome."
Why Are We So Optimistic?

A Question Answered by Carl Laemmle

DESPITE the fact that the influenza epidemic dealt us a hard blow and the war brought many restrictions and limitations on film production, it is evident if any industry will "come back" so strong in 1919 as the motion picture industry.

Sounds optimistic, doesn't it? Well, there are many reasons why motion picture men should be optimistic.

The armistice has not only brought about peace, but it has created a new, lighter spirit among Americans. It will mean the return of two millions of our boys that have caused us much worry and heart ache, from the shell-torn fields of France, heroes every one of them. Their return will mean nothing less than the re-birth of a nation—a nation that has saved the world for righteousness and has asked nothing in return. Certainly this new spirit should create a wonderful change in business conditions.

With light-hearted, alert America again at peace, business should thrive as never before, for America will resume her industrial pursuits with renewed vigor. The motion picture industry will not be found wanting in enthusiasm or energy.

Among the returning heroes will be many writers, actors, exploiters. Many new writers with new and novel plots for photoplay production will spring up within the next few months and then there will be many old established authors with an abundance of new and appealing material for the screen.

It is not likely that taxes on various articles used in the production of films will be lifted for many months to come, but with a better market, producers will not hesitate to put more money into productions next year for they realize the future of the industry depends on a better product and better presentation.

The new year will bring motion picture producers aid from many new sources—among these the Government. The war has proven to Government officials the great good of the screen and as a result Uncle Sam has trained several hundred motion picture cameramen, laboratory men and even scenario writers. Many negatives obtained by army and navy signal corps cinematographers will be obtainable by film producers in the future and it is expected that the Government will give film men help in many other ways.

In speaking of the work of the Universal organization among its initial releases in 1919 will be "The Heart of Humanity," a photodrama produced by Allen Holubar, featuring Dorothy Phillips, and which possesses an unusually strong appeal to the theatre-going public, especially the women. This feature will be the biggest and most impressive Universal ever made.

This proves that we are optimistic.

Crowned Heads Enjoy William Fox Film

NOT only has "The Honor System," the prison reform film staged by R. A. Walsh for William Fox, had a big following in this country but in other countries also it is said to be creating a sensation by reason of its strong dramatic qualities and the message it carries. Copies of Christiania newspapers received by the Fox Film Corporation show that the King of Norway, the Crown Prince and other Norwegian notables recently attended a showing of "The Honor System" in the Cirkus Werdenstænder, one of the principal playhouses of the Norwegian capital.

The clippings from the Christiania newspapers show that unique honors were paid "The Honor System," as the film was accepted as a text recently which Mr. Morgenstiern, secretary of the Norwegian Department of Prisons, delivered an address for the reform of Norwegian penal institutions.

In its account of the showing the Aftenblatt, the leading Christiania newspaper, has this to say:

"There was a distinguished assembly yesterday at the Cirkus Werdenstænder—headed by the King and Crown Prince. Among the visitors were the members of the Storting, the Chief Justice, the president and several of the university professors, who naturally take a great interest in prison reforms. And it must be pointed out that the film, 'The Honor System', agitates very powerfully for reforms of the prison system."

New Reel a Success

That the Pathe Review, the new film Magazine of Interesting Topics to be released by Pathe every other week commencing January 19th, is going to be one of the most popular subjects ever issued by this firm, was evidenced last week when the first reel was shown to the trade on the Roof of the New York theatre.

Universal City Folk to Celebrate Christmas

Universal City will be temporarily forgotten Christmas Day, for employees of the great motion picture center will celebrate this year as they never have before.

Following the annual studio Christmas party December 24, stars, directors, supporting players, carpenters, laboratory men and photographers will scatter all over the Coast for their St. Nick parties.

Dorothy Phillips will spend Christmas with her husband, Allen Holubar, in New York, as will also Mae Murray and her director, Robert Z. Leonard.

Harry Carey will give a turkey barbecue at his ranch at Newhall, Cal., and about one hundred cowboys and their friends will participate in the celebration.

Carmel Myers will distribute baskets of food and gifts to the Los Angeles poor folk before her celebration starts, and Eddie Lyons will provide merriment for newsmen at a big Christmas party at the Los Angeles Newsboys' Club.

Lee Moran will be kept busy preventing his two-month old daughter from chewing on a new speaking teddy bear, and Priscilla Dean will motor over to Riverside to hear Christmas carols played on a mammoth pipe organ.

Edith Roberts and Mary MacLaren are going to celebrate their Christmas with Uncle Sam's boys, the former being hostess to a score of army aviators at her bungalow in Hollywood, while the latter will wait upon her naval proteges at San Pedro.

Maurice Salishbury will share his celebration at his Hemet ranch with chieftains of the Soboba tribe, and William Stowell will he himself to a mountain cabin to spend Christmas where the snow-covered ground will bring reminders of boyhood days.

Helen Gibson will perhaps be the happiest of the Universalites this Christmas, for her husband, "Hoots" Gibson, will return from a year's service in war-torn France on the twenty-fifth. Ruth Clifford will celebrate with her mother in her home at Los Angeles.

Bob Cummings Engaged by S-L Productions

Arthur H. Sawyer, general manager of the newly formed organization known as "S-L Productions," announced the acquisition of another well-known player to the cast engaged for the company's first picture.

Bob Cummings, the actor in question, is known to theatre audiences for his characterizations on stage and screen for the past ten years.

"Little Miss Hoover" Is Clark's Next Film

Marguerite Clark, Paramount star, who will next be seen in "Little Miss Hoover," a release of December 29th, has finished her newest Paramount picture, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and has gone on her long-deferred honeymoon, although her marriage to Lieut. H. Palmer son Williams took place last summer.
Goldwyn Reaches Its Second Birthday
Finds Self with World-Wide Organization and Exhibitor Contracts Numbering Over Six Thousand—Resume of the Business Shows Healthy Condition

According to an announcement this week, the chief points of Christmas cheer within the Goldwyn Pictures organization are: expansion and prosperity. The holiday season incidentally finds Goldwyn Pictures and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation celebrating their second birthday, all the while gaining in weight and importance and believed in and respected by all elements of the industry, especially by the more than 6,000 exhibitor-customers with whom Goldwyn does business under contracts.

In the estimation of Goldwyn officials, the picture industry does not present another parallel to the Goldwyn development. In the fall of 1916 Samuel Goldfish, then lately retired as chairman of the board of Famous Players-Lasky, decided to re-enter the industry on a larger scale.

Selects His Partners
Into his new organization he invited Edgar and Archibald Selwyn and the Goldwyn trade name represents a merger of the “gold” in Goldfish and the “wyn” in Selwyn. The initial Goldwyn policy was to produce and release annually twenty-six productions and the stars of these productions were Mary Garden, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott. Long before the first year of Goldwyn had come to an end, those who ruled the destinies of the organization had seen it attain the important position in the industry that awaited a producer of quality productions and realized that in its second year there would have to be a doubling of production to meet the demands of the theatre owners of the country.

In consequence, the second releasing year of Goldwyn began with an announced production of fifty pictures for the year and the celebrated stars offered by the organization were, and are, Geraldine Farrar, the Rex Beach productions, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore, a likeable leading man whose personal popularity grew to such a height that he was elevated to stardom.

On his recent cross-country tour of California, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, while stopping over at an exhibitors’ banquet in Minneapolis, dwelt on this point in the following words:

“Goldwyn we do not profess to be superhuman. Not all of our pictures have been perfect and not all of them will be, for that is an impossibility. But the measure of the big and fine things we have done and continue to do far outweighs the lesser things in which we have not been quite so successful, and everything that we do reveals a sincerity and intensity of effort by fine craftsmen seeking to achieve the better things in the motion picture industry.”

Heads Very Successful
Next in rank in the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to Mr. Goldfish comes Abraham Lehr, recently made vice-president and in charge of the company’s California studios in Los Angeles. Thirteen months ago he had never seen the interior of a studio and did not know positive film from negative film.

In the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation Alfred Weiss, one of the best known figures in the film industry, and F. P. Warren, for many years a successful editor and publisher of newspapers in several of the country’s larger cities, have been vice-presidents from the day the company was organized.

They have given their thought and effort to the creation of a distinctive, wholesome, unusual mechanism in which they have rewarded and advanced from the field the men who showed promise or achieved results for the company. Distributions are by no means formed over night, nor is good will a mere matter of clever exploitation and printed promises. It has to have behind it the strength of promises kept; of business honor and cleanliness.

An evidence of the nation-wide regard for Goldwyn is found in the fact that today, in a crowded industry of many companies, Goldwyn Pictures are shown in 50 per cent, and perhaps even more than that percentage of the total number of theatres in the United States.

Goldwyn in England
In Great Britain the Goldwyn distribution is in affiliation with the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., owned by Oswald Stoll, the largest amusement factor in the United Kingdom. In Australia the Goldwyn affilition is the J. C. Williamson Film Company, Ltd. The three managing directors of the Williamson interests, F. W. Thring, George Tallis and Hugh Ward, are all well known to American motion picture and theatrical magnates.

Gabriel L. Hess is the other member of the Goldwyn executive family. He is the secretary and treasurer of Goldwyn, as well as general counsel of the two Goldwyn organizations.

The biggest step taken by Goldwyn in recent months was the decision to move all production work to California, where the big Triangle plant changed its name to the Goldwyn studios, giving the company one of the finest producing studios in the industry. There, in association with Mr. Lehr, are Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn’s art director, and J. G. Hawks, one of the most successful scenario men in the industry.

Happily the only known literary man, remains in New York, where at this time he devotes the greater part of his work to discovering and purchasing the literary material used by Goldwyn.

Goldwyn publicity, which has had much to do with the advancement of the company because of its soundness and freedom from fallacies and absurdities, is in charge of Dwight S. Perrin, director of publicity. Louis Sherwin is general press representative in charge of magazine promotion. Mr. Perrin is a well known newspaper man of long experience, and was the first editor of the New York American Graphic section. Mr. Sherwin was for eight years the dramatic critic of the New York Globe, with a record for independence and soundness of view. On the Pacific Coast Norbert Lusk, detailed from the home office organization, is in charge of publicity and exhibitor exploitation.

One of the most carefully developed departments of Goldwyn is its exhibitors’ service department, in charge of Hunt Stromberg, a young St.-Louis advertising agency man.

Distribute for Others
Shortly after its organization the Goldwyn Distributing maintains its readiness to distribute the worthy and reputable productions of independent producers. Coincident with this it was announced that Hall Caine’s “The Manxman,” would be the first outside picture taken for distribution. “For the Freedom of the World,” a Philadelphia-made picture, directed by Ira M. Lowry, came next, being one of the striking independent market box-office successes of the past year.

“Smiling Bill” Parsons conceived the idea of Capitol Comedies, and gave their distribution into the hands of Goldwyn.

Three Seexart productions, “Honor’s Cross,” “Social Ambition” and “Blue Blood” have met with success during the same period.

A new organization, owned by Philadelphia capitalists, headed by Senator Clarence Wolf and including Ira M. Lowry and Norman Jefferies, has likewise sought the advantages of Goldwyn distribution. This is the Betzwood Film producers, known as “For the Freedom of the East,” a romantic melodrama featuring Lady Tsen Mei, the first Chinese star of the screen, and long known in vaudeville.

The newest and most ambitious step by the Betzwood organization is the production of six Star Series pictures with Louis Bennison as their new and certain-to-be-liked personality. Incidentally, Louis Bennison’s screen debut is set for December 22, and his first story is “Oh, Johnny!”

Shown in War Review
The passing of Prussianism, the coming of peace and the era of reconstruction will be among the incidents shown in the Official War Review Number 24, for release December 9. Further scenes will be given of the stirring actions of the armies of the Allies along the extended front. The fighting tanks and the more formidable appearing English monsters are shown in their work of finally crushing the Hun.
Correct Casting Very Essential

King W. Vidor, Author-Director, believes that the Director capable of Selecting Proper Casts is Most Successful

King W. Vidor, who wrote and directed "The Turn in the Road" for the Brentwood Film Corporation, believes that if the author of a story is also the director and has real casting ability, the result should be a perfect rendering of the characters in the story.

"It is as difficult to pick the most important item in the entire art of making a feature picture as to name the most indispensable part of an automobile," declared Mr. Vidor.

"However, since the action of the play could not be shown without people to act, it should at least be safe to claim for the cast equal importance with other items and to require for the success of a director the combination of directing ability and casting ability. The leaders in the directing profession are popularly credited with possessing a sixth sense in choosing their players, but it would probably be nearer the truth to say of them that, like thorough workmen, they learned their art through long apprenticeship, close study and hard work until their trained glance will single out the one person fitted for a part from the many available in less time than a beginner could make notes for a careful analysis.

"Since no two persons can, in the nature of things, form identical conceptions of the same story, the ideal condition would seem to be that where the author directs his own picturization."

"This is the condition obtaining in the filming of 'The Turn in the Road,' which was written and directed by myself for the Brentwood Film Corporation, and which is expected to be ready for release very shortly."

"This picture demanded the extreme of realism and naturalness in its treatment, for it deals with life of today as it is known by the average American," continued Mr. Vidor. "Its humor, pathos, suspense, and climax are drawn from every day life. Over action or over characterization would ruin the picture. The utmost naturalness was required in the portrayal of every main part."

Famous Players Makes Staff Changes

A number of changes in the sales force of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have been announced by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution.

S. R. Kent, formerly associated with Hiram Abrams in the administrative bureau at the home office, and more recently branch manager at Kansas City, has been made special representative to exchanges.

Fred C. Creswell, formerly sales manager at the Chicago office, also becomes special representative to exchanges.

W. R. Scates who, before becoming associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was manager for General Film at St. Louis and Milwaukee and handled "The Crisis" in Middle Western territory and has recently been dividing the responsibilities of the Chicago branch with Mr. Creswell, now assumes full charge of the office.

Albert Austin Re-engaged by Chaplin

Albert Austin, who appeared with Charlie Chaplin as a member of the Fred Karno Company during its tour of England, France and America, has been put under contract by the comedian to play leads in future First National releases, and to assist him in production.

Mr. Austin left the varieties stage for motion pictures when Mr. Chaplin was producing for Mutual Film Corporation, and has continued to work with him up to the time the contract was signed with First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

He's Out of Sight!

There is one official actor in J. Stuart Blackton's newest super-features, "The Common Cause," now being booked by the Vitagraph Distributing Corporation, who is quite important to the production although invisible. He is Captain Richard Haig, the well-known British author-officer. Captain Haig distinguished himself in the memorable battle of the Somme. He and his "Treat 'em Rough" crew were then sent to America to man the tank "Britannia" in its recruiting work here.

General Reports Inquiries for "Married Virgin"

Since the announcement of the Maxwell production release of "The Married Virgin," which will be at all General Film Company exchanges in a few days, inquiries have come into the General Film Company exchanges regarding the nature of the film.

"If the title arouses that much interest among exhibitors," said Joe Maxwell, the producer, "it ought to arouse the strongest possible sort of attention from the public.

It is stated that the story of "The Married Virgin," which is by Hayden Talbot, mingles thrill with psychology in a strange domestic complication. There are five principal characters and all of them have very strong work to do.

How a rich man's skeleton in the closet steps out to open the door for a social marauder to enter the household forms the nub of the plot. Vera Sisson, Rodolfo di Valentia and Kathleen Kirkham form the trio of stars who figure most prominently in the ensuing complications.

Three Leading People in "The Married Virgin"

Chosen for their peculiar adaptability to the roles which they have chosen to portray in "The Married Virgin," Maxwell Productions announces three leading people in this feature offering.

Kathleen Kirkham, Vera Sisson and Rodolfo di Valentia are seen as principals in the story by Hayden Talbot.

Vera Sisson was formerly leading woman with J. Warren Kerrigan. She has already done pictures for Metro and for Biograph.

Kathleen Kirkham is said to do the best work of her career in "The Married Virgin."

Rodolfo di Valentia, who has appeared opposite many great screen stars, is cast as a new type of villain. Other well known people in the production are Edward Jollesen, Frank Newberg and Lillian Leighton.

Jinx Threatens Filming of "Challenge Accepted"

When Director Edwin L. Hollywood completed the scenes taken at Camp Dix, Wightstown, New Jersey, for the first Arden photoplay, "The Challenge Accepted," in which Zena Keele is starring, he sighed in relief, for a jinx threatened the work to the end.

The military scenes required but the work of a day, and Thursday was the day planned. No sooner had they arrived than a heavy rain fell and continued all day.

The next day the sun shone bright and everything promised well until the cameraman fell off a fifty-foot platform and crashed through the roof of the Y. M. C. A.

Fox Sees Successful Year Ahead

Having Completed Successful Year, William Fox Is Confident That Coming Year Will Be More Prosperous

William Fox Presents Charlotte Walker in "Every Mother's Son"

HAVING just put the Fox Film Corporation through the most successful year of its history, William Fox is confident that the coming year will be even more prosperous for the motion picture industry.

The end of the war, he states, is bringing a rapid removal of the restrictions which for the last year and a half have surrounded the production and exhibition of films, so that in 1919 the motion picture business will be operating on a peace basis.

"If ever the motion picture producer and exhibitor had a chance to make money, it is in the year now before us," continued Mr. Fox. "The war, with all its uncertainties, its anguish and its hardships, is gone, and the people are getting back to normal.

"It is safe to say that the United States never faced a period of greater prosperity than that which now lies before it. With Europe prostrated by more than four years of war, this country stands as the only one upon which the rest of the world can rely for food and the material necessary to reconstruction. Thus 1919 will see the beginning of an era of development that will be without parallel in the history of the world.

"This commercial and industrial development can mean only one thing for the motion picture—prosperity. But if the war has made America dominant among the nations of the earth, it also has worked changes in the people's outlook on life; and the motion picture producer or exhibitor who fails to take heed of these changes will find himself in grave difficulties.

"One of these changes is a transformation in the taste of the public. For a year and a half the American people have heroically deprived themselves of many luxuries—even necessities—to help win the war. Now that the need for the Fox film it is unthinkable that they will be content with the same entertainment that has satisfied them in the past.

"For four years the world has gone down into the depth of sorrow and anguish. The people have been looking at a tremendous screen, on which they saw real heroism, real sacrifice, real drama, real sorrow, real happiness. And it stands to reason that they will demand more than cheery travesties, insipid love stories and picture plays without body or soul.

"The plays the American people will demand are pictures of real, flesh-and-blood human beings, enacted real, human life stories.

"It has long been my contention that the day of the 'pretified drama' was passing; that the American people deserved something better, and the Fox Film Corporation's basic policy is to give these better plays—big, vital stories enacted by stars and supporting casts of recognized talent and drawing power. This policy, needless to say, will be continued during 1919—and will be developed.

"Another factor which will have an important bearing on the motion picture industry next year is the return of some 4,000,000 men to civilian life."

Mix Two-Reel Comedies Released by Fox

In his tour of all the William Fox exchanges in the United States, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has found that one of the big difficulties confronting the exhibitors is that of obtaining two-reel comedy subjects of sufficiently high quality.

Conversations with numerous exhibitors is declared to have revealed also a strong demand for all Tom Mix subjects.

Because of these two factors, the Fox Film Corporation, it was announced this week, intends to release its two-reel Tom Mix comedy subjects, which, as part of the Foxfilm Comedy brand, were among the most popular comedies.

It was these plays that brought Tom Mix before the motion picture public of the country, and, because of his work in them, went a great way to establishing him on his present foundation.

The Tom Mix two-reel comedy releases will be started January 12, a Tom Mix comedy being released every other week alternately with a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy.
Newest Maciste Film Is Shown

Giant Italian Star Appears in "The Liberator," a Twenty-four-Reel Production Controlled by Raver

"Whoever heard of asking a critic to contemplate twenty-four thousand feet of pictures in one production, much less sit through it all and then try to remember what he saw?" said one reviewer when requested by Harry Raver to attend a press showing of "The Liberator," his newest production starring the Italian soldier-star, "Maciste," who was also the star of Gabrielle d'Annunzio's "Cabiria," and Mr. Raver's more recent importation, "The Warrior.

Yet the original plan of a complete showing of "The Liberator" was carried out, except that two sessions of two and one-half hours each were allowed the reviewers instead of one long stretch of five hours, the total time of projection. And, according to Raver, the experiment was a success beyond his wildest expectations.

It proved, he said, his contention that the exhibitor should know all about a series of pictures before he books them and should not be kept in ignorance about the quality of any number of episodes of a production.

That there was some slight diversity of opinion among the critics may be accounted for by the fact that they had never before sat through a complete series and that the episodes were not broken up by synopsis titles, as is the custom when releasing such a production.

At any rate, each reviewer had his opinion and none of them agreed, which, as Harry Raver explained, "leads me to believe I have an unusual production, and, without doubt, should arouse comment."

Commenting further on the reviews of "The Liberator," Mr. Raver said: "One reviewer said the production lacked the weirdness and thrill of the American serial, while another said it was the most weird and unusual film he had ever seen. The first reviewer objected to deep sets and massive interiors and said there were too few close-ups.

"Another said a noticeable quality was the massiveness of settings and the minuteness of detail so rarely found in American productions, and that close-ups were used only when necessary to register an important bit of business and not shoved in to satisfy the vanity of a star."

"The Liberator" went into production over a year ago and suffered many difficulties owing to the demands on members of the cast for military duty.

Harry Raver is said to be considering several offers for the purchase of the entire North American rights before giving definite decisions in the matter of selling individual territories to buyers of previous "Maciste" productions.

G. R. Meeker General Sales Manager for World

World Pictures announces the engagement of George R. Meeker, lately connected with the Division of Films, in charge of the distribution of the official Government pictures, as general sales manager of World Pictures. Mr. Meeker will assume his new position on January 1.

Mr. Meeker's entry into the picture business was inaugurated when Klaw & Erlanger entered into an arrangement with the Biograph company, following which he became an exhibitor and specialized on taking over small theatres, building up their business, creating circuits and then disposing of them.

After successfully following this line of endeavor, he was engaged by the Paramount company and put in charge of their short reels, both as regards manufacturing and distribution. Mr. Meeker is credited with having created the pictograph, the first magazine ever projected on the screen.

Peggy Shanor Portrays Egyptian Queen

Peggy Shanor was requested by the Film Division of the Red Cross to appear in its Christmas Roll Call Picture, "The Greatest Gift," which was shown at the Rivoli theatre during the week of Dec. 15.

Miss Shanor was considered the perfect type to portray the character of the Egyptian Queen, in the first episode, and it is reported that immediately following Miss Shanor was engaged by the Famous Players to play an important part in "Here Comes the Bride," with John Barrymore, directed by John Robertson.

Harris Resigns from U. S. Division of Films

Raymond S. Harris, special representative of the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, has resigned to become sales manager of the Outing-Chester Film Company, Inc., producers of the Outing-Chester "camera adventures."

Mr. Harris had charge of the official presentations of Government war pictures in many cities, and by his co-operative work with S. Barrett McCormick was said to be in a measure responsible for the success of the presentation of "Under Four Flags" at the Circle, Indianapolis.

Pathe Names New Toto Release

Handling baggage has long been a fruitful source of humor for the newspaper funny man, the professional humorist and the comedic artist, but the invention and the satire of all of them are said to have been outclassed by the riotous comedy creature, "Check Your Baggage," with Toto, "the flexible, fun-making clown," who flip-flapped into screen comedy through the Rolin Film Company. "Check Your Baggage" will be released by Pathe December 22d.

Frank Kirchner, Operator for Watterson Rocher, and the Directing Staff Filming the "Smiles" Picture at Charlotte, N. C.
Nesbitt Supplies Rhodes Picture

The story of Billie Rhodes' first feature, "The Girl of My Dreams," which is controlled by the Robertson-Cole Company and will be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, was written by Wilbur Nesbitt.

"The Girl of My Dreams" is an adaptation of Mr. Nesbitt's story of the same name which has been widely read throughout the country. It's construction is such that it readily adapted itself to motion picture form, and in its leading part it gives Miss Rhodes opportunity to display her charm and ability as a full-fledged star.

A cast has been supplied Miss Rhodes which includes Jack McDonald, Lamar Johnson, Golda Mawden, Jane Kekley, Frank McQuarrie, Benjamin Suslow and Leo Pierson.

Goldwyn Shows Faith in Bennison

The prediction that Louis Bennison will be a highly successful screen star and repeat his stage successes received verification this week when Goldwyn, when Goldwyn managers in every branch office of the company held exhibitor trade showings of "Oh, Johnny!" the first Betzwood Film Company production in which Bennison is to greet the motion picture public.

"Oh, Johnny!" is the first of six Louis Bennison Star Series productions which are to be released exclusively through Goldwyn and on which contract bookings are reported as being very large. This first production will have its premiere throughout America on December 22d.

Universal Films Wilds of Kentucky Mountains

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal, will shortly head a motion picture expedition into the wilds of the Blue Ridge mountains where Alice Spencer Geddys Lloyd has built a community center at Caney Creek in Knott County, and the surrounding illiterate mountaineers live in windowless cabins.

How these uncouth men, women and children who did not know the country was at war are being educated is a story of such surpassing interest as to once again bring home with added force that truth outvivals fiction.

Dembow Returns to Fox Exchange

Honorably discharged from the army after having won a commission as second lieutenant, George F. Dembow, formerly manager of the Philadelphia exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, returned last week to his former duties, succeeding Jack Levy, who has severed connection with the William Fox organization.

Lieut. Dembow entered the army early last summer. He soon was recognized as officer material, and was sent to an officers' training school. He was commissioned second lieutenant just before the armistice was signed.

"Woman" Cites Showmanship of Tourneur

THE remarkable way in which the various territories are selling for Maurice Tourneur's epic production, "Woman," suggests an interesting angle upon the producer. Maurice Tourneur is first of all a showman. This, of course, is the chief essential of the successful man of the theatre or the screen.

Maurice Tourneur productions possessing this quality, are pictures that appeal to that other showman—the imaginative and successful exhibitor. There is always some one element that stands out of them, gripping and holding the interest. This has been apparent from the first in Tourneur offerings. His famous production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip" for instance, has a sensational railroad collision, which was the biggest sort of thing in the way of gripping the interest. In a word, it had the punch of the showman.

Step by step, this has been clear in every Tourneur film. His exquisite production of the Maeterlinck symbolic fantasy, "The Blue Bird," introduced to the screen the new impressionist art of the theatre. Here again was the big thing to appeal to the showman.

"Sporting Life," Mr. Tourneur's adapted Drury Lane melodrama, possessed some remarkable fog scenes in the London streets. Aside from their striking atmospheric beauty, they started everyone talking. How did Tourneur get the startling fog effect in a studio, for the street scenes were built in his Fort Lee studio? Even experts have been puzzled—and the showman's art is once more apparent.

But in "Woman," most of all, is this quality manifest. "Woman" makes the biggest appeal of all the Tourneur productions to the innate sense of the showman. For "Woman" is absolutely unique, unlike anything ever done in the films. Indeed, it completely defies classification. "Woman" is neither a spectacle, a drama or a melodrama. It is something radically new to the celluloid drama and there is no one word to describe it.

Cecil B. DeMille Arrives in New York City

CECIL B. DE MILLE, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studios, arrived in New York from California on his annual business trip, to discuss production plans of the western organization for the coming year. He was accompanied on his transcontinental trip by his brother, William C., also of the Paramount-Artcraft producing organization.

While in New York, it is reported that Mr. De Mille will also consummate a deal with a famous playwright for an original story which he will produce for Artcraft release on his return to California in the near future. The story is said to be of a particularly interesting theme, disclosing an idea unlike anything ever presented on the motion picture screen. William C. De Mille, in collaboration with the dramatist from whom the story will be purchased, will adapt it to the screen.

"I am here purely on business but hope to see a good show or two before I get back," said Mr. De Mille. "My stay here will only be of short duration and there is much to be attended to.

"We are planning greater activities for our West Coast studios than ever before. Things there when I left were resuming their former busy aspect before the epidemic closing order went into effect. At present I am negotiating on a new type of story which I will stage as soon as I get back to the studios. It has always been my ambition to produce pictures that get out of the beaten path both as to story and technique in production."

Gerald C. Duffy Engaged By Bessie Love

Bessie Love, the star who recently became affiliated with Vitagraph productions, has just engaged Gerald C. Duffy, magazine writer and editor, as her personal representative.
Coming Program Offerings

Four Metro Comedies Shortly

A Quartette of Metro Productions in the All-Star Series Will Be Released in January

Four Metro All Star series productions, headed by an equal number of stars, comprise this firm's contribution to screen attractions for the month of January.

While each is announced as a comedy, cheerful in tone, packed with action, and wholesome pathos, great care is said to have been taken by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to supply the exhibitor and public with stories widely different in theme, treatment and locale.

The stars represented in the list are Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Ethel Barrymore, and May Allison, appearing in the order named. Two of the comedies are adaptations from stories in national magazines, one from one of the great stage plays of the last decade, and another is from an original scenario by an army officer writer.

The first of these is "The Spender," starring Bert Lytell. It will be released throughout the country on January 6th. It is somewhat different from Mr. Lytell's recent pictures, being purely comedy and therefore a departure from the robust melodramas to which this young actor has devoted much of his efforts since becoming a Metro star.

"The Spender" recounts the adventure of young Dick Bisbee, nephew of old "Tightwad" Bisbee, septuagenarian boss of the Bisbee tanneries and a millionaire. Dick is told by his uncle that he must spend all of his fortune in the revolutionary theory to his uncle that it is more blessed to spend than to hoard.

Mary Anderson, "Sunshine Mary," plays opposite Mr. Lytell in the sympathetic role of Helen Stetson. The other characters are announced as being in exceptionally competent hands, among the players being Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, as old man Bisbee; William V. Mong and Clarence Burton.

"The Spender" is from Frederick Oren Bartlett's original which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker and Albert G. Kenyon. It was directed by Charles Swickard, with Robert B. Kurrle operating the camera.

"Oh! oh! Annice," Viola Dana's All Star Series contribution, is a picturization of Alexine Heyland's novel which appeared originally in the Woman's Home Companion. It is said to be one of the most entertaining and swiftly moving and best rounded features in which this comedienne has yet appeared. It is scheduled for January 13th.

Ethel Barrymore's newest Metro picture is a photo version of her stage success, "Lady Frederick or the Divorcee," from the pen of W. Somerset Maugham. It will be released January 20th.

"In for Thirty Days," an original story by Lieutenant Adjutant Luther A. Reed, U. S. A., adapted by George D. Baker and T. Jefferson Geraghty, and directed by Webster Cullison, is announced as a fast and sparkling comedy romance. It will be released January 27th.

The story revolves around Helen Corning, a wealthy and aristocratic young woman, who delights in speeding her automobiles.

Triangular Offers Crook Play by Hill

Robert Hill has written what is said to be an unusually interesting crook play, "Crown Jewels." It is offered by Triangle as the release for December 22, and Claire Anderson is the featured player.

It tells of a King attempting to collect the cash value for his royal gems by shipping them to his banker in the United States.

Wehlen Film Released

Metro Pictures Corporation released as its All Star Series production on December 16th "Sylvia on a Spree," starring Emmie Wehlen. Though widely different from her previous pictures, "The House of Gold," "The Duchess of Doubt," "The Shell Game," "The Trail of the Shadow," in theme and locale, Miss Wehlen's newest vehicle is said to be a worthy successor to those entertaining photo-dramas.

Gloria Joy Makes Her Bow on Pathe Program

The Pathè program for the week beginning December 22 introduces the infantile star, Gloria Joy, in the first of three comedies, released two weeks apart, which deal with the surprising and amusing adventures of a precocious and lovable child.

The first is called "The Fortunes of Corinne" and, besides setting an admirable setting for Gloria, is said to be a charming study of rural life and character, not omitting the philosophic tramp, whose stories start the wee heroine in her wanderings into the big, big world.

Toto, the clown, who apparently has no bones in his structure, gives laughter value to the Rolin comedy, "Check Your Baggage."

The eleventh episode of the patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, is called "Betwixt Heaven and Earth," which title gives a fair indication of the perils faced by the heroine high in the air with no apparent avenue of escape.

Official War Review No. 26 gives a collection of views of the great struggle from the snow-covered heights of Italy to the lowlands of France, and shows some of the very courageous work done by the Americans under heavy fire.

Singapore is one of the strange and populous ports of the eastern seas, and, during the war, has come into more than usual prominence. Post Travel Series No. 24, which deals with both the island and the city, is widely instructive and entertaining.

Besides the curious native views of place and people, one is given an impressive idea of how Great Britain has made this a most important port for her shipping.

Five "Mutt and Jeff's"

With five pictures scheduled for release, December is a big month for exhibitors looking the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

"Pot Luck in the Army" is the title of the Mutt and Jeff subject released December 1. December 8 "The New Champion" was released, and December 15 was "Hitting the High Spots."

"The Draft Board" and "Throwing the Bull" are the last two releases for December.

Walthall Special Reaches Screen in January

An announcement probably fraught with more than passing interest for exhibitors is that Thomas H. Ince's production of Louis Joseph Vance's story, "The False Faces," in which Henry B. Walthall plays the leading role, will be released as a Paramount-Arcaft Special January 12th.

This production was directed by Irvin V. Willat under Mr. Ince's personal supervision, and according to Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, it more than measures up to the standard it has been determined shall be maintained in this series of twelve special productions for the year.
Vitagraph Names December 23 Films

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of December 23rd has been scheduled as follows: Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "Boarded Assets," featuring Harry T. Morey. From the story by Raymond S. Spears. Directed by Paul Scardon. Serial, two parts, "In the Coils," Episode No. 10 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst. Big "V" Special Comedy, two parts, "Pluck and Plotters," featuring Larry Semon.

New Red Cross Pictures Through General

The newest Red Cross Films which are being released by the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross include three subjects called "New Faces for Old," "Homeward Bound" and "Russia the World Problem." These one-reelers will go through General Film Company exchanges as regular Red Cross program subjects.

"New Faces for Old" has already been reviewed by the Bureau, and is considered the strongest subject of the series. It shows how soldiers in France, badly disfigured, are transformed by the aid of especially modeled silver wire masks to look just like they did before they were mutilated.

"Bug House" Pictured in Nestor Comedy

Universal will-release the week of December 30 a Nestor comedy, "It's Great to Be Crazy," which is said to pictorially explain the pleasures of "bug house."

"Caught in the Act"

"Caught in the Act," featuring Peggy Hyland, is announced as the current William Fox Excel Pictures release. In this play, which was directed by Harry Millarde, Miss Hyland portrays the role of a young society debutante who undergoes a number of adventures.

First National-Talmadge Contract Reviewed

THE new contract which Jos. M. Schenck arranged for Norma Talmadge with First National Exhibitors' Circuit is calculated to give this star a wonderful opportunity to do even greater things on the screen. One official of the First National says that she is the youngest screen star in the world to be accorded the honor and distinction of being at the head of her own company.

"Unlike some well known screen folk who are said to have attained prominence through favoritism," he continued, "Norma Talmadge has reached the top rung of the ladder of success through her own personal efforts."

"According to Miss Talmadge's version of her entrance into the film world, it just happened." She was a fourteen-year-old school girl in Brooklyn when she made her choice between a professional or business life. One night she and her mother were attending a Brooklyn photoplay house, when the little actress saw a picture that so impressed her that she decided to become an actress herself.

"That's what I want to be," she told her mother, and Mrs. Talmadge knew from past experience that it was all over but the cutting. The next day she and Norma visited the Vitagraph plant, and the latter was given a job. Her years of experience with the Vitagraph in all sorts of roles enabled her, when at last given a real chance, to bloom forth in leading parts equipped with an exceptional technique and fitted to make the most of her opportunity.

"From the Vitagraph Miss Talmadge went West to join the Triangle forces, where she was starred in a number of successful dramas and comedies. Since becoming the head of her own company Miss Talmadge has brought out a number of big successes, among them 'Panther,' 'Poppy,' 'The Moth,' 'The Secret of the Storm Country,' 'Ghost of Yesterday,' 'By Right of Purchase,' 'De Luxe Annie,' 'The Safety Curtain,' 'The Heart of Wetona,' and others.

"Norma Talmadge had no previous theatrical experience, except that which falls to the lot of the average girl in school through amateur theatricals, and she is therefore truly a product of the screen—has grown and is growing up with the business, and First National is glad to handle her productions," he concluded.

"Every Mother's Son" Soon to be Released

Cutting of the film having been completed, "Every Mother's Son," R. A. Walsh's drama of mother love and peace reconstruction, is scheduled for early release, it was stated this week by the Fox Film Corporation.

Persons who have seen the picture at private showings in the Fox home office state that it is the best work Mr. Walsh has done.

Charlotte Walker heads the cast which enacted the play. Miss Walker, as star of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and other stage successes, is regarded as one of the leading actresses of the American stage, and it is said that she was obtained for this production at an unusually high salary.

Another member of the cast is Gareth Hughes, well-known young American actor. His work in the Beulah Dix play "Moloch" and other big Broadway successes is said to have stamped him as a player of rare talent.

In connection with "Every Mother's Son" the Fox Film Corporation, it is reported, has prepared exceptionally fine advertising and publicity material.

Berst Believes in War Pictures

Insists That Present Prosperity of the Box Office Will Be Sustained—Cities Own Film as Proof

COMMENTSING upon some phases of post-war conditions, the immediate outlook for the motion picture industry in general, and prospects for exhibitors in particular, J. A. Berst, president of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., strikes a cheerful note, which incidentally includes this month's for those producers who find themselves with film on hand which the swift ceasing of hostilities has led them to regard as not merely untimely but practically out of date.

Speaking first on some of the immediate effects quite following upon the passing of the war, Mr. Berst is reported to say: "One of the most notable effects that the immediate armistice is having on the motion picture industry is diametrically opposite to what many people seem to have expected, that is, if we may take as a criterion the box-office, which, of course, is directly indicative of the prosperity of the industry.

"As to the class and nature of subjects that will be in favor now that the horrible thing is over, there has been a tendency to suppose that the public will refuse to look at pictures that may more or less directly be reflective of the great struggle over there, and producers have consequently been apt to consider their war pictures as a thing either to be hurried into quick showing or sent to the scrap heap.

"But consider for a moment. Interest in a drama so tragic, so widespread, so democratically vital to a whole world as was this war, cannot cease over night. With the return of the several million American troops who will for a long time be pouring back to home and friends, not in any sudden bunch as it were, but steadily and at a few thousands at a time, there will be for the general public and for the individual household in particular a well sustained and lively interest in the picturization of things that took place over there and an eagerness to see, even though fictionally enacted and screened, adventures, romances and thrills that have their locale in France. A post-war interest remains and survives and will seek gratification in the best class of stories that have France for their setting, even though such stories still touch upon the war. Another form of this interest is evidenced by the eagerness of the traveler and the tourist to rush abroad and visit the scene of the war and the moment a passport can be secured.

"A vast upheaval and a titanic struggle such as the world has passed through in these last years cannot fail to leave its effect on theatre-going people, and must of natural necessity long be reflected in screen plays that have more or less of the locale of the great struggle for background and its theme for story, especially if there be too some touches of comedy relief.

"Of the forthcoming output of United Picture Theatres of America one superpicture, that of Kitty Gordon in 'Adele,' is based on happenings in France, and the splendid demand for that more than bears out my expectations of a continued steady call for this class of offering.'"}

First Two of 10-20-30 Series Announced

The launching of the Ten, Twenty, Thirty Series, consisting of twelve special productions at the fixed rental prices of ten, twenty and thirty dollars a day, which was interrupted by the influenza suspension, is now a fact and the first picture will be released this month by this title. Julius Steger's extra attraction, starring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, is first of the set. This picture was all ready for release when the influenza wave swept over the country, so it can now be booked for immediate presentation.

Second of the series is "Life's Greatest Problem," another production of a special nature, which emphasizes the determination of the company to present the very best pictures available on a fixed price basis.

It is J. Stuart Blackton's pretentious offering featuring Mitchell Lewis, in which Mr. Blackton's co-operation of Charles M. Schwab and Edward N. Hurley. Immediate distribution has been arranged for taking advantage of the recent opening of the Film Clearing House exchanges, which are equipped to handle the pictures of independent producers and groups of producers and also series of special productions.

The Ten, Twenty, Thirty Series will be booked as separate and distinct from all other pictures using Film Clearing House for physical distribution, and bookings will be taken care of by the Independent Sales Corporation, also recently organized and making a specialty of furnishing sales forces for productions going through the clearing house.

Carlton Reviews the Year

"The year just past," says Carle E. Carlton, "has been the most unique in the annals of motion picture history because of the uncertain conditions brought about by the war, the influenza epidemic and other unprecedented and unforeseen occurrences since the inception of the motion pictures, and readjustment is consequently now in order.

"The coming year ought to be, and can be if the exhibitors will bend themselves into a unit as in other commercial and artistic enterprises, the most important year in the history of the film business."

Mr. Carlton does not believe that the coming year will in any manner have a derogatory influence on those pictures with a war background if they are such films as have a romantic or heart gripping interest, as well as a depiction of the life of our boys in the trenches.

Repeat Dates Reported on "Ashes of Love"

On "Ashes of Love," the latest production released by the Graphic Film Corporation, exhibitors are booking "repeat" dates, in many cases in theatres where return dates are not in custom, according to a Graphic official.

The cast includes James K. Hackett, Efie Shannon, Mabel Julene Scott, Ruby de Remer, Paula Shay, William B. Davidson, Hugh Thompson, Dora Mills Adams, Thea Talbot and William Bechtel.

Ivan Abramson, its author and director, is busily engaged at the Biograph Studio in making the next Graphic release under the title of "The Echo of Youth."

Gaumont Special in New York to First National

The Gaumont Company announces that its one-reel special, "Driven from the Seas," showing the surrender of the German fleet to the Allied navies on November 21, 1918, will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 509 Fifth avenue, New York City.

This territory covers Greater New York, Long Island, Westchester, Putnam and Rockland Counties, N. Y., and northern New Jersey.
Leonce Perret Completes "Star of Glory"

Announcement from the offices of the Perret Productions indicates that Leonce Perret, who has been at work for some months on "Stars of Glory," which features Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, has completed the production and that arrangements for its premier presentation are in progress.

Adolphe Osso, who has been assigned to negotiate the release of the production, and who will handle the exploitation of the contemplated Broadway showing, has already contracted for a prominent electrical display on Broadway advertising "Stars of Glory."

Francis de Croisset Sees Perret's Productions

Among the many visitors to the Metro studio to witness the Leonce Perret productions was Francis de Croisset, the author of "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Hawk," etc.

It was Lieut. de Croisset's first visit to a film studio in this country, and he expressed his high admiration for the efficient methods employed here in contrast to those in his own country, France.

He also congratulated Leonce Perret and Mme. Alice Balche on their productions and paid his respects to the Italian film artist, Miss Dolores Cassinelli.

Houdini Serial Opens in Southwestern Territory

F. M. Sanford, manager of the B. A. Rolfe Productions of Dallas, announces that the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," opened in his territory, embracing the States of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, the middle of December.

First run of the serial in Dallas was secured by the E. H. Hulsey interests controlling a large number of theatres in the Southwest. They will also play the serial in their other houses outside of Dallas.

Mr. Sanford reports the Hulsey interests contracted for "The Master Mystery" after seeing the first three episodes.

Good War Pictures Here to Stay Says Rapf

"It is ridiculous to hear all these wise prophets of the film business, and we only have wise prophets in the film business," said Harry Rapf. "Fortunately I have been connected with the theatrical business for so many years that I have had a chance to listen to all the rail birds, but in no end of the theatrical business do these pessimists come to the fore as in the motion picture business. On all sides you hear the wail—war pictures are through, war pictures are done, no more war pictures; and why?

"The Civil War has been used as a background for plays, vaudeville sketches and pictures, and they have all been successful. "Since the great war of the world has come it is only natural that pictures with the war as a background should hold attention. The movie is not different from the stage, the newspaper or the magazine.

"Every newspaper today has its headlines matter referring to the soldiers and to war material," continued Mr. Rapf. "War is the basic idea of every cartoon and every editorial. And so with the magazines. Why should the movie be different?

"I claim for my latest picture, 'Wanted For Murder,' which was written by Mr. S. Jay Kaufman, a newspaper man, has a story which contains a human love romance. This accounts for the instantaneous success of the picture. It is different—it is not just a picture, but a big idea made into a picture."

Film Market Sees Rush for Serials

Current interest in motion picture serials indicate that they will command a very important place in the programs of exhibitors during the next year.

The Film Market, Inc., announces that it has orders from three different producers for serial stories ranging in length from fourteen to twenty episodes of two reels each.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has sent announcements broadcast inviting authors and writers to submit scripts. The three types of stories most desired are, first, a mystery serial, involving unique and sensational feats, no matter how difficult to perform or hair-raising, and, second, an international detective story, of at least twenty episodes, which will permit a company to actually tour the world for "local color," and use every conceivable means of transportation or conveyance for escape, chase and follow-up.

Billy West Comedies Sold for New England

R. D. Marson Attraction Co. of Boston has bought the New England rights to Billy West Comedies.
Many Foreign Sales Reported of New Houdini Serial

Export & Import Film Company, foreign distributors of "The Master Mystery," B. A. Rolfe's fifteen-episode super-serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, announces through its president, Ben Blumenthal, the closing of contracts whereby the rights of the serial have been sold in the United Kingdom, Australia, Scandinavia, the Far East, Argentina, the Philippines, Cuba, Porto Rico and San Francisco.

Negotiations are now on for the sale of the rights to the serial in France, Spain and Portugal, and are expected to be closed any day.

A significant feature of this announcement is that Export & Import Film Company has disposed of practically two-thirds of all foreign territory before the serial has been released in New York.

The terms obtained by Export & Import Film Company are said to be higher than any ever paid for a serial before.

D'Annunzio's Works May Be Screened by Perret

One of the recent rumors in film circles is the screening of Gabriele D'Annunzio's works with Dolores Cassinelli as star. The famous Italian poet's works are well known to every lover of the drama, having been presented in this country by the celebrated actress Eleonore Duse.

Traced at the Metro studio, where Miss Cassinelli is working on her third Leonce Perret Production under the direction of Mme. Alice Blache, she would neither admit nor deny the rumor of her appearing in D'Annunzio's works.

She admitted, however, her frequent interviews with Ugo D'Annunzio, son of the famous Italian poet, who is in this country on a special mission from the Italian Government, and has been for some time directing the big Caproni factory in Detroit.

Bookings for Houdini Serial in New York

Carey Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, temporarily located at 1600 Broadway, New York, controlling the New York City and State rights to the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," announces that contracts have been closed whereby "The Master Mystery" will be shown over the entire Mayer & Schneider circuit, comprising fourteen houses in Greater New York. The contract is an unprecedented one for Messrs. Mayer and Schneider, who have never before booked a serial to play in all of their houses.

Another account secured by Effano for "The Master Mystery" is David V. Picker.

Eight Territories Sold on Selig-Mix Re-issues

Exclusive Features announces that it has already sold eight territories for its recently acquired Selig re-issues of two-reel western dramas featuring Tom Mix.

The territories already sold are as follows:

Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, Southwestern Film Corporation, 1911; Commerce street, Dallas, Texas.

Iowa and Nebraska, Sterling Film Co., Omaha, Neb.

Northern New Jersey, Frank Gersten, Inc., 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

Michigan, Strand Features, 201 Film Exchange Building, Detroit, Mich.

Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Quality Film Corporation, 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida, Savini Films Inc., 63 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, Masterpiece Film Attractions, 1235 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa.

W. H. Productions Teaches Reissue Exploitation

W. H. Productions Company asserts that it is doing a great deal toward teaching the exchange and the exhibitor that a good re-issue can be put out on an equal basis with the very latest productions. Every step in the presentation and proper exploitation of the reissue is being outlined to exchanges through correspondence, it is said, and through the service sections and advertisements in Motion Picture News.

It is reported that inquiries are being received daily from the most reliable exchanges in this country on the W. H. Productions Co. four series of Kay Bee Western Dramas and Keystone Comedies. The territories are being disposed of so rapidly that in some cases where several exchanges were bidding for the same territory, the difference of a few hours decided the purchaser of these re-issues, according to report.

Gaumont News Reels Set Record

"The best issue we have ever seen!" That is how Gaumont laboratory men characterized Gaumont Graphic No. 38, after screening it for inspection before shipping to the independent exchanges for release on Friday, December 13th. Certainly the editors have set a high mark in the annals of news-reel-dom in this issue, which opens with thrilling scenes in France showing how our boys are marching into Germany.

Another war picture in this issue shows the farewell review of 50,000 soldier boys at Camp Funston, Kansas, saddled because the Huns gave up before they had a chance to cross the ocean. And still another big parade is contained in this number.
Good Business—Plus Patriotism

It is good business for the American film producer to turn to the export field now with every ounce of the energy that has made his success in the domestic market.

And it is also—good patriotism.

It's good business because from the four corners of the earth rich markets are calling to the American producer.

But it is good patriotism because all the commerce and industry of America—on which the health of the domestic film business depends—must look to the far flung markets for sustenance.

And what better carrier than the American motion picture to bring the American message of efficiency, square-dealing and energy to strange climes and foreign countries?

What messenger more able to go forward with the Flag—securing the conquests of Peace as it has helped the winning of War?

* * *

It is good business for the foreign buyer and theatre owner to read the words of American producers and exporters in this supplement. It's good business for the American producer to heed the messages of the reliable exporters advertising in this issue.

And—it's good patriotism.

Because American films are not going out into the foreign market alone—they are going to meet stiff competition, stern competition.

New York is going to cross swords with London, Paris, and Rome in clean business rivalry. New York will meet the desperate come-back effort of Berlin—camouflaged, no doubt, by the good name of neutral nations.

* * *

It's good business for the American producer to decide that he must now handle the export field with the methods of good business.

And it's good patriotism.

There are no more "dumping grounds."

The trumpet call of "Quality" is echoing from every distant market. It is the call that American producers can answer—if they will. And it is the word they will respond to, we believe.

Hand in hand, American producers and American exporters must go forward with the slogan, "There are no more dumping grounds."

Hand in hand, American producers and American exporters, ready to clasp the hands of the world's buyers with the good fellowship of Quality and honest business methods, will—Send the American Film forward with the American Flag—girdling the globe in a Starry Banner.
THE GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION extends to the motion picture industry in general the superior facilities of its Department of Foreign Sales.

The Goldwyn Department of Foreign Sales will handle any production of quality in the foreign markets.

The Goldwyn Department of Foreign Sales will also act as confidential buying agent for any responsible foreign concern.

Increased office space for the conduct of this business has been taken at No. 509 Fifth Avenue, New York City, where all communications relative to the foreign film trade should be addressed.

"Filming Our Way" a Prophecy
Inter-Ocean Globe Reprints Editorial Used in Export Section of Motion Picture News October 12

The Inter-Ocean Globe, journal of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and described as the "first house organ ever issued by an American film exporting firm," will print the following upon its editorial page in the January issue.

"Late in September the Motion Picture News called on President Cromelin of Inter-Ocean for a statement for the News 'Exporters' Special Section,' then in preparation. Mr. Cromelin contributed some thoughts that were printed in the October 12 News. In the light of recent events these remarks—evolved six weeks and published one month before the signing of the armistice—gave a remarkable line on the disintegration of the German 'home front' and the means that brought it about:

FILMING OUR WAY TO BERLIN
"PRESIDENT PAUL H. CROMELIN, OF INTER-OCEAN, TELLS OF FAR-CARRYING POWER OF OUR FILMS

"While our armies and generals are smashing their way through hostile territory, the American motion picture is carrying the American Idea—of Democracy and Freedom—to the heart of Germany, in Berlin and elsewhere, via the screens of the countries that border on Germany.

"This is due to the wonderful aid given to American film producers by the Committee on Public Information, who have secured for our films shipping facilities despite almost unsurmountable handicaps. And the committee has not aided us because our films were 'propaganda.' Very few of the films sent to the neutral countries bordering on Germany were of that type.

"But the films that did go illustrated the best American ideals, the highest American thought and spirit of absolute Democracy that reigns here. Where neutral peoples would object to propaganda films they did not object to plain stories from real life. The fact that such stories depicted the high moral standards of Americans didn't make them objectionable—quite the reverse.

"Of course, there is a constant ebb and flow of feeling between Germany and the nations on her border. Despite rigorous passport regulations there is really more border-crossing than in peacetime, for the reason that Germany has so many articles to secure, and she is shut out of all but the few neutral markets. Where she had access every country before the war, her representatives are now permitted in only a few, and the result is that these few never saw so many Germans as they do right now.

"These Germans are necessarily affected by the sentiments prevailing in the countries that they visit. So are the citizens of these neutral countries, who in return visit Germany. And the screens of these neutral countries are crystallizing public sentiment, bringing it to a knowledge of the true aims of America and Americans, slowly but surely removing us from the enemy-conceived role of profiteers and mercenaries.

"We have won the heart of the neutrals through the screen, and across their borders and into Berlin is flashing a new, true picture of men who fight for high principle. This great truth is fatal to the plan of the Berlin militarists. It shakes the morale of their populace, makes them ask questions, diminishes their faith in their leaders and chills the war spirit. Thanks to the screen, we are literally 'filming our way to Berlin'!"

Goldwyn Closes Big Deal

It became known this week that the Goldwyn Company had renewed its contract with the Co-operative Film Company, of New York, for the release of all Goldwyn productions in Ecuador, Chili, Peru and Bolivia.

Atalivar Zepeda is now the Co-operative representative in South America. The new Goldwyn contract includes all pictures released by Goldwyn in the latter part of 1918 up to 1919.

Export Film Requires Careful Editing

L. H. Allen, President of Foreign Markets Distributing Corporation
Declares That Conscientious Translating and Careful Re-editing are vital in holding foreign trade

MANY United States producers are too prone to consider the world market outside their own country as a convenience and the monies received for foreign rights as so much velvet, according to L. H. Allen, film exporter, located in the Godfrey Building, New York City.

"Distributors and exhibitors in foreign countries expect the same personal service from American producers as they receive from Italian and French producers who pre-dominated so strongly before the war and bid fair to come back stronger than ever," said Mr. Allen.

"They should realize that when Italian and French manufacturers receive an order from a foreign country they carefully re-edit the film, including title and sub-titles and translate them to fit in perfectly with the peculiar needs of the particular country purchasing the film.

"Even the lithographs and heralds are furnished by the Italian and French concerns, reprinted in Spanish, if the film so sold is going to Spain or South America.

"This is the service that nearly all the American producers neglect and possibly believe that it is not very essential. Some of the American producers make a slight effort to meet this condition, but owing to the ready market they have been enjoying in foreign fields of late they seem content and apparently appear to believe that their film is in such great demand that these services can be passed on to the buyer to perform," continued Mr. Allen.

"But those who neglect this personal service preparation may soon find that the war is over and that fierce competition will face them in the very near future.

"The small army of Italian and French directors here in America at present have absorbed all our ideas, and when the studios reopen in Italy and France there may be quite an exodus of able directors to Europe.

"It is a well-known fact that pictures can be produced in either France, Italy or Denmark at much less cost than in America. They are going to give an international angle to their productions that few American producers are far-sighted enough to present.

"There is an international standard; that is, a picture can be made with the scenes and theme so arranged that the production will be just as valuable in every country throughout the world as it is now in just one particular country.

"Of course, the American producers expect that since they have established the star system they will not only hold their own against all prospective competition, but will gain more business from year to year.

"While the star system will keep the American films from being driven out of the field entirely when the competition again starts, great inroads on the export of American made film will certainly be made, and in a short time their gross business may even revert to what it was in 1914.

"I prefer to be an optimist rather than a pessimist, but I do want to impress upon the producers of America the absolute necessity of preparing their films for the foreign market with the same careful attention that they give the home territory.

"There has been such an overproduction in the United States that it was not so difficult for a foreign buyer to select, out of the great number of films produced, a certain number that might appeal to his own country after careful re-editing and conscientious translating.

"American capital will assuredly interest itself in financing foreign studios. There promises to be no lack of capital, according to the various authentic sources of information I have at hand. The competition will return stronger than ever.

"Just to show the careful work necessary to prepare an American propaganda film for a territory inhabited mainly by people who only understand and speak Spanish, I will relate my experience in preparing the Vitagraph production of 'Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation,' for the Philippines.

"In the first place, I needed a title easily comprehended, that would apply cover the theme. I therefore invited twenty persons, many of them consuls, and some of them professors who had a perfect understanding of Spanish.

"The title chosen, unanimously, after several were submitted was 'Barbarie,' which title was the direct antithesis of 'Womanhood,' but still the only title applicable for that feature in that particular territory.

"I then had to completely re-write the prologue and afterwards, as the United States had entered the world war, I changed all the sub-titles and added new descriptive matter (all in Spanish, of course) to bring it up to the minute as an effective propaganda film.

"It was the same way with 'Civilization' when I bought it for Mexico. Just because the Mexicans did not care for Foreign Market Distribution of Motion Pictures

727 SEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.

Big Field Open, Says Sidney Garrett

SIDNEY GARRETT, prominent in foreign fields, notably in the London and the Paris markets, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and associated in an executive capacity with the Mundus Film Company of Paris, lays stress on the fact that the producers in America must look to the needs of the foreign buyers and specialize accordingly.

“The war opened up big fields in the foreign market for the American producer and it’s up to the producer to cover these fields with as much if not more American-made product than he did during the war when there was very little competition to meet.

“According to statistics compiled by experts,” continued Mr. Garrett, “only about 65 per cent of the American product reaches foreign lands. All of it should reach every nook and corner of the globe. There isn’t a reason in the wide world why it shouldn’t. The field is there, the demand is greater now than ever before, but everything won’t go. The producer must ‘deliver the goods.’ When he does—then 100 per cent of his product will reach the most isolated country.

“For some reason or other, the American producer has the impression that many of the foreign countries are not worth consideration. The sooner these producers get this idea out of their heads the sooner will Americans be able to point to the fact that their product is not only 100 per cent quality but is reaching 100 per cent of the civilized world.”

JAPAN FOREIGN BUYERS, Resident or Oversea, are advised that Vitagraph Productions can be secured for these territories. If interested, SOUTH AFRICA get in touch with me promptly.
Glucksmann Keeps Pace with Times

New Splendid Theatre Near Completion in Buenos Aires While Organization Adds to Its List of Theatres—Owns Twenty-four Outright

FIRST to introduce motion pictures and the phonograph in Argentina was Max Glucksmann, film importer, distributor and exhibitor, with a chain of theatres in South America.

For several years a New York office has been maintained in charge of Jacobo Glucksmann now located at 110 West Forty-sixth street, and the concern was established in 1891. It was as early as 1895 (twenty-four years ago), when Mr. Glucksmann was exclusive agent in South America for Pathé Frères. All foreign subjects and, in short, split reels, formed the entering wedge for the film in Argentina.

The Glucksmann family has watched the film industry grow from a puny baby to a robust man, and they have such confidence in its continual development that they are at present just completing a half-million-dollar theatre in Buenos Aires.

That thriving city has a population of 1,500,000 at present and contains about 150 theatres, of which number the Glucksmanns own several and rent seventy-five.

The new theatre is nine stories high, by 100 feet wide, and has a seating capacity of 2,200. The Spanish people enjoy good music and, besides a huge pipe organ, a twenty-four-piece symphony orchestra has been installed.

"The Splendid" is the name of the new house, and it is an exclusive motion picture theatre, although a complete stage has been built and fitted up. One innovation is that during the extremely hot summer months the sides of the theatre can be manipulated so that the audience is practically sitting in the open air while enjoying the performance.

Max Glucksmann has his headquarters in the building and also maintains exchanges in Argentina at the following cities: Bahia Blanca, Cordoba, Corrientes, Mendoza, Rosario and Tucuman. In Chile exchanges are in Valparaiso and Santiago, while Glucksmann film exchanges can also be found in Montevideo, Uruguay and Asuncion, Paraguay.

When they buy pictures for this South American market the sub-titles are translated and changed into Spanish, which is the language there. The Houdini serial is the latest purchase of the Glucksmanns, and among some of the recent features bought for South America were sixteen Empire and All Star mutuals and eighty-seven five-reel Metro features.

Edna Goodrich and Pearl White are said to be very well liked in that territory. The releases of Balboa, Metro, Pathe, Triangle, American, Selig and Essanay have been bought and are said to be prime favorites with the South Americans.

In Argentina, Chile and Uruguay the Glucksmanns own outright twenty-four theatres. "The Finger of Justice," a six-reel drama, has recently been purchased, and also "The Still Alarm" and "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggie Hyland. All the Mutual-Chaplin releases have been circulated down there and Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann declares that Mr. Chaplin registers big.

Besides the film exports, Mr. Glucksmann is sole South American agent for Simplex projection machines and also handles a complete line of North American accessories for the South American trade. The Victor talking machines are also controlled by them for that continent.

Buenos Aires is a cosmopolitan city, and Mr. Glucksmann asserts that many New York people who have visited there state that they would rather live there than in Gotham, and that it also compares favorably with Paris for action, entertainment and life.

What will prove to be momentous and welcome news to all citizens of the United States of America, Mr. Glucksmann reserved to the last; and here it is:

"While before the world war the Italian and French films were the most popular and predominated to the extent that 90 per cent, of the films shown in South America were from those two countries, with America furnishing only 10 per cent., that position has been reversed radically during the past few years," said Mr. Glucksmann.

"At this time it is difficult to get any kind of a crowd out to see an Italian or French film, while the American-made films are packing them in. They have made their choice so definite that at this time the United States producers are furnishing 90 per cent. of all the film shown in the four principal countries of South America."

New Bureau to Aid Exporters

FROM Washington comes word that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is organizing a special statistical service section for the purpose of furnishing regular monthly tabulations of imports and exports in more detail than is contained in the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States.

The plan is, instead of merely listing the total amounts of exports of various articles, to show the various countries to which the exports were made, and so on, giving greater details on all of the information previously furnished.

It is the aim of the bureau to extend this special service as far as facilities will permit. Trade organizations and exporting companies are invited to submit requests for special statistical information.

"Eagle's Eye" Has New Name Abroad

"THE EAGLE'S EYE," the Detective Flynn serial that proved popular in this country is now being announced in England under the title, "Count Bernstorff's Secrets." It is being shown in nineteen episodes, of two reels each.
Little Talks With Foreign Buyers—No. 20

BUYERS OF "THE VICTIM" WILL BE SURE TO PURCHASE THE TRANSGRESSOR

(They will thank the day they read this Talk no less than that on which "No. 13" appeared in The News)

"THE TRANSGRESSOR" is by the producers of the very successful "VICTIM." Therefore we took over the foreign rights eagerly. Especially when inspection showed just as "punchy" a picture. IT IS SUITED TO THE TIMES, as it warns against the extremists of all kinds that the governments and peoples of all lands regard with disfavor: calls for social reform, but of the sensible sort. Like "THE VICTIM" it may be worked with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller. The mob scenes in this picture are said to be the most thrilling ever shown in a melodrama made in the United States.

Will Enlarge "Fulco" Offering in Spring

EUGENE H. KAUFMAN, head of the carbon and accessory department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and the man who introduced the Speer Carbon to the foreign markets, formerly controlled by German carbon manufacturers, is firm in the belief that the American-made carbons are permanent factors in the foreign field.

"They are no longer mere subjects for experiment and they are distinctly not war-time fill-ins. Our information is the direct testimony of foreign cinema men who have bought them. Their own letters to us tell the tale. The American-made Speer product has stood all tests. These foreign purchasers have settled down to permanent use of it. Many of them have made long-time contracts that they knew must outlast the war. These contracts alone establish that the German-made carbon is out, to stay out."

"The figures on Speer foreign sale are little short of phenomenal. Recent items, for instance, are 100,000 sent to Australia, India 160,000, China 10,000 and Brazil 27,000. Of course, the original chance to place them came through the elimination of enemy-made carbons by war conditions. But the market had to be held through sheer superiority of product. Certainly a year is long enough to tell you whether you have that. It was our Speer experience that impelled us to negotiate the recent contract for the foreign rights of the Fulco accessories. The world-market is waiting for good American goods and it wants them permanently."

Mr. Kaufman announced that the first offering of six Fulco specialties on the foreign market would be enlarged in the Spring to ten articles, because of the call for American products Inter-Ocean finds exists. He is awaiting H. G. Harper’s reports on the Far Eastern field.

Arthur Lang in Buenos Ayres
On South American Tour

ARTHUR I. LANG, our well-known Nicholas Power friend, has reached Buenos Ayres in his South American girdling tour in the interest of the Power machine.

In a recent issue of Impartial Film, the Buenos Ayres trade journal, Arthur is given a send-off which would indicate considerable popularity for the Simplex representative in Argentine film circles.

Glucksmann Releasing Holmes Serial Successfully

ANNOUNCEMENTS from Argentine declare that a cordial reception has been given there to the latest serial released by the house of Glucksmann. It is the successful American production, Helen Holmes in "The Lost Express." Serials of this type have always been popular in this territory, the house of Glucksmann having many successes to its credit, notably in the memory of local film men, the Kalem outdoor serials.

"Maciste" Now Showing in England

THE "MACISTE" serial which Harry Raver is preparing to exploit in the United States, is now being shown to the trade in England, preceded by a bang-up advertising campaign. An eight page two color insert in a recent number of The Bioscope was one noteworthy feature of the advance work. The London and Counties Film Bureau, Ltd., of London, controls the United Kingdom rights.
Ziehm Gives Views on Conditions
Manager of Goldwyn Export Division Thinks Two Years Will Straighten Situations Out to Normal

The commercial world is to undergo an intensive reconstructive period and the foreign market, as relates to the motion picture industry is to be one out of thousand lines of businesses that will be radically affected—for better or for worse. In the opinion of our foreign trade experts, it is going to be for the better.

But a noticeable change will not be effected, in their opinion, until after the expiration of two or more years because as Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's foreign export department, says, "it is going to take that length of time for France, Italy, England and other warring nations, to rehabilitate the motion picture output in their respective countries and place it on a plane where they can supply the demands of their subjects."

"All this must be taken into consideration, that productive activities, in all foreign countries, during the war," continued Mr. Ziehm, "and it is going to take the producers two years, or more, to get in the running again. Until the expiration of that time, there is going to be little change in the market as it exists today.

"But when that time arrives American producers want to 'watch their step,' for they have got to meet the strongest kind of competition. The foreign producers can produce pictures much cheaper than the American producer because labor is cheaper, none of the enormous salaries that the American producers pay their stars, are paid in foreign lands and the so-called 'extras' are hired for almost nothing per day.

"All this must be taken into consideration even though they might seem trifling to the producer on this side of the water. Of course, such a situation as the cheap labor offers must be met indirectly by the American producer, but it can be met and in only one way—the production of quality pictures in fair and square treatment of the foreign buyers.

"Another phase of the foreign market conditions that must be improved if we are to meet this competition which will surely act as an obstacle to the bettering of conditions, and that is the one that pertains to payments. As everyone knows who has been associated with the foreign trade, everything in regard to payments has always been on a cash basis and was necessarily so because no arrangements have ever been made, except in a few isolated cases, for the foreign buyer to get credit.

"The man who can get thirty or ninety days credit in any line of business is the one who, if he be a good business man, is going to 'turn over' his profits in that length of time and he is the one who is going to operate successfully. In many instances, the man who cannot get this credit, cannot operate at all. And here lies an instance of the commercial end of the foreign export business which can and should be improved for the benefit of hundreds of well-meaning buyers who could and would do business that is, under the present system, lost to the American producer.

"As I said, in some instances such a credit system exists between the foreign buyer and some of the American concerns, in some countries. The money draft is the happy medium through which some of these concerns act but, unfortunately, there exist few such relations between American concerns and foreign financial markets. This, then, is one branch of the foreign business that should be taken up and an exchange system established through which well-meaning buyers in foreign countries could get credit, even though it be only a twenty day extension."

"During the war," continued Mr. Ziehm, the American product found a ready market in foreign countries. Because of this and because of the fact that, in many instances, the Frenchman, the Englishman and the Italian, were given the opportunity to see only American-made film, owing to the cessation of productive activities in their respective countries, there has been a demand for American product created in foreign countries. The foreigner has been educated to the photodramatic value of the American drama, the little touches in production and the peculiar manners of our talent, have all been brought to his attention and he likes the American product for this reason and he is going to insist upon having it.

"You all know what this insistence means—it means that the exhibitor in foreign lands is going to demand the American product and it will necessarily follow that the foreign buyer is going to accept the product because he knows that his trade wants it.

"But, regardless of the demand, if the American producer is not going to do all he can to facilitate matters, if he is not going to work hand-and-hand with the foreign buyer and give him those little considerations which mean so much toward facilitating business in all lines, then French, the Italian and the English and all other foreign producers are going to step in and squash the demand for the American product; that has resulted from the war.

"It is my opinion that the American producers are going to keep the lead that they have taken and they are going to do so by virtue of fair and square treatment of the foreign buyer and the establishment of a foreign exchange system and will help the fellow that hasn't a million dollars back of him but who is shrewd enough to turn his money over and honest enough to meet his debts."

Supply of Films and Appliances Not Equal to Demand.
Call for Assistance from America

By Jos. W. Rowbottom

The condition of motion picture affairs in Egypt are such that a fine and promising enterprise has been reduced to a state of practical inertia, insofar as concerns progress. Since every industry is conducted on a basis of supply being at least equal to demand, if the supply fails the whole machinery of the industry becomes clogged. comparatively few films, owing to war exigencies, have been imported into Egypt during the war, and conditions, in the light of future prospects are precarious—so bad that when recently, on invitation from Members of the Trade, I reviewed the industry in Egypt, I made a promise that aid should come from America and England as quickly as conditions would allow. A column in a Cairo newspaper, the Egyptian Mail, was placed at my disposal for review purposes, and in this I said:

"... and in my next letter to the Home Trade I shall make urgent representations for assistance on behalf of exhibitors in Egypt. ... I am going to ask the film exporters of England and America to accelerate supply and generally render what assistance is possible in these days of restricted sea accommodation that Egypt may have smooth running, flickerless delectable pictures on a par with those exhibited at home. ... I consider this is due to Egypt."

Spanish Influenza Reaches Argentine

The Spanish influenza epidemic struck the Argentine film men about the same time that it did those of the United States. Early in November the municipal authorities in Buenos Ayres ordered all theatres closed as a move to check the spread of the plague.

However, there was a grain of cheer in the situation for Argentine theatre owners. Recent difficulty in securing shipping space from the United States had produced such a scarcity of film subjects that the managers were entirely willing to stand a short shut-down period. Reports in export circles would indicate that within the past few weeks conditions in shipping to Argentine have improved a bit.

Export Films Need Editing

any mention of Christ in any film, I had to eliminate all mention of Christ in 500 feet of the prologue.

"Hand-painted titles are appreciated by most of the foreign exhibitors. There are so many little things that will help America retain this trade that a thorough study of the peculiar needs of each country is very essential if the American producers want to keep this foreign trade. "It will no longer come to them unsolicited, on a platter. There are lots of red tape also in meeting all the export and import requirements of the various countries. This involves careful study also, as the laws are so varied among the different nations," concluded Mr. Allen.

Probably one of the best versed men on South American film conditions and equipped to appreciate the rapid strides that have been made by the distributors of American productions in these markets during the past two years is L. H. Allen.

Eighteen years of his life have been spent in Spanish speaking countries, such as Argentina, Brazil, Spain, Cuba and Porto Rico; one of the many hard-working though often unappreciated trail blazers for American business.

For the past two years he has been quietly and unobtrusively building up a safe and sound export business with the various brands which he controls for certain of the foreign markets, though giving the greater part of his attention to the distribution of Vitagraph productions to the Spanish markets, in which he specializes.

Some of the most recent films handled by Mr. Allen are as follows:

"The Fighting Trail," a Vitagraph production, for Brazil, Argentina, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Philippine Islands, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

"Vengeance and the Woman," a Vitagraph production, for Argentine, Brazil, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Philippines, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

For Chile and Peru, Mr. Allen sold the five following Vitagraph productions:

"Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," was sold for Brazil, Chile and the Philippine Islands. This was the Vitagraph special.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was sold by Mr. Allen for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay, while "Woman in the Web" was sold both in the Philippine Islands and Mexico.
“American Productions Gain Steadily”

M. H. Morhange, of Argentine, Declares Popularity Will Easily Withstand After-War Competition

“American films need not fear after-the-war competition. They will never be displaced from their commanding position in the South American market. Their popularity has been too well established and on too solid a foundation for any of us to shy at the prospect of renewed production activity by manufacturers in other countries freed from the ravages of war.”

Such is the opinion of M. H. Morhange, head of the Greater New York Film Service, of Buenos Ayres. Mr. Morhange handles all of the Vitagraph productions in Argentine and Uruguay—fifty-two a year, plus the big specials and the serials. Also, on his recent trip to New York, he staged a master-stroke with the purchase for his territory of “Hearts of the World.”

“Naturally,” he continued, “American productions will not enjoy the absolute freedom from competition that they have during the four years of war. French productions were once very popular in South America, and it is natural to expect that they will be seen again. The same applies in lesser degree to Spanish and Italian productions.

“But South American audiences have become acquainted with your American stars and American type of production. They like both. And with wide open market conditions they are enabled to get the best of quality.

“You know, the Argentine market is probably the greatest absorber of films for its size in the world. The theatres have a daily change of program policy, modified somewhat to meet a peculiar condition. All of the theatres show two features every day, booking each production for two days, however, and rotating so that there is one new production on the bill each day. The production that is new is made the headliner, the one that is being held over being secondary.

“You can see that with such a policy there is plenty of room for all the meritorious productions that can be offered. The theatres throughout the territory, especially those in Buenos Ayres, are of a very high standard. The rentals secured, while of course not to be compared with those paid in this country, are satisfactory when we consider the quantity used by an exhibitor under the two-a-day plan.”

Mr. Morhange estimates that there are about six hundred theatres in the territory served from his Buenos Ayres headquarters.

Quite an unusual distinction for a film man in foreign territory is borne by Mr. Morhange. He is one of the few who received their training and experience in American film producing organizations, having been connected with Vitagraph, Fox and World before entering the Argentine field.

And another distinction: War broke out on August 4th, 1914. On August 11th Mr. Morhange sailed for his native France.

The plain facts tell the story. Between the lines you may read the story of Verdun and the Somme, and of the wounds that released Mr. Morhange from service in 1916.

Harper Writes from “Somewhere on Board”

INTER-OCEAN FILM CORPORATION has just received a letter from Horace G. Harper, Far East field representative, written “somewhere on board ship,” out of San Francisco, en route to Australia, mentioning this paper’s account of his send-off.

Readers will recall that Mr. Harper, who before joining the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, was for many years connected with Australasian Films, Ltd., as buyer and exchange manager; was commissioned by Mr. Cromelin to spread the gospel of American films and accessories in New Zealand, India, Dutch East Indies, Japan, China and the Philippine Islands, besides Australia. A fight on junk films, through a campaign of education, is an important object of Mr. Harper’s long journey. The “News” told of this and also of the farewell dinner given the traveler by the Inter-Ocean staff.

Mr. Harper writes: “I like the ‘News’ story of my departure, but there were two names in the list of guests that I distinctly failed to recall as having been present. Are you sure that the publicity department gave out the correct list, or was I so happy that night that I could not remember who was there? But, generally, a happy man on such occasions sees double, instead of making eliminations!”

The photo the ‘News’ printed, showing the final handshake in front of ‘Inter-Ocean Building,’ was a good ad for the photo shop next door but not for ‘Inter-Ocean Building.’ You ought to have gotten a regular photographer like Louis Brock to pose it. As it was, when I saw the picture in the paper I thought you were all a ballyhoo for that photo shop on the right-hand side of the cut!

“The ‘News’ ran a very faithful interview. I hope that I live up to the plans I outlined about my trip. But there is no reason that the junk dealer should come back. By their deeds ye shall judge them.” By my deeds with brand new American films you will decide whether I have routed the junk dealers or not.”

Mr. Harper remarked in the letter on the prosperous appearance of the Coast Shipping Industry. He said that the “American flag was back on the Pacific.” The Inter-Ocean man’s first stop in Australia will be in Sydney, where he will establish headquarters at the Hotel Australia.

Italian Films Invading Argentine

“IMPARCIAL,” of Buenos Aires, reports that the scarcity of American films, due to cargo restrictions from the United States, has created a condition enabling Italian productions to secure some attention in the Argentine market. That trade journal is authority for the statement that representatives of Italian companies sold twelve subjects during the first week of November alone. So scarce have new subjects been that this almost sets a record.

Further activity of European producers in the Argentine field is indicated by the organization of a new syndicate represented by A. Pistolini.
Egypt Needs Help

To explain the situation properly, it seems necessary to mark back a little. Compared with conditions at home, the cinematograph industry of Egypt was until quite recently in its happy childhood days, although tremendous progress has been made of late, for its members make up in sheer enthusiasm for what they lack in actual experience. Almost insuperable difficulties stood in the way of the propagation of the screen habit in this land of glorious history, as instanced by the multitudinous tongues and differentiating tastes of its population, the education of the masses into the "way" of pictures, the acquisition of sites and appliances necessary for exhibition and—greatest of all—the importation of film subjects from overseas. But much has been done. Every town of size boasts theatres in varying numbers, some in the larger towns being quite as spacious and comfortable as those we have at home. By the use of a double sub-title and the projection of a third on to a smaller side screen, the language difficulty has in the main been overcome; a couple of local renting organizations are now in active operation, a small printing factory exists, and I have news of a small studio. The dramatic theatre being non-existent and vaudeville undesirable, the motion picture has been received with open arms. It plays such a part in evening life in the cities that one wonders what the average Egyptian really did with himself before its advent. The "picture habit" propaganda produced a craze, and now that craving cannot be satisfied, which brings us the present-day conditions.

Since the time when the war began to affect Egypt, primarily owing to restricted sea accommodation, very few films have reached the country, so that exhibitors virtually have been without new subjects for at least two years. In the country are stocks of films, mostly old ones, and these much battered and torn, scarcely two-thirds their original length, travel on a kind of circular route having no end beyond that of endurance. The term "exclusive" is meaningless, except in cases where there is only one copy of a film in the country, because an exhibitor is only too glad to show any film he can get hold of. No subject, however battered it may be, is too bad to screen, for when films are scrapped there are none others to replace, and present stocks are woefully inadequate. Yet such is the craze for motion pictures that houses are crowded nightly, audiences content to see the same films a second or third time rather than miss their "enjoyment."

War having brought a goodly portion of the British Army to Egypt, patronage is appreciably leavened with khaki—soldiers on leave—and, apart from Chaplin and Keystone subjects, there are no films really suitable. Result: Chaplin and Keystone working overtime; and since the civilian has contracted a severe dose of Chaplinitis, the exhibitor is at his wits' end. Essanay and Mutual-Chaplins are wearing to threads and the old single-reel Keystones are becoming rapidly recognizable. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" is the "hit" of the year.

That is Egypt as I write. It can be seen that unless help is sent very soon a promising step in the right direction is going to count for nothing. "Despite the exigencies of war," says the exhibitor, "surely something can be done to help us." And I have promised help, promised that the manufacturers and exporters of our two kindred countries will look to Egypt and do all in their power to help restore normal conditions.

Egypt's requirements are easily stated. She wants everything "Kinematic." First of all, technical assistance to organize the industry on modern lines, then films—loads of them—all lengths, all types. She desires the renting houses of America and England to establish branches in Egypt to co-ordinate action, those placed in charge to be capable and ever ready to advise. She wants publicity—posters, throwaways, trade organs, banners, all manner of boost—she wants to see taught all the tricks of the trade from the box office viewpoint. Projection and general apparatus, up-to-date screens, theatre, fittings and appurtenances.

Taking note of the fact that the majority of exhibitors in Egypt are of French or Italian nationality, it would seem that the cry for help might now have been ringing in other ears, but Egypt is looking to America and Great Britain for succor, sure that it will be forthcoming. And I look to see my promise to Egypt ratified. For I am convinced that in keeping Egypt we should be helping ourselves. Egypt is the gate of the East, feeding many lands, and in opening up trade with Egypt we should discover vast opportunity for development further east.
Foreign Business Will Surprise All, Says Mattsson

ERNEST MATTSSON, export manager for John Olsen & Company, with offices in New York and London, and operating extensively in the Scandinavian countries, looks for big business in the future. Mr. Mattsson is most optimistic and looks forward to a business in the foreign fields that will surprise all concerned.

"It is impossible to leave out of consideration the effect the war has had and will have on the industry," said Mr. Mattsson in discussing the subject of conditions in the foreign market. "Every article that is written swings on the pivot formed by conditions before, during or after the war. It is impossible to get away from it in discussing the outlook of present conditions. The war has affected all branches of business, but on none has it had such a telling effect as on the motion picture industry, and especially that phase of it as is controlled by exporters and importers.

"It is generally conceded that business, from an American exporter's standpoint, has been very good during the war and is, to this day, swinging along at a most encouraging pace. Of course, we exporters had the problem of shipments to contend with during the war and found much difficulty with same. But that was to be expected. Now that this problem has been greatly ameliorated, there isn't any reason why the American producer shouldn't swing into a rapid gait, reach the foreign buyer, deliver the 'goods' and beat the other fellow to it. We can even beat the foreign producer in his own field if we produce quality pictures and look to the foreigner's needs.

"With actual hostilities at a standstill and the signing of peace only a matter of a time, the foreigner will naturally look to his own native producer for pictures with which he is intimately acquainted—pictures with native atmosphere and native talent. But if the American producer will spend a little time and try and meet this individual demand instead of trying to shove down the throat of the foreigner that which he does not understand and with which he has nothing in common, then the foreign picture is going to step right in where it left off before the war and the American product is going to be shown only as novelty.

"We are not going to note any immediate change in the foreign market. It will take some time for the foreign producer to get the wheels of his production plant moving in the old rut, but one can gamble that at some time or other those wheels will be started, and then the American producer will have to 'watch his step' and meet the competition that will be presented with better pictures and pictures that meet with the approval of the people of that particular locality in which they are to be shown. Everything and anything is not going to go. There must be quality behind the picture and there must be a clear understanding of what is wanted and what isn't wanted."

Current Activities at Inter-Ocean Building

EXPLAINING their purchase of the Wharton Comedies, featuring Eddie Vogt and Violet Palmer, an official of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation said that the foreign market no less than the domestic one appeared to be especially eager for comedy films. Even the countries that have not been engaged in the war, states this man, have been oppressed by the misery of it, and people all over the world want to "forget" no less than Americans do.

The Wharton pictures acquired in this deal are "Below Zero," "Kute Kids Vs. Kupid," "The Missionary," "The Candidate," "April Fool" and "Marriage A La Mode." A number of the foreign territories have already been disposed of. "The Transgressor," made by "The Victim," people, will be offered to foreign buyers this week by Inter-Ocean. It is expected by President Cromelin that the majority of purchasers of "The Victim" will sign up for its successor. Additional sales on "Victim" are reported for British West Indies, Colombia and Central America.

The distributors of World Pictures in Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay have renewed their contracts, it is announced. The Argentine rights to the specials, "Wives of Men" and "Inside the Lines," have been allotted.

Inter-Ocean's biggest negotiation of the Fall was undoubtedly the acquisition of the twenty completed negatives of Plaza Pictures. President Cromelin says of this: "We took the Plaza Pictures to fill the needs of those buyers who want a finished-feature programme and want it quick. This line will fill programme requirements in almost any section of the world market, for the stars and the stories have international appeal.

These stars are Anita King, Jackie Saunders, Kathleen Clifford and Gloria Joy.

Fulton Tells Why United States Accessories Should "Go" Abroad

CHICAGO, ILL. (Exclusive to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—"I am offering my American-made accessories for general foreign purchase, inasmuch as they have met the tests of the American exhibitor, than whom I am sure the foreign cinema man is no more stringent in his requirements," said E. E. Fulton to-day, at the new Fulton factory on Carroll avenue. Mr. Fulton enjoys the reputation of being the manufacturer of the largest line of motion picture accessories, produced in this country, now "on" the foreign market, where the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation are offering them.

"I know that German-made accessories found their way to the world market in great quantities," continued Mr. Fulton, "and I am also aware that they were offered at very low prices—ridiculously low in some cases. But as Mr. Harper pointed out in a recent MOTION PICTURE NEWS interview, labor costs in the Central Empire will be vastly higher than before the war, and this will necessarily influence the prices of German-made devices.

"The trade union movement here is pushing up the wage scale all the time, and it must be remembered that devices of this sort are turned out almost totally by skilled workmen who are members of trade unions. Again, the Government subsidy is almost of the past in Germany. This also made for the sweeping price reductions that barred better makes of goods from the world markets.

"When I say better, I say it seriously and in relation to my American line of accessories and supplies that are now for the first time being systematically offered to the world buyer. Every accessory in my list has a reason for existence—improvement. If a Fulco article isn't an improvement on something that the foreign exhibitor has been getting from a distant source of supply, perhaps for a little less—then we don't ask these exhibitors to consider it. Our carbon saver, for instance, is put out because it economizes carbons and saves replacement cost.

"The reason for the carbon adapter is that it will grip small-size carbons, whereas the carbon clamp usually won't. My lug affords a sure grip, preventing burn-outs due to loose and imperfect connections. And so it goes—the rewind is built to eliminate the danger of damage to the film or catching of the operator's fingers in the gears, while the enclosed rewind is so constructed that rewinding of film is impossible unless the door is shut."
“Do YOU Know What a Picture Is Worth in the Foreign Market?”

If you don’t, how are you going to get all that is coming to you out of your splendid American production?

If you don’t know how much a picture should bring, you cause the foreign buyers to go elsewhere and they are deprived of your better pictures.

Our specialized knowledge enables us to serve both ends, and we ask only a fair return for our efforts in bringing buyer and seller together.

We guarantee, to their mutual advantage.

door scenes, and as an outdoor girl she is called upon to participate in a boxing match in one scene. The picture is being directed by George D. Baker. Robert Ellis is her leading man and Frank Currier plays the heavy. Rosemary Tieby is a member of the cast.

Bert Lytell, Metro star, who has been attending an officers' training camp at Fort McArthur, Waco, Tex., has been released from camp, arriving in Los Angeles during the latter part of last week. The present plan of Metro is to start him in a new picture the first of next week, the name of which has not been announced. Three scenarios have been under consideration for his first vehicle upon returning from the ramy.

Maxwell Karger, director general of the Metro studios, has leased a home on Western avenue near the house that was formerly occupied by Mary Pickford, it was announced at the Metro studios this week. It is one of the handsomest residences in that district.

Here and There

Jack Pickford, who recently signed a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, started work on his first production for this concern at the Brunton studios Monday morning, December 9th. James Kirkwood is his director. The title of the play has not been announced, but the vehicle will be a comedy drama. Pickford only recently returned from the East, where he has been in the naval service.

Having recently completed "A Man of the Open," a super-production, Dustin Farnum is planning to begin work on a new subject, possibly next week, it was announced Tuesday from the Brunton studios. The new production will likely be a western entitled "Square Shooting Dan," and will be filmed under the direction of Ernest Warde. Irene Rich will probably be his leading lady, and it is said she will be given a more important role than fell to her lot in Farnum's last play, "A Man in the Open."

Kitty Gordon will start production on a new film play in the near future, the continuity of which is being written by Fred Myton. The picture will be made under the direction of Wallace Worsley. Since Mahlon Hamilton, her leading man in a previous production, has been loaned to Mary Pickford as leading man in her first screen effort for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Miss Gordon is in a quandary as to who will be her leading man in the new picture now contemplated. Studio gossip says that W. Lawson Butt will likely take Hamilton's place.

Actual work of filming her new picture, "Daddy Long Legs," the first production under her contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was begun Monday by Mary Pickford at the Griffith studios. Miss Pickford has completed the cast for the picture, among whom are some of the people who will appear in the production: Mahlon Hamilton, Miss Pickford's leading man; Jarvis Pendleton and Mrs. Pendleton, Eleanor Hancock, Julia Pendleton, Audrey Fair, Audrey Chadman, Charlie McBride, Harry Davenport, Carrie Clark Warde, James Bradbury, May Lemport, Mrs. Sue Semple and William Brown. Mr. Brown will play the part of the butler. A number of real orphans from the Los Angeles Orphanage, under the care of teachers in charge of that institution, have been visiting the lot every day this week, appearing in the orphanage scenes of the play. The children undergo proper medical examination every day before leaving the orphanage for the studio.

A camouflaged German helmet was received this week by Mary Pickford from Bernard Elmes, a former player and at one time a member of Miss Pickford's company. He is serving in France with the British forces. He writes that he will bring back a score of trophies to be distributed among his friends in the Los Angeles film colony.

William S. Hart's newest production, new being filmed and which will be completed next week, has been titled "The Breed of Men." The principal theme of the picture is "careless comedy." Seena Owen is Mr. Hart's leading lady. The plot deals considerably with western life, to impersonate a cynical sheriff of the plains. In this capacity the chase leads him to Chicago, where he visits a mansion in that city and ropes the man he expects to take back with him to the west. "Brand ing Broadway, a recent picture of Hart's, will be released ahead of "The Breed of Men," it is announced here. When the present production is finished work will begin on a new subject, which, it is said, will be entirely different from anything Hart has heretofore attempted.

Earle Williams, Vitagraph's star, has caused a mild sensation in Los Angeles. He suffered several days from a real old-fashioned cold and not once did he refer to it as the "flu."

William Duncan, Vitagraph's serial star, has had another narrow escape, and again the Duncan luck has been with him. It happened in the making of the fifth episode of "The Man of Might" when Mr. Duncan drove his car over a twenty-five foot embankment, landing safely with the car right side up. He had previously made several lesser jumps with an automobile and felt confident that he could make this one and land evenly on all four wheels at once.

Bessie Love, Vitagraph star, set a new style in novelty feminine dressing, but it went out of fashion as rapidly as it came in. It consisted in wearing one earring made from an Honor Pin presented to her when she graduated from the Los Angeles High School. Bessie considered that she was too old now to wear it as a breast pin and the idea of having it made into an earring and wearing it without a mate on the other side of her head appealed to her. One day was enough, however, for after being stopped about a hundred times by strangers as well as friends and being informed that she "had lost one of her ear rings" Miss Love decided that the style was too "advanced" and abandoned it. She is now giving all her attention to "The Enchanted Barn," her next Blue Ribbon Feature.
Miscellaneous West Coast News

Dorothy Gish and her company have been rehearsing a new picture at the Griffith studios. She began production on Monday, December 9, under the direction of Elmer Clifton. Her leading man will be Richard Barthelmess. The new subject will be comedy drama, and Miss Gish will play a character part of an English girl.

Robert Harron returned to the Griffith studios this week after a week’s illness with influenza. Miss Lilian Gish, who was also a victim of influenza, is back on the Griffith lot.

Blanche Sweet left last Monday for New York for a short shopping trip, taking advantage of the opportunity provided through temporary discontinuance of production by the Clara Kimball Young-Blanche Sweet companies. Clara Kimball Young will leave for New York on December 14, accompanied by her manager, Harry Garson. Miss Young stated this week that with the termination of her contract with Garson she is planning to go to France for one year. Mr. Garson announced that he will return to Los Angeles about January 1, 1919. He says the Blanche Sweet Company will continue production after the first of the new year.

Lillian Walker, who has for some time been filming scenes in "The Novel Fran," her first production with her own producing company, will complete this production next week, it is announced this week at the Brunton studios. The story is from the pen of John Breckenridge Ellis, and was scenarioed by Jack Cunningham.

About New Pictures

A good old-fashioned "surprise party" marked the completion of the Screen Classics, Inc., feature, "The Man Who Blew Up," this week.

"The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's newest superfeature, distributed by the Vitagraph Company, has photographs a gorilla which are promised to prove a genuine surprise, and to many, a conundrum.

Charles Ray, the young Thomas H. Ince star, is at work at the Ince company, under the direction of Jerome Storm, on a new baseball picture for Paramount, which is as yet unnamed.

"The Path to Victory," No. 24 of Official War Review, released by Pathe December 9, is announced as one of Studios' instructive and instructive instillments of the patriotic and educational series.

Irene Rich plays a minor part in "Adela." She plays it so well that her work led to her being chosen by Dustin Farnum as his leading lady in "A Man in the Open." "Adela" was one of the first feature films Miss Rich ever appeared in.

Scenes on a tropical island near the equator, the filming of which is said to have taken the Universal Film Magazine by surprise, is set in the story of "The Nature Girl," a Bluebird picture.

William N. Bailey, who recently completed a tour of vaudeville, has signed with the Bertwood Film Corporation, of Philadelphia, Pa., for one of the leading roles in a new feature under direction of Ira M. Lowery.

Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, who plays "The Pickwick," is scheduled for release December 22, has returned to Hollywood from her California farm.

Peggy Hyland, the William Fox star, arrived in Los Angeles around the corner "Jackpot," who enjoyed his arrival in the sunny California of as much as did his mistress.

That the "eat" is the basic necessity of an army was shown in No. 2 of "Winning the War," released by Pathé, December 8. The scenario was furnished by the Committee on Public Information and is called "Feeding Our Fighters."

In "Too Many Millions," Wallace Reid's Paramount picture released December 8, Ora Carewe plays the leading feminine role, "Miss Irene Lee Lane, and a strong cast is said to support Reid.

"Another Polly of the Circuit!" That was the exclamation of a New York exhibitor following the private screening of the newest, Best Acme picture, "The Racing Strain."

When the first assembled print of "The Belle of New York," Marckham's production, was shown in the projection room at the Ince building, New York, the tenorship of Julia Steiger is said to have made it a performance that held its small audience enthralled until the final fadeout.

At the premiere of the Arclight production, "My Cousin," in one of the loge boxes was Caruso himself, accompanied by his wife. With them sat Mme. Frances Alda, Antonio Scotti, Mr. and Mrs. Cenni, Mr. and Mrs. Nicosi, Mr. and Mrs. Pasquale Amato and Bruno Zirani.

Unit of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, "On the Rocks," is being shown in the California premiere of the Aircraft Special, "When the Boys Come Home."

"Persuading Crusaders," distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the Committee on Publicity, is being screened in the recent convention in Providence, R.I., of the Northeastern Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. John Lynch is said to have written an exceedingly interesting story for Dorothy Dalton's Paradise Company, "When the Bois Come Home," and November 22, C. Cecil Smith prepared the scenario and Victor Schertzinger directed the film, which is a Thomas H. Ince production.

Prosperous New Year TO THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY

During 1919 we hope that you will call upon us whenever we can be of any service to you whatsoever.

Our one aim is cooperation---our slogan is service---your problems are ours.

Here's to the Coming Year
You can cut your running expense and get better attendance

There are only two ways for you to make more money:—one is to reduce the cost for operating your theatre, and the other is to get bigger patronage—get the people to prefer your theatre and attend it more often. You can accomplish both these desired results at one and the same time by simply changing your present projection equipment to use the

Argus-Scheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Lamp Projection

The big saving of 50 to 75% in electric current bills each month will soon pay for making the change, and after that the monthly saving will be all "velvet." In addition to this saving, the new equipment will give better screen illumination and eliminate flicker and eye-strain, thereby causing the public to prefer your theatre and attend more often. That will mean additional profits for you right from the start.

The Argus-Scheck Universal Adapter can be installed quickly and easily on any projection machine without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment, by using the Argus Ezy Bracket. Anyone can make the change by following our simple photographic instructions.

With the Big 900-watt Mazda Projector Lamp perfected recently, Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in 90% of all picture theatres; for longer throws and larger screens than formerly.

Hundreds of exhibitors are getting the benefits of using this modern, efficient idea. You, too, should adopt it, if only from the "dollars and cents" standpoint. Mail the inquiry blank below.

Argus-Crystal Bead Screen

[Patented]

This wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade-away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures when viewed from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving the size of your screen.

What Do You Sell the Public?

During the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers an informal discussion was started between certain members on the best method of bringing about a realization among the theatre interests as to exactly what excuse motion picture theatres had for existing. In other words why should the public go into a picture house? What do they go for? Why pay their money and what do they get?

Have you ever analyzed it? Ask the leading theatre architect of any of the larger cities and see what he says. His answer will be something like this, “Well the picture of course is something but the atmosphere is the thing—the surrounding must be beautiful. The architecture and technique of the building must be of the very best or the house will never be a big success.” In other words his fee depends upon how much money he can get the owners to spend on his plans and the carrying of them out. His, as is natural, is a personal feeling, a pride in the finished product. The building is his baby and that to him is the only thing that counts—the excuse for the theatre’s existence.

Then we turn to the manufacturer of the organ and request an expression of opinion from him. His answer is also a natural one, “The picture alone will never go over unless the proper music is there. The finest organ made is none too good. It is the music which, in the last analysis, makes or breaks a house,” Fine—but the public will not pay to come into a house to hear music only. This we all know.

The installation of an organ costing from $3,000 to $20,000 is made without a thought or at least the price is considered a natural charge. No serious objection is made to it. The theatre man signs the contract and is willing to pay the price.

When we go to the Producer of Motion Pictures and ask him what is sold to the public he answers as is natural,

The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus
By Dr. Hermann Kellner

(B) A Perfect Condenser and an Extended Light Source. If the image of the light source is not point shaped, the multitude of rays passing through a transparent point in the stencil causes a spot of light on the screen instead of a point, the size and shape of which is determined by the rays drawn from the object-point through the different points of the image of the source. Fig. 5

!Fig. 5 Projection of a transparent point, P, of stencil, T, by an optically perfect condenser in combination with an extended source. shows how the rays forming the image of the source, and crossing at the object-point, pass from the light-source through different parts of the lens. The size of the spot of light on the screen which represents the projection of an object-point will depend on the size of the source, or its image, as well as upon the location of the object-point between the condenser lens and the image of the source. Projection in this simple manner is possible only if the detail of the object is coarse in comparison with the size of the image of the source. For the projection of detail of a minuteness beyond a certain limit, a projection lens will have to be applied as will be shown later. We shall next consider:

(C) The usual case of an Imperfect Condenser in Combination with an Extended Light Source. Instead of having one image of the source, each zone of the condenser will produce an image of the source at a different place along the optical axis, and for each color contained in the radiation from the source a different series of such images will be produced. The projection of the point takes place as described under (A) and (B), with the result that the light patch on the screen, the so-called circle of confusion, will have colored fringes, red towards, and blue away from, the center of the field. The spherical aberration will add distortion to the image in the way explained above. The patch of confused light, caused by the size of the light source and by chromatic aberration, which appears on the screen in place of the image of the object-point, can be converted into a true image of the object point by the interposition of:

(D) A Projection Lens. Fig. 6 shows the arrangement, and also offers an explanation why, in spite of the chromatic aberration of the condenser, the image of a white object on the screen is white. We add here that the image of the source must always fall in the aperture of the projection lens, which has to be large enough, but need not be larger than is necessary to transmit all the radiation going from the condenser through the image of the source. The differently colored rays which intersect in the object-point belong to white rays which fall upon different zones of the condenser lens. For instance, of the white ray (1) from the source, a red component is refracted in the direction of the object-point, while of the white ray (2), a blue component, and of another white ray lying between (1) and (2), the green component, leave the condenser in the direction of the object-point.

!Fig. 6 Projection of transparent point, P, of stencil, T, by a projection lens in combination with an uncorrected condenser

This multitude of colored rays passing through the object-point must, therefore, comprise all of the colors composing the light of the source, and when gathered by the projecting lens and brought to the same image-point on the screen, form a white image of the object-point. It is very evident also, that the image on the screen is white only if all of the colored rays which may possibly go through the object-point are united in the image on the screen. If, for instance, the diameter of the condensers were... too small to pass the ray (2), the image would appear reddish yellow instead of white, because the blue is missing, or if the diameter of the projection lens were too small to let the red ray pass, the image of the point would be bluish.

As long as we take care not to rob the pencil of rays forming the image on the screen of any of its colored components, we shall have no difficulty on account of the chromatic aberration of the condenser. Of much greater influence is the effect of the spherical aberration. To obtain an even illumination of the screen, the section through the cone at the location of the stencil must be evenly illuminated. The cone of a perfectly corrected condenser offers sections with even distribution of light anywhere between the condenser lens and the image of the source—Fig. 7. There is, however, a slight falling off of the illumination towards the margin, for the same reason as stated at the beginning of this paper. A condenser that has spherical aberration will produce a cone in which the distribution of light is even only in sections near the condenser lens. The sections approaching the image of the source show a more and more increasing accumulation of light near the margin of the section, because there the rays are more crowded together than in the central part of the field, as may be seen from the figure. This is of no significance in lantern-slide projection, because the slide, on account of its size, is always located near the condenser, but is very disturbing when, as in motion picture projection, the stencil is small and is located nearer to the image of the source. If we place the stencil so that its diagonal is equal to the diameter of the cone, we shall have its corners in the marginal concentration of the light and, therefore, an uneven illumination of the stencil (see Fig. 7). To avoid this the stencil has to be moved towards the condenser until its whole area lies in the evenly illuminated part of the cone. This means, of course, the loss of a very great percentage of light. The mere fact that a condenser has spherical aberration does not, however, entail any loss of light if we are satisfied with an uneven illumination, as long as the aperture of the projection lens is large enough to receive all the light passing through the image of the source. The sharpness of the image on the screen is not influenced by the spherical aberration of the condenser, if the illuminating system is so centered that the image of the source (the spot) lies symmetrical to the center of the projection lens. If a slight decenteration of the spot, without the spot getting outside of the aperture of the projection lens, causes a deterioration of the image on the screen, the fault lies in the projection lens. Another factor of influence upon the efficiency of a given combination of light source, condenser and projection lens is the relation between:

The Size of the Source and the Location of the Mat forming the border around the picture, the so-called Aperture-Plate of the apparatus. The actual amount of light traveling from the condenser to the image of the source is embraced in a cone, the base of which is the condenser and the apex the image of the source. If the source is not point shaped, the cone will be truncated.

We consider first a point-shaped source. If the stencil is of rectangular shape and its diagonal equal to the diameter of the light cone at the position of the stencil, the four segments of the illuminated circle outside of the stencil do not contribute to the illumination. We shall refer to this in the following as diaphragming action (I). This effect is perfectly self-evident, and there is no remedy for this loss unless we make the stencil circular in shape (see, in Fig. 7, the half rectangles inscribed in the sections through the lower cone.) Rectangular condensers have been suggested, and are re-suggested now and then, but instead of saving light they merely cut out the unused light at a different plane of the optical system. They serve no useful purpose and are more expensive to make and to mount than the ordinary round condenser.

In the case of a light-source of extended area, the aperture-plate not only cuts off these four segments, but also screens off parts of the condenser, or of the light-source, in such a way that while the radiation from the central parts of the source, which fills the condenser aperture, reaches the image of the source and is therefore utilized, the radiation from the extra-axial points of the source, although it passes through the condenser, only partly reaches the image of the source and contributes to the illumination of the object point. We shall call this in the following diaphragming action (II).

To simplify the drawings the light-source and the aperture-plate in the following are assumed to be circular. Fig. 8 shows the path of the light rays from the center and from the two ends of the source as they pass through the condenser towards the image of the source. S and S' are two conjugate points of the source and its image; the rays connecting them are designated with the same figures (1), (2), (3).

Fig. 9 illustrates how the ray from point 1 through the lower margin of the condenser does not reach the image-point 1, and how the angle of useful radiation is reduced (as indicated by the shaded portion) by reason of the diaphragming action of the aperture-plate. Only the portions of the middle part of the source send forth cones which fill the aperture of the condenser, while all the shaded parts of the pencils of rays from points 1 and 3 are intercepted by the aperture-plate, as illustrated by the next drawing, Fig. 10.

We have to consider next the Losses by Absorption and Reflection. The amount of light lost by absorption in a piece of glass depends upon the absorption coefficient of the material and on the thickness of the piece. The absorption coefficient varies from 0.3 per cent. per cm. for clear glass to about 4 per cent. per cm. for very bad glass. The loss of light in a lens varies with the zones through which the light passes, depending on the differing lengths of the path between the surfaces. The loss by reflection depends upon the index of refraction of the glass, and, upon the angle of incidence under which a ray strikes the surface. It increases, therefore, toward the margin of the condenser, because the angles of incidence are greater there than nearer the center of the lens.

The following two tables show for 4 different zones of an ordinary M. P. condenser, the path-lengths and the mean losses by absorption and reflection in these zones for the absorption coefficients 1.3 per cent. and 3.9 per cent. per cm., which are about the limit values for glasses available for this purpose. Fig. 11 illustrates approximately the paths of the rays through the middle zones of the condenser.

PERFECTED PROJECTION

Perfected Projection plus portability—that’s the DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector. Entirely self-contained, weighs but 20 lbs., takes standard size reels and film and projects a 12 ft. picture at any throw up to 80 ft.

Equal in performance within its prescribed limitations to the best professional projector, yet so wonder-fully light and compact that it can be carried, with greater ease than the suit case it resembles.

Adopted by the United States Government in all Departments where motion pictures are used, and by the American Red Cross, at home and abroad. Used also in all Y. M. C. A. work, on trans-ports, at home and “over there.”

A New Photographic Mordant Dye Process

By Frederick E. Ives

[ Bulletin from the Hess-Ives Laboratories, Philadelphia, Pa.]

THE first photographic mordant dye process to attract attention was the silver-iodide process of Dr. Traube (U. S. Pat. 1,093,363, 1913): Metallic silver photographic images converted to silver iodide and immersed in solutions of basic dyes become strongly colored. If the dye is then fixed by tannin, the silver-iodide can be dissolved out, leaving a transparent dye image. Traube's method was improved upon by Tauleigne and Maiz (U. S. Pat. 1,059,917, 1913), who showed how to produce a silver-iodide image having a stronger affinity for the basic dyes, and incidentally that by first hardening the gelatine with album and then treating the silver-iodide image with a strong solution of potassium iodide it was made so transparent that for most purposes it was unnecessary to dissolve out the silver-iodide image. The step of hardening the gelatine in album to prevent it from softening in solutions of potassium iodide solution was omitted in the U. S. Patent specification, but was published in the British Journal Photographic Almanac, 1912, page 653. Hoyt Miller (U. S. Pat. 1,214,940, 1917), as a result of experiments with the process without album hardening, declared the process unworkable and broadly claimed the production and dyeing of a transparent silver-iodide image, hardening the gelatine with formalin instead. I have myself operated the Tauleigne-Mazo process with perfect success.

Incidentally, it had been discovered that silver ferrocyanide, silver chromate, and some other silver salts could be similarly dyed, but not with satisfactory results. Fox (U. S. Pat. 1,123,196, 1916) disclosed the fact that a vanadium-toned silver image mordanted basic dyes, and Crabtree and Ives (priority to Crabtree) independently discovered that a copper-toned image had the same property to a very notable and useful degree. The copper-toned image, like the transparent kind of silver-iodide image, is sufficiently mordanted so that the silver is not removed without "washing out," but can be made perfectly transparent by fixing in "hypo" without first fixing the dye image with tannin. It has the disadvantage for some purposes that the copper-ferrocyanide image is itself colored (red-brown) and will not serve as the base for pure blue and green images. It has proved perfectly satisfactory for the production of orange-red images in combination with a cyanotype print in the same collodion layer in my colored moving picture process, U. S. Pat. 1,278,668, 1918.

Recently I have discovered a new method of producing mordant-dye photographic images, which I think is superior to any heretofore known. The mordant is a chromium compound, the exact nature of which I have not yet determined, but it is not silver chromate, which is of a deep red color, while the image which I produce previous to dyeing is of a very pure, though pale, yellow color. It is produced very simply, quickly and cheaply, by bleaching the silver image in a solution of equal parts of potassium ferrocyanide and acetic acid, the action of which is analogous to that of potassium iodide, in that if the solution is weak the image is not transparent; but if the solution is strong, the image is perfectly transparent and of a pale, though pure, yellow color. It is necessary to wash out the free chromic acid after bleaching. The pale yellow image thus produced has a much stronger affinity for some of the basic dyes than either silver iodide or copper ferrocyanide. In fact, the silver image, for the best results, must be thin and superficial.

My bleaching solution is made with one ounce each of potassium ferrocyanide and chromic acid in one gallon of water, at which strength it acts very quickly and produces a transparent yellow image. Transfer to running water should be made immediately when the image is completely bleached to avoid over-hardening of the gelatine by the chromic acid. Long washing is necessary to clear out the free chromic acid, but it discharges rapidly in water containing a little soda bicarbonate, and the image also dyes up quicker and clears more rapidly after dyeing if the soda bicarbonate is used. I always use it, but too long immersion whitens the image, reduces its transparency and produces a weaker, though still strong and brilliant dye image.

A typical dye bath is made by dissolving 10 grains of safranin in 4 ounces of alcohol, and adding to it 1 quart of water made slightly acid with acetic acid. For complete dyeing, an immersion of half an hour or more may be necessary. This will stain the entire film deeply, after which it may be cleared by washing in water containing a very little acetic acid. Other very active dyes are malachite green and auramine.

The images which have been whitened by long soaking in soda bicarbonate solution have the same appearance and transparency as silver ferrocyanide images, but have many times more mordanting power—even more than silver iodide.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Two samples of motion picture film, dyed according to the above process, accompanied Mr. Ives' article, one being colored green and the other the complementary shade of red. The film samples show vivid coloring and the dye images are very transparent.

An Inorganic Process for Tinting Motion Picture Film

[U. S. Patent, No. 1,279,276, J. I. Crabtree, assignor to Eastman Kodak Co.]

INASMUCH as present conditions in the dye-stuff industry render it difficult to obtain the necessary organic dyes for staining motion picture positive films to give special color effects, it is cheaper and safer to make the colors first in solution and imbed them in the films throughout the process. The metallic silver image is being substantially opaque in its gradations. Color effects in such film have been obtained chiefly by two methods: First, toning the silver image by changing the color of the particles thereof without appreciably or intentionally changing the color of the gelatin; second, tinting the gelatin itself. This second method has been performed heretofore by using expensive organic dyes-stuffs as the agents for staining the gelatin. The method which will be here described relates chiefly to a modification of this second method, in which inorganic coloring matter is substituted for the more expensive organic dyes. It is to be understood that even if a certain extent of toning or alteration in the color of the silver image should incidentally take place in the new method, it is usually indetetable and in any event is not noticeable to any material extent.

Broadly stated, colored metallic salts are precipitated within the colloid gelatin layer. To this end two solutions are used, one containing a soluble salt of the metal which is to enter into the precipitate, and another containing a soluble salt which furnishes the acid radical which is to enter into the precipitate. The metals which furnish the best compounds appear to be iron, uranium, lead, copper, bismuth, cadmium, tin, tungsten, molybdenum, silver, mercury, cobalt or nickel. The best acid radicals appear to be those which form ferrocyanides or sulfides depending, of course, on the metal ion employed.

First Example—Blue Tint

Using any usual or preferred apparatus for fluid treating motion picture film, the film strip to be tinted is immersed for five minutes in a 1 per cent solution of ferric-alum, then rinsed and next immersed in a 1 per cent solution of potassium ferro-cyanide until the desired result is obtained. The film is then well washed for 10 to 15 minutes. A blue tint due to colloidal ferric ferrocyanide is obtained. The control of the tint is obtained by regulating several factors.
The depth of the tint obtained increases with increasing concentration of the ferric-alum, and the strength of the solution which may be entirely, or course, be varied to suit the operator’s needs. It is found, however, that a 1 per cent solution is sufficiently strong in practice, and is usually preferable to stronger solutions which tend to give a tint too deep for ordinary projection.

The depth of the tint increases with the time of immersion within certain limits, and with solutions of the strength given, prolonged immersion after 3 to 5 minutes has very little effect.

The time of rinsing is, however, an important factor. Using the solutions given, one or two minutes washing it necessary for weak tints, while for stronger tints a mere quick rinsing is all that should be given. The practice is not usually to be recommended, the rinsing may sometimes be dispensed with.

The nature of the final tint is independent of the concentration of the potassium ferrocyanide solution, provided the film be immersed for a sufficient length of time; the maximum effect with a 1 per cent solution being usually produced within five minutes. A shorter immersion will, of course, give lighter tints, although this way of modifying the tint is not as desirable as the varying of the time of rinsing, because it tends to cause intensification of tinting during subsequent washing.

The color of the coloring baths has a considerable effect, a shorter time of immersion being necessary in the ferric-alum at high temperature. Too high temperatures, however, tend to produce reticulation or puckering of the gelatin, and a temperature of about 70° F. is more satisfactory.

Second Example—Orange Tint

The film is immersed in a 1 per cent solution of uranium nitrate, rinsed, and then immersed in a 1 per cent solution of potassium ferrocyanide in the same manner as outlined above in the first method. The tints which affect the tints and similar to those described in connection with the blue tints and need not, therefore, be repeated. A brown tint due to colloidal uranium ferrocyanide is obtained from this bath.

It may be here noted that the first and second tinting methods may, to a certain extent, be combined to produce darker tints, a small amount of ferric-alum being added to the uranium nitrate bath.

Third Example—Sulfide Tint

The film is immersed in a 1 per cent solution of lead nitrate, rinsed, and then immersed in a 3 per cent solution of sodium sulfide for a suitable time, which may be about two minutes. To avoid softening of the film with these particular solutions, the temperature should not exceed 70° F. A tint due to colloidal lead sulfide is hereby obtained.

Other nitrites, such, for instance, as capric nitrate and bismuth nitrate, may be substituted for the lead nitrate in this method, and the factors of control are the same as those of the previous examples.

It is important on economical grounds that the baths should not quickly deteriorate, and it has been ascertained experimentally that the baths recommended possess long life and are insensitive to light.

Folding tests have indicated that the wearing qualities of the film are not affected by this method of tinting, while tests (exposure to light) have also shown that the tints do not materially alter within periods of time corresponding to the commercial life of the film.

The iron and uranium ferrocyanides, which are formed in the first and second examples given above, are soluble in alkali, such as alkali carbonate, caustic alkali, etc. This is a valuable feature as it enables the operator to remove the tint wholly or partially should the film be used, and the particular subject portrayed. Furthermore, he may tint the film for one exhibit and decolourise it for another exhibit where different lighting conditions prevail. Since the silver image is not materially altered by the above solution, it will not be dissolved or altered whether the tinting salts are dissolved out. It will be noted from these examples that this tinting process is carried out independently of any light action, making slow printing operations unnecessary.

The tint is quite uniformly distributed throughout the gelatin; consequently it may be used in the printing of any layer of gelatin, but may also be used to tint gelatin layers of varying thickness, such as are produced by printing bichromated gelatin under a negative and dissolving away the soluble gelatin in the well-known way to form a gelatin relief image. A monochrome image of desired tint can thus be obtained.

The theory of the method seems to be that colloidal substances, such as gelatin, have an enormous number of minute or capillary passages therein, into which diffuses the first solution, which contains the ions of that metal that is to enter into the precipitated colored particles constituting the tint. Rinsing removes such solution from the surface of the gelatin, and, if prolonged, diminishes the concentration of the metallic ions in some or all of the passages of the gelatin. When the gelatin is next placed in the second or precipitating solution, containing the anions which are to enter into the precipitate, said solution diffuses through the passages in the gelatin and the anions combine with the metallic ions. The result is a precipitate of colored particles wherever the two ions meet, and, due to the minute passages in which they are formed and to the so-called protective action of the colloidal gelatin, these particles cannot agglomerate, but remain dispersed in a finely divided or colloidal state. The individual particles cannot be seen by the naked eye or under a low-power magnifier, the tint appearing homogeneous. Washing removes the soluble salts which remain after the precipitate is formed and it may also check over-tinting. While this is the theory of the action as now understood, a knowledge of the true theory is, of course, not required in practicing the process.

It will be seen from the examples given that this tinting process is particularly applicable to colloidal layers having a definite image already formed therein. The colloids is still transparent or light transmitting after tinting, but the light which can pass through this tint of course is partially absorbed and this is particularly important in projection work. Thus with the ferric ferrocyanide blue tint, bluish light will be transmitted, and if the incident light is white, certain wave-lengths, or components thereof, will be absorbed or modified by the colored particles in the tint, so that only the wave-lengths or components corresponding to the blue color will pass through.

Local 181 of Baltimore Puts New Wage Schedule Into Effect

We are advised by Mr. G. Kingston Howard, business manager of Local 181, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Baltimore, Maryland, that a new schedule of wages was recently adopted by that organization, becoming effective on December 16.

The terms of the revised wage schedule and working agreement are as follows:

1. One Operator, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $21.00 per week. (a) With one Matinee per week beginning at 2 p.m. or later, including one hour or more relief for Supper, not less than $23.10 per week. (b) Without Supper relief, not less than $24.15 per week.

2. Open-Air Theatres, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $21.00 per week, regardless of weather conditions.

3. Matinees, opening at 2 p.m. or later, and closing at 5 p.m. or earlier, not less than $2.10 extra each Matinee.

4. One Operator, eight hours or less, including one hour more relief for Supper daily, not less than $29.40 per week. (a) Without Supper relief, not less than $35.70 per week.

5. One Operator, nine hours or less, including one hour or more relief for Supper daily, not less than $33.60 per week. (a) Without Supper relief, not less than $39.90 per week. (b) This also applies to Vaudeville or other opera 100 per cent.

6. Theatres running 12 hours or longer shall require two Operators and time shall be divided equally between them.

7. Two Operators, each working six hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $25.20 each per week. (a) For longer than 10 hours Operators shall be paid pro rata. (b) Operators shall not work more than their Regular Daily Shift without permission from this Organization.

Overtime, consisting of Supper Hour, and (a) all work above Eight Hours, except keeping Operating Room clean, at not less than $1.65 per hour or fractions thereof (b) All work between 12 Midnight and 8 a.m. shall be at overtime rates. (c) Operators shall report for duty at least 15 minutes before opening of Show.

Progressive Musical Director

The manager of the New Garrick theatre of St. Paul, Minn., Theo. L. Hays, realizes the importance of featuring music with the presentation of the silent drama, and has acquired the services of a very efficient musical director, William Warvelle Nelson, who has very ably carried out Mr. Hays' plans.

The musical program for the week of December 5 demonstrates the ability of Mr. Nelson and the prominence which music holds in the theatre. The following compositions are a partial list of the numbers employed during the presentation of the feature, "The Kingdom of Youth," a Goldwyn production.

lines of the De-Luxe Motiograph itself, but also with the magnificent picture thrown on a screen twenty feet and six inches by twenty-four feet and six inches, at a distance of exactly one hundred and four feet.

The simplicity of the mechanism of the Motiograph has never caused any of the extra operators, called in from time to time on the relief shifts, the slightest embarrassment in immediately mastering its operation."

High praise of the De-Luxe Motiograph is also contained in a letter received by the Enterprise Optical Company's Coast representative from Mr. W. P. Krahn of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., operating among others, the Lorin theatre at South Berkeley, California, who says:

"Six months have elapsed since purchasing two of your Motiograph De-Luxe Model projecting machines, and I want to say at this time that they have given us 100 per cent satisfaction."

"The picture projected by them at our Lorin theatre is second to none, in that it is flickerless, clear, and as steady as a rock. I speak from experience when I state that these machines run smooth and noiseless, as I do relief work now and then, and I look forward to that time with a great deal of pleasure."

"There is also a great saving in carbons by being able to trim two full lengths of carbons at one time."
Keeping the Lips in Condition for Trumpet Playing

THE term "embouchure" refers to a condition of the lips of a performer on a brass instrument. When the lips are too tight and offer continuous resistance to the pressure of the mouthpiece, and shape themselves to it, bandsmen speak of a good embouchure. When, on the other hand, the lips are soft and tender, and soon become weak and offer little or no resistance to the pressure of the mouthpiece, the embouchure is bad and the performer is of little use to the band while this conditions obtains, or, in the case of trumpeter, cannot properly carry out his duties.

There is nothing more humiliating than when a performer on a trumpet endeavors to sound a call and his lips give out. When a trumpeter's lips are inclined to be tender he should, by constant practice, endeavor to get them in good condition, that is to say, get them shaped to the mouthpiece and thus make them tough at the same time. It is not a bad idea to practice with the mouthpiece itself, when in the latter, by pressing the lips firmly against it and simulating the sounding of calls as though the mouthpiece were attached to the instrument. This practice will help considerably toward obtaining a good embouchure, and will cause him to not encounter that awful give-way feeling of the lips, which makes the performer feel so entirely helpless. For a person may be skilled in sounding calls, or one may be a good cornetist and have a thorough knowledge of music and fully understand how a call should be rendered, yet, when the lips are soft and tender and have reached that stage where they give out, no power in the world can replace that numbness and helpless feeling which may very properly be likened to a nightmare when one is trying to run, but the feet feel as though they were weighted with lead and cannot be moved from the spot.

Bandsmen claim that a good embouchure can be obtained much better by playing sustained notes, slowly going up and down the scale, rather than by playing rapid music, because the former method taxes the endurance of the lips to a much greater extent. Of course, it is equally essential to practise rapid scales in order to acquire a skillful rendition of music generally. With the trumpet, however, where the scale cannot be played because there are only open notes possible of production, a judicious combination of the two methods would seem to be more beneficial to the average trumpeter, that is, a succession of slow notes alternating with rapid music so far as they can be produced on the trumpet. It would be advisable to supply all trumpets with cornet mouthpieces, which are rounded instead of having a rather well-defined edge like those of the regulation trumpet, as it will be found that the former give better results, are not so fatiguing to the lips because they adjust themselves more readily to the conformation of the mouthpiece than the one with a flat top surface and edge, and besides, the notes produced can be more advantageously controlled.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Till We Meet Again," one of the most beautiful songs ever written. Played and sung everywhere. A big waltz ballad success arranged for dance. (J. H. Remick & Co., 220 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

2—"My Baby Talk Lady." Fox-trot. Featured in the Passing Show of 1918. The hit of the show. Introducing the Galli-Curci Rag. (J. H. Remick.)

5—"Mammy's Lullaby." A dreamy lullaby in waltz time, a bit on the style of "Missouri Waltz." (Forster Music Pub., Inc.)

6—"Ostrich Walk," fox-trot. Real "Jazz," by real jazzers. This wonderful "Jazz" number is played by the original Dixieland "Jazz" band and recorded by the Victor Talking Machine Co. (Leo Feist, 335 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

7—"A Little Birch Canoe and You," by Lee S. Roberts, composer of the big hit "Smiles." It's the dreamiest, dreamy waltz published, and acknowledged by everybody to be the only legitimate successor to "Missouri Waltz," not the old-time stereotyped waltz. It's different and in a class by itself. (J. H. Remick.)

8—"Kentucky Dream," by the writers of "Indianola." A jury of noted musical authorities has pronounced a sentence of life-long success on this charming waltz. (J. W. Stern, 102½ W. 38th St., N. Y.)

9—"Bleeding Hearts." Musical geniuses are never judged by their brilliant works, but always by the simple, beautiful melody handed down to posterity. For example, Schuman's "Traumerei," Rubinstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," and later works such as "Hearts and Flowers," which, of course, all musicians know, is really Czibulka's "Love and Roses." Mr. Sol. P. Levy, a musician of ability and reputation, has just finished a composition which those musicians who have tried it in manuscript form believe will be a future "Traumerei" or "Hearts and Flowers." The title of this composition is "Bleeding Hearts," a floral poem, and it is one of the simple, broad, beautiful melodies which however frequently repeated, seems to fascinate and charm the listening ear more and more. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

13—"Any Place Is Heaven if You Are Near Me," Andante Con Moto, 4/4, by Herman Lohr. A heart-interest theme. Sung by John McCormack with great success. (Chappell & Co.)

Estey Builds Organ for Capitol

As an organ of unusual interest, from a theatrical standpoint, is now being built for the Capitol theatre, New York, by the Estey Organ Company, and those who are familiar with the specification predict that a new standard for theatre organs is about to be established.

The theatre is being erected on Broadway, at 51st street, the auditorium occupying the entire block from 50th to 51st streets. The Capitol will seat about sixty-five hundred people. It is highly appropriate, therefore, that this building should house the largest theatre organ ever built.

The modern tendency to borrow pipes from one stop to make another stop has been resorted to as little as possible in the scheme of this organ, and while in number of stops this instrument will not compare with some other organs, in point of actual number (continued on page 3948)
Wedding March

REGINALD de KOVEN, Op. 400

Allegro risoluto

Manuals

Pedal

Tempo di marcia deciso

Copyright 1926 by The Boston Music Co.
FOR years it has been the custom to play, wherever an opportunity presented itself, the old Lohengrin and Mendelssohn Wedding Marches. The Wedding March composed by Mendelssohn, who was born in Hamburg, Germany, and also the Wedding March from Lohengrin, composed by Wagner, who was born in Leipzig, Germany, are to my knowledge the only two wedding marches which have been perpetually played throughout the entire country.

Since the war broke out, as is natural, American sentiment has become very much prejudiced against music written by German composers.

The Boston Music Company have been the first ones in the publishing business to realize the necessity of a substitute and have published a Wedding March by Reginald De Koven which is a composition of strongly marked rhythm and thus bearing a processional character. The composition is of exceptional musical merit and is destined to replace the former official wedding marches which have been in common use up to the present day.

The fame of the writer of this Wedding March is sufficient to prove its merits. The course of musical history has confirmed and endorsed De Koven's skill as a composer. He ranks amongst the most famous writers of comic opera. Some of his older hits in comic opera form are "The Little Duchess," "Maid Marian," "Foxy Quiller," and many others, and some of his later comic operas "The Algerian," "The Fencing Master," "Rob Roy" and "Robin Hood."

The musical construction of Mr. De Koven's last masterpiece, "The Wedding March," proves again that he has upheld his reputation, has created another everlasting number and has added another gem to his already long list of famous works.
Estey Builds Organ for Capitol
of pipes, tonal variety and power, it will far exceed anything yet built for theatrical use.

There are to be sixty complete registers, and it will be fundamentally an organ, having no less than seven Diapasons of various scales. A generous fundamental tone was considered a paramount necessity, both from a musical viewpoint, and the enormous tonal requirements of the building. The orchestral phase of the instrument has been well considered and an abundance of strings (including an entirely new stop called First Violins), Oboe, Flutes, Clarinets, etc., together with numerous high-pressure reeds, will produce an ensemble which for tonal capacity and variety will excel any instrument of the kind yet attempted.

The four-manual console will be specially designed for ease and facility in registering, and will embody many new features, planned solely for use in theatre organs.

The Modern, Beacon, Exeter Street, Shawmut and Dudley theatres in Boston are a group of theatres containing large Estey organs, and this installation in the Capitol makes a most auspicious introduction into New York theatrical circles.

Songs for “Hearts of the World”

A FEW days after D. W. Griffith launched his supreme masterpiece, “Hearts of the World,” he was besieged by numerous composers and song writers offering compositions bearing this name. Of all the songs submitted, it was finally decided that the one composed by James W. Casey of New York City, was most admirably suited to “Hearts of the World,” and it was accordingly adopted in conjunction with the presentation of the picture.

“Hearts of the World” as a song was first introduced at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre in New York, by Miss Grace Minich, a Boston vocalist, and immediately became a success. In every city where the Griffith production is offered, the fame of the song seems to have reached.

The chorus of Mr. Casey’s song is especially appealing and the music is of a character that lingers in the mind forever. It is published in three keys, Low Key A flat, Medium Key C, High Key E flat. The words of the chorus are as follows:

Hearts of the world, are crying out in pain,
Sorrow creeps on—it seems an endless chain,
Pray that tomorrow will end all sorrow.

Hearts of the world, when will you smile again?

Mr. Casey has also dedicated to D. W. Griffith, generalissimo of the film, a beautiful melodious waltz entitled “Hearts of the World,” which was introduced with great success in Mr. Griffith’s film production. These two numbers are published by Echo Music Publishing Company of New York City and we would strongly recommend every earnest musician availing himself of these compositions which will be a valuable addition in interpreting certain situations on the screen.

“57 Varieties” Hardly in It with Fulton

If there is anything used in a theatre that is not put out by the E. E. Fulton Co., Chicago, under the “FULCO” brand—what is it?

A recent visit through the model plant, located at 3208 Carroll avenue, was not only a revelation, but interesting and educating. It proved that Mr. Fulton aside from being entitled to be called a dean of the industry is a “wizard” at inventing. There has not been one detail overlooked in equipping this plant, which enables them to make the intricate and multitudinous articles required in the projecting room; right straight down the line, from the smallest item to the largest and then some extras—in the shape of film carrying cases and film shipping cases, etc.

To adequately describe the maze of specially constructed machinery used in this plant, would fill a book. Suffice it to say they have it, and manufacture and carry a full line of Fulco Products, comprising the best and most scientific made accessories and specialties for use in the moving picture theatre, and for projection of pictures such as Enclosed Fireproof Rewinds (approved by Underwriters’ Laboratories—Fulco Rewinds (2 styles), Striping Flanges, Wire Terminals (2 kinds), Carbon Savers (2 sizes), Carbon Adapters, Ticket Holders (2 styles), Ticket Machines, Special Tool Kit, Oil Filter, Slide Writer Stencil, Slide Writing Compound, Colored Slide Inks, Film Shipping Cases (made according to J. C. specification), Film Carrying Cases—Metal (Suit Case and Square Styles), Safety Waste Cans, Stereopticon Color Wheels, Approved Film Boxes, Film Humidors, Exit Signs, Metal Booths, Metal Tables (Rewind and Inspection), Film Patchers, Film Cleaners, Film Cement, Perfumes, Perfume Disseminators and continually adding to their line.

Mr. Fulton is a great believer in a system as evinced by the orderly way that things are conducted in every department.
